

This is a digital copy of a book that was preserved for generations on library shelves before it was carefully scanned by Google as part of a project to make the world's books discoverable online.

It has survived long enough for the copyright to expire and the book to enter the public domain. A public domain book is one that was never subject to copyright or whose legal copyright term has expired. Whether a book is in the public domain may vary country to country. Public domain books are our gateways to the past, representing a wealth of history, culture and knowledge that's often difficult to discover.

Marks, notations and other marginalia present in the original volume will appear in this file - a reminder of this book's long journey from the publisher to a library and finally to you.

Usage guidelines

Google is proud to partner with libraries to digitize public domain materials and make them widely accessible. Public domain books belong to the public and we are merely their custodians. Nevertheless, this work is expensive, so in order to keep providing this resource, we have taken steps to prevent abuse by commercial parties, including placing technical restrictions on automated querying.

We also ask that you:

- + Make non-commercial use of the files We designed Google Book Search for use by individuals, and we request that you use these files for personal, non-commercial purposes.
- + Refrain from automated querying Do not send automated queries of any sort to Google's system: If you are conducting research on machine translation, optical character recognition or other areas where access to a large amount of text is helpful, please contact us. We encourage the use of public domain materials for these purposes and may be able to help.
- + Maintain attribution The Google "watermark" you see on each file is essential for informing people about this project and helping them find additional materials through Google Book Search. Please do not remove it.
- + Keep it legal Whatever your use, remember that you are responsible for ensuring that what you are doing is legal. Do not assume that just because we believe a book is in the public domain for users in the United States, that the work is also in the public domain for users in other countries. Whether a book is still in copyright varies from country to country, and we can't offer guidance on whether any specific use of any specific book is allowed. Please do not assume that a book's appearance in Google Book Search means it can be used in any manner anywhere in the world. Copyright infringement liability can be quite severe.

About Google Book Search

Google's mission is to organize the world's information and to make it universally accessible and useful. Google Book Search helps readers discover the world's books while helping authors and publishers reach new audiences. You can search through the full text of this book on the web at <http://books.google.com/>

STANFORD UNIVERSITY LIBRARIES

Y 4. J89/1: B 75/50/v. 2

BREWING AND LIQUOR INTERESTS AND GERMAN PROPAGANDA

HEARINGS

BEFORE A

SUBCOMMITTEE OF THE COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY UNITED STATES SENATE

SIXTY-FIFTH CONGRESS

SECOND AND THIRD SESSIONS

PURSUANT TO

S. RES. 307

A RESOLUTION AUTHORIZING AND DIRECTING THE COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY TO CALL FOR CERTAIN EVIDENCE AND DOCUMENTS RELATING TO CHARGES MADE AGAINST THE UNITED STATES BREWERS' ASSOCIATION AND ALLIED INTERESTS AND TO SUBMIT A REPORT OF THEIR INVESTIGATION TO THE SENATE

VOL. 2

Printed for the use of the Committee on the Judiciary

WASHINGTON GOVERNMENT PRINTING OFFICE
1919

CONTENTS.

Index of witnesses, volume 2:

	Page.
Bielaski, A. Bruce	1387
Hart, Albert Bushnell	1617
Stowell, Ellery C.	1638
Wambaugh, Col. Eugene	1641
Donges, Col. Ralph W. E.	1643
McGee, Charles A.	1644
Smith, Senator Hoke	1648
Garthe, Louis	1657
Lester, Capt. George B.	1664
Do	1777
Do	1916
Levy, Aaron J.	1822
Untermeyer, Samuel	1835
Kirkland, Weymouth	1814
Becker, Alfred L.	1941
Do	1992
Do	2023
Means, Gaston B.	2111
Lester, Capt. George B., resumed	2154
Humes, Maj. Edwin Lowry	2166
Stowell, Ellery C., resumed	2175
Bielaski, A. Bruce, resumed	2193
Keehn, Maj. Roy D.	2257
Von Mach, Edmund	2262
Do	2307
Becker, Alfred L., resumed	2328
Do	2347
Do	2388
Moore, Joseph A.	2418
Lester, Capt. George B., resumed	2433
Becker, Alfred L., resumed	2436
Morse, Perley	2462
Stowell, Ellery C., resumed	2478
Smith, Austin J.	2485
Arnold, J. A.	2494
Thomas, Senator Charles S.	2499
Squires, Grant	2512
Arnold, J. A., resumed	2524
Do	2539
Do	2578
Do	2613
Dickinson, J. J.	2615
Kennedy, Jacob M.	2661
Tunney, Thomas J.	2670
Stevenson, Archibald E.	2690
Do	2705
Do	2729
Bowen, William A.	2744
Stevenson, Archibald E., resumed	2751
Damon, Lindsay T.	2787
Kinnicutt, Francis H.	2807
Steiner, Lajos	2823
Steen, Clyde B.	2847
Benet, Christie	2863

BREWING AND LIQUOR INTERESTS AND GERMAN PROPAGANDA.

FRIDAY, DECEMBER 6, 1918.

UNITED STATES SENATE,
SUBCOMMITTEE OF THE COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY,
Washington, D. C.

The subcommittee met at 10.30 o'clock a. m. in room 226, Senate Office Building, Senator Lee S. Overman presiding.

Present: Senators Overman (chairman), King, Wolcott, Nelson, and Sterling.

TESTIMONY OF MR. A. BRUCE BIELASKI.

(The witness was sworn by the chairman.)

Maj. HUMES. Mr. Bielaski, this committee is in receipt of a communication from the Attorney General, in which he states, among other things:

In accordance with your request, I have designated Mr. A. Bruce Bielaski, of this department, to make to your committee a detailed statement as to German propaganda.

Are you prepared to make such a detailed statement at this time?

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. Will you proceed, then, in your own way to make the presentation?

Mr. BIELASKI. I should like to have the letter of Senator Overman to the Attorney General and his answer filed as exhibits, explaining the circumstances under which I do appear before the committee.

(The exhibits referred to, marked "Bielaski Exhibit No. 1" and "Bielaski Exhibit No. 2," are here printed in full in the record, as follows:)

BIELASKI EXHIBIT No. 1.

[Copy.]

NOVEMBER 13, 1918.

HON. T. W. GREGORY,
Attorney General, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: At a meeting of the investigating committee in regard to German propaganda and other matters I was directed by the committee to request that you designate some man from your Department to make to the committee a detailed statement of such information as you have in your office in regard to this German propaganda, and that he make a full statement to the committee, to save us the trouble of having the documents produced, and that he make such a statement as would be subject to proof in your office if the documents were required. If you will so designate him we will expect his attendance here in about ten days or two weeks.

It will also be very agreeable to the committee if you will designate some intelligence man from the Bureau of Investigation to assist and cooperate with Major Humes, who has kindly consented to conduct the investigation for us, to get such testimony relating to these matters as he may deem necessary to fully carry out the purpose of the resolution.

Very truly yours,

LEE S. OVERMAN.

BIELASKI EXHIBIT No. 2.

[Copy.]

9-5-1419-9 G-M

NOVEMBER 16, 1916

Hon. LEE S. OVERMAN,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR: I acknowledge receipt of yours of the 13th.

In accordance with your request, I have designated Mr. A. Bruce Bielaski of this Department, to make to your Committee a detailed statement of German propaganda. As heretofore indicated, it will give me pleasure to give your committee access to the files of this Department in all cases in which there is not some special reason why it should not be done. I have instructed Mr. Bielaski to begin at once the preparation of notes and data which he will need in making the statement referred to. I think he will be ready to present it within a week or ten days.

I have designated Mr. William Benham, of Washington, D. C., a first class man from the Bureau of Investigation of this Department, to assist your Committee by co-operating with Major Humes in making any investigations which you may deem desirable. I have selected Mr. Benham because Major Humes knows him personally and feels that he is the type of man needed.

Very truly yours,

(sgd)

T. W. GREGORY,
Attorney General

Mr. BIELASKI. The Department of Justice, as the law-enforcement arm of the Government, has been primarily interested in the collection of evidence for the purpose of prosecution, and for many years has made it a rule not to make public information so collected in any other manner; but the Attorney General feels that because of the direct request of the committee and the importance of the subject matter under investigation he should make an exception to the department's general rule and lay before you the data which the department has with respect to German propaganda.

During the war we have collected an immense amount of information. Some of it has been in our files for a long time and some of it has only come to us comparatively recently.

At the outset of the war the Department had no authority whatever to make investigations of anything of the sort, except in so far as it might indicate a violation of law; but at the request of the War Department, effective the 1st of July, 1916, the appropriation which provides the money for the Bureau of Investigation was amended as to make it possible to make investigations of matters in which the State Department was interested, at the request of the Secretary of State, and with the approval of the Attorney General, even though those matters did not amount to violations of law. Of course, there was no statute making the German propaganda, or the propaganda of any foreign Government, unlawful when the European war broke out.

The many violations of the criminal statutes which were participated in and planned by the representatives of the German Government, I take it, are quite outside of what you gentlemen are interested in, and for that reason I have not prepared a statement with respect to the criminal violations of the law. Most of those matters are public, anyway.

The scope of German propaganda in this country was very wide. It embraced the furnishing of news secretly to newspapers, the distribution of film, the sending of lecturers through the country, the sending of newspaper correspondents from Germany to this country.

try to write favorable matter for the papers, the sending of American correspondents abroad to send back to this country propaganda favorable to Germany. It embraced propaganda——

Senator OVERMAN. Did they do that through the Associated Press?

Mr. BIELASKI. I will give you the details of each of these things shortly. It embraced propaganda among the Irish, among the Jews, among the Catholics. Everywhere where the representatives of Germany saw a chance to advance, as they thought, their own interests they officially sent money and directed effort to bring it about.

The organization of German propaganda came about in this way: Dr. Dernburg, who was the secretary of state for the colonies—I think that is the translation of his title—came to the United States in September, 1914, as the head of a mission of which Heinrich Albert, officially attached to the embassy as commercial attaché, and Isaac Strauss, Meyer Gerhard, and Capt. Hecker were members. They brought with them $150,000,000 in German treasury notes, with the expectation that they would find a ready sale in this country, and that from the proceeds propaganda expenses would be met, commercial enterprises paid for, such as the shipment of goods into Germany which were desired, and munitions of war purchased.

Senator NELSON. Were these notes, as you call them, bonds?

Mr. BIELASKI. These were so-called two-year treasury notes.

Senator NELSON. Of the German Government?

Mr. BIELASKI. Of the German Government. They, however, did not find any market, and only $5,000,000 worth of these notes were used for the purpose of collateral in raising money. I will a little later give you some more details as to the financial arrangements of the organization.

Soon after they came here they employed a man named M. B. Claussen, who had been the publicity agent for the Hamburg-American Line, to organize what was called the German information bureau. That bureau was not, however, publicly known as supported by the German Government in any way. It opened offices at 1123 Broadway and at another address in New York, 30 East Forty-second Street. Its purpose was to furnish to all of the daily newspapers, free of charge, each day a sheet of so-called information from a pro-German standpoint. It did send out daily to from 500 to 800 newspapers this sheet, under the head of "German information bureau."

Senator STERLING. When did this begin?

Mr. BIELASKI. This began in September and November, 1914.

Senator NELSON. In this connection, let me ask, if it does not interfere with you, did the papers generally take the stuff?

Mr. BIELASKI. The papers generally did, because it was sent to them without cost to them. They took it much more generally than they used it.

Senator OVERMAN. Did they send out a mat?

Mr. BIELASKI. They sent out a circular sheet.

Senator OVERMAN. Did they send out a sheet or a mat ready to be set up?

Mr. BIELASKI. No; they sent out a sheet, not a mat.

Senator WOLCOTT. You said that the papers took it more generally than they used it?

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes.

Senator WOLCOTT. I take it Senator Nelson was interested to know whether the papers generally published it?

Senator NELSON. Yes; that is what I meant.

Mr. BIELASKI. The papers published some of it—published selected items. I could not tell how generally the press used it without examination of all the papers, which we have not made; but, speaking generally, it was not successful from the standpoint of the Germans, because the papers did not make the use of it that they expected. On this letterhead of the German information service appears this statement:

Conducted by M. B. Claussen at the request of a number of American citizens who believe that the public desires to be informed as to both sides of the question that it may form its own opinions from the facts.

That, like everything else they did, was intended to deceive people, because the bureau was organized, financed, and directed by the official representatives of Germany. Claussen, while the nominal head, was actually controlled by a Dr. K. A. Fuehr, who had been in the consular and diplomatic service of Japan.

Senator NELSON. How do you spell his name?

Mr. BIELASKI. F-u-e-h-r. He managed the finances of the organization. He had under his and Claussen's direction a large force of translators. They gathered all the data of every kind they could get about happenings favorable to the German Government—as victories and incidents which were critical of the allied Governments in any way—and hashed them up into this sheet which was sent out.

The management of this sheet by Mr. Claussen was not successful from the standpoint of Dr. Fuehr and Dr. Albert and Dr. Dernburg who was still in this country.

Dr. Dernburg, by the way, remained here delivering lectures and having himself interviewed by newspaper correspondents until just after the sinking of the Lusitania, when he delivered at Cleveland a speech justifying the sinking of the Lusitania and made his presence so objectionable that it was suggested to the representatives of the German Government that he go home, and he did sail, I think, on the 22d of June, 1915. Thereafter Dr. Heinrich Albert was in full charge of German propaganda in this country.

The first record that we have about the German information bureau and Dr. Dernburg's efforts is under date of November 5, 1914. I should state, however, that in control of this bureau was an informal committee which was presided over by Dr. Dernburg while he was here and after he left by Albert, when he was present at the meetings; otherwise by Fuehr. Present at the meetings of this committee almost always was George Sylvester Viereck.

Senator NELSON. Editor of the Fatherland?

Mr. BIELASKI. Editor of the Fatherland, of whom we shall have a great deal to say by and by; also William Bayard Hale; Cromeyer, an American citizen employed by the Hamburg-American Line; usually Mr. Meyer, also of the Hamburg-American Line; Edward Rumely, especially while Dr. Dernburg was here, and occasionally other men interested in this organization, like Capt. Heck for instance, and Strauss who was brought over here especially for the purpose of conducting the Jewish propaganda.

Senator STERLING. What was the place of the meetings of this organization?

Mr. BIELASKI. The meetings were usually held at 1123 Broadway, but they frequently met at other places. They had no stated time of meeting. They would meet twice a week, as a usual thing. While Dr. Dernburg was here the meeting was usually devoted to a speech by the doctor, and then the discussion of what they should do; whether they should give some money to this paper or to that paper, print this document or that, and so on.

This first conference, the minutes of which we have, appears to have been at the Ritz-Carlton on November 5, 1914, and I will read some parts of this memorandum but not all of it. [Reading:]

BIELASKI EXHIBIT No. 3.

At the conference which took place to-day with his excellency, Mr. Secretary of State, Dr. Dernburg, at the Hotel Ritz-Carlton, the following gentlemen were present:

High Privy Counsellor Dr. Meyer-Gerhard, Consul Hecker.

Director Meyer (Hamburg-American Line).

Cronmeyer (Ditto).

Dr. Fuehr.

His Excellency the Imperial Ambassador, Count V. Bernstorff remained for a part of the conference.

Mr. State Secretary Dr. Dernburg, brought out the following:

"As the state of war in Europe has developed itself within the past weeks, the public opinion of America in a pro-German sense is now as well as formerly of the greatest importance to Germany. Our efforts which we have undertaken in this direction must not only be continued, but must be substantially enlarged upon. Our campaign is to the English unquestionably uncomfortable. Mr. Elliott was therefore sent here to oppose us; now the former Ambassador Bryce has been set against us, who is directly meddling to agitate America against Germany."

The majority of Americans evidently will not through choice be restricted in this way, but through the consciousness that America is entirely unprepared and therefore not in a position to carry out a strong independent policy. With dazzling German successes at arms, the balancing part of public opinion here would presumably be shifted. Already partial successes, such as the taking of Antwerp, the deeds of the U-9, and the sea battles on the Chilian coast, made this penetratingly recognizable.

Whatever action has originated in Germany in order to win for us public opinion here, has either made none or an unfavorable impression. The belief which apparently spread very recently, that American received only one-sided and colored news about the conditions in Europe, has not for eight weeks been true. The fact that from German sides it is still being emphasized, that this is the case, has called forth numerous unwilling protests in the local papers.

In German press utterances and other means of news transmission, which should make an impression here, two subjects which must be strictly avoided are, namely, the "kultur," and secondly every criticism of the American sympathy. Those on the last subject with reference to the publications of the "Kölnischen Zeitung" have unquestionably done us harm here.

The greatest damage for us has been done by the English translations of the writings of Gen. V. Bernhardi which have been circulated here. In consequence of that Mr. Secretary of State Dr. Dernburg proposes to weaken the attacks based upon that, based upon the inconsiderate militarism of the German people, in that he will call attention to the fact that in the home papers the writings in question were severely criticised at their appearance.

To whatever degree the foreign office succeeds in influencing American public opinion, the daily "news letter" by wireless will be very effective. It is, however, necessary that for the news therein contained proofs (papers, etc.) should be sent here. It is not sufficient for the object of the propaganda over here to have in paraphrased form the announcement of important official documents in the "Nord Deutschen Allgemeinen Zeitung," such as in the question of the breach of Belgian neutrality by England and Belgium as well as in the matter of the English-Russian fleet agreement.

Especially important documents, for instance, the material found in the papers, should be sent in photographic reproduction, as already is the case, to the Intelligence Bureau of the General Staff, and even then, if it has already not been made public in Germany.

It then describes the necessity for sending over the proper sort of pictures.

With reference to the handling of the American war correspondents in Germany, it is to be emphasized that as much as is possible should be done for them. Extended courtesies by the home authorities on this score is of the greatest importance to our cause.

As to the extent of the propaganda spread in America, our guide should be:

No policy, which has as its object, to engage America in any way, must avoid every appearance of mixing up in America's matters, but at the same time continue to demand "fair play."

This is interesting, particularly because of what they did at the war.

In detail the following is to be remarked:

The wishes of the American-Irish. The "McGuire group," have already been sent to Berlin through the general consul Kiliani.

There is quite a bit of information to be laid before you with respect to the activities of the so-called McGuire group, of which Mr. James K. McGuire, former mayor of Syracuse, was the main charge.

Senator NELSON. Do they belong to the Sinn Feiners?

Mr. BIELASKI. I think so, of course. Of course, I do not know definitely whether they do or not. They are leading agitators for independent Ireland, and for revolution in Ireland, and so on. [Continuing reading:]

Recently another group, the United States Irish Societies, approached the German Legation in Berlin. His Excellency has not up to this time seen their representatives. Of importance, in connection with the Irish question, is that the German Legation will suppress anti-Catholic utterances as much as possible, and on the contrary all pro-Catholic utterances should be minutely reported here.

So far as the German-Americans are concerned, they desire to assume a firmer tone, and His Excellency is of the opinion that in this they should not be hindered. It is to be regarded as justifiable when they say: We are Americans, let it, however, in memory of our forefathers, not happen that many is debased here.

Mr. Secretary of State thinks it necessary that still another famous German professor should be sent to America, and if possible Hermann Oucke from Heidelberg, or Dietrich Schafer in Hamburg, or Ernst Marx in Stuttgart.

So far as our relations to the very influential Jewish press are concerned, they are in good shape, and will be carefully nourished. It is important in this connection that all news pertaining to them shall elevate the Jewish people in respect—for instance the appointment of Jewish officers, the installation of honors conferred upon Jewish professors, should all be sent here.

With reference to the American press, it is to be remarked, that in the opinion here on vital questions cannot be influenced in any substantial way through the press, which was to be observed recently in connection with the local governor's election, at which Mr. Glynn suffered an overwhelming defeat, even though the New York press put forth an unusually strong propaganda in favor of his candidacy. In spite of all this the American press demands evidently the greatest attention and activity. What up to this time has been done by the German Legation in this relation embraces scarcely $15,000—a small item compared to what the opponents spent in this way. State Secretary Dernburg has now decided to do substantially much more in this direction. Through direct bribery there is nothing to be done. But it is said that one can work on reporters (the so-called "ship reporters" who interview the new arrivals) and with the editors who edit the cable news and the "head lines." Furthermore there be written, under our supervision, articles by American journalists whose names here carry a far-reaching influence—there have been suggested for this Alexander Harvey, Frank Harris and others—and printed in the press.

The Secretary of State thinks it advisable that he himself at least for the present time should limit his direct activity with the pen, for less occasional articles from him receive more attention than if he should publish constantly articles over his own name.

His Excellency has considered taking into the service the famous, clever journalist, McClure, as manager for an exhaustive press campaign which will cost about $150,000 at the very least. It will probably result from this that shortly through agents, the attitude of the influential people in the individual large cities towards the German cause will be established, and then the pro-German element will be called upon to so work upon the individual anti-German organs of importance, that the papers will change their tone. Substantial voice of the masses can be trained against England through interviews with such American business men as are interested in neutral shipping.

To close, the Secretary of State, Dr. Dernburg, suggested to make known in a fitting and confidential manner, to the leading home papers, the following:

One must not imagine that we Germans here are courting the favor of America in an unworthy manner. We do so far less than our opponents. It is therefore of the greatest importance to us to try to win for the German cause the public opinion here. These efforts are, however, made difficult by the reason that the home press occasionally loses patience, and bringing down upon it the disfavor of America, and which will be used against us by the anti-German side. That the self reliance of America has through the general demand of Europe for their favor, been materially raised, is a natural thing, and if from out of this condition of affairs the American press can extract occasional tactlessness on the part of one or the other of the warring nations, it would seem wise under the circumstances to ignore such articles.

Mr. Secretary of State Dr. Dernburg called repeatedly on those present to express an opinion upon his statements. The remarks made by them, in so far as they were met with approval, are included in this memorandum.

As I said before, things under the management of Claussen did not go to the satisfaction of Dr. Dernburg; so that sometime before Thanksgiving in 1914 he approached Mr. William Bayard Hale and asked him to take charge of the work. Mr. William Bayard Hale had had considerable experience in newspaper and journalistic work, had interviewed the Kaiser in 1908, his wife was German-born, he had written a life of President Wilson, which had been used in the campaign, and he was sent as special agent for the President in Mexico. The Germans employed him not only to secure his services as a propagandist but in the hope that through him they might get some approach to the President, and Dernburg took up with Hale his desire personally to see the President, and Hale wrote the President and endeavored to arrange an interview with him for Dernburg, but the President declined to see him.

Hale, as head and adviser of the German information bureau from December, 1914, to December, 1915, received a salary of $15,000 per year.

Senator NELSON. Hale?

Mr. BIELASKI. Hale, and in connection with this I want to read an interesting telegram which has been furnished us by the State Department and is presented with their permission, a telegram from Bernstorff through Buenos Aires and Stockholm to the German foreign office, June 2, 1916. [Reading:]

BIELASKI EXHIBIT No. 4.

In conformity with Your Excellency's wish I suggest that the present is a favorable time to get Hearst to send a first rate journalist to Berlin. The man selected, W. B. Hale, has been, as Your Excellency knows since the beginning of the war a confidential agent of the Embassy, and as such he has been paid by contract until June 23, 1918. In making this arrangement the main thing was that Hale would be the most suitable man to start the reorganization of the news service after peace on the right lines. I request that full credit may be accorded to Hale, who will bring with him a letter of recommendation from me to Dr. Hamman. Hearst is not aware that Hale is our agent; he knows him only as a germanophile journalist who has contributed many articles to his papers.

Senator STERLING. This is a telegram?

Mr. BIELASKI. From Bernstorff to the German foreign office, which shows that Mr. Hale was the secret agent of the German Government from the outset of the war until June 23, 1918, in so far as his contract was concerned.

Senator NELSON. At $15,000 a year?

Mr. BIELASKI. He received $15,000 a year as salary from Dr. Hamman as adviser of the German information bureau. I think he got considerable other money besides. He admits the receipt of the $15,000 per year in that particular capacity. He also received, I think, about $300 a week from Hearst, and very liberal expense allowance when he went to Germany, as he did under circumstances we will tell you about a little later.

Senator KING. Where is Mr. Hale now?

Mr. BIELASKI. Mr. Hale is now in New York City. We have his address, on Riverside Drive.

Here is another telegram which bears on Hale, sent in the same way by Bernstorff on June 5, 1916 [reading]:

BIELASKI EXHIBIT No. 5.

As Hale tells me and Hearst confirms, the latter is rather hurt that Wiegands' account of the World gets all the important Berlin interviews. I recommend that under suitable circumstances Hale should for obvious reasons be given preference, as Hearst organs have during the course of war always placed themselves outspokenly on our side.

Another interesting minute of one of the meetings of this committee had just after the sinking of the Lusitania, was this which I will read the following extracts:

BIELASKI EXHIBIT No. 6.

Present: Messrs. Meyer-Gerhard, Albert, Hale, Meyer, Cronmeyer, Chatfield, Hecker, Vlereck and Fuehr.

Conference on May 24, 1915, 8.30 p. m.

Mr. Meyer-Gerhard discusses the general situation and shows that the German sentiment has grown essentially more calm, and that a change for the better is not to be expected before the arrival of the German note of answer.

Mr. Hale calls attention to the interview printed in the evening papers zation in Baltimore purporting to be known as the League of American Women for Strict Neutrality.

Senator NELSON. Yes.

Mr. BIELASKI. It was a German-fathered organization managed by Hale.

Senator NELSON. There was a lot of it from Chicago, too.

Mr. BIELASKI. That is the American embargo conference. I continue reading from this:

All preparations are made for carrying through the project of poster advertising. The pamphlet entitled "Thou Shalt not Kill", written by Mr. Hale, has been printed and will be sent out. Signatures to a petition to Congress collected by the ladies now number 200,000 and will in time perhaps reach 600,000. The ladies have applied for assistance in their campaign to a number of persons named by Mr. Hale. It is suggested that it be put up to the ladies to address the petition to the President and Congress, and not wait until the collection of signatures is complete before sending it to Washington, but send them, at once, in batches of about 10,000.

Mr. Fuehr submits a copy of the Delai book prepared in the Press Bureau, which Mr. Claussen will endeavor to have reproduced in the press.

Concerning the book "War and Kultur" by the Swede, Prof. Steffen, Dr. Strauss has submitted a proposition according to which the costs are considerably less. It is resolved to forego entirely the publication of the work, which because of the events of the day and the new Burgess book has been placed very much in the background.

Senator STERLING. That is Prof. Burgess?

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes. I continue reading from this:

Mr. Claussen proposes to have a film prepared for propaganda against the exportation of arms, which shall exhibit the manufacture of American shrapnel munition and afterward show in drastic style the results of the use of this munition. It is suggested to him to report at the next conference the approximate cost of such a film.

Mr. Hale reports that Mrs. Hale is busy upon propaganda against the exportation of horses. Mr. Claussen undertakes to have a correspondingly touching scenario (story of former fire-brigade mare slaughtered in Flanders) written.

Mr. Cronmeyer reports that Mr. F. Harris had suffered a loss of about $900. in his lecture tour, and recommends that he be reimbursed for at least part of it. In consideration of the excellent book written by him, it is resolved that he shall receive $300.

Mr. Claussen states that a newspaper in Providence has made proposals for an eventual sale. He is commissioned to make a report upon this matter.

The Mr. Harris who is referred to there was the editor of Pearson's Magazine.

The minutes were prepared by Dr. Fuehr.

Senator OVERMAN. Do you say that Harris is now editor of Pearson's Magazine?

Mr. BIELASKI. I do not know whether he is now or not. I suppose he probably still is. He was until recently, in any event.

Senator KING. If the magazine is still in existence.

Mr. BIELASKI. It had considerable difficulty with the Post Office Department, under the espionage act, in getting through the mails.

Senator KING. Where was that conference held?

Mr. BIELASKI. I do not know whether it shows that or not.

Senator KING. At Mr. Albert's, or the German Embassy?

Mr. BIELASKI. The fact that it was held at 8.30 at night makes it very likely, I think, that it was held at Albert's rooms, but it does not say definitely. The conferences were held in the press bureau and at other places. Dr. Fuehr's notebook for 1916 recites a number of times when the conferences were held in the press bureau.

This bureau, which Hale presided over as adviser, got in addition to this daily sheet for the newspapers, a great many pamphlets, and also maintained a special service for the known as the Irish Press and News Service. Dr. Fuehr, who was the managing financier of the organization, also maintained an extensive press-clipping outfit. He was a very highly educated man, and apparently one of the most intelligent of the outfit. He made to Germany periodically a report of the press situation in the United States, of which we have a number of copies, and with which I think, the committee has been furnished. I will read you extracts from the more interesting part, his comment on the American press, in which he takes up the individual papers and their positions. His files of subject matters which he had made use of in sending out things contain 3,906 different topics, and of these which he had prepared he had made use of, by giving to the press through Claussen's sheet or otherwise, 1,430 items. He kept there copies of the various books that they had for distribution. He also kept a complete file of the material sent out by the Irish Press and News Service. The Irish Press and News Service offices were at 42 Forty-second Street. All of the German offices which were open in New York cooperated in this propaganda work. Von Papen, who was the military attaché, and who was in Mexico at the time the war broke out, returned to New York and opened offices, more or less two or three times.

Senator OVERMAN. Of course, we know who Von Papen is. I would like to have a statement made for the record as to who he is.

Mr. BIELASKI. Von Papen was the military attaché of the German Embassy, accredited to this country, to Mexico, and possibly to one or two of the smaller countries in Central America. I am not sure. He helped, as did Boy-Ed, who was the naval attaché, in propaganda work, and Mr. Bernstorff, of course, was intimately concerned in all of it.

I have some files here from which I will read extracts showing Boy-Ed's activities, as distinguished from the other men, in a little time.

James K. McGuire, who organized this Irish Press and News Service for the Germans, was also the author of two books, "The King, the Kaiser, and Irish Freedom," in whose publication he was financially assisted by Dr. Albert's office, and he also was the author of "What Could Germany do for Ireland?" Both these books were circulated by the press bureau as propaganda books. He also made arrangements for the printing of these books in Austria and Germany.

McGuire is the owner of the following newspapers and publishing companies: The Syracuse Printing & Publishing Co.; the Western Thomes Publishing Co., New York; the National Catholic, New York; the Light, Albany; the Truth, Scranton; the Sun, Syracuse. He also furnished Irish news to a number of other Catholic papers.

He sent out through this news service bulletins two or three times a week to 18 or 20 papers in which he had been interested, and to the daily newspapers. The number of copies he sent out varied according to the importance of the subject matter. He would send out 50 or 60, sometimes, and sometimes two or three hundred. Copies of everything sent out were also sent to Dr. Fuehr.

Dr. Albert paid to Mr. McGuire in June, 1915, $14,800, and other amounts were paid to him of which we have knowledge, and there may have been money that we have no knowledge of, which brings the total up to the neighborhood of $22,000. These payments cover money for books which have been mentioned, for the operation of the press service, and as a part of this work he sent to Ireland one or two persons to gather information, and their expenses were also paid by the Germans.

Mr. McGuire was chairman of the executive committee of the Friends of Irish Freedom. He seems to have sincerely believed that Germany would win the war and that Ireland's hope lay in Germany, and so he cooperated with Germany's representatives here as best he could. He maintains that at the break in diplomatic relations he withdrew all his books from the market, prevented their further circulation, and has rendered patriotic service to this country ever since we went into the war.

Senator KING. What has been his attitude toward Great Britain, our ally, since we entered the war?

Mr. BIELASKI. I take it he has simply been silent on that. At least, he told me he had been. I do not suppose his real feelings have undergone any change, but he has so far as we know done nothing which might be classed as damaging to the cause of this country or its allies since we entered the war.

Senator KING. You stated that Mr. McGuire furnished material for articles for certain Catholic newspapers. Did the Catholic newspapers generally publish those, or just a few?

Mr. BIELASKI. He has been furnishing material for these papers before the war in Europe broke out. That was a part of his regular business. He continued to do it, only thereafter the work was paid for by the German Government, and much of his information being furnished him by Dr. Fuehr, and, of course, it was exceedingly pro-German.

I see here Prince Hatzfield, for the ambassador, wrote to Albert May, 1915, asking for his opinion as to the desirability of publishing the booklet known as Ireland and We. Dr. Albert returned the communication, stating that the booklet was discussed in the press conference, "and we came to the conclusion that it would not pay, since the McGuire book takes up the same subject in a substantially more effective way and in a form more suitable for American readers, and this book, by publication with our assistance, was distributed all over the United States." He, however, retains the other booklet for possible future use.

Senator NELSON. Are you now referring to a dispatch of Bernstorff's?

Mr. BIELASKI. No; this was a letter—the first one was from Prince Hatzfield, who was attached to the German embassy, one of the ranking members, and Dr. Albert's reply was addressed to the ambassador.

It also seems that they had up the desirability of circulating on quite a large scale McGuire's other book What Could Germany do for Ireland? Mr. McGuire was also active in helping Germans here in other ways somewhat.

Senator NELSON. In what way?

Mr. BIELASKI. Well, the boat Gladstone, which was believed to be bearing supplies for the German boats in the south Atlantic, was held up a bit at Norfolk, and under date of December 18, 1916, McGuire wrote the following in a letter:

I have reason to believe our friends will have no trouble hereafter of like nature, at this port (Norfolk) etc.

This was addressed to Dr. Albert, I am satisfied. It does not say, however. [Continuing reading:]

There should be a special consul or agent stationed there.

Yours truly,

JAMES K. MCGUIRE

P. S.—The British have an alert and powerful man there.

Inclosed in that letter was a clipping showing that the collector, Mr. Hamilton, granted to the former Gladstone, whose name was changed to the Marina Quezada, a clearance. And inclosed with that was a card of the collector, Mr. Norman R. Hamilton. From my understanding that Mr. McGuire said that he had some relation or something of the sort at Norfolk who was connected with Hamilton, or something of that sort.

Mr. Albert, in discussing some other matters, also made a reference to McGuire helping him in labor matters. There was a very considerable propaganda among the labor element in this country, which I hope to take up in a short time. This reference to McGuire in this other work was very brief. It says:

One of these Irish gentlemen, McGuire, has written a very readable book during the war, whose circulation in the United States was furthered by ex-Governor Dernburg. Under the guise of pushing this book still further Mr. McGuire is now giving us assistance in suitable fashion in labor questions, to which, in agreement with the Ambassador and Mr. von Papen, am giving my attention.

Senator WOLCOTT. Whom are you quoting?

Mr. BIELASKI. Albert.

Senator WOLCOTT. And is that quotation from a letter of his to you?

Mr. BIELASKI. His memorandum. There are some further references in it which relate to other features of the Irish propaganda situation.

Senator STERLING. What is meant particularly by the "labor troubles," or do you cover that point later?

Mr. BIELASKI. I cover the activities of the Germans among the labor element. There were several. Their peace propaganda, their efforts to bring about strikes, and the efforts to induce German and Austro-Hungarians to withdraw from service in any factory engaged in the production of war materials.

Senator NELSON. You are going into that subject, are you?

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes; but I do not know to which particular labor trouble he refers in that communication.

Dr. Fuehr, as I said, submitted periodical reports to the Government concerning the American press. He submitted one entitled "The American press and the belligerents" at the beginning of 1916, under date of January 26, 1916.

On February 7, 1916, he reported on the views of the American press on the arrival at Newport News of the German prize ship Albatross.

On February 26, 1916, he reported on the German-American negotiations for the settlement of the Lusitania controversy, and the American press.

Again, under date of May, 1916, on the attitude of the American press toward Germany; also a report on England and the public opinion of the United States, June 13, 1916.

American press views on the naval battle of Skagerak, and the question of the attitude of the American press toward the belligerents in December, 1916.

In Dr. Fuehr's papers there appeared, in addition to his notebook, which contained a number of items of interest, a list which was headed "Important list of names," and which contains many names which are familiar to us as having been active in favor of Germany. I can read the list if you would like to hear them.

Senator NELSON. Yes; let us hear them.

Mr. BIELASKI. No. 1 is Prof. William R. Shepherd, Columbia University, New York City, about which we will have something more to say, I think.

Next, Prof. Hugo Muensterberg, Harvard University, Cambridge, Mass.

Prof. William M. Sloane, Columbia University, New York City.

Dr. Edmund von Mach, Cambridge, Mass., who was a very active propagandist, about whom we have got some information.

Dr. Arthur von Briesen, 25 Broad Street, New York City.

Prof. John W. Burgess, Newport, R. I.

Prof. Eugen Smith, Columbia University, New York City.

Prof. Herbert C. Sanborn, Vanderbilt University, Nashville, Tenn.

Prof. James G. McDonald, of the University of Indiana.

Prof. Ferdinand Schevill, University of Chicago.

Mr. E. C. Richardson, Princeton University.

Prof. Kuno Francke, Harvard University. Prof. Francke was Dr. Albert's uncle, and helped him quite a bit in the preparation of his articles for the press, but after our entrance into the war was likewise the author of some very patriotic articles.

Prof. George B. McClellan, Princeton University.

Prof. A. B. Faust, Cornell University.

Prof. Morris Jastrow, jr., University of Wisconsin.

Senator WOLCOTT. Do you know what Prof. Faust was professor of?

Mr. BIELASKI. I do not, no, sir; not offhand.

Dr. Walter M. S. McNeill, Richmond, Va.

Prof. David Starr Jordan, Berkeley, Cal.

Hon. Peter S. Grosscup, United States judge, Chicago, Ill.

Hon. Richard Bartholdt, St. Louis, Mo.

Prof. Bushnell Hart, Harvard University.

Dr. C. J. Hexamer, Philadelphia, Pa., president of the German-American Alliance.

Prof. William P. Trent.

Hon. Charles Nagel, St. Louis, Mo.

Mr. Oswald Garrison Villard, New York Evening Post.

Mr. William Randolph Hearst, New York American.

Mr. Bernard Ridder, New York Staats-Zeitung.

Mr. Edward A. Rumely, New York Evening Mail, and interested in many other forms of German propaganda.

Mr. Frederick F. Schrader, 1493 Broadway, New York City, one of the editors of Mr. Viereck's paper, and a man who served for a time as Washington correspondent for Mr. Viereck, and the author of a number of pro-German pamphlets published by the bureau.

Mr. Frank Harris, New York City, the Pearson man.

Mr. Rob. I. Ford, the Freeman's Journal, New York City.

Rev. Father Thierney, American Catholic Weekly, New York City.

Mr. Max A. Hein, 230 Riverside Drive, New York City. Mr. Hein was a very active propagandist, and I think is Mr. Viereck's brother-in-law, or some way related to him.

George Sylvester Viereck, 1123 Broadway, New York City.

There was a supplemental list, but I do not think any of the names are especially important. They are not marked on the important list.

Senator NELSON. Are there any from Minnesota there?

Mr. BIELASKI. Minnesota seems to have escaped, Senator, as I can see.

Senator NELSON. I feel relieved. Have you got that supplemental list to which you referred?

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes.

Senator NELSON. Suppose you give it to the reporter to be put in the record.

Mr. BIELASKI. I will furnish you with a copy.

Senator NELSON. We want to know who these shining lights are.

Mr. BIELASKI. Would you care, at this time, to go into and examine certain samples of the books that were published by the press together with some information as to how they were gotten out and who got them out?

Senator NELSON. I would like to hear it. Would you not, Senator?

Senator OVERMAN. Yes; if it will not cumber the record very much.

Mr. BIELASKI. There is an immense number of books that they got out, and some of them are especially interesting in the way they were prepared, I think.

Senator NELSON. If you want to call our attention to any of these books, we would be glad to have you do so. Put your list of names in the record, here.

Senator OVERMAN. You have given a list of books, have you not, in going along? There were a good many books that you named.

Mr. BIELASKI. I have named just a few. I will give you a complete list, if you want it.

Senator OVERMAN. Suppose you put that in the record—all the books—and then call our special attention to any particular ones to which you wish to refer especially.

(See the list of books printed at page 1410 of this record.)

Senator KING. You mentioned, a moment ago, Mr. Bielaski, a supplementary list of names, did you not?

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes; I said I would furnish that list.

Senator NELSON. He has agreed to put that into the record, Senator.

Senator OVERMAN. Do you want the names read, Senator?

Senator KING. That is for the record, is it not?

Senator NELSON. Yes.

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes.

Senator KING. Then let it be handed to the reporter.

Senator OVERMAN. Why not read it?

Senator KING. Yes.

Mr. BIELASKI. The second list is not so important as the first, because, I think, it was simply a list of men to whom they wanted to mail their important data; and that is not headed, as the other is, "Important list of names."

Senator KING. Is there any claim, in any of the data which you have, that these men on this supplemental list were pro-German, or were they merely used for the purpose of disseminating literature, and, perhaps, innocently used?

Mr. BIELASKI. I think that this was a list of men to whom literature was sent, particularly. I do not think that it carries with it any idea that they were pro-German. Certain of the men on the list we know, from other information, were pro-German; but the fact that they are on this list does not, I think, mean anything at all.

Senator NELSON. Why put them in the record, then? It might do some man an injustice.

Senator KING. I was going to say that we do not want to do any one an injustice.

Mr. BIELASKI. I do not think this list should go in with the idea, at all, that it in any way reflects or implies pro-Germanism.

Senator OVERMAN. Then let us not put it in at all. Let me see it, please.

Senator WOLCOTT. How is the first list headed?

Mr. BIELASKI. "Important list of names." This list does contain the names, as I said, of practically all of the active pro-German people.

Senator NELSON. They were all active pro-Germans, those fellows?

Senator WOLCOTT. That is, you are referring to men who were active pro-Germans prior to our entrance into the war?

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes; and a few who were possibly active afterwards.

Senator WOLCOTT. Yes; and some—I recall particularly your reference to one man who, as you said, since our entrance into the war has written very strongly American, patriotic articles?

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes.

Senator WOLCOTT. So that that list really refers to a day prior to our entrance into the war?

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes. Dr. Fuehr, of course, returned with Count von Bernstorff after the severance of diplomatic relations, and his activities ended then.

I think possibly there is a very important incident connected with Dr. William Bayard Hale which I have not made any reference to.

Under date of April 22, 1915, Mr. William Bayard Hale wrote Dr. Albert as follows:

BIELASKI EXHIBIT No. 7.

DEAR DR. ALBERT: Here are the notes which I have prepared as suggestive of points that might be made in answer to Mr. Bryan's note of yesterday.

Because it was so much easier to write straight along in the "character," so to speak, of His Excellency, I have allowed my memorandum to take that form. I trust you will fully explain to him that I do not presume to believe that more than an occasional point here and there may be of use.

Yours sincerely,

WILLIAM BAYARD HALE.

Senator STERLING. What is the date of that, Mr. Bielaski?

Mr. BIELASKI. April 22, 1915.

And there is a postscript which says:

DEAR DR. ALBERT: I have well considered every word. I believe the document were promptly delivered and promptly published, the effect would be great.

That was an American citizen advising a diplomatic representative of the German Government as to points which should be in reply to a note of the American Secretary of State.

Senator OVERMAN. That refers to William Jennings Bryan was at that time Secretary of State?

Mr. BIELASKI. I think he was Secretary of State at that time. Yes. But he is not in any way concerned—

Senator WOLCOTT. I suppose that was in connection with the Lusitania notes?

Mr. BIELASKI. The Lusitania was sunk in May, 1915. That was before that time.

Senator OVERMAN. May 7.

Mr. BIELASKI. May 7, 1915.

He then prepared a form of note, of many pages, in which he puts up the German viewpoint. I can read it for you, if you wish.

Senator OVERMAN. Let it go into the record. Do not read it unless there is something special to which you wish to call our attention.

Mr. BIELASKI. I do not think there is anything special in this which I wish to call attention, but Mr. Albert thereafter went over this draft, and sent the draft back to Mr. Hale, and on May 27, 1915, Mr. Hale wrote Mr. Albert again:

The form and language of this document seems to me to be unexceptionable. I only regret that it is not possible to take a more advanced tone. I feel that the exchange of these gentle notes will lead to nothing.

Senator KING. To what notes, if you recall, of Secretary Bryan does the memorandum relate that was prepared by Dr. Hale?

Mr. BIELASKI. Possibly a reading of the draft will suggest the subject matter. He suggests:

BIELASKI EXHIBIT No. 8.

I have received, etc., etc.

Insofar as your Excellency's note requires the formal answer of the German Government it will be replied to as soon as it has been transmitted to Berlin and receive instructions from Berlin, a process which, by reason of the interference by Great Britain with oceanic cable communication, will be a matter of several weeks.

Pending these instructions, however, I feel it is incumbent upon me to answer at once to those particulars of your note which seem addressed to me personally, particularly lest the delay involved in awaiting formal instructions to my government on all points might by any possibility inure to the prejudice of that friendship between the people of Germany and the people of the United States which, as you suggest, "is so warm and of such long standing." I, the representative of the German Government, equally with yourself, feel under a special compulsion to speak with perfect frankness when any occasion arises which seems likely to create any misunderstanding, however slight or temporary, between those who represent the governments of the two countries.

That is quoted from the note.

Of your Excellency's kind reference to my "long experience in international affairs," I trust I have a fitting appreciation, coming as it does from one services to his country in the sphere of international affairs, have been so conspicuous as have been yours. I should, however, repudiate all the teachings of an experience which you are pleased to describe as long, were I to accede to the suggestions that the relations of the two governments with one another should never be made a subject of discussion with a third government.

This is, apparently, a note in reply to the effort of the German Government to discuss our relations with Great Britain, which you will recall about that time.

He takes that up, and argues that position [reading:]

Whether or not the United States is minded to maintain its position as a sovereign power, possessing for its merchant marine the right to sail the open seas freely and without other interference than is allowed by the well understood and universally accepted principles of international law, is a question which indeed lies between the Government and the people of the United States and in which my Government assuredly has not the least intention nor desire to interfere.

It was evidently in answer to that note.

In the second part of your note, your Excellency declares that the Government of the United States:

"attempted to secure from the German and British Governments mutual concessions with regard to the measures those governments respectively adopted for the interruption of trade on the high seas."

Mr. Hale was the author of the pamphlet Thou Shalt Not Kill, which was circulated so largely throughout the United States, hundreds of thousands of copies, many sent by Mr. Hale directly from the Press Bureau, many sent by this league in Baltimore of women for strict neutrality, many sent by the American embargo conference, which was a German-engineered and financed organization.

Senator NELSON. In Chicago?

Mr. BIELASKI. In Chicago; yes, sir. It was the organization that sent all those telegrams, and so on.

Continuing on Mr. Hale's activities, it might be interesting to note that immediately following the address of the President before Congress in January, 1918, William Bayard Hale wrote a special article on the question as to whether this occasion brought peace nearer, in which the following paragraph appears:

In particular the very fact that the head of the nation dominant in the Western Hemisphere should assume to lay down in detail political arrangements for the empires, kingdoms and principalities of the other hemisphere seemed to promise little toward the early reconciliation of the warring world.

And he later says, in the same article, which was presumably written from Washington by Mr. Hale:

It was freely said here tonight that neither the Central Powers nor the Entente would take quite seriously the President's assertion that "for such arrangements and covenants we are willing to fight and continue to fight until they are achieved."

That was published in the New York American, and shows his attitude as late as January, 1918.

Mr. William Bayard Hale, after the termination of his trip with the German information service, was, as indicated by the telegrams I read, sent abroad by Mr. Heart.

Senator OVERMAN. Who is Mr. Hale? Tell us something about him.

Mr. BIELASKI. I did give you some information about him; he was a journalist, a newspaper man.

Senator WOLCOTT. With a German wife?

Mr. BIELASKI. With a German wife; he was quite prominent in the newspaper world, and worked for the Philadelphia paper. He was the special agent to Mexico with Ex-Gov. Lind, of Minnesota, in the Mexican matter.

Senator OVERMAN. Is he of German extraction?

Mr. BIELASKI. His wife is German.

Senator OVERMAN. Yes; I know you said that; but is he of German extraction?

Mr. BIELASKI. I do not think he is.

Senator NELSON. Was he with Gov. Lind in an official capacity?

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes; he was special agent; and the fact that he was supposed to have some prominence here and some acquaintance with officials, and so forth, made him, from the German standpoint, very desirable. They were always proceeding on the assumption that they could get hold of somebody who could get inside, they could do something. But I think it is a wonderful record that, so far as information goes, no American official was ever seduced or led in any way by any of their activities, if we except only those gentlemen—Congressman Buchanan, who got mixed up with Mr. Rintelen, the German agent's activities under the guise of the National Peace Council.

When Mr. Hale went abroad——

Senator NELSON. He went abroad as the representative of the Hearst papers?

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes.

Senator OVERMAN. In what year was that?

Mr. BIELASKI. It was in 1915. We shall have something more to say, I think, about the Hearst papers and the relations of Hearst and Hale with the German officials.

On May 26 Dr. Fuehr records in his diary:

Noon. Call from Hale, who stated that Hearst proposes to send him as representative to Germany.

And, on the next day, May 27:

Visit to Hale, whose mission to Germany for Hearst is now a matter of course.

May 31. Departure of Hale to Germany as representative of the Hearst paper. In the morning I introduced him to Count Bernstorff, and had a conference.

There are some other things about Hale of possible interest that I took with him, when he sailed, a man named Louis D. Edwards, whom Edwards knew, before he left New York, that Hale was working for Hearst, and that he was working for Hearst, too; but he did not know that Hale was under contract with the German Government.

They sailed together, and were together except for a short trip. Hale made his way down through Roumania, about the time that we entered the war, I think.

Senator OVERMAN. Was there any evidence that Hearst knew that he was under contract with the German Government?

Mr. BIELASKI. No; on the contrary, Bernstorff, as I have said, told me that Hearst did not know that fact.

Mr. Edwards testified that when they were approaching Kirkwall Mr. Hale tried to get him to learn a code message by heart, which was to be delivered to the foreign office in Berlin.

Mr. Edwards testified to us that he refused to do so, because it was meaningless to him, and he had in mind what had happened to Mr. Archibald. He stated he did not believe that the particular code message was harmful to the United States, but had to do with propaganda work in connection with the press in the United States.

Edwards also testified that Hale told him that he was a paid worker for German propaganda; that Hale received several code messages from the foreign office in Berlin, the nature of which he did not know, except that they were in the usual five-figure code, to be translated through the use of a dictionary; that is, part of the figures referred to the page, and the other figures referred to the number down of the word. Mr. Edwards stated that passes which they obtained in Germany had, I think, the question: "What German firm do you represent?" And they were filled in to read: "Foreign office, Berlin."

Edwards had some disagreements with Hale, and Hale explained to me, back in the fall of 1917—which I give to you for whatever it is worth—that this code he talked over with Edwards was really a code he wanted Edwards to use in communicating his health and safety and so forth to his wife, should he be arrested and imprisoned by the British when he was taken to Kirkwall.

Senator NELSON. Let me ask you this: Edwards accompanied Hale to Germany?

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes.

Senator NELSON. On this trip?

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes.

Senator NELSON. And on this trip he got information that Hale was working in the interest of Germany.

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes.

Senator NELSON. And Edwards was a representative, also, of the New York American—of the Hearst papers?

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes, sir.

Senator NELSON. Is there anything in the papers that indicates that Edwards gave any information about that matter to Hearst?

Mr. BIELASKI. Not that I know of. I do not know what he did with respect to Hearst. He gave us information, when we approached him about it, some time after we entered the war. At that time, of course, this was a neutral country.

Maj. HUMES. You referred to the trip into Roumania. At whose expense did Hale make that trip into Roumania?

Mr. BIELASKI. We understood that was made at the expense of the German foreign office, but we have no conclusive proof of that, of course; it was a happening in Germany; but we understood he went down there on behalf of the German foreign office, to prevent Roumania going into the war. A man named Wunnenberg, who was convicted with Sanders of sending German spies from this country to England, and who was intimately mixed up in some German activities in this country, testified that one of the objects of Hale's going to Germany was to arrange for the transmission in his press dispatches of code dispatches intended for German officials.

I think if the committee has no objection I will give you one illustration of the manner in which propaganda are circulated in the form of books.

Maj. HUMES. Before we get away from that Hale matter, will you state whether or not Hale afterwards sent for his wife to come to Germany?

Mr. BIELASKI. Oh, yes. He sent—I think it is in the file—a telegram, showing that he did send for his wife and children and servants, all at very large expense. And when in Berlin he occupied a bridal suite of one of the leading hotels, at very great expense. My own guess would be that if Hearst paid for those expenses they were paid for twice, because it was generally understood that the German Government paid for part of his expenses while he was in Berlin.

Maj. HUMES. And in wiring his wife to join him in Germany he told her to travel in luxury without regard to expense?

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes. Economic Aspects of the War, by John Clapp, professor of economics of the New York University, is a long discussion of the subject from the German standpoint. In the preface he says:

This book was written because it seemed to me that we Americans were paying too much attention to the affairs of belligerents, and too little to our own. After all, we are by no means untouched by the war. It imperils not only our present material interests but also neutral rights upon which the interests of all peaceful nations in the end depend. The neutral world is watching for us to realize and to assert its rights and our own. Here is a statement of what those rights are, and this record of what seems to have occurred to threaten them.

In this book he suggests an embargo on the exportation of munitions for the purpose of enforcing our right to trade unhindered with the belligerent and the neutral nations of Europe.

This book was printed by the Yale University Press; of course it kept secret its real source, and without any knowledge on the part of the printers that it was paid for and financed by the German Government.

The circumstances under which the book was printed appear to have been these, that Clapp was asked by Sickel, I think it was one of the directors of the Hamburg-American Line, to meet at dinner with Dr. Albert, at dinner, after Clapp had delivered an address at the university expressing quite the sentiments that he afterward embodied in his book. He there met at dinner Sickel, Dr. Albert, and a young man named H. A. Boaz, who was an assistant of Sickel's and an employee of the Hamburg-American Line and was involved in other forms of propaganda. He managed, for instance, a tour through the United States of Miss Ray Beveridge on behalf of the Germans.

At this dinner Prof. Clapp claims that Dr. Albert was introduced to him as an officer of the Hamburg-American Line; and then he prevailed upon him to go to work writing this book, asking him to draw from some of his other labors and to devote his time to it. He did so, and was furnished, from time to time, funds.

I see March, 1915, Mr. Albert's office paid, through W. G. ... $500 to Edwin J. Clapp.

He was paid in that manner from time to time sums of money aggregating $3,750.

Senator NELSON. Did Clapp know that it was German money that he got?

Mr. BIELASKI. He knew that it was German money, at least, before his book was published; but I do not know that he did at the outset. He claims to have thought that it was a Hamburg-American Line affair; though, of course, the Hamburg-American Line is practically the German Government in shipping matters.

From time to time he was paid this money, and in August, 1915, he was paid $11,500 to cover the cost of the book and the printing of 7,500 copies at $1 a copy, and $4,000 which he states was to be used in advertising.

He states that about all he got out of it was expenses, but that he anticipated very large profits from the sale of the book. But the book did not sell.

Clapp had studied in Germany. He was also interested in a plan to test the British blockade. He came down here to Washington with the idea of getting up a shipment from this country which would be on all-fours with shipments from some of the Scandinavian countries which were permitted to go through. I think he selected lumber as a shipment, and he wanted to make a test to get this country in trouble with Great Britain; by getting this boat over, to see whether Great Britain would enforce the embargo against it.

I do not think that ever went through, although he devoted quite some time to it.

His later history, in so far as we were interested in him as a propagandist, was this, that after writing the book he began to write editorials for Mr. Rumely, for the Evening Mail. For a time he was paid space rates, and then he was taken on and paid a regular weekly salary for writing the editorials for the Mail, after the German Government, through Mr. Rumely, had purchased it.

He also got out a syndicated series of six articles for German propaganda through Rumely, which he was paid for, which was largely made up of extracts from his book.

Maj. HUMES. May I just interrupt with reference to the Hale matter, for a moment. You did not fix the time of his return to this country from Germany.

Mr. BIELASKI. I do not know that I know the exact date, off-hand, without looking up the records.

Maj. HUMES. When, with reference to the entry of the United States into the war?

Mr. BIELASKI. It was after it, as I recall it.

Maj. HUMES. He stayed there until after——

Mr. BIELASKI. He stayed there as long as he could.

Maj. HUMES. Until after the declaration of war by the United States?

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes. Dr. Dernburg and his propaganda bureau got out books called "The Catechism of Baalam, Junior," and "A Trip Through Headline Land" which was gotten out anonymously. They were, however, written by an Irish-American propagandist, and financed by this bureau of Fuehr and Albert.

The first record we have of him shows this; a letter of October 1914, addressed to Count von Bernstorff by George Sylvester Viereck in which he says:

I trust I am not trespassing upon your kindness if I introduce to you Shaemus O'Sheel, a brilliant young Irish poet, in sympathy with our cause who would like to say a word to you on some things that are near his heart.

O'Sheel was an employee of the Senate, here, in some capacity some time.

Senator NELSON. In the employ of whom?

Mr. BIELASKI. In the employ of the United States Senate.

He also had a letter from Mr. George Barthelme, one of the German propagandists brought to this country by the Germans. I do not think it is necessary to read this, but it is a highly commendable letter, written by Barthelme about him.

Senator OVERMAN. About O'Sheel?

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes, sir; about O'Sheel. There is a lot of the sort of thing, later on. Here is the sort of thing he was distributed. He distributed, in addition to his books, circulars of loyalty of pro-Germans. This is a short one [reading]:

BIELASKI EXHIBIT No. 9.

Germany is not averse to war with us. In such event, German U-boats will be free to sink everything in sight.

The military advantages would be all with Germany.

The Allies are not ignorant of this. They know the debacle is coming. I wish us in the war so that they can shift their indebtedness onto us, and something left to set up shop with after the crash.

Advantage to Germany, injury to America, would be the result of our participation in the war.

Senator OVERMAN. What is the date of that?

Mr. BIELASKI. That particular one is not dated.

Senator OVERMAN. Do you know whether he was an employee of the Senate at that time?

Mr. BIELASKI. I think that he was discharged just about that time or before that time. His name, by the way, was James Shields. He changed it to Shaemus O'Sheel to get, as he thought, the Irish equivalent.

This was published under the name of Mr. Hugh H. Masters who is now an inspector in the employ of the city of New York.

Here is a letter dated January 9, 1918, to Dr. Albert, signed "G.S.," written by George Sylvester Viereck on the letterhead "The Fatherland" [reading]:

BIELASKI EXHIBIT No. 10.

I have received this letter from our friend Shaemus O'Sheel which speaks for itself.

Shall I send him a check for $15? I have already sent him $10. Shall I send the money I lay out for him from the press fund or do you prefer to place a separate little fund at my disposal for Shaemus O'Sheel and matters which you wish to take up in connection with this pamphlet?

Here is a letter written by Shaemus himself, on the letterhead of the United States Senate, office of the Secretary. I do not think that is at all material.

Senator OVERMAN. It shows how much we were fooled by him. We did not know what he was when we were transacting business with him. He was here with Senator O'Gorman's force, I believe.

Mr. BIELASKI. This letter reads:

BIELASKI EXHIBIT No. 11.

I have just read of your victory. Great! Your courage deserves an Iron Cross. And the result was typical of what will always happen when an American audience has a fair chance to puncture a British bluff.

I too have had success. After a good deal of perplexity as to the proper mode of attack, I have struck a speed that means a much better pamphlet than Baalam, Jr. It should be completed by Tuesday in your hands by Wednesday, or if retyping takes long, by Thursday. Preparatory to receiving it, I wish you and Mr. A. (to whom please communicate this) to consider a couple of points about it.

I assume "Mr. A." was Dr. Albert.

The idea, as I understood it, was to produce a catechistic satire chiefly of certain foibles of the American press and certain absurdities (and enormities) of spurious neutrality; all in a rather gentle vein and in simple language. It was not to attempt to deal at large with leading issues of the War which have been dealt with so splendidly in recent pamphlets. The ms. you will receive is confined to the stated objects, but you, and Mr. A. especially, may think at first that it has departed too much from the second and third conditions. As a matter of fact, I am proud of the style of it, and if it might be above the heads of some it will be within the reach of all fairly well educated readers and will impress them the more powerfully because of its style. That, I am sure, will be acceptable to you and Mr. A. There is really no venom in it, either, so I trust that if it seems a bit stronger in places than was contemplated, you will concede that some judgment must be left to an author.

Then he says:

One thing more. By Saturday I can have all those clippings that we design for a really neutral pamphlet copied. I think you will not judge me avaricious or inclined to impose on you if I suggest that I would be glad of the opportunity to have one more talk with you and Mr. A. on three matters.

1. The pamphlet now being completed.
2. The newspaper-clipping pamphlet, which I think very important.
3. The political aspects of neutrality and certain easy and vastly effective things that can be done in that line.

The pre-requisites for such a visit by me are: A definite appointment for a joint conversation with you and Mr. A. on Sunday January 24th; or definite appointments for separate conversations with you and with him; and a cheque for $15.00 by Saturday. Do not write me here but at 714 19th St. N. W.

Yours as ever

S. O. S.

[Laughter.]

I do not know whether he knew the significance of "S. O. S." at that time, or not. Here is a letter from Albert to Viereck on January 23, 1915. This reads as follows:

BIELASKI EXHIBIT No. 12.

Regarding our conversation of today, I send you enclosed a check for $100. I may beg you to use this sum for payments to Mr. O'Sheel and to give me a statement after payment. The level of the single expenditures I would leave to your discretion. For the interview, I will be at liberty during the next week. You will have the friendliness to arrange with me for an appointment.

On February 15 Viereck transmits to Albert a letter that he has received from O'Sheel. This is largely about his pamphlet, "A Trip Through Headline Land," and he signs it "Very truly, yours, John Doe, author of A Trip Through Headline Land."

Here is one signed "S. O. S.," to "Dear Sylvester" [reading]

BIELASKI EXHIBIT No. 13.

Your letter and enclosures received. Thanks for liberal subscription to book of poems.

As you say, or indicate, the mss. needs

Shortening, sharpening, supplementing.

You will have it again much improved in a week or less.

There is some further correspondence between Albert and Viereck as to the payments to be made to Shaemus O'Sheel.

Here is a sample of "The Catechism of Baalaam, Junior, by an Irish-American" [handing printed pamphlet to the chairman].

He also was the author of a little scenario, which Viereck thought was excellent, but I do not know what became of it.

Mr. Shaemus O'Sheel, in a statement made to a Department of Justice agent on June 18, 1918, said:

I have never had any relations with the agents of any foreign power received any fee, reward, gift, or other consideration from any agent of foreign government, nor have I ever rendered any service to any agent of foreign country. I met the Count Von Bernstorff on one occasion only, purely formal and very public way, at a charitable bazaar, understood to be for a German charity fund at a hall on 9th or 7th Street, in Washington. I was simply introduced to the German Ambassador as one of a line of people who have never since seen him, communicated with him, nor received any communications from him. I have never, to my knowledge, met any other official employee of the German Embassy nor of the Austrian Embassy.

Which entitles him, I think, to be called a German citizen.

Frank Harris, as I have mentioned before, was the author of "England or Germany." It was declared nonmailable under the espionage act, and was one of the articles circulated by the Federal Bureau.

Among the pamphlets and books which this bureau got out were the following:

What Germany Wants, by Edmund von Mach.

Hindenburg's March into London, by L. G. Redmond-Howard, author of Life of John Redmond.

Central Europe, by Frederick Nauman, of the German Reichstag.

Peace and America, by Hugo Muensterberg, professor at Harvard University.

Secrets of German Progress, by Frank Koester, one of Viereck's regular contributors to Viereck's Weekly.

How Diplomats Make War, by Francis Nielson.

Zeppeline over England, with a foreword by Bernhard H. Ridder, of the New York Staats-Zeitung.

The Making of Modern Germany, by Ferdinand Schevill.

The Lusitania Case, collected and published by C. L. Droste.

The Vampire of the Continent, by Count E. zu Reventlow, translated from the German, issued by the Jackson Press.

- The Emden, by von Mucke.
 Germany of To-day, by George Stuart Fullerton, of Columbia University.
 Whose Sin is the World War, issued by the New Era Publishing Co., translated from the Hungarian by Count Julius Andrassy.
 The Neutral Portion, by Elwin Lorraine, issued by the Jackson Press.
 Der Kreig i, Alpenrdt, by Karl Hans Strobl.
 Behind the Scenes of Warring Germany, by Edward Lyell Fox, published by MacBride, Nast & Co.
 Carlyle and the War, by Marshall Kelly, published by Jean Wick.
 Germany and England, by von Bernhardt, published by Dillingham.
 America's Relations to the Great War, by John William Burgess, formerly professor at Columbia University.
 Gertrude and I, by Adele Lewisohn, published by the International Monthly.
 German Achievements in America, by Rudeolph Cronau, one of Viereck's writers.
 Justice in War Time, by Bertrand Russell, Open Court Publishing Co.
 War Diary of an American Woman, by Jouett Jeffries, published by The Fatherland Corporation.
 Der Russiche Niederbruch, by Ludwig Ganghofer, in two volumes.
 Als U-Boats Kommandant Gegen England, by Forstner.
 The Americans, by Hugo Muensterberg.
 The War for a World, by Israel Zangwill.
 The Trip of the Deutschland, by Paul Koenig.
 American Patriotism, by Hugo Muensterberg.
 Die Schlacht am Staggerrat, by Admiral von Scheer, published in Berlin by Ullstein & Co., issued by the Ullstein War Book Co., 1482 Broadway, New York.
 To Siberia with a Hundred Thousand Germans, Fourth Month of the Russian Campaign, by Kurt Aram, published by Ullstein & Co., Berlin; reprinted by the Ullstein War Book Co., 1482 Broadway, New York.
 Der Fremdenleigionar, by Maximilian Kirsch, Arnan History of the War, 1914-1915.

They also circulated in this country a number of books which were official publications of the foreign office of Austro-Hungary and Germany—the German White Book and the Austro-Hungarian Red Book—which were not, of course, secret, and a large number of other pamphlets which, I think, must have listed over 50, at least. They also got out a pamphlet called “Shanghaied into the European War,” and others. These were gotten out under the head of the American Truth Society, which was assisted financially by the Germans. and about 80 per cent of its membership were Germans or with German names, and a good many of the others were Irish. Mr. Jeremiah O'Leary was the president of it. Its man Wallace was financially assisted by the German consul at New Orleans, and afterwards, when we got into the war, he continued to circulate this book and was convicted out in Iowa, I think, and sentenced to 20 years in the penitentiary, and has since died in jail.

Mr. Fuehr was himself the author of a book called “The Neutrality of Belgium,” which was circulated as propaganda. It makes three claims: That Belgium was not neutral territory when the German Army invaded it; that according to the laws of nations the treaty declaring Belgium's neutrality has been void for many years, and has been considered so by Great Britain prior to the war; and third, that even if the treaty had been in force international law fully permitted Germany to invade Belgium under the particular circumstances. That was the sort of stuff that Fuehr was writing and circulating. The Origin of the War, the Vampire of the Continent, the Tragedy of Belgium, etc., were all written and circulated by this bureau. I could give you a great deal more information about their pamphlets if you wanted it, but I do not think you do. “England or Germany,” was written by Frank Harris, as I have said.

They circulated also pamphlets intended to disturb the relations between England with India. They circulated the pamphlet by Mr. Charles Nagel to stop traffic in arms and munitions. That was circulated under the name of the American Independence Union.

Maj. HUMES. You referred to the pamphlet, "Traffic in Arms and Ammunition," by Hon. Charles Nagel. Is that the article that appeared in the Fatherland, taken from the American Leader, published by Hammerling [handing paper to the witness].

Mr. BIELASKI. I think it is.

Maj. HUMES. That is the same article?

Mr. BIELASKI. That is the same article.

Senator OVERMAN. That is the same article you brought out in your examination of Hammerling?

Maj. HUMES. Yes.

Mr. BIELASKI. Here is a copy of the same article. I think if you will compare it, you will find it the same [handing paper to Maj. Humes].

(The copy of the article referred to is here printed in full in the record as follows:)

BIELASKI EXHIBIT No. 12.

[American Independence Union, 287-289 Fourth Avenue, New York. Honorary President, Herman Ridder. Vice President, Dr. Thomas C. Hall. Treasurer, James G. ...]

MAY 8TH, 1915

To Every American:

Every national interest is sacrificed by our wholesale exportation of arms and ammunition. We are creating a huge vested interest in a non-productive and expensive industry. We will be plagued by a lobby and corruption without end to get us to buy their products. We are endangering hate in the hearts of millions of our best customers and our own citizens. We are laying up against ourselves the charge of hypocrisy every time we try to utter a word for peace. We are taking a cowardly part in a war on those who did us no hurt. We are converting Europe's agony into our dirty dollars. God will judge us and that right of judgment is ours.

THOMAS C. HALL
Vice-President

We present herewith the strongest statement, both from the point of view of abstract law and from the point of view of humanity, on the shipment of implements of murder to Europe, that has been published so far in this country. This remarkable document is from the pen of Hon. Charles Nagel, Secretary of Commerce and Labor in the Cabinet of Pres. William Howard Taft. We are indebted for this article to the courtesy of the "American Leader."

TRAFFIC IN ARMS AND AMMUNITION.

[By Hon. Charles Nagel, Ex-Secretary of Commerce and Labor.]

Those who indulge the belief that public interest in the sale of arms and ammunition has subsided because the Hitchcock bill died with the adjournment of Congress are doomed to disappointment. Ambitious statesmen were glad to find a politician's escape in the convenient declaration that it would be unneutral to refuse to sell arms to belligerents may see this unhappy phrase come back to plague both its authors and sponsors. To the minds of those who upon grounds of morality and decency are opposed to this trade the excuse offered for not placing an embargo upon these sales was an insult to injury. It was not regarded as an honest excuse; but as the indication of men who wanted either to evade the issue or to find a way to favor belligerents, or both.

It is, of course, accepted that the rules of international law do not forbid such sales. The rights of the German and Austrian Governments are involved at all.

Germany does not even protest our right to sell arms and ammunition; although she has expressed her surprise at our enormous sales of ammunition to the Allies and our failure at the same time to insist upon our undoubted right to deliver foodstuffs to the civilians of Germany and Austria-Hungary. The question, however, is essentially one of our own self-respect. What precedents have we in our own history to guide us?

During our late difficulties with Mexico our Government prevented a German merchantman from delivering arms and ammunition to one of the Mexican factions. The German ship was clearly within her rights; but she yielded to our desire. What was the foundation for our action? Plainly that our Government did not sympathize with the particular consignee. We objected to the giving of aid to Huerta from any source. We exercised a preference between two belligerent factions even to the extent of interfering with the rights of another power. By the same rule we cannot now insist upon the right to sell arms to the Allies, and at the same time escape the suspicion before the world and before our own people that we are exercising a preference in favor of one and against another friendly power.

We have gone farther. Congress adopted a resolution which gave the President the authority to place an embargo upon the shipment of arms and ammunition from this country to any other country upon this continent engaged in internal strife. That authority was used. The shipment of arms was prohibited, until the Government in its desire to aid a favored faction in Mexico lifted the embargo in its behalf. Again we used the privilege to sell or not to sell by preference. We not only established the rule that we may forbid the traffic in arms and ammunition, but we went farther and established the principle that we may and will use our power to encourage or to discourage particular belligerents. The circumstance that the resolution of Congress was restricted to this continent is not controlling. This continent embraces many nations; but with not one of them is our relation, politically, commercially or humanly speaking, as close as it is with at least four of the great nations now engaged in war. Neither are our obligations nor interests under the Monroe Doctrine controlling. If interest shall determine, Heaven knows that is intense enough in the case before us, measured by whatever human consideration we may select. Furthermore, the international haziness of the Monroe Doctrine has been so completely demonstrated by our Government that no sincere observer would now be willing to look to that doctrine for foundation of right or for explanation of conduct. In establishing and in lifting our embargo on the shipment of arms we have played favorites; in compelling Germany to yield to our decision we have done the same. Morally speaking, we cannot escape the conviction before our own people that behind high-sounding phrases of neutrality we are now engaged in the same partisan business. We have stopped the traffic when we wanted to. We could stop it now; but we do not want to. We sell when we want to help; and we refuse when we do not. For this conduct we are not responsible to other countries; but we cannot escape a responsibility to ourselves.

There, are, however, other considerations to be weighed. We have complacently justified the traffic in ammunition upon the ground that it is not inhibited by International Law. So much is true. But it is not true, as is assumed with equal complacency, that therefore this traffic is honorable or even, broadly speaking, justified. Lame and impotent as International Law in the absence of a strong neutral power undoubtedly is, that law has advanced far enough in the realm of ethics to denounce this particular traffic. The rule does not permit a government to sell arms to a belligerent. It simply permits a private citizen to take the risk. But so complete is the denial of perfection to this traffic that ammunition and arms so sold are subject to confiscation and destruction at the hands of a belligerent. And to leave no room for doubt as to the status of the traffic ship, the ship carrying such ammunition and arms, although that ship be owned by citizens of a neutral power, is subject to confiscation, and in case of necessity may be sunk.

To say that it is unneutral to prohibit the pursuit of a business which has been so characterized by the Law of Nations is astounding. It suggests a befogged state of mind or morals. The wish is father to the thought. Does anybody believe that such an argument would have been advanced or would have prevailed if Japan had sought to buy arms from us in case she had been engaged in war with England? Would we not then have found a way to declare that a highly civilized nation—the bearer of the world's peace mandate—could not permit her citizens to profit by furnishing instruments of destruction against her own kinsmen?

Was it unneutral when Germany during our war with Spain at our expense overhauled and searched a Spanish ship for a cargo of arms destined for Cuba and to be used against us; or did we accept her conduct as one of those things of fair consideration which one friendly power may in perfect good faith extend to another?

These citizens who are engaged in this business now are protected by the law—particularly if they get the cash on this side; as they will so long as they can induce our banks to advance it for this purpose. But let them not indulge the notion that their business is promoting our country's international standing. They are not precisely like other distinguished business men in the past have ascertained how close they might brush the prison walls without actually getting inside of them. But neither are they to be accepted as the proprietors of a wholesale foreign commerce upon which we may rely with confidence or with satisfaction for the future.

There are other considerations still to be dealt with—considerations whose echoes are apt to be heard in this country for generations to come. The citizenship of this nation is closely related to the belligerents on the other side. With many, that relationship is recent and correspondingly intimate. Actions of that kind no government can or should disregard. During our Civil War, Great Britain was several times on the point of turning against us. It is little doubt but that for John Bright she would have done it. Her Government was against us. Her people were for us because they held slavery in abhorrence. One of the powerful arguments used by Bright to the people—particularly to the laboring classes—was that within a brief period hundreds and thousands of persons had migrated from England to our country and that slavery war as Great Britain's Government contemplated would be like making a war upon her own people. We may argue about the theory of citizenship as we will, but Bright sounded a true note which was heeded and which cannot be disregarded by us to-day.

Say of the people who protest what you will, they may at least say of themselves that for half a century not one momentous public question has been submitted in this country which could have been decided rightly without their support. And we may say of them that if they had the decision to-day, international precedents would not be lost for want of better support than paper tests; rights would not be forfeited; the Stars and Stripes would be respected the world over; all neutral nations would be joined under our leadership to sustain the standards of International Law, and to impress upon savages the dictates of advanced humanity; and our part in the greatest war of the world would not be confined to the effort to bolster up our waning trade by the export of instruments of destruction, and to satisfy our demand for information by the import of manufactured news.

Let us be neutral; Let us be citizens of the United States by all means. Is it fair, or, in any event, is it wise to expect well-nigh half of the people of this nation to stand by while related peoples are mowed down with weapons of war, and the manufacture paid for with bank balances largely of their making and saved all heralded in the name of neutrality and in the guise of humanity? It is not to take account of things and conditions. Technically our attitude is neutral. In effect it is felt to be partisan. Sentiment is profoundly stirred; and sentiment once aroused is not readily controlled by argument or guided by reason. There may be a day of reckoning; and the time to prepare for it is now.

Dr. Dernberg was himself the author of "Germany and the World War," which was published by The Fatherland, which describes Germany as a nation of peace and all that sort of thing; very anti-British. "The Lusitania Case; Was Bryan's Resignation Justified," published in 1915 by Hugh H. Masterson, which was also the name under which the Shaemus O'Sheel publications were published, financed by the Germans. There are just scores of these different documents.

Senator NELSON. Could you give a list to the stenographer of these German publications?

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes, sir.

Senator NELSON. Furnish that afterwards?

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes.

(The list of publications referred to was furnished by Mr. Bielaski, and is here printed in the record, as follows:)

BIELASKI EXHIBIT No. 13.

"Warlike England as seen by herself," by Ferdinand Tonnies, published in 1915. The advertisement regarding this book gives an idea of its purpose and scope. "A scholarly and comprehensive indictment of England's over-weening lust for world-conquest. Out of the mouths of her own statesmen and historians she is convicted of the appalling crimes of piracy, murder and arson in the establishment of her vast colonial empire for the benefit of her so-called upper classes. The horrors of her once vaunted slave trade, the conquest of India, the outbreaks in Afghanistan, the conquest of Egypt and the outrages of the Boer war have become a lasting shame. Her struggle to preserve the balance of power among nations for her own selfish advantages is set forth in this volume as the active determining factor in the world's greatest war."

"The Neutrality of Belgium," by Alexander Fuehr, which was published in October, 1915. A good idea of the character of this book can be had from the following taken from the advertisement circulated concerning it: Makes three claims, which have not heretofore been made thus carefully for Americans to consider:

1. That Belgium was not neutral territory when the German army invaded it.
2. That, according to the Law of Nations, the treaty guaranteeing Belgium's neutrality has been void for many years and has been considered so by Great Britain, prior to the war;
3. That, even if the guarantee treaty had still been in force, International Law fully permitted Germany to invade Belgium under the particular circumstances.

Cites Treaties, Documents, Legal Authorities, Press Articles and Affidavits, to sustain these claims. Gives full account of the origin and the break-down of Belgium's neutrality.

"The Origin of the War," by Carl Federn, published in 1915. The following taken from the advertisement concerning it shows its purpose: "A lucid presentation of the underlying causes of the European conflict and its meaning to the nations involved. By documents and other recently discovered evidence, Mr. Federn makes out his brief—that England, scenting danger to her own prosperity in the development of German science and inventive genius, sought by the aid of alliances with France and Russia to crowd Germany out of the markets of the world. The result of this policy, furthered by ambitious politicians, resulted in this war, disastrous to this isolation program. Written dispassionately, this book aims to disseminate a correct idea of the origin of this titanic struggle."

"The Tragedy of Belgium," by Richard Grasshoff, published in 1915. This book was devoted to an effort to refute statements defamatory of the German people and the German Army.

"Neutrality," by S. Ivor Stephen, published in 1916, by the Neutrality Press, 206 West 46th Street. In the preface the author acknowledges his indebtedness to Jeremiah O'Leary for assistance in the preparation of his material, states that the talented and brilliant editors of the Fatherland and of Issues and Events have been of great stimulus and help to him. He also gives thanks to Frank Harris. The writer quotes from Dr. William Bayard Hale. He attacks the Cabinet. Quotes from the Hearst papers. Contains pictures of Viereck and much in his praise. Also the picture of Miss Ray Beveridge "a victim of British intrigue" and an "indefatigable worker in the German cause." It also contains a picture of Jeremiah O'Leary, and much praise for him and for the Irish World.

"England or Germany," by Frank Harris, published in 1915. He endeavors to compare England and Germany, to the great advantage of Germany.

"India's 'Loyalty' to England," published by the Indian National Party in September, 1915, was also circulated.

"A Slanderer" by Professor Dr. Theodor Schlemann, published by Issues and Events, written in answer to the book called the "Accuser" and is devoted to an effort to place responsibility for the war on France, Russia and England.

"Germany's Economic Power of Resistance" by Gustav Cassel, published in 1916. The writer concludes that Germany can hold out during a long period of isolation extending over many years. Gustav Cassel apparently is a Swede from Stockholm University who spent three weeks in Germany in March, at the request of the German minister at Stockholm. Issued by Jackson E. 1123 Broadway, New York City, which is said to be controlled by Viereck.

"Worth Knowing." A pamphlet issued as a booklet by the Vitalis. This pamphlet is devoted to the discussion of an advertisement by the Cold Automatic Machine Company concerning machinery to make poison shells.

A circular entitled "Traffic in Arms and Ammunition" by Hon. Chas. Nagel, circulated in the name of the American Independence Union, of which Herman Ritter was Honorary President, Hon. Richard Bartholdt, President, Dr. Thomas C. Hall, Vice President, A. P. Moore, Secretary, and James C. Treasurer. It is intended to aid in a campaign to put an embargo on the exportment of arms and ammunition. It was circulated under date of May 8, 1915.

"Can Germany be Starved Into Submission?" by Dr. Hugo Schweitzer. Address made by him on February 3, 1915. Dr. Schweitzer was a very able German propagandist as well as a chemist in the service of Germany. He is now dead.

"Damaging Evidence Against English Hypocrisy," bears Berlin date March 1915. Compares the occupation of Egypt in 1882 with the Invasion of Belgium in 1914.

"The Unholy War on Germany" (no. 2) by Hanford L. Gordon, published in Los Angeles, March 2, 1915.

A pamphlet of similar title (No. 3) by the same man dated March 10, 1915.

"The Lusitania Case, Was Bryan's Resignation Justified?" published in June, 1915 by Hugh H. Masterson, 170 Chambers St., compares the action at sea on the part of Germany and England.

"The Great Conspiracy," by Alexander Szarski and Faust C. DeWalsh, published by the German-American Literary Defense Committee. This pamphlet charges Russia and Great Britain with a conspiracy to wage a war of conquest.

"Germany and The Peace of Europe" by Ferdinand Schevill.

"The Evolution of The German Empire," by George L. Scherger.

"Germany and England—the Real Issue," by Dr. Bernhard Dernberg. Part of a series of pamphlets published by the Germanistic Society of Chicago.

"Americans, Awaken!" by Francis Savona, published in 1916.

"The Economical Consequences of the World War," by the President of the Chamber of Commerce at Bremen. Issued September 29, 1914, published anonymously.

"The War Business in the United States," published by the American War Business Conference, written anonymously, but probably by William Bayard.

"Thou Shalt Not Kill," published in the name of the Organization of American Women for Strict Neutrality, but written by Mr. William Bayard. Published at the instance of the German Government in an effort to prevent the exportation of arms and munitions of war. It contained a letter supposed to have been written by one William Harlan, of Kennett Square, Pa., but which is testified to was written in its entirety by Hale.

"Aspects of European Diplomacy since 1878," by Henry D. Funk. This pamphlet is devoted to an effort to disprove that the German government set up a war machine and entered upon a war of conquest.

"The Catechism of Balaam, Jr." by an Irish-American, published in 1915 by Hugh Masterson. It was distributed for one cent a copy, the publisher offering that similar copies would be sent gratis and that he had distributed 50,000 copies. Written by Shamus O'Sheel.

"The Imperial Russian Finances," published by the International Monetary Inc., which was one of the organizations carried on in Viereck's name.

"The German White Book" published by the Fatherland Corporation. Supposed to contain translation of original documents intended to show that Germany caused the war and that France might have avoided it.

"The War Plotters of Wall Street," by Charles A. Collman, published by the Fatherland Corporation in 1915, and is what might be expected from its title and the house which published it.

"War and Catholicism," published in 1915, anonymously and for the avowed purpose of answering for the Germans charges by the French Catholics against Germany.

"Truth About Germany," printed in New York anonymously. Prepared apparently under the auspices of a Committee of prominent Germans in Germany. It is an appeal to Americans. Disclaims the responsibility on the part of Germany for starting the war and contains one rather startling complaint.

the German standpoint and that is to the effect that Germany has been overrun by spies for years past, charging these spies to France, Russia and England.

"A Trip Through Headline Land", by the author of "The Catechism of Balaam, Jr.", published by the Fatherland Corporation in 1915, complains of the attitude of the American Press. Author—Shamus O'Sheel.

"Germany's Hour of Destiny", by Col. H. Frobenius, published by the International Monthly in 1914. Introduction by W. R. Shepherd, Professor of History in the Columbia University, states that it describes the motives and aims of the chief powers in the war, proves that Germany is not militaristic, and that Russia, England and France intended to make war upon Germany for selfish reasons.

"German White Book on Armed Merchantmen", printed anonymously. "The case against Armed Merchantmen." Timely reprints from the New York Press. The quotations are from the Evening Mail. An article by Hale from the New York American, other quotations from the New York American, and an article from the New York Times, which, however, contains nothing except the text of a note which the Chicago Herald printed as having been addressed to the European Belligerents by American Ambassador at the direction of the Secretary of State.

"Germany's Case in the Supreme Court of Civilization" published by the Fatherland in 1915, written by Dr. Carl Helfferich.

"Current Misconceptions about the War", published by the Fatherland Corporation in 1915, contains a report of an interview by Karl H. von Wiegand with the Crown Prince, and various reprints from different papers.

"England on the Witness Stand", published by the Fatherland in 1915, containing an introduction by Frederick F. Schrader, one of the editors of the Fatherland, containing a number of articles attributed to various Englishmen.

"The Belgian People's War", purporting to contain translations from the official German White Book, dealing with the supposed offenses of the Belgian civilian population.

"Germany and the Monroe Doctrine". Copy of an address delivered by Dr. M. J. Bonn, University of Munich, supposed to show Germany's acquiescence in the Monroe doctrine.

"Why the German Nation has Gone to War", by George Stuart Fullerton, originally written November 1, 1914, reprinted in February, 1915.

Copy of a letter addressed under date of September 14, 1915, to the British Prime Minister by Mohamed Fahmy. Takes England to task for her actions in Egypt.

"Germany and the War" by Dr. Bernhard Dernburg, published by the Fatherland, describes Germany as a nation of peace. States the purpose of his mission in America is that of a confidant suppliant pleading the cause of humanity. Has chapters devoted as to at what England aims, the causes of the war, a reply to Lord Bryce, denounces England's treaty record.

"Germany's Just Cause." A series of articles by pro-German professors published by the Fatherland. It includes articles by William Bayard Hale and Professor Thomas C. Hall and others. As Frederick E. Schrader, one of the editors of the Fatherland describes the pamphlet "That Germany is fighting for a just cause is herein set forth by some of the leading native American scholars."

"The Lies of the Allies" by Frank Koester, Issues and Events, with an introduction by Jeremiah O'Leary. Mr. Koester was born in Germany and he discusses articles printed in the American papers favorable to the Allies and critical to Germany which he thinks are untrue.

"European Politics." During the decade before the war as described by Belgian Diplomats, documents issued by the Imperial German Foreign Office, published anonymously.

"The Real 'Belgian Atrocities,'" a document containing the pictures of the native Belgian Congo Free State alleged to have been mutilated by the Belgians in 1912 because of insufficient deliveries of rubber.

"Documents Relating to the Outbreak of the War," published by the Imperial German Foreign Office.

Speech of the German Chancellor, Dr. Von Bethmann-Hollweg, before the Reichstag November 9, 1916, issued by the New York Agency of the Trans-ocean Service.

"Some Economic and Political Aspects of General Training under the German Military System," by Moritz J. Bonn. Address delivered at a meeting of the Academy of Political Science held at Columbia University in May 18, 1916. A reprint from the Germanistic Society Quarterly.

"German War Finance," by M. J. Bonn, printed by the German University League.

Austro-Hungary and the War.

Searchlights on the War.

The Viereck-Chesterton Debate.

Why Germany will Win the War.

Peace or War.

The Case of Belgium.

Senator OVERMAN. You spoke of this man O'Leary. Did he figure in that at all?

Mr. BIELASKI. Jeremiah O'Leary?

Senator OVERMAN. Yes.

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes; he was very active in the German cause. He is now under indictment in New York City for his activities since we went into the war, with certain paid German spies in this country, Mme. Victorica, and a man that used the name of Roediger. He is also under indictment for certain publications of his.

I do not know just what topic to select now, but perhaps George Sylvester Viereck and his publications, the Fatherland and the International. Viereck and Hale and Rumely were all in the same class. They were hanging around where there was a lot of money, each one trying to get all he could from the representative of Germany.

Senator NELSON. Was he on the German pay roll, too?

Mr. BIELASKI. Who?

Senator NELSON. Viereck?

Mr. BIELASKI. Oh, yes.

Senator OVERMAN. What was his nationality? Was he a German?

Mr. BIELASKI. Viereck was born in Germany. His father came to this country when he was a minor. He was naturalized, and then George Sylvester Viereck became an American citizen. His father returned to Germany, was in Germany while we were at war, and I suppose is still there; but George Sylvester Viereck has a proud claim to American citizenship through his father's naturalization.

Senator NELSON. Since he quit the publication of the Fatherland, has he published another paper, has he not?

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes; he has published the American Weekly, and he calls it, I think.

Senator NELSON. Is that still published?

Mr. BIELASKI. I think it is; yes, sir.

Maj. HUMES. Since his naturalization the father has returned to Germany, has he not?

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes; but I do not understand that any action of the father could well affect the status of the son.

Maj. HUMES. But the father has ceased to be a resident of this country?

Mr. BIELASKI. Oh, yes. There might be some claim that the father has forfeited his citizenship.

Senator OVERMAN. Did you investigate the naturalization of that man Hammerling?

Mr. BIELASKI. We have all the facts; yes, sir. I think the facts, though, were first secured by the Military Intelligence Service. They were made known to us by them in March or April, 1918. Hammerling made a false statement in his naturalization papers as to his place of birth. He gave it as Hawaii.

Senator NELSON. And also as to the time he had resided in the United States.

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes; he actually was born in Galicia, Austria.

Senator NELSON. Why could not the Department of Justice bring suit to cancel it?

Mr. BIELASKI. As I understand it a suit must be brought for fraud, and I do not know whether a suit could be maintained under those facts or not.

Senator NELSON. I think so. There are seven suits. I recall one that went up from the State of Washington.

Maj. HUMES. Mr. Bielaski, I will say for you, for your information, that we have developed in the examination of Mr. Hammerling here that he not only misrepresented his nationality, but he also admitted that he had only been in this country three years when he was naturalized, and he swore at that time that he had been a resident continuously for five years, so that those facts are supplemental to the records you now have in the Department of Justice.

Mr. BIELASKI. That is something I did not know anything about.

Maj. HUMES. That is in the record here.

Senator NELSON. And he had never taken out his first papers?

Mr. BIELASKI. I knew that he had secured his naturalization by initial proceedings. Of course the naturalization laws were different then from what they are now.

The first letter I notice that Mr. George Sylvester Viereck wrote to Albert is under date of October 15, 1914, which was very early in the war. This letter reads as follows:

BIELASKI EXHIBIT No. 14.

[The Fatherland. Fair play for Germany and Austria. Published by the International Monthly (Inc.)].

1123 BROADWAY, NEW YORK, October 15th, 1914.

Mr. H. F. ALBERT,

45 Broadway, New York City.

DEAR MR. ALBERT: In view of our conversation at the office the other day I would like to say this:

I think that it is of the utmost importance to keep THE FATHERLAND alive even after the war. After all the German-American influence was a decisive check to the anti-German sentiment in this country. It will be necessary to influence the German-Americans and to inform them as to what really is going on in the world, so that Germany will always have 16,000,000 supporters, defenders and interpreters.

But I realize that this is not enough. It is even more important to obtain a purely American newspaper, such as the New York Sun or New York Press, and to edit it as any other American newspaper is edited, but to infuse into it a strong pro-German spirit. For instance, at present the New York Times has a news service in connection with the London Times.

* * * * *

It will be important to establish a similar news service in connection with the Ullstein group, or the Lokal Anzeiger or some similar German publication. This connection should include the exchange of cable news as well as all important articles.

It is also of the utmost importance that the Associated News should be watched closely from the German point of view and that the editorial page should be written like that of any other American paper, but with a clear understanding that closest relations with Germany are to the advantage of the United States.

In order to avoid mistakes and blunders of all kinds there should be an intimate connection between the Press Bureau of the Foreign Office in Berlin, the Embassy here and some one connected with the newspaper in question would be very glad to connect myself with such an enterprise. It makes no difference in what capacity, whether as nominal publisher or assistant publisher, as Editor, Managing-Editor or in any other capacity.

In order to make this policy effective it will be necessary to own the stock and control of the newspaper. I would suggest that the paper be published by some one on whom you can rely and in whose name the stock can be held. For instance Mr. Rau or any one else who may hold similar confidential relations with you.

Mr. Rau was one of those who was active in the organization of the Press Bureau, and spent a good deal of money on behalf of the Germans. I will read part of that by and by, I think, because it says it is of interest in regard to propaganda among the Jews in the United States. (Continuing reading:)

He should be one of the directors of the newspaper. I should also be on the Board of Directors. Where the other director would represent the business interest and watch the financial side, my interest would be confined primarily to the editorial side. I would naturally co-operate with the other director in every possible way.

I would be perfectly willing, if necessary, to relinquish my official connections with THE FATHERLAND and with CURRENT OPINION, if such a scheme can be worked out to mutual satisfaction. The idea itself has been formulated many times. Even now I receive letters in every mail from people who ask why there is no pro-German American daily in New York City. If such a daily, if established, would necessarily extend a news service throughout the country, just as the Times and the Sun are doing at present. I know of one or two people who I think would go into such an enterprise, provided they had some other people's money backing it as well as their own. It would be a rather expensive thing, but I think that it will ultimately pay for itself, not only politically but also financially. If it is impossible to secure a paper in New York, Washington will be the next best thing, but naturally New York is more preferable. Washington for obvious reasons would be my second choice.

It is interesting to note that there were some conversations in connection with a New York paper and a Washington paper, although this suggestion was made later on, November 14, 1915. He says:

I shall be very glad to cooperate with you in this matter and nothing will please me better than to represent on such a paper the cause to which we all are devoted at present.

Senator NELSON. Have you any data there showing to whom THE FATHERLAND was sent?

Mr. BIELASKI. To whom it was sent?

Senator NELSON. Yes; the circulation of it.

Mr. BIELASKI. I do not know whether we have it here or not.

Senator NELSON. I have reason to believe that THE FATHERLAND was sent to a great many Lutheran ministers in the Northwest.

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes; I think it was, undoubtedly.

Senator NELSON. It was sent free to both German Lutherans and Scandinavian Lutherans. If you have anything of that, I would like to have it put into the record.

Capt. LESTER. We have a complete mailing list here in our files of THE FATHERLAND, Senator.

Senator NELSON. You can put it in afterwards.

Capt. LESTER. Yes, sir.

Senator NELSON. Never mind, then, Mr. Bielaski.

Mr. BIELASKI. On October 7, 1914, Viereck sent to Albert an article entitled "What Germany Owes to Ireland," and Albert asked him to have it printed in the New York Times. That was one of his earlier efforts.

In December, 1914, he wrote to Dernburg and asked him how many copies he would like to have of Dernburg's own pamphlet, and named certain other pamphlets, which shows that Viereck was getting out these pamphlets for Dernburg.

To show the close cooperation between Albert and Viereck, on December 3, 1914, he writes Albert as follows:

BIELASKI EXHIBIT No. 15.

DEAR MR. ALBERT:

By way of reminder:

1. Will you prepare an article of the flag protecting the cargo to be published by Mr. Brunder and by The Fatherland and to serve as a guide line in the present campaign.

2. Will you send Brunder John Bassett Moore's opinion marking such passages as are to be kept strictly confidential.

3. We were to send all material sent out by this office to Mr. Brunder personally.

4. We were to propose an agricultural contributor. I suggest Mr. Koester.

5. We were to arrange for a conference or a dinner with the German publishers of New York City.

6. I am making arrangements with the Athletic Club and I hope that I will have the pleasure of taking dinner with you some time next week. Perhaps you would care to go with me to some theatre either Tuesday or Thursday?

With kindest regards, in haste,

Faithfully,

G. S. VIERECK.

And there are a lot of other things which he doubtless is wanting for his publication.

Here is a letter to Bernstorff by Viereck, which shows how they kept in touch [reading]:

Many thanks for your note of February 5th. The forty or fifty copies will make no difference in our account, whatsoever.

Senator STERLING. What year is that?

Mr. BIELASKI. The date is February 6, 1915. He writes quite a long letter here just about general matters to Bernstorff. The postscript is a little interesting. He says:

P. S. I had an interesting conversation with Governor Colquit and Hermann Ridder last night with regard to the purchasing of the New York Sun. I shall take this matter up with Albert and also talk it over with you when you are next in New York. Will you not please let me know? G. S. V.

Later on I expect to give you some information about the purchase of the Sun by Samuel Untermyer, in connection with Dr. Albert. This letter to Bernstorff also suggests some support to the German theater, and so on.

Then, March 4, 1915, Mr. Viereck wrote an interesting letter to Dr. Albert, which is marked "Confidential," and reads as follows:

BIELASKI EXHIBIT No. 16.

[The International, a Magazine of Life and Letters, 715 Broadway, New York City.]

1123 BROADWAY, March 4th, 1915.

Confidential.

DEAR DR. ALBERT: I had another talk with Dr. Hale on the subject of THE INTERNATIONAL. It seems to be your impression that I want to sell THE INTERNATIONAL. Such is not the case. I have no intention of selling it. I am willing to transfer a part of the stock nominally to some one else, but I want to get it back. It is not for sale. I shall, however, give to Dr. Hale a certain amount of stock outright, if that is desired, so as to give him a substantial interest in the magazine.

THE INTERNATIONAL is published by The International Monthly, Inc. The magazine was founded several years ago. The company which at present owns it is only ten months old. One of the officers of the company is Curt Reisinger, the son of Mrs. Hugo Reisinger.

Mr. Reisinger was also interested in the Evening Mail, as a stockholder, with Rumely. He is a grandson of Adolph Busch.

Senator OVERMAN. And who is Mrs. Reisinger?

Mr. BIELASKI. She is the daughter of Busch. [Continuing reading:]

Its records have been kept straight by Mr. Grill, its legal adviser who is also legal adviser for THE FATHERLAND. The International Monthly, Inc., has no liabilities of any kind. THE INTERNATIONAL never has a bank account of more than a few hundred dollars at a time, but since I have taken it over directly personally it has always at least met its expenses. Although I have not been able for the last year and a half to give much attention to it, it has a circulation of about 4,000, and our income, small as it is, has been sufficient to pay its expenses. In addition to that THE INTERNATIONAL has an agreement with THE FATHERLAND according to which it can use the business machinery of THE FATHERLAND at cost. This in itself is worth several thousand dollars. The International Monthly, Inc. was the original publisher of THE FATHERLAND. THE FATHERLAND is now a separate corporation.

I have no interest in selling THE INTERNATIONAL but I have a great interest in establishing a weekly along the lines of our discussion. THE FATHERLAND will appeal entirely to German-Americans and will absolutely be pro-German. THE INTERNATIONAL is to be pro-American, but friendly to Germany, somewhat along the lines of the Washington Post.

If Dr. Hale accepts the editorship of THE INTERNATIONAL he will be absolutely unhampered by me politically. My name will not appear on the cover of the magazine nor in the stock book. It seems to me absurd for me to have a man of Dr. Hale's capacity without capitalizing him to the full extent. If he has an organ he can exert a tremendous influence. I am of the opinion that THE INTERNATIONAL published as a weekly will not only come a power within two or three weeks but that within six months it will pay for itself.

The advantages of taking THE INTERNATIONAL over rather than a new publication are obvious, for it would take more than $5,000 to get a new publication to the point where THE INTERNATIONAL is at present, and no new publication would have any standing whatsoever with the Post Office or the public.

Let me repeat here that I do not want any money for THE INTERNATIONAL, but that any money we will receive will go into the business itself.

Then it speaks of Mr. Borgemeister. Mr. Borgemeister was Dr. Hale's right-hand man in his office, and kept all his records and accounts and handled his letters. [Reading:]

I suggest that we mutually agree upon Mr. Borgemeister or some one to whom you can trust to act as confidential accountant if we come to some financial arrangement.

THE INTERNATIONAL has a certain literary standing and is taken seriously in literary circles not only in this country but also in England, in spite of its checkered career. The advantages of taking THE INTERNATIONAL over rather than some other publication which might possibly be purchased are these:

1. THE INTERNATIONAL would cost us nothing. We do not have to purchase it.

2. It will be cheaper to run THE INTERNATIONAL than any other publication because of its peculiar arrangement with the FATHERLAND CORPORATION.

3. THE INTERNATIONAL IS ENTIRELY controlled by me. It will not be necessary to draw any new people into our confidence. Dr. Hale and I between ourselves can manage the whole job.

4. If in the future it should seem desirable to combine THE FATHERLAND with THE INTERNATIONAL this can be easily effected.

Personally I think that it is of great importance to us that we should have two organs; one German-American and the other entirely American, without distinct German-American affiliations. I also believe in action! It is possible that there may be a thousand better plans, but none of these plans has been advanced. This plan is ready. It will not cost you more a week than Dr. Hale has saved in other departments and it can be gotten out, if necessary, within a week from the moment we agree upon action. As every day is critical we should act at once!

I can give you, if you so desire, a financial statement of THE INTERNATIONAL, but that would be of little value since the income was small and the expenses were equally small in the last few months.

On March 8, 1915, Viereck writes Albert again about the International, and gives what Dr. Hale's views are, and an outline of expenses. Among the expenses he mentions are, "between three and four thousand of these copies would be needed for the newspapers, for Members of Congress and the Cabinet, weekly publications and other special lists." They evidently intended to furnish, free of charge, every public man a copy. This is a long letter, a friendly letter, between Albert and Viereck.

Under date of April 15, 1915, Viereck writes to Albert:

We had a meeting today, but alas, only twenty minutes, and it was impossible to transact any business.

That was the press bureau meeting. [Continuing reading:]

Dr. Rumely was present. I now understand from other sources that he did not meet Mr. Koelbe, but that he related his whole tale in the Staats-Zeitung, and it reached the ears of Koelbe from the Staats-Zeitung. Meanwhile he has told in Chicago and in other places the following story:

That official Germany is interested in backing a newspaper to be edited by McClure. The money is to be obtained by getting fifteen groups of people each of which is to put up $150,000.

Mr. Rosenburg of Sears, Roebuck & Company has already put up $50,000.

One of the effects of his propaganda is that the Evening Mail, which Dr. Schweitzer could have obtained for $1,250,000 has not raised its figures to $1,500,000.

Mr. Hugo Schweitzer was the chemical agent of Germany here, interested in the Bayer Chemical Co. He has since died. He was also involved in one or two other propaganda matters, like the German classics, in which he was the source through which the German Government paid for the work. [Continuing reading:]

Let me add that these statements are based entirely on what Dr. Schweitzer has told me.

I had various matters of importance to bring up at the meeting but there was no time to do so. As far as the German-American newspapers are concerned, I have come to the conclusion that it would be better not to bring in the Staats-Zeitung, because the Staats-Zeitung is a competitor of most of them. They are jealous of the Staats-Zeitung but not of The Fatherland, which is not a competitor. However, I am perfectly willing to bow to your judgment in this matter if you think otherwise.

Then he goes on to say that Mr. Bernard Ridder is out of town and will not be back for two weeks.

Here is a letter of Viereck to Dr. Albert in which he says:

I expect to stir up the German-American newspapers on the question of ammunition. I intend to send out the enclosed letter to every German publication, daily, weekly or monthly, in the United States. I shall publish the results in the same manner in which the "Digest" print such symposiums. I shall also give it out to the other American newspapers. I am sure that we can obtain in this way something of the same effect as was achieved by the one-page advertisement of the foreign newspaper. In fact, we might decide to advertise the result in some way.

Viereck got various forms of money from Albert, so that when he did not have much when the war started, I suppose now he is up from $80,000 to $100,000.

Senator OVERMAN. What was the date of that last letter?

Mr. BIELASKI. April 12, 1915. He refers to the Hammerling advertisements, I have not any doubt.

Here is a letter of Viereck, too long to read, in which he refers to his efforts. It is dated April 27, 1915. He tells about the pamphlet he has sent out, and says:

I have sent out Nagel's article to 50,000 lawyers through the American Truth Society.

This is interesting as showing the direct connection of the American Truth Society with their propaganda work. He says:

I have made arrangements to send 180,000 with a special letter from Dr. Hall through the American Independence Union.

Finally, I have made an arrangement with Dr. Hall to include the article in his pamphlet for clergymen.

It will thus reach at least 330,000 people. In addition to that I shall reprint in The Fatherland, thus bringing it up to 410,000. In the hands of 410,000 intelligent people it will certainly reach every person in the United States of importance, directly or indirectly.

I have just talked to Bernard Ridder who will use the Nagel article in Staats-Zeitung. This gives it an additional circulation of, I believe, 150,000. Before we get through with it it will have a circulation of 1,000,000.

Moreover, I have another suggestion to make in connection with the scheme proposed by Mr. Rumely. I think it would be possible to print it as an advertisement provided it had some sponsor.

You see, the Hammerling scheme was one proposed by Rumely and that I think Rumely was surprised at the fact that Hammerling made money out of it.

Maj. HUMES. Who is the Dr. Hall last spoken of?

Mr. BIELASKI. He was an exchange professor, an American who went over to Germany as a professor and was the man who arranged for the meeting of Rintelen with our friend David Lamar.

Maj. HUMES. What is his full name; Dr. Thomas Hall?

Mr. JOHN LORD O'BRIAN. Thomas Hall. He was formerly at Union Theological Seminary. He was designated by the German Government. He was dropped from the seminary because of his activities.

Mr. BIELASKI. Viereck was also in correspondence with Von Papen. All these fellows were mixed up in this transaction.

Here is a letter from Viereck to Col. Von Papen calling his attention to certain articles in February.

Here is a letter in which he tells Albert that he is having 10,000 of Shaemus O'Sheel's "Trip Through Headline Land" printed and that he is sending out 3,000 to the newspapers and the rest distributed through The Fatherland.

Maj. HUMES. What is the date of that?

Mr. BIELASKI. May 15, 1915.

Maj. HUMES. I suggest that in referring to letters you give the date each time, so as to fix the time.

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes. Here is an interesting letter which shows that Mr. Viereck began to have some question as to whether he might not get in trouble with the law. This is dated May 19, 1915. It is as follows:

BIELASKI EXHIBIT No. 17.

[Office of George Sylvester Viereck, 1128 Broadway.]

NEW YORK, May 19, 1915.

DEAR DR. ALBERT: I would be very much obliged if you will send me a copy of the statute which you showed to me the other day at the conference, as it is naturally of some interest to me.

And here is the reply of Dr. Albert. He says:

BIELASKI EXHIBIT No. 18.

DEAR MR. VIERECK: As requested I hand you enclosed a copy of the statute, and remain,

Yours very truly,

That was section 5334 of the statutes, and now section 5 of the Penal Code, which had to do with correspondence of American citizens and diplomatic officers in cases in which they are interested, an act which Dr. Hall would seem to have violated, but the statute has run.

Here is a letter which I think was made public at one time at the time that The World printed certain revelations as to Dr. Albert's activities, and he says to Viereck:

Now that I have just taken over the formal accounting of the payments I would beg you to present in the future, accounts one day before they are due. Mr. Cronmeyer will not appropriate any more payment without my o. k., and I will not give any o. k's if I have not been given at least 24 hours to examine the thing.

At the same time I beg you to inform me as to what the duplicate of the enclosed vouchers deals with.

The following is an important letter addressed to Dernburg by Viereck under date of May 14, 1915:

BIELASKI EXHIBIT No. 19.

May 14, 1915.

DEAR DR. DERNBERG: I am pleased to be able to tell you that my defense of you appeared not only in the New York Times, Evening Mail, Herald and in the Tribune, but seems to have been published throughout the country. I think it is partly responsible for the excellent editorial which appeared in the Globe last night. My statement on the Lusitania was also reprinted in many papers throughout the country, including the New York Times and the Washington Post. I state these things not to call your attention to my own efforts, but to emphasize the fact that I have a certain knowledge of the psychology of the American public and certain connections which may make my advice of some value. In fact, I am of the opinion that "The Fatherland" and I have been able to place more facts before the American public from the German point of view than the entire German Information Service. We have been able to do more than any one, excepting yourself.

I am of the opinion that now that you are compelled to observe silence for a certain time our own efforts should be redoubled. I have various suggestions to make and I should be very grateful to you if you should find the time to go over them carefully. I should be very glad to explain them to Dr. Meyer-Gerhardt in detail, if you so desire.

1. For some time we have felt that The Fatherland has been very much cramped for space. Many important events have taken place that we were able to only inadequately. In the next number for instance, I would like to devote at least five pages to the Russian atrocities. I would like to print a good deal of the efficient material carefully edited by Mr. Schrader and add such other facts as are in our possession. I would like to make this a very impressive document but unfortunately we cannot give more than two to it under the present conditions.

The hostility of Germany makes the big business interests extremely reticent to advertising in The Fatherland during the war. I would like to add four pages if possible to the magazine, but we can do so only if the advertisers were to pay for the same. We can not get for the time being the advertising we need, and we are not in the position to pay ourselves the actual expense of adding at least four pages of text every week. This expense, in view of our large edition, would amount to about $250 per week. I would like to add four additional pages the following week for the purpose in question. I would like to add four more pages the next week in order to reply to the Bryce report and to print in detail the German reply to the French accusations. Now, four pages are quite sufficient, for I have other plans which I think will increase the effectiveness of our work and which can not be carried out unless we have more space at our disposal.

A few weeks ago at one of our conferences it was suggested that I should find a writer who would write fiction offsetting, to a certain extent, the German work of such men as Oppenheim in the Saturday Evening Post and Cleveland Moffet in McClure's. You may remember that Cleveland Moffet's McClures depicts the United States and Germany at war. The first instalment takes up the invasion of Brooklyn by Hindenburg. Fiction of this nature is much devoured by the people and is widely discussed in magazines.

I have now made arrangements with Mr. Shaemus O'Sheel, the author of "Catechism of Sir Balaam, Jr." and a "Trip through Headline Land," to write a serial story in ten or twelve instalments for THE FATHERLAND, showing the war of 1920 between the United States on the one side and the Allies on the other. Mr. Albert has read O'Sheel's scenario and has even declared his willingness to make it possible to pay O'Sheel for his work. But, of course, the author is not the chief expense. The main outlay would be the additional space to THE FATHERLAND.

It is my intention to have the serial illustrated in the sort of style which appeals to the American taste. I know that it will be widely discussed. I am sure that it will be effective. I may add that O'Sheel's Catechism of Sir Balaam, JR. had a distribution of 300,000 and was translated in many languages, including Spanish. It is also my intention to bring out O'Sheel's story as a little book after it has appeared in the Magazine.

O'Sheel in his story will show you the war first begins with the United States and Japan. England at first holds aloof, although she refuses to state on what terms she will remain neutral. When, however, the United States in order to save the Panama Canal is compelled to violate the Territory of the Republic of Panama, England, as the champion of little nations, at once declares war on the United States upon the same highly moral grounds upon which she has previously taken to defend Belgium. Portions of the English White Books, etc., will be introduced with telling effect. The United States finds itself attacked by England, Japan, Mexico, Russia, and France.

Meanwhile, Germany is selling munitions of war to the Allies. The President of the United States protests against this practice, but he is politely told that Germany's attitude now was the attitude taken by the United States in 1914. "We shall be very glad to sell munitions of war to you, but it is up to you to see that you get them."

However, a movement to lay an embargo on arms on purely ethical grounds is initiated in Germany, under the leadership of Dr. Bernhard Dernburg. This is our intention to introduce names of well-known people in the same way as which Cleveland Moffet introduces them into his story). The murderous war is stopped. The United States has a breathing spell. Meanwhile, the Mexicans are invading the country. California is in the hands of the Mexicans. Things are going strongly against the United States. She is almost ready to give up when at last Germany, who has recuperated from the war, comes to her assistance, by destroying the English fleet wins for the United States a victory with honor.

There will be many thrilling incidents, possibly a little love interest and much human interest. The attitude of the German-Americans and the Irish will be carefully mapped out. There is no question in my mind that the story will help our movement.

I therefore suggest that you grant us the $250 a week for adding four pages to the next two numbers in which the atrocities will be discussed, and for the succeeding 12 or 15 numbers in which O'Sheel's story is to appear.

In addition to O'Sheel's story I shall have to reprint my father's reports from Belgium which will also take considerable space.

I really don't see how without four additional pages I can wage an effective campaign.

Let me remind you of the fact that THE FATHERLAND has not asked you for aid or assistance heretofore, and that even now we merely ask you to reimburse us for our actual expense. THE FATHERLAND, as you know, is self-sustaining, but it has no capital and it cannot therefore spend these sums needed for this purpose in the hope of recovering this by the increase in circulation.

I have just received from Germany a history of the German people written by my father. This book was originally intended for use in German text books in American colleges. It was written with an eye to the American public. My father has brought his history straight up to the present war. The motto of his last chapter is that sentence of Kitchener's which is quoted in the little French book on the war which we discussed at the meeting a few weeks ago. It is certainly up-to-date. My father, as you know, is an American citizen. He is the author of the book, "German Instruction in American Schools" written for the American Government and published by the Government.

I would like to publish this book at once and THE FATHERLAND is willing to bear the entire expense of its publication, but however, it is at present written in German and I would like to have Professor Shepherd write an introduction and to have von Mach translate it into English. If von Mach cannot do so one of Professor Shepherd's assistance's will be glad to undertake the task. I should, of course, have to remunerate both von Mach and Shepherd for their work. You have heard some time ago that Prof. Shepherd is a little disappointed because of the lack of recognition he has received for his services. I would like very much to be able to help him along a little financially through this work. I would also like to help von Mach, though he is probably less in need of it than Shepherd.

I think such a book, carefully edited by Shepherd and von Mach for the American public, will unquestionably be very effective. One of the reasons that the American people do not understand Germany and her present position is because they are absolutely ignorant of the history of the German people. I could probably secure for this book—which would not be a part of the German propaganda—but as a straightforward history—much publicity and a large distribution.

I would like, however, to receive an appropriation of $750. in order to be able to pay both the translator and the editor of the English version. The manuscript is in my possession and I will be very glad to let you look over it if you have the time while you are in "exile," in your hotel.

III. Some time ago the Philadelphia Ledger printed a review of the periodicals in the United States and pointed out with glee that there was not one monthly that represented the German side of the case. This charge induced me to revivify THE INTERNATIONAL, which I had neglected, and you have yourself expressed approval of the way in which the last two or three issues of THE INTERNATIONAL have been edited. I succeeded in obtaining articles from Shepherd, Hale, Crowley, Bond and many others, and there has been a remarkable revival of interest in the magazine. Our circulation is increasing and the magazine is being quoted again. Let me call your attention to the following articles published in the last few numbers:

1. The Real American attitude between Germany and England. The Lesson of a Hundred Years Ago.

2. German Liberty.

3. An Impression of Bismarck.

4. American Neutrality and Real Neutrality.

5. The Menace of Canada.

6. Torture (A strong story of Russia).

7. Lord Northcliffe and the Great Conspiracy.

8. The Mistress of the Seas.

as well as many strong editorials by Mr. Harvey and Dr. Hale.

In the next number we shall publish the following:

1. The End of England by Aleister Crowley.

2. Anthropology and the War Prof. von Luschan

3. The Historical and Political Causes of the Present World War, by Dr. S. Melamed as well as many more strong editorials and good fiction, from an American standpoint.

The cue of the INTERNATIONAL is that it is not pro-German but gives a square deal to Germany.

I think that THE INTERNATIONAL will be useful for the publication of many articles that could not be placed to advantage in THE FATHERLAND and which we cannot get published anywhere else. THE INTERNATIONAL is now being sent to two or three hundred newspapers, but I would like to get it to all the editors of the daily papers, to the most important weeklies, and to members of Congress. This would mean about 3,000 in all. We cannot give it free, because that would be against the Postal Law, and would be beyond our means. Do you think that you can get an appropriation to pay for these subscriptions? With money thus received I could push THE INTERNATIONAL and purchase articles without new appropriations.

IV. In view of the present agitation against you, and because of the papers which represent the German point of view, it seems to me highly probable to push the proposed Association of German-American newspapers. It was my original suggestion that Mr. Ridder should call a meeting of German-American publishers in Chicago. Ridder seems to think that there would be much jealousy if he did so and instead asked me to issue a call promising his support. For various reasons I do not wish to appear prominently in the movement, I think the call should be signed by several important publishers, not by one.

Mr. Ridder calls my attention to Mr. George Seibel of the "Volksrecht" in Pittsburgh. Mr. Seibel judging by his letter is a very energetic man and I think he can be persuaded to undertake the organizing work, if his expenses were met. I also think it will be necessary to issue invitations to the convention by telegram, if the situation should assume more threatening proportions. For a war between Germany and the United States would mean at least the attempt to suppress all German-American publications, demonstrations, etc. I would like to appeal either directly or through Mr. Seibel to German-American publishers to raise their voices as Mr. Ridder is doing against any attempt to drag our country into war. I think that they should not only voice those protests in their own publications but that they should send telegrams to Washington at once.

I am personally of the opinion that this country is drifting into war with Germany. The President may not think so himself because his "war waiting" in Mexico while it led to bloodshed did not involve us into a war. I am afraid that the President does not realize that Germany cannot be treated like Mexico; that the Kaiser is not Huerta. As a patriotic American I would like to fight against any policy that could possibly involve this country into war with Germany. For that reason I would like to influence anyone to whom I could possibly reach by wire or otherwise. We must act now because it is too late.

For obvious reasons I did not wish to bring up the details of this propaganda at our conference, but would like to talk them over with you and Meyer-Gerhardt whose knowledge of conditions will make his suggestions of inestimable value.

It may seem to you that I have asked for a good many things in one letter but they are merely matters which I have wished to bring up for several months at conferences. But every time I was prevented for some reason or other.

All my suggestions have been made after very careful reflection and I think that they deserve your careful consideration.

Believe me, most sincerely yours,

(Signed)

GEORGE SYLVESTER VIERECK

In June, 1915, there was some correspondence between Viereck and Albert as to their efforts to get into the Saturday Evening Post through Miss Agnes Laut, an article on the subject of munition and war and the effect which the present inflated trade in war material will have on the future of this country.

Senator NELSON. She is a Canadian woman, is she not, Agnes Laut?

Mr. BIELASKI. I do not know much about her, but on June 26, 1915, Viereck again writes to Albert:

BIELASKI EXHIBIT No. 20.

JUNE 26, 1915.

DEAR DR. ALBERT: I have arranged for Miss Laut to have dinner with us Wednesday, 7.30 at the Plaza, in a private room. I hope you will surely be able to be present. I think our meeting will be fruitful of result.

Please don't forget to invite Professor Clapp, as I have not the pleasure of knowing him.

Faithfully yours,

G. S. VIERECK.

Clapp had devoted a good deal of time in his book to that subject. Maj. HUMES. Do you know whether or not they succeeded in getting it in the Saturday Evening Post?

Mr. BIELASKI. I do not know whether Miss Laut wrote the articles or not. I assume she did.

Here is a suggestion of Hatzfeld about Viereck's proposition to run a propaganda of advertising in the street cars. They covered almost every possible way of reaching the public. But Prince Hatzfeld had a very decided feeling on the matter. He said:

In the report of the 22nd instant it is stated that Mr. Viereck wishes to undertake in the street cars on the part of the "Fatherland," a cartoon propaganda against the export of weapons. In my opinion that must absolutely not be done in case it is evident from the placard that it is issued by the Fatherland. For everybody is now convinced that the "Fatherland" is the organ of the Embassy. All boastfulness of Viereck makes no difference. I am convinced that the attitude of the Government against Count Bernstorff as expressed in the first Lusitania note, originates for the most part from the articles of the Fatherland, which are regarded as inspired by the Embassy.

And so on.

Here is a statement showing the interest of Albert, June 29, 1915, in the Fatherland. (Reading:)

BIELASKI EXHIBIT No. 21.

[Office of George Sylvester Viereck, 1123 Broadway, N. Y.]

JUNE 29, 1915.

DEAR DR. ALBERT: In thinking the matter over, I do not think that Mrs. R. would be the proper intermediary inasmuch as she does not attend to her financial affairs herself. If it must be a woman, Mrs. G., the mother of our friend Mrs. L., would be far better.

However, personally I see no reason why this payment could not be made every month through Mr. Meyer just like the other payments. If there is any objection to that, I would suggest that the payments be made to my personal friend and lawyer, Mr. Ely Simpson, whose standing as my legal adviser exempts him from any possible inquiry.

As I have already received $250 this month, I inclose a statement for $1,500 for June. Will you please O. K. this and I shall then send my secretary for the cash. I am sending this letter by boy as for obvious reasons I do not wish it to go through the mails.

With kind regards,

Sincerely yours,

G. S. VIERECK.

Senator STERLING. Do you know the women to whom reference is made there by Viereck?

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes, sir; they are women who were pro-German, in New York, and I do not suppose there is any particular object in bringing their names out. We do know who they were, though, of course.

Senator STERLING. Yes.

Mr. BIELASKI. These are other letters with respect to this. This is a letter written by Albert to Viereck, apparently in reply to the one, dated July 1, 1915. [Reading:]

BIELASKI EXHIBIT No. 22.

JULY 1, 1915

DEAR MR. VIERECK: Your statement for the $1,500 allowance, which has been rendered after the deduction of $250 for the month of May, I have received.

I hope in the course of the next week to be able to remit payments to you. In the meantime I beg to propose a fitting person who could examine thoroughly the financial relations of your paper. From the moment when we grant you a regular allowance, I must

1. Have a new statement of the condition of your paper.
2. To exercise a control as to financial management.

Besides we must acquaint ourselves as to your pursued politics, which at the present has not been necessary. You will perhaps have the kindness to discuss the matter because of this letter with Mr. Fuehr.

Here is a letter dated July 7, 1915, to Fuehr.

Maj. HUMES. Written by whom?

Mr. BIELASKI. By Viereck. All of these are Viereck's letters with respect to the Fatherland. He reviews the expenditures and income of that they have made, and gives his balance sheet and the investments and refers to the publication of various pamphlets that they have made. He says on page 3 of this letter:

Mr. Albert in his letter to me states that he would like to have financial control over the magazine. I am not sure whether I understand him correctly, but if he really desires control this can, of course, be arranged by the purchase of the control of the stock, which is now in my hands.

He agrees to let it stand in his name so as to conceal the ownership, and turn the certificates over to somebody else. He makes various suggestions as to how the financial end of it can be handled. It gets very poetic. He says:

It seems to me that it is of importance to the German cause that my position should not be vulnerable. And yet it would be if in the eyes of people like Dr. Hale and Mr. Myer I should appear as Germany's subsidized agent.

Really bad!

I should not even wish Mr. Borgemeister to be acquainted with the details of our arrangement, because he is a friend of various of our directors and employees.

He says further:

In view of my connection with the brewing interests this statement has been accepted.

He says in another place:

I have so arranged the matter that such payments as I shall make to the Fatherland directly will be booked as subscription receipts, and I have the other directors of the company that I have obtained these funds from a group of wealthy brewers.

Senator OVERMAN. Are you pretty nearly through with those letters?

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes.

Senator NELSON. He has a few left.

Mr. BIELASKI. I have a great many letters left, but on this particular subject not much. This is simply a financial statement. It is a proposed arrangement whereby Mr. Viereck was to transfer per cent of the shares of the International to Dr. Hale, and Dr. Hale was to hold them for the German Government.

Senator NELSON. What is the date of that?

Mr. BIELASKI. It is not dated, but as I understand from our inquiries was never actually consummated. The German Government did not finally take over the International at all.

Here is another of July 20, 1915, concerning Miss Laut, which would seem to indicate that she was going to write the article mentioned. He says:

I have a letter from Miss Laut. She says "Things are incubating. You will see presently." I do not think our dinner will have been without effect.

Feeding the ladies is a great game. The rest of the letter relates to the circulation of some new propaganda matter. Then he tells about getting out a calendar with all the German heroes on it, and wants to know what about it from Albert. I think that is enough of the letters to show the absolute control of George Sylvester Viereck and his papers by the German Government. There is a great deal more of detail.

Senator OVERMAN. We will take a recess until 2.30 o'clock p. m.

(Whereupon, at 1 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m., the subcommittee took a recess until 2.30 o'clock p. m.)

AFTER RECESS.

TESTIMONY OF MR. A. BRUCE BIELASKI—Resumed.

The subcommittee reconvened, pursuant to the taking of the recess, at 2.30 o'clock p. m.

Mr. BIELASKI. Mr. Chairman, during the intermission some of the representatives of the committee have called my attention to some testimony which Mr. Hammerling has given here. While we have already furnished to the committee practically all the information we had, there is, I think, one other matter which may be interesting.

About July 15, 1916, in a letter to Mr. Walter S. Kaufmann, 61 Wall Street, New York City, the following is found:

I herewith hand you a letter for Mr. Hammerling, to be given to him by Mr. Rumely. Would you be kind enough to tell Mr. Rumely not to deliver the letter before receiving a receipt from Mr. Hammerling.

That is all of the letter that is of interest.

Senator NELSON. What is the date of that?

Mr. BIELASKI. July 15, 1916.

Maj. HUMES. From whom was that letter?

Mr. BIELASKI. I think that letter was from Mr. Albert.

Senator OVERMAN. From Mr. Albert, addressed to whom?

Mr. BIELASKI. Addressed to Walter S. Kaufmann, of the firm of Kaufmann & Lindheim, who are Mr. Albert's attorneys.

The carbon of what we assume was the letter to be delivered to Mr. Hammerling reads as follows:

Just a word of appreciation for your friendly interest in the philanthropic work undertaken in America in behalf of the cause of Germany and Austria and of those who suffer from the consequences of this terrible war. I write to assure you that after the war is over I shall report the part that you have taken, and I hope there will be some suitable recognition of your generous activities.

Senator NELSON. That was to Hammerling?

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes; from Albert. I think this sheds some possibly on the motive which prompted Hammerling's activities also sheds some light on the fact that, as claimed by Dr. Rumel, others, they believed that Hammerling was getting no profit of these advertisements, but was doing this as a philanthropic matter.

Before leaving the question altogether of George Sylvester, I think it is interesting to note that he has admitted the receipt of $250 once or twice a month at irregular intervals through the Austrian consul general, Neuber, from the Austrian Embassy. Dumba was the ambassador—in addition to his German source of income.

I mentioned the Washington Post this morning. It has been suggested that inasmuch as that is a short subject it be disposed of.

Under date of October 17, 1914, in a communication from Ambassador Bernstorff marked "Strictly confidential" for Dernburg, Privy Counselor Albert, after discussing a number of other matters, the following appears:

Senator OVERMAN. What is the date of that?

Mr. BIELASKI. October 17, 1914. [Reading:]

The Washington Post was offered me to-day to buy for $2,000,000 with intention to buy it back again after the war for one and a half million dollars. A second offer was made to put the paper entirely at our disposal for six months for $100,000. The paper is of importance as the only large news organ of the capital. How do you stand on the question of the money? I have yet inquired in Berlin.

In Dr. Fuehr's report, of which I made some mention, the following statement appears also with reference to the Washington Post. This was under date of August 2, 1916:

The Washington Post, whose neutral attitude toward the belligerents during the present war has won for it warm recognition from the German side, of late materially changed its tone in questions of European politics, and is fairly on the way to join our enemies. From a reliable source I learn that this change of front is due to the Russian Ambassador in Washington. At the death of its former owner, John R. McLean, the Washington Post, together with the Cincinnati Inquirer, came into the hands of the son of the first mentioned, Ed McLean, on whom his aunt, Madam Bakhmeteff, is said to have great influence. Mr. McLean, jr., inaugurated his ownership by naming as editorial director one Bill Spurgeon, who is said to be a British subject, and nephew of Robert P. Porter, one of the chief leaders of the Northcliffe ring.

Senator OVERMAN. This is signed by whom—Fuehr?

Mr. BIELASKI. That is one of Fuehr's reports.

Senator NELSON. To Bernstorff or to Rumely?

Mr. BIELASKI. To the foreign office.

Senator NELSON. The foreign office of Germany?

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes.

In a communication which has been placed at our disposal by the State Department, dated October 27, 1916, and in the form of a cypher letter from Bernstorff to the foreign office at Berlin, the following appears:

In the official accounts for the first and second quarter of 1916 will be found entries of payments to Mr. Theodore E. Lowe. As to this I have to report that this gentleman is of German origin, and married to a German lady. He owes us his services, as he founded a weekly paper in Washington, the National Courier. This offer came at the time when we were deploring the death of Mr. John R. McLean. This latter had given his newspaper an entirely English character, so that his death left a great gap which the National Courier can unfortunately never hope to fill. The Washington Post has since been fairly neutral, but may be entirely lost to us if it cannot, as is very desirable, be put into the hands of Mr. Hearst.

I think it should be said that that part of the evidence which relates to the Washington Post and a pro-German attitude goes back to the time of the management prior to its present management, and that since the present management, even according to the testimony of Bernstorff and Fuehr, its attitude has changed.

Senator STERLING. When did the present management of that paper begin?

Mr. BIELASKI. It must have been in 1916, I think; the summer of 1916.

The activities of the Germans also extended to the film field.

Under date of March 1, 1915, a communication was addressed to the German ambassador by Zimmerman of the foreign office, which reads as follows:

BIELASKI EXHIBIT No. 23.

I beg to advise Your Excellency that five copies of a film 1,200 meters long will shortly go to the German Bureau of Information in New York. Furthermore, in a recent journey Belgium undertake by official orders, and to the west front, 800 meters of film were taken, wherein the American correspondent Dawson appeared. The original negative of this film will be sent to New York as soon as possible so that as many copies as desirable may be prepared there.

As propaganda through pictures has shown itself to be remarkably effective in neutral foreign countries, it seems expedient to place this work of publication on a greater basis than heretofore. In order to be able to judge better the extent of the results heretofore obtained in the United States, I beg to ask your Excellency to be good enough to answer the following questions:

(1) Are there headquarters for the entire picture propaganda in the United States?

(2) If yes, how is this place organized and with what material does it work?

(3) To what extent does it seem suited for an extension of the propaganda there?

(4) Have the consignments of photographs and other picture material leaving here twice a week reached there regularly?

In consideration of the fact that the sending of larger packages to the United States at this time encounters insuperable difficulties, the establishment and extension of a central place in New York, organized on a large scale seems imperatively necessary. In this case particularly sharp proofs of all photographs and films received here should be sent in two exemplifications in letter form, by different routes, to the central point in New York. The latter could then, by calling on experts and persons well informed of conditions there—

(1) Have produced from the original photographs there on the spot duplication, enlargement, stereotype plates, illustrated writings and compositions, stereopticon pictures, and so forth; and

(2) Undertake the exhibition of the entire picture and films in the whole country, through agencies to be established in all the larger cities.

I await your kind expression as to this matter with interest.

(Signed) ZIMMERMAN.

Senator OVERMAN. Who was he?

Mr. BIELASKI. He was the secretary of foreign affairs in the German Government, I think.

The American Correspondent Film Corporation was incorporated April 12, 1915, the capital stock being named as $10,000. Additional articles of incorporation were filed September 30, 1915, increasing the capital stock to $140,000. The original incorporators were Claussen, Cuthbert W. Jewell, and Marcus Kaufman. The incorporators, when the capitalization was increased, were Claussen, Fuehr, Felix Malitz, and K. E. Brown.

Senator NELSON. The capitalization was increased, then, Fuehr became connected with it?

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes. We have a copy of the amended by-law; they are very long and are of no particular consequence, except they have a very liberal arrangement for the voting of proxies, which was to be expected in view of the way the stock was held.

At the time of the original organization of the American Correspondent Corporation it had as assets certain Austrian pictures which Claussen had obtained from Dr. Brandes, Austrian consul, and $5,000 paid in by Albert.

When the capitalization was increased, Albert paid in additional amounts, until we have a record of the payments into this corporation of approximately $88,000, I think. It is at least something more than $80,000. Malitz, who was the head of this organization, about whom we can give some more information as to his activities—was convicted on May 4, 1918, with a man named Ernst and was sentenced to two years' imprisonment and to pay a fine of $5,000 for smuggling rubber out to go to Germany; and it is interesting to note that Saunders, who was a German agent in this country, and who has been convicted of sending spies to Germany, had his office at the American Correspondent Film Corporation.

Maj. HUMES. What other business was Saunders in, and how was he employed?

Mr. BIELASKI. Saunders's principal business in this country was the securing of spies to go to England for the German Government.

Senator NELSON. Who?

Mr. BIELASKI. Albert Saunders and Wunnenberg sent over a number of correspondents to England and to Holland, one of whom has been convicted, and the others have not come back.

Senator NELSON. They were really German spies?

Mr. BIELASKI. They were really German spies; yes, sir.

This report of Dr. Fuehr to Albert, under date of April 20, 1918, gives a statement of the organization of this corporation from the German standpoint. [Reading:]

BIELASKI EXHIBIT No. 23½.

As I had the honor to explain briefly at the session of the Press Bureau on the 12th of this month, it seems settled that an especial registered company be formed to obtain good war films in Germany adapted to propaganda in this country and to circulate the same in the United States.

An undertaking of this kind, the plan for which emanated from Mr. M. Claussen, and which I have sent to Berlin on the 8th of the month under the authorization of the retired Secretary of State, Dr. Dernberg, might correspond to the wishes which find expression in the writ (official announcement) of the Foreign Office No. 42 of March 1st, this year, in regard to the development of film propaganda in the Union which was addressed to the Imperial Embassy in Washington. According to a wireless received here yesterday the plan mentioned has been officially approved in Berlin.

The company, whose incorporation under the firm name "American Correspondence Film Company" has been accomplished today under the provisions of the authorities, is in need of a capital of nominally $10,000, divided into 1,000 shares at $10 per share.

The interest of the Imperial Government in this undertaking consists in the fact that the company should not work for the greatest possible financial profit from the disposal of the war films, but lay in the chief emphasis on the greatest possible circulation of them in the most respectable film theatres of the land.

For the realization of the interest mentioned, I assume, after State Secretary (retired) Dr. Dernberg has expressly empowered me, 510 shares and the office of treasurer. Of the remaining 490 shares 200 will be reserved for Mr. M. B. Claussen (president) on the one side, and 200 for the photograph firm, Brown & Dawson, the last mentioned member of which firm is at present in Germany and from now on will set on foot the production of films at the expense of the company) on the other, while the remaining 90 shares will go to film experts here, in order to secure their support for the undertaking.

Since greater expenditures, court costs and the payment of an advance to Dawson in Berlin, are connected with the opening of the company's activities, it is necessary that my contribution to the amount of $5,100 be paid at once in cash, while in regard to the payment for the shares of the other shareholders, especial arrangements have been made.

May I request your highest therefore, by means of a check drawn in my name, to put at my disposal the designated amount out of official funds.

Although I am, of course, in regard to the designated sum, unable to assume any personal risk, I expressly assure you that the same will be repaid to the Imperial treasury either entirely or in part, in case and as soon as a net profit, on my share in the company, is made according to the semi-annual balance sheet of business done by the American Correspondent Film Company.

FR. FUEHR, Imperial Interpreter.

To His Highness Privy Councillor ALBERT,
New York City.

The next document is a long argument, apparently prepared by Fuehr, as to why moving-picture propaganda should be successful.

Senator NELSON. What is the date of that?

Mr. BIELASKI. It does not appear to have a date, but I should judge from certain facts that it was probably about May or June, 1915. It simply argues that of the 100,000,000 inhabitants of the United States half of them go to the movies, and that he has presented a great opportunity for propaganda in this way to Dr. Albert, and recommends the establishment of a small company, outlines how the films can be made, and so on.

Under date of June 30, 1915, Mr. Fuehr wrote a communication to Albert in which he says that in his capacity as secretary of the American Correspondent Film Co. he has the honor to lay before him a loan contract. [Reading:]

BIELASKI EXHIBIT No. 24.

In regard to the loan of $20,000 kindly promised by you. Since I, according to the last agreement, retain only 31 shares for which I set down to my account $3,100 out of the earlier $5,100 kindly placed by you at my disposal for this purpose, this loan amounts, with a further $2,000 to $22,000.

In addition to the half of the net profits which are to be assigned to you by the company according to agreement, I have of course to transfer to you that share in the profits which accrue to the 31 shares standing in my name, until the total of $25,100 advanced by you is entirely paid back. I have not considered it advisable to make mention of this obligation in the contract, but I should be loath to omit expressly making this explanation here.

With loyal greetings, your obedient servant,

A. FUEHR.

Under date of August 30, 1915, Felix Malitz writes to Fuehr about the enlargement of this undertaking, and he at some length points out what is necessary to be done to give the film business wide circulation, and so on. He says among other things that it—will prove to be an immense propaganda, and will do more for the future ing up of German interests in North and South America, and for the development of German political and commercial influence in this hemisphere than newspaper propaganda or any other means.

And he tells Dr. Fuehr what a good man he is and how well he can handle the matter.

He says, among other things:

I have now been running this matter through my head day and night, considered every point, and under the circumstances I believe as the matter now stands today the sum of $50,000 which was named to you the other day is actually too low. Of course as you undoubtedly understand concerning this would mean, not an expenditure but an investment of capital.

I have here a copy of the amended by-laws under date of September 15, 1915.

Under date of September 29, 1915, Dr. Fuehr, communicating with Albert, mentioned the terms on which the enlarged arrangement was to be made. He says:

Mr. Kaufmann sent to me yesterday evening the enclosed sketch of an agreement with Malitz on the basis of the arrangement agreed upon by Mr. Kaufmann's office day before yesterday. I humbly request you to examine the agreement and in case no objection arises, to send it to Mr. Kaufmann as possible today.

The chief points in regard to which I should like to beg for your agreement I have marked with lead pencil on the sketch of the contract. The following points are involved:

(1) A finance committee will be appointed to whom is reserved (the right of) later transferring to Malitz the exclusive right of signing checks;

(2) Malitz shall have the right of going off on a furlough for 30 days a year.

(3) Malitz puts up $10,000 security.

(4) In case the preferred dividends of 5 per cent are not paid, the contract will Malitz can be cancelled at any time, but—at his urgent wish—only after a six weeks' announcement.

(5) In case the company is dissolved, although the preferred dividend has been paid, Malitz stipulates for himself, in accordance with Article 15, an indemnity which shall consist of a year's salary and of the last royalty granted to him. Mr. Kaufman characterized this demand as fair; to me it seems somewhat heavy.

I remark in conclusion that this contract with Malitz is the crux of the negotiations. As soon as we have a clear understanding with Malitz, the various points of reorganization will cause no further difficulties, although an enormous amount of writing is bound up with it.

And he asks for Albert's approval to the plan.

Under date of April 4, 1916, is a communication to Dr. H. Schweitzer in respect to becoming an officer of the concern.

There is a great deal of correspondence here which only tends to reiterate the interest of the German Government in the organization.

Mr. Malitz, under date of September 29, 1915, asks them to send the $50,000 over to him right away.

Here is a memorandum having to do with the business, which shows some of the difficulties of the undertaking and what is intended to do. [Reading:]

BIELASKI EXHIBIT No. 24.

The pictures, which are at our disposal, are of two kinds:

War pictures.

Industrial and "kultur" pictures.

While the war pictures are easily accepted by the patrons the latter in general refuse industrial and kultur pictures. With the greatest caution and great skill very small numbers of the latter pictures together with the former can be sold to the public.

In spite of the fact that the war pictures can be easily disposed of, it appears, that even with these pictures no profitable business can be carried on. This is not merely the experience of our business, but also the experience of the Chicago Tribune when the latter went into the market with its pictures, and also the experience of the Hearst newspapers and of the New York World. Our own experience in Chicago shows best that the business, even with the best war pictures, does not pay. We rented a theater there for four weeks, and although the attendance on the first day was phenomenal it soon sagged so that on Friday of the first week it no longer paid to continue the performances and the theater was given up for the remaining three weeks.

This fact, of course, renders every educational result, which was to be attained with the industrial and "kultur" pictures nil. The infinitesimal number of industrial and "kultur" pictures which can be worked in with the interesting war pictures, admit per se of very little educational results. If the public takes a negative attitude toward these interesting war pictures with the tiny addition of industrial and "kultur" pictures the presentation of these interesting war pictures have of course, no or very little educational value.

On the other hand the industrial and "kultur" pictures alone can not be brought before the public at all and under the circumstances possess for us no educational value. From whatever viewpoint the matter is considered we can not avoid the conclusion that neither the one nor the other picture has attained an educational result and that we will only load ourselves with great expenses in carrying on the picture business longer. With all it seems to be a matter of indifference, whether the most interesting war pictures are obtained or not; for it can not be denied, that our war pictures which were produced in Chicago, the war pictures of the Chicago Tribune, of the Hearst newspapers and of the New York World were exceedingly interesting.

As a solution it is proposed that our own theatres to which the pictures can be sent, be erected in fifteen large cities of the United States and that the same be carried on in competition with the so-called "exchanges" already existing. In any case it would be much easier for these theatres of our own to bring industrial "kultur" pictures before the public, since these theaters would often succeed in mixing the pictures to be lent with the one or the other industrial or "kultur" pictures. We would then be in the position to make money with the general picture business which is being carried on and by smuggling in industrial and "kultur" pictures to attain educational results. Besides this would have the great result that after the war this chain of loan picture theatres would exist and could at once be utilized for the German manufacturers of pictures. This would have great educational value in the future.

The only disadvantage in it, is that this plan costs much money. According to figures spread before us such an undertaking would demand at once $200,000 capital. If it were possible to obtain this money from the general investing public and to assure ourselves in some way or other of the control of the fifteen loan picture theatres for the future, then this would be in any case, a brilliant stroke.

If, however, even the $200,000 should be raised, it is still a question whether it is worth while to build up such a big business undertaking, in order to assure ourselves of the educational effect of the pictures during and after the war.

Besides it must be further considered, that the sale for pictures during the war is difficult and uncertain, and that the educational result to be obtained during the war is only a very insignificant one. On the other hand it cannot be denied that the educational result after the war would be a very great one.

Under date of November 14, 1915, a report was made to Dr. Schumacher, division picture exchange, central exchange for foreign service, Wilhelmstrasse 62, Berlin, in which he gives a report to the foreign office concerning the performances of their films in the theaters. It is very long, and describes the theaters where they were held and the names of the films. It makes reference to Edward Lyell Fox, who was a newspaper correspondent abroad, in Germany, in the pay of the German Government, and also in the pay of American Correspondent Film Corporation, which was, of course, financed by Germany.

Some of the films which they produced were:

BIELASKI EXHIBIT No. 25.

With the Camera at the Front.

With the Army of the Crown Prince before Verdun.

The Armies of Germany, Austria-Hungary, England, France, Russia and Italy.

On the Beautiful Blue Danube.

Bosnia and Dalmatia.

Manœuvres of Montenegrin Troops.

Explosion of Mines.

A Trip in a Zeppelin.

Explosion of a Battleship.

And a number of others which he mentions.

Here is an interesting paragraph:

In regard to the reasons for the shipwreck of our combination with Hearst we have already taken the liberty to write in detail and you can imagine how much we must regret this not only with regard to the general interest of the cause, but also from the viewpoint of the moral and material success of our company.

They had negotiations with Mr. Hearst for the taking of his films and they wanted Hearst to take all of his films through this American Correspondent Film Co. and pay them a royalty, which Hearst did not care to do. He wanted to have his own men make the films, and handle it himself. This report continues:

After the shipwreck of our plans with Hearst, we have, as mentioned above, looked around for other combinations and have made two such upon which we set at least as much hope in regard to the further circulation of our films as we would have set upon the Hearst people.

One of these two combinations rests on the use of one of the largest and finest theaters there, the Park Theatre, at the corner of Broadway and Central Park, at one of the most prominent and elegant points in the city. The other combination is of much greater compass and extends over the whole of the United States and with one of the important competitors of Hearst, Norman E. Mack, who likewise controls many newspapers directly and indirectly, this a far-reaching system of advertisement is assured. In combination with several of the greatest theatres of the United States. In these combinations we have the advantage that we control the pictures, the titles, and the advertisement completely.

But we were only able to force through this combination, by giving the people to understand that we have a monopoly of the official German films, for otherwise no one of these big people would have any heart for the matter. At the moment we still have a pretty interesting film (to be sure, alas to God, not a particle of a real German war film) but if we do not soon get some more living pictures then these combinations will not be of great value to us. The cause will again droop and fade for no great noise can be made over these pretty landscape pictures which Mr. Fox up till now has received permission to take in Germany. * * *

You can easily imagine, dear Doctor, that we would only make ourselves ridiculous with such "war pictures" for our whole strength here rests on the point that we assert, and are able to assert, that we get the official German historical films.

We thank you for the "cover address." If we may be permitted, we would suggest that you give us a more exotic-sounding name, since an address like Hans Kurth will very very probably at once draw down upon us the attention of investigating officials.

With the highest regard, yours truly,

THE AMERICAN CORRESPONDENT FILM COMPANY INC.,
F. MALITZ, General Manager.

Under date of November, 1915, is a draft of a message prepared to be sent by Bernstorff to Bethmann-Holweg. Whether or not it was sent I do not know. The draft was sent into the embassy with the indorsement of Albert. [Reading:]

In my opinion this memorandum can be sent without being coded if a good cover address is chosen. If necessary I will be ready to have the shipment made upon my part to my confidential people, for whom thus far every letter has been delivered.

Senator NELSON. Have you any information to show who this fellow was to whom every letter was delivered?

Mr. BIELASKI. I think so. As will appear from this very file they had an arrangement with the head steward of the Bergensfjord and of the sister ship the Christianiafjord for the carrying of film, messages, and so on. One of these men, I think, was convicted and the other committed suicide.

Senator NELSON. That is my recollection.

Mr. BIELASKI. Here is a review of the moving-picture situation. It is a long report which is interesting, if it did not take too much time to read it. It tells about the organization, tells how it was done, reviews the films, and the great competency of Malitz, and the great necessity for getting the proper kind of film to get, over in Germany, allowing representatives of this concern to have the opportunity to take the pictures.

There is a trial balance of the condition of the company October 31, 1915, which shows this fact: Private ledger account, money paid in, $78,600. That was the money paid in by the German Government. It had advanced to Malitz and Claussen considerable money. It had advanced to Edward Lyell Fox $4,105.90, and money to Dawson, who was, I think, of the firm of Dawson & Brown, of Stamford, Conn., who developed the films sent over here, Dawson taking it over on the other side.

Here is a long list of expenses which they were put to for advertising and attorneys' fees and office supplies and all that sort of thing, giving a detailed report for the benefit of the German representatives.

Here is a telegram from Berlin, dated November 23, 1915, to the imperial ambassador at Washington, which says:

The report of your Excellency, A 501, concerning film propaganda, was received here following shortly after the telegram relating thereto.

We assume that was a report that was drafted here.

It was indeed admitted that the granting of a monopoly to the American Correspondent Film Company offers certain advantages. It is not advisable however, entirely to eliminate for the Central Powers the enterprising sort of newspapers there, as shown in the sending of their own agents to take films. As a matter of fact a systematic attempt will be made to furnish the A. C. F. C. with as interesting and rich material as possible, and to give its representatives a favored position, but exceptions must be made in favor of those who may be expected to make a stronger impression on the public than is possible with the A. C. F. C., whose connection with the German propaganda can hardly remain concealed.

Under date of December 3, 1915, Dr. Fuehr makes a further report on the present status of the film business, and makes some comments in which he says:

Our opponents now seem to have recognized the effectiveness of this propaganda and are exhibiting films from their fronts here which do not fail to make an impression, with extraordinary outlays for expensive advertising under the patronage of the highest personalities. Some of the films exhibited are quite excellent; others are obviously "maneuver pictures," which, however, have a thrilling effect upon the public. As mentioned in the newspaper herewith enclosed, among other features the King of the Belgians, Gen. Joffre, the King of England, the Prince of Wales, Field Marshal French and other generals appear upon the films; cavalry attacks are ridden; field and other artilleries are shown in action; great divisions of infantry make an attack in a real landscape and in the meantime one sees an abundance of details behind the front.

Would it not be possible to secure similar pictures of our fronts for distribution to the American Correspondent Film Company? We have far more experienced men to introduce than any of our opponents; we have the most varied fronts; we have a much grander organization. Our "correspondents" Fox and Dawson, have been able heretofore, however, to send us but few films of this kind. With the films which we have heretofore received, mostly from Austria and much fewer from Germany, our business manager, with a high regard worthy of recognition, has made up four good film dramas; but there is no doubt that he would do much better if our people were given more opportunity to take interesting views.

I therefore take the liberty to apply most respectfully to Your Excellency with the request that you will most graciously secure for our efforts the greatest possible recognition of the home military authorities. If your Excellency would have the kindness to call the attention of the leading officials to the fact that the distribution of interesting war films in America is not a concession to the well known American necessity for sensation, but is of an eminent practical significance for Germany, we may perhaps hope that we will receive some more "actual" films than we have been able to secure heretofore.

I assume that our people, Fox and Dawson, have succeeded in winning the confidence of the military circles in question. If this assumption should be justified and a change of agents should appear desirable, the American Correspondent Film Company will, of course, be ready at any time to send our correspondents to Germany, and I may respectfully suggest that in such a radiogram to that effect be sent me through Consul General Thiel.

With the greatest deference and sincere veneration, I am highly honored,
Herr Ambassador, Your Excellency's very obedient,

(Signed)

The above letter is shown by the initial signed to it to have been written by Dr. K. A. Fuehr.

Here is a letter which gives an idea as to the way they get the films over and get the letters over. It is a letter dated December 19, 1915, addressed to Mr. J. Everitt, Witts Hotel, Berlin, Germany. It reads as follows:

BIELASKI EXHIBIT No. 251.

MY DEAR MR. EVERITT: We herewith wish to give you a good tip for reception of letters and raw negative, and for the shipping of films to us.

We are afraid that it will be more and more difficult to get the stuff over here. So much more as the Danish line by which you have shipped via Copenhagen does not seem to be very safe any more.

We think we have now the best means in hand to assure a safe arrival of our stuff. Mr. Malitz namely is well acquainted with the head stewards of the Norwegian steamers Bergensfjord and Christianafjord, who are both very nice gentlemen and whose position on the only two steamers actually running between Europe and America which are, so to say, free from molestation, gives us assurances that they are the best men to properly take care of our stuff.

We will send you in future by means of these gentlemen copies of our letters and also a bunch of newspapers, magazines, etc.

We will also try if it is possible by these means to properly provide you with raw negative films. In fact, these gentlemen can leave these packages in care of somebody in Christiania where you, being a Swede, can easily go from time to time and take the stuff over.

There might be also some stuff for Mr. Dawson and in order to avoid two men going over there we would ask you to kindly also take Mr. Dawson's stuff along and send it to him.

The same thing can be done for the films and photographs you and Mr. Dawson want to ship to us.

We give you in the enclosure a list of chemicals which we also request you to buy in Germany—a suitable quantity—and which please hand to these gentlemen to take along for us.

It is very easy for you to find out the dates of arrivals from America and sailings to America of the steamers Bergensfjord and Christianafford and then you can arrange that you go over to receive any packages that we might have sent for you, and Mr. Dawson, and to give to those gentlemen any packages that you want to send to us, also copies of correspondence, consular invoices, etc.

Of course, it will be a good thing to ship everything under neutral cover and envelope without any names of senders.

As you will have noticed from our letters, we always do number them, which we think enables you to check up whether you receive all our letters and if you please number yours we then in a position to check up all the letters which we receive from you.

With nothing more for today, we are, my dear Mr. Elliott, with best regards,
Yours very truly,

THE AMERICAN CORRESPONDENT FILM COMPANY INC.
F. M., General manager.

Here is a financial statement of the film corporation.

Senator STERLING. What were those films, for the most part?

Mr. BIELASKI. For the most part the ones that they wanted, most desirable, were war pictures taken at the front. Of course, as you see from the correspondence, they tried to work into them what they called industrial and culture pictures; that is, pro-German pictures that would advance German ideas.

Senator OVERMAN. Were they extensively shown in this country?

Mr. BIELASKI. They were shown quite a bit. Some of these reports that I did not read in detail show where they were shown and what the films were and how much they paid out to have them made, and so on.

Senator NELSON. Were any of them shown in this city?

Mr. BIELASKI. I do not know that. I did not notice.

Senator STERLING. Were the war pictures to show the strength of the German Army?

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes; to show the strength, the victories, the invincible character of the German troops, and so on.

January 28, 1916, in a letter to Dr. Schumacher, Wilhelmstrasse 62, Berlin. Dr. Schumacher seems to have been the head of the film division over there. This is a letter from Malitz, and says:

BIELASKI EXHIBIT No. 26.

We take the liberty to introduce to you herewith Herr Ernst A. Schirmer, who is an absolutely confidential man of ours, and who has been good enough to declare himself ready, under the present transportation difficulties, to see to it that our films get here, and he will either look after it himself so far as his time will permit or introduce to you for this purpose some properly qualified and confidential person located in Norway.

Therefore you will please have the kindness to arrange matters so that films, letters, etc., are made ready for us in time before the alternate sailings of Norwegian steamers Bergensfjord and Christianafford, so that either Herr Schirmer or the other said confidential person may get them in Berlin and bring them on board the ships. We have friends on board these ships who attend to transportation and delivery in New York.

We hope that in this manner we can establish a regular service between Berlin and New York, and that we can promptly be provided with films.

You will perhaps be kind enough to instruct Everit and Dawson accordingly so that everything may work smoothly.

Relative to the compensation for the services which Herr Schirmer or confidential friend may render us, and the expenses these gentlemen may incur in connection therewith, we ask you to arrange these matters with them as you think best, pay the money for us and charge it to our account.

With thanks, etc.

(Signed) F. MALITZ

In another letter dated January 28, also addressed to this I. Schumacher, Malitz said further:

BIELASKI EXHIBIT No. 27.

We have given to Mr. Ernst A. Schirmer a letter of introduction to you. We hope that through him and eventually through a Mr. Anderson who is connected with him, and who also sails on the Christianafford, a regular delivery service may be established for us between Berlin and Bergen.

In the strictest confidence we take the liberty to inform you that the respectfully undersigned, Herr Malitz, is a personal friend of the two chief stewards of the Norwegian steamers, Baadtoft of the Bergensfjord and Toft of the Christianafford, and that these gentlemen, since the matter of transportation has grown to be more or less of a problem, have been kind enough to take our unfinished negative films over there for our operatives and bring the finished films back here. This, of course, will be no smuggling or anything of the sort for we would be glad to pay any sort of freight. We only desire, with the help of these gentlemen, to prevent those negatives from being seized by any belligerent power on the high seas, as these gentlemen doubtless have ways and means for bringing things through that an ordinary passenger does not have. By this route you may also send us letters in neutral envelopes, etc. It is only necessary to arrange to take the things on the arrival of the steamer in Bergen and send them to Berlin, and at the same time to have letters, etc. in Berlin ready so that upon the arrival of the courier they may be taken by him to Norway before the sailing of the steamers. Of course this must all be done very quietly, and Herr Schirmer and Herr Anderson have offered to arrange such service for us. We would appreciate it very much if you would facilitate the work of these gentlemen and thereby enable us to get good films regularly as has not been the case for many months past as elsewhere mentioned.

We have advanced $200 to Herr Schirmer for compensation and expenses, and if anything more is necessary, you will perhaps be kind enough to expense it for us.

On former occasions, and now with the last sailing of the Bergensfjord, we have sent letters and packages to Herr Baadtoft.

With best regards, we remain,

Very respectfully,

(Signed) THE AMERICAN CORRESPONDENCE FILM CO., INC.
F. MALITZ, General Manager.

Senator NELSON. What did they pay these stewards?

Mr. BIELASKI. They say there they paid him $200, and told them to give him more. I do not know the exact amount.

Here is another letter from Fuehr to Baron Mumm von Schwarzenstein, of the foreign office in Berlin, dated January 28, 1916, in which Fuehr says:

BIELASKI EXHIBIT No. 28.

For sometime past our film company has not received any new materials from Germany which we need very much. It may well be assumed that shipments of films have been captured by the British who are now systematically robbing the mail.

A perfectly safe opportunity for the sending of new materials over here is offered through the bearer of this letter whose address there is in care of the member Chamber of Accounts, J. Allenbeck, as is known in the Treasury Department of Interior, and who will shortly return here. He has intimate friends among the officers of all Scandinavian steamers to whom he delivers things to be sent, which have been confided to him so that their capture even in a search of the passengers is not to be feared.

I would be extraordinarily thankful if Your Excellency would be kind enough to cause the officials in question upon this occasion to send here as abundant supply as possible of "actual" war films.

With sincere esteem,

ALEXANDER FUEHR.

Senator NELSON. Was he here in Washington?

Mr. BIELASKI. J. Allenbeck? No, sir; I take it he was abroad.

Here is another detailed statement under date of February 16, 1916, as to the then arrangement for handling films and payments and so on.

There is some more about the financing of the operation.

Under date of March 14, 1916, Malitz submitted to Albert a proposal for the establishment of a moving picture exchange in the United States. Apparently it never came to anything. March 17 Malitz asks Albert for another $20,000 or $25,000.

Here is a letter from the other side, showing the sending of films. It is dated Bergen, April 5, 1916, addressed to the American Correspondent Film Co., 220 West Forty-second Street, New York, and reads as follows:

BIELASKI EXHIBIT No. 29.

GENTLEMEN: Sending today by a friend on the Christianafford who happens to be going to New York the following three packages:

One package containing 1,000 meters developed movie negative film.

One package containing developed 6'2 by 8'2 plates.

One package of letters. Please mail them to the proper addresses.

I am giving the bearer of those three packages 20 Danish kronen, which is about the equivalent of $6. If you wish to give him more you may do so, depending upon whatever arrangement you have made.

Respectfully,

ALBERT K. DAWSON.

Here is a letter the date of which I do not see, but it must have been some time early in 1916, apparently a letter to the imperial ambassador, Count Bernstorff, at Washington, D. C., from High Privy Counsellor Albert. It says:

BIELASKI EXHIBIT No. 30.

With the respectful suggestion most graciously to advise the Herr Imperial Minister in Mexico City that his plan for the introduction of German moving pictures into Mexico for exhibition in the film theatres there will be pushed from here as much as possible.

The American Correspondent Film Company, 220 W. 42nd Street, New York City, with regard to the object outlined by Herr von Eckhardt, is willing to dispose of the excellent films on the local market as cheaply that—aside from the costs of transportation,—the stated maximum price of 8 pfennigs per running meter. The business manager, Herr Malitz, informs me that not long ago a complete film advance, "The Battle of Przemyśl," of 5,000 feet, was sold in Mexico, and in fact to the firm of Alvarez y Arondo in Vera Cruz. There are still three other large original film dramas, feature films as well as numerous small pictures, to be disposed of by the company.

In May, 1916, is a proposal for the dissolution of the American Film Corporation. It does not pay, and they do not think it is worthy to continue it, and they practically transfer it to Mr. Albert. They get rid of their liabilities, and get back none of the money they have paid in. There is a great deal more of general memoranda about the films, and Dr. Fuehr.

Senator STERLING. Were not those films subject to seizure, or liable to be seized?

Mr. BIELASKI. As having been smuggled in?

Senator STERLING. As having been smuggled in.

Mr. BIELASKI. One of the letters shows that with every bunch of film they sent they sent along a consular invoice. They did not intend to smuggle them in. They meant to smuggle them past the British and then apparently to declare them here. It was before we went to war. One of the letters of instruction was to send consular invoices with them.

It appears that throughout the period of his stay in this country, Privy Counsellor Albert and also his associates frequently consulted with Mr. Samuel Untermyer, of New York, on propaganda matters.

January 12, 1915, Mr. Viereck wrote Dr. Albert as follows:

BIELASKI EXHIBIT No. 31.

DEAR DR. ALBERT: I had a long talk with Samuel Untermyer who is strong on our side and will write an article in support of our contention, for the New York Times. He will also take up the matter with President Wilson.

In order to enable him to do this work well, from a lawyer's point of view, he must have all the material possible on the subject. I enclose a list which I have sent to Dr. Hale from which you may see just what he must have. Anything that you can add to making the list more complete will be of help to him as well as to us.

Then there is a letter to Dr. Hale of the same date, January 12, 1915. [Reading:]

BIELASKI EXHIBIT No. 32.

DEAR DR. HALE: Mr. Samuel Untermyer would like to obtain as soon as possible for his lawyer's brief in favor of our contention the following:

1. Rules laid down by Hague Convention.
2. Rules laid down by convention of London.
3. Quotations from international law on the question.
4. Proofs of interference with American shipping.
5. The text of our protest to Great Britain and the text of Great Britain's answer.
6. Whatever literature you may have on the subject.
7. Up to date list of all shipments seized (food, cotton etc).
8. Difficulties placed in the way of American shipping indirectly.
9. Precedent established by ourselves both in favor and against our present contention.

I would like to get these things tomorrow if possible. You can get in touch with Dr. Albert and see that he supplies whatever lists he has. Dr. Dernburg suggests that we should also send Untermyer his speech on neutralizing the ocean.

If anything in this note is not clear will you please call me up at my home 6510 Riverside.

Sincerely yours,

G. S. VIERECK.

Dr. Hale and Viereck also conferred with Mr. Untermyer on the general subject, one of the conferences being held in Mr. Untermyer's residence in April, 1915.

Early in August, 1915, the New York World published an exposure of certain correspondence which had come into its possession and which had been obtained from the private papers of Counselor Albert.

On August 20, 1915, Albert issued a long public statement attempting to minimize the importance of these revelations, and in which he said, among other things, that it was not true that an effort had been made at any time secretly to influence American public opinion.

One of the things which he said in this newspaper statement was:

As to the so-called German information service and the alleged newspaper propaganda:

It is not true that an effort has at any time been secretly made to influence American public opinion. The existence of the German information service was publicly announced to all the leading newspapers of the country upon its inauguration in October last and has been well known to the public ever since. It was founded for the purpose, as then stated, of counteracting the partisan news service that up to that time had been coming via England in which the happenings of the war and the conditions in European countries were being grossly misrepresented, to the injury of Germany.

The Embassy, which has a natural and legitimate interest that desirable information regarding Germany should be made available to the press of this country, has always openly assisted that service by giving it access to authentic news items and official reports. Germany is and has been avowedly and anxiously seeking, and will continue to seek, for its cause, the moral support of America and of the other neutral countries of the world.

Senator NELSON. What are you reading from?

Mr. BIELASKI. From Albert's statement in the New York World of August 20, 1915. You see he deliberately conceals absolutely the fact that the German Government was financing, directing, and controlling in every way the German information service. That is a fair sample of the truthfulness of many of the other statements contained in his article.

Maj. HUMES. Just in that connection, you are reading from the New York World of Friday, August 20, 1915. What event in the war occurred just at that time, that happens to be reported in that same paper?

Mr. BIELASKI. The sinking of the Arabic, on the very same day.

With respect to that statement, you will recall that among the letters taken from Mr. Archibald by the English and made public, was one from Ambassador Dumba, dated August 20, 1915, in which Mr. Dumba, after stating that Bernstorff had made no comment on the publication, said:

On the other hand, Privy Councillor Albert published in the newspapers a very cleverly worded explanation, the tenor of which I venture to submit to your Excellency in an enclosure.

Capt. von Papen on the same day, writing to his wife concerning the publication of this document, states:

You can picture yourself the sensation of the Americans. Well, one must after all have things go like this. The answer of Albert I am sending you herewith, so that you may see how we defend ourselves. The document we drew up together yesterday.

On the same day that this statement appeared in the newspapers, namely, August 20, 1915, Dr. Albert wrote to Mr. Undermyer inclosing a draft of a note which he said he wanted to write to the State Department, asking Mr. Undermyer's opinion of it, asking for his ideas, and pointing out to him that the matter must be treated absolutely confidentially. That was a draft of a note about some matter of which we do not know the subject, which he was submitting to Untermyer, to advise him as to the form it should take, to present to the American Department of State. In that letter he says in a separate paragraph:

I have heard very flattering comments on the statement. I know to whom they are addressed. I do think it was the right thing to come out.

Whether or not that relates to the statement which Dr. Albert made public on that date, and whether or not it shows that Untermyer prepared that statement, is a question of deduction. There is no absolute proof one way or the other.

Senator STERLING. What is the date of that.

Mr. BIELASKI. That is August 20, the date that the statement appeared.

It also appeared that Mr. Untermyer later undertook to acquire for the Germans control of an important metropolitan newspaper. The following letter deals with the subject. It is on the letter paper of Guggenheimer, Untermyer & Marshal, No. 37 Wall Street, New York, but appears to have been written from the houseboat Ostia and is dated Miami, Fla., February 19, 1916.

It reads as follows:

BIELASKI EXHIBIT No. 33.

Dr. H. A. ALBERT,

Care of Hamburg-American Line,

45 Broadway, New York City.

DEAR DR. ALBERT: I have received word that our opportunity has now arrived to acquire that morning and evening paper about which we have been talking and that it can be had at a price slightly under $2,000,000 for five sixths of the capital stock, which includes valuable real estate on Park Road but that action must be taken immediately.

Under proper conditions my friends would be willing to take a one-fourth interest, provided some arrangement could be made giving them the option to acquire the majority interest at a future date, say after the lapse of one or two years from the close of the war, which would afford every opportunity that could be possibly wanted. I understand that the project is now breaking about even—that is, that it is neither losing nor making money; but my friends are satisfied that it can be made a substantial earner and I am disposed to agree with them.

I shall be glad to hear from you as to whether you are now in position to take up this subject seriously and promptly with me and bring it to a conclusion, if, as I believe, the terms are advantageous.

I expect to leave here on the 28th, spending the forenoon of March 1st in Washington and reaching New York that night. I shall probably have to leave about March 8th or 10th for South America as a member of the International High Commission, of which Secretary McAdoo is chairman.

Sincerely yours,

SAMUEL UNTERMYER.

The name of that paper is not mentioned here, but we understand it to be the New York Sun, which answers the description, and we also understand from other testimony that an approach was made to the Sun by a man acting on behalf of Mr. Untermyer to ascertain the terms on which it could be obtained.

To that letter a reply was made dated February 23, 1916, reading as follows:

BIELASKI EXHIBIT No. 34.

MY DEAR MR. UNTERMYER: With reference to your letter of February 19, which I received yesterday afternoon, I have sent at once a cipher cable to Berlin asking for authorization to take up the subject. I expect to have a answer by March first, so we can discuss the question as soon as you return to New York. I thank you very much for the interest you have taken in the matter.

At the same time I must congratulate you on the most interesting trip you intend to make to South America, and on your nomination as a member of the International High Commission.

With respect to other activities of the same sort it appears from entries in the diary kept by Dr. Fuehr, which we have, that he conferred with Mr. Untermeyer on what he described as press matters, Dr. Fuehr having, as I said, the actual control for the German Government of the press and propaganda bureau.

There is another matter about which we have no definite information, but it possibly suggests an inquiry in that connection, that in connection with the Jewish propaganda in the United States on behalf of the German Government the Yiddish paper Die Wahrheit appears to have undergone some sort of a financial reorganization, and the sum of about $50,000 was involved.

The Die Wahrheit Publishing Co. was incorporated November 3, 1905, under the laws of the State of New York to publish the Yiddish Daily Wahrheit; authorized capital $30,000, of which $28,700 was originally issued. Of the latter $1,200 was returned to the treasury, leaving $27,500 outstanding.

The incorporators were Louis E. Miller, president until 1915; Herman Paley, treasurer until 1915, and Peter Schmukler, treasurer until 1915.

In November, 1914, Miller being unable to get Schmukler out resigned as acting editor on being refused increased compensation of $5,000 per annum and Mr. Gonikman took his place as editor.

In January, 1915, Miller resigned as president and director, while still holding 130 out of 280 shares then outstanding and was succeeded as president by Herman Paley, former treasurer, who was succeeded in his office by Peter Schmukler.

In January, 1915, Miller appears to have indorsed his stock in blank and is said to have started an opposition paper. The Leader, borrowing, it is said, $50,000.

Herman Paley, who was one of the original incorporators of 1915, stated that he went to Judge Aaron J. Levy to interest him in an attempt to buy Miller's stock and Judge Levy was to try and get the backing of Samuel Untermeyer on account of their strong friendship. That this was done and arrangements made that as soon as Miller would consent to sell his 130 shares, Untermeyer was to put up $35,000, Levy $5,000, and Paley $10,000; that before Untermeyer left on a trip to South America he left word with his secretary, Harry Hoffman, to let Levy and Paley have $35,000 when negotiations were concluded; that on May 5, 1916, the whole affair was concluded, each putting up their share. Harry Hoffman, Untermeyer's secretary, attending to the details of taking up Miller's note.

Unless it can be established that Untermeyer advanced the $35,000 for or on account of someone else the whole transaction appears entirely legitimate.

Whether Mr. Untermeyer advanced that amount from his own funds or from funds secured elsewhere I have no idea. The only suggestion to the contrary is a report which reached us through British secret-service sources that it was for the purpose of German propaganda. That report, however, did not contain anything in way of evidence to substantiate such an inference.

On the general question of Jewish propaganda in the United States, Dr. Strauss, who, as I stated this morning, was a member of the original mission of which Dernburg was the head and Albert member, came here for the special purpose of handling Jewish propaganda. It appears to have been the idea of the Germans at that time that inasmuch as Russia was fighting against Germany, the Jews would naturally affiliate with Germany, Russia having oppressed them for many years. Dr. Strauss devoted himself to that work.

One of the first communications that throws any light on the activities is a letter dated October 20, 1914, addressed to Dr. Albert [Reading:]

BIELASKI EXHIBIT No. 35.

Confidential.

DEAR DR. ALBERT: I take the liberty to inform you that my office is located dating from yesterday, at 74 W. 85th Street, telephone Schuyler 6536, where Dr. Melamed is also located.

The manipulation of the Jewish press in America, formerly casual, has now been changed by me into a regular, systematic information service and organized on a firm basis. This was extremely necessary, considering the peculiar nature of the Jewish press and the difficult conditions in other countries, where Jews have not full citizenship. A confirmation of this opinion is furnished by the following article from the Warheit, of which I spoke to you recently. You see how the pro-German attitude of the Jews here has put the Times into a tremendous rage.

The Bureau began business yesterday, and I spend several hours there daily. Dr. Melamed works according to my instructions and under my supervision.

So far as the material is at our disposal, we are to furnish it also to the bureaus of the English-(language) press. In addition we shall furnish you two editorials weekly. The first is being dispatched today to Mr. Fuehr.

The expenses which this bureau will occasion—outside of Dr. M's salary—are likely to be very slight. I shall not be able to tell you under two or three weeks just how much more will be required for this service. I have advanced personally the expenses so far occasioned. In case you should have received in the meantime any more German papers, I should be very grateful if you would send them to the above address.

This apparently was a Jewish offshoot of the press bureau, just like the Irish also.

That letter is signed by one of two men, but the signature is so illegible that we are not certain just who signed it. We have the original letter, however.

Here is another letter dated New York, April 27, 1915, the subject of which is stated to be "S. M. Melamed, journalistic activities." It is addressed to the imperial embassy, Washington, D. C., and is from the imperial general consul of the German empire at New York. It contains some information about Jewish propaganda. It is as follows:

BIELASKI EXHIBIT No. 36.

I have the honor to submit an article from the pen of the Jewish journalist S. M. Melamed, which was published in the Globe on the 23rd day of April, and which article refers to the treatise on the Polish legions, which appeared on the 16th of April in the same paper.

This article was published through official exertion here, and originates with Count Dziedurzycki, Imperial Military Attache in Madrid.

The journalist S. M. Melamed came a few months ago to America, is associated with the German Literary Bureau conducted by Dr. Fuehr and according to statements of the letter is financially aided by the German Embassy.

Mr. Melamed has published several articles about the political situation at that time, in which he portrays the Polenism in Austria as thoroughly Russophile and traitorous. Such descriptions, which on the assertion that for certain Mr. Bilinski because of Russophile activities was arrested rise to absurdity, are inclined to appear to the reader of the inner political relations of the monarchy gloomy, and cannot fail to produce an injurious effect upon the Poles here.

Mr. Melamed appeared here personally, and received the assurance that we would at all times be prepared to give him particulars. He, however, made no use of this, except in a few cases, in which in spite of received information he made erroneous statements.

Mr. Melamed, who is saturated with Zionistic aspirations, pushes his objective through his journalistic activity, without consideration for cooperation with reference to the interest of Austria Hungary.

I therefore have the honor to respectfully beg to suggest to the Embassy to take the proper steps to hinder such activities of Mr. Melamed as work directly against our endeavors.

(Signed) THE IMPERIAL GENERAL CONSUL.

Here is a letter which does not seem to be dated, but is on the letterhead of Dr. M. S. Melamed, journalist, 74 West 85th Street. It is headed "Report of Activities." It is as follows:

BIELASKI EXHIBIT No. 37.

During the past four weeks the following articles have been sent to the papers named:

1. Germanic peoples and Jews (Juedisches Volk.)
2. Soldier-psychology (Zukunft).
3. Field and war theater (Juedisches Tageblatt)
4. "For Militarism." (Juedisches Tageblatt.)
- " (Chicago Courier)
5. A settlement with Israel Zangwill. (Tageblatt)
6. Nietzsche and the War. (Tageblatt)
7. The beggar Student. (Tageblatt)
8. Imperialism and War. (Neue Zeit)
9. Turkey, Germany and England (Juedisches Volk)
10. Itsche "The Frenchman" (Der grosse Kunders)
11. Pan Slavism and Pangermanism (Tageblatt)
12. Culture versus Kulture (New York Times)
13. Some indiscretions I

II

III

14. Why Turkey joined the War.
15. Development of the warlike spirit in England
16. The German government and the Jewish question in Eastern Europe (Staats Zeitung)
17. A number of notices have been sent in the past four weeks to all Jewish papers in the United States. This portion of the service could not be developed sufficiently, for I still do not have a sufficient number of papers at my disposal.

There is reason to believe that an opportunity to supply this branch of the service better will present itself. I can give a most positive assurance that these activities have borne good fruit, and that a pro-German sentiment has arisen in the circles among whom I am working, which I may continue to succeed in maintaining and strengthening. The personal difficulties with which the activities heretofore had to contend perhaps will be removed once for all by the entry of Mr. Strauss. I hope to make verbally a report in relation thereto. New York, November 11, 1914.

(Sgd) S. M. MELAMED.

P.S. I intend during the coming weeks to have my eye also on the English press more than ever in this connection.

(Note in lead pencil on margin: "What has it accomplished? D.")

One of the most intelligent notations which appears in these papers is this, written on the margin of this communication. It is initialed

"D," and I assume it is for Dernburg, and it says, "What has accomplished?"

The records show that on June 14, 1915, $1,500 was paid to Strauss; June 15, 1915, $3,000; June 21, $2,000; July 7, $3,000; July 23, $3,000; August 6, $5,000; August 23, $3,500; November 6, $3,000; January 4, 1916, $2,220.

Dr. Strauss, who is now interned, has very persistently refused to say anything about how he spent most of this money, and we do not know definitely how some of it was spent. We know how some of it went, of course. I think, however, that that is sufficient to show that a very persistent and elaborate—

Senator NELSON. Where is he interned?

Mr. BIELASKI. At Oglethorpe, where he belongs.

Senator NELSON. Oh, he stays there?

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes, sir. I think that is sufficient, however, to show the extent and the persistency and the organization with which they attempted to develop the Jewish propaganda in this country.

I have here two letters with respect to propaganda in the United States, signed by Edward Rumely, which by direction of the Attorney General I am to submit to the chairman of the committee to determine whether or not they shall be made of record [handing papers to the chairman].

Senator OVERMAN (after examination of papers by the committee). Mr. Bielaski, this is not germane. We will exclude these letters as not germane. Unless some Senator wants to ask a question, Mr. Bielaski may go on.

Mr. BIELASKI. In regard to the activities of Mr. Rumely, it appears that Rumely, as soon as Dernburg got here, rather attached himself to Dernburg; he was with him all the time, went to the theater with him, and was generally regarded by his associates more or less of a shadow of Dernburg. He, we find, drew the money from Albert by which Hammerling was paid for the advertisement which you have thoroughly gone into, with respect to the embargo on munitions.

It also appears that through him $3,000 was paid to Gaston Means, commonly known as "Bud" Means, at that time a detective in the employ of the Burns Detective Agency, in connection with the investigation they made for the purpose of getting evidence to show that the British Government was shipping supplies from New York City to its warships at sea. It was a fake scheme, because the Germans had been shipping supplies from New York to their vessels; they had been caught, and, as you will recall, the so-called Hamburg-American Line cases in which some of the principal officers of the Hamburg-American Line were convicted. This was an attempt to show that the British were doing the same thing. They were not, but Mr. Means, in cooperation with some other gentlemen, tried to show that they were. I could give you more details of the scheme if they worked if you desire.

Senator OVERMAN. I would like to hear it. I know something about Means.

Mr. BIELASKI. It has nothing to do particularly with the German propaganda, but it is this: Means posed as a wealthy Canadian in the United States to see what he could do for the cause of Great Britain in the war, and he had brought to him a number of tugs captains to whom he said that he was willing to pay well for services that they might render in taking out supplies to British ships. After preliminary conferences with them, he made it known to them that he was not really this wealthy Canadian in person, but he was his agent, and that he must needs convince his principal that these tugboat captains could really do what they undertook to do, to wit, get out supplies to the British ships. The best possible evidence of that would be statements that they had succeeded in doing it before, and therefore could do it again. I think he succeeded in finding in New York one tugboat captain who was willing to make such a statement falsely. The others shied off, and from their attitude the facts became known that such an effort was on foot. The idea was that these statements in affidavit form would be taken, presented to our State Department, and this Government led to act against Great Britain on a series of false informations. We tried our best to prosecute the people who were connected with that, but in the state of the law at that time, and on account of our inability to prove that the men who were active in doing this work knew that it was to be presented to our State Department a prosecution was prevented. We could not prove that Means and these other fellows in doing this work knew the purpose for which it was being done, that is to be presented to our Government, at all, and we could not work out a theory of prosecution without that fact.

Rumely was interested in that, at least to the extent of the payment of $3,000 to him for Means.

Senator NELSON. To this assumed Canadian?

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes; to this detective.

An interesting thing about it is this, that Rumely got $3,000, apparently, in the records, of checks we have to the Burns Detective Agency, we can only make them total about $2,200. I do not know what became of the rest that got to Means.

Senator NELSON. It possibly stuck in Rumely's hands. [Laughter.]

Mr. BIELASKI. A great deal of German money did stick in different quarters, and did not get to its ultimate object.

Senator OVERMAN. Was Means ever the agent of the German Government?

Mr. BIELASKI. Mr. Means was not only the agent of the German Government in this proposition, but with Boy-Ed. Boy-Ed had a code between them in which Means was Z-13, or something or other, and Boy-Ed was Z—something else. They had meetings, around, and always talked that way; and we have the details. But he was in the employ of Boy-Ed in addition to this employment. This employment, too, by the way, was more or less a Boy-Ed affair, inasmuch as it related to naval affairs.

Senator OVERMAN. Is there any evidence that he was connected with them after the war?

Mr. BIELASKI. No; I do not think he was connected with them after Boy-Ed sailed, which was in December, 1915.

Senator NELSON. Boy-Ed and Von Papen were sent away before we went to war.

Mr. BIELASKI. Mr. Rumely admits the receipt of some $10,000 which he states was paid to him for an option on certain tractors which he was going to ship to Germany. He claims, and I accurately, that he could not make the shipment of these tra because the British would not let them through, and that then he felt that he was in possession of, at that time, $10,000 from German Government for this option, without having given much of substance in return, and he claims that he spent about amount of $10,000 for the benefit of the Germans in an investigation to determine whether or not submarines were being shipped from Massachusetts to England, for the Germans. He also appears to have been interested in Irish propaganda as distinguished from the matters which you have ruled are not germane. He told that he had loaned to a man named Anthony Brogan, five or six years ago, about $7,000 and taken as collateral for it stock in Irish-American, and he did not think that the collateral was worth anything.

About six months after the war broke out, Brogan came to him and asked for another thousand dollars for the purpose of reviving the paper and putting it on its feet.

Senator OVERMAN. What were Mr. Rumely's antecedents? What did he do here before the war?

Mr. BIELASKI. Mr. Rumely was educated in Germany; had great many friends in Germany. He spent I forget how many years there. He came back and became the head of the Rumely Trust Co., an Indiana concern. He seems to have been a man of considerable ability. I think he took that corporation from a $3,000 corporation up to a $36,000,000 corporation in a very short period of time, until it failed and went up. He claims to have lost money in that deal, and it was just about that time that he gotten out of that corporation, having been forced out and the management taken over by other people, when the war started, and he landed in New York with a good appetite and not much to do.

About this Irish business, the following is a transcript of a part of his statement which relates to that. [Reading:]

BIELASKI EXHIBIT No. 38.

Rumely, in a statement made June 20, 1918, in New York City, stated he had loaned to Anthony Brogan five or six years previously $7,000 and taken as collateral for it some shares of stock in the Irish American. He stated that about six months after the war broke out (meaning the start of European War), Brogan came to him and asked for another thousand dollars for the purpose of reviving the paper and putting it on its feet. He denied that he ever discussed with Brogan the matter of sending a correspondent abroad. He finally admitted meeting a girl in Brogan's office who wanted to go to Ireland. He denied that he had any knowledge that she was under engagement to go to Ireland at any time for Brogan. He stated that he had refused to send her as a correspondent of the Mail. He admitted, however, that he had given Brogan the additional thousand dollars.

The following is a transcript of his statement as to where he got the thousand dollars:

Q. Did you give him $1,000 more?

A. I gave him $1,000; yes.

Q. Where did you get that $1,000?

A. I don't recall where I got the $1,000.

Q. It wasn't your own money, was it?

A. What is it?

Q. It wasn't your own money?

A. Why shouldn't it be?

Q. Do you recall what your financial condition was at that time, as you have stated it to me?

A. Yes.

Q. That is one reason why it should not be your own money.

Do you remember now from whom you got that money?

A. I do not. I will look through my——

Q. To be more specific, did you get it from Albert or Dernburg or anyone representing the German crowd?

A. What is it?

Q. Or any representative of the German crowd?

A. (Hesitates.)

Q. Did you?

A. I may have got it from Fuehr, although I do not recall the source, but if I can check through my checks at the time I may be able to tell you.

Q. From whom?

A. Dr. Fuehr.

Q. Who was practically the disbursing officer of the German publication?

A. Publication, yes. I think he bought a batch of copies of that number.

Q. So that you are confident that it was not your own money at least that you put into this, the $1,000 that you put into Brogan's paper at that time?

A. Maybe. I don't recall the exact—A block of those numbers were purchased. I think it was five or ten thousand copies, and I paid for those copies. I do not know whether the amount of payment was $1,000 or whether I added part of it.

He concludes by admitting that at least a substantial part of the money paid for the Irish-American came from German sources.

Senator NELSON. Yes.

Mr. BIELASKI. He was also interested in some form of advertising in the newspapers of the South for Germans. We do not know exactly what that was, except that it probably had something to do with cotton.

Senator OVERMAN. Do you know what newspapers in the South?

Mr. BIELASKI. No; it never got to the point of approaching the newspapers, so far as we know. You see, he was tangled up with this advertising idea of Hammerling's, and some similar scheme which was, as best we can judge, for making use of the cotton situation for the purpose of arousing sentiment in the South, showing how England was interfering with the shipment of cotton, but, beyond a letter written to some advertising agency, the McMahon Agency, I think, we have very little evidence to show.

Senator NELSON. We had indications in the testimony of Konta that they were looking up this cotton question and made a publication in respect to it.

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes. I think this was in the press bureau that they sent out.

Senator NELSON. We got that testimony here yesterday.

Mr. BIELASKI. This, dated March 10, 1915, is apparently a draft of a cable which appears to have been sent to Berlin. [Reading:]

BIELASKI EXHIBIT No. 39.

Answering Cable No. —.

Main point is no longer organization of news service, but in placing news here. Entire press here, as well as all telegraph agencies, in hands of money interests allied with England. Therefore, although best possible news bureau organized here under Dernburg's direction, news gets only scant circulation, as long as we do not control an important newspaper here which will force other papers to accept German news for sake of their journalistic reputation. Offer for purchase of suitable newspaper under consideration. Urgently request immediate authorization to make initial payment of $325,000. Total sum,

$1,300,000. American news bureau intended over there valuable only to supplement press bureau here as well as the paper to be bought, otherwise trifling and rather injurious because of lack of appreciation often observed and daily change of aspect.

As you know, Dr. Rumely with Mr. Kaufman of the firm of H. Kaufman & Lindheim, who were Albert's attorneys and involved with him in many of his operations——

Senator NELSON. Were they indicted under the spy act?

Mr. BIELASKI. They are indicted for having failed to report to the Alien Property Custodian the fact of the German Government's ownership of stock in the Mail. As that is a pending case, not yet tried, we do not want to say very much about it, except something of the way the money was received. I think it is opportune at this time to tell the committee something of what we owe to Mr. Alfred Becker, the deputy attorney general of the State of New York. Mr. Becker, acting for the French Government, developed the facts with respect to about $1,700,000 or $1,800,000 being paid here to Bolo Pasha to obtain control of a paper for the purposes of the German Government.

Senator NELSON. That is the man who was executed?

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes, sir; that is the man who was executed. In connection with that investigation it was necessary for Mr. Becker to examine a large amount of the papers of Hugo Schmidt, which the department placed at his disposal in part, and which he secured from Schmidt in part. Mr. Becker secured a very intimate knowledge of those papers, and at the request of the Department of Justice continued his examination of them and made certain other inquiries for the department. He had the advantage of proceeding under the statute of New York which permitted him to call in and examine people under oath.

He had the second advantage of not showing the Government's hand in his inquiries at all, and the third advantage of giving our department the services of a very capable attorney who had time to concentrate on matters of importance; and he developed considerable information of value. Among other things was that in continuing this work at the request of our department he located the exact method in which the money which was paid by Rumely to the Mail came from Albert, the German representative here—the financial representative. It showed that on May 27, 1915, the $700,000 used to purchase stock of Mail and Express Co. (owners of the Evening Mail) came from the funds realized from the sale of Imperial German treasury notes in April, 1915.

The above amount was paid to one Walter Lyon from accounts of F. Albert maintained with the Equitable Trust Co. and the Columbia Trust Co. in New York. Walter Lyon's firm (Senskorff, Lyon & Co.) turned the money over to E. A. Rumely on June 1, 1915, completing the purchase.

From September 18, 1915, to April 3, 1917, $701,700 additional was paid by H. F. Albert from funds on deposit in the Chase National Bank and the Mechanics and Metals National Bank realized from sale of notes already mentioned or from funds supplied by the Imperial German Embassy.

Senator NELSON. That was near the time we entered the war?

Mr. BIELASKI. No, sir; that was in the spring of 1915.

Senator NELSON. I thought you said 1917.

Mr. BIELASKI. Oh, yes; he continued right up until three days before the break in diplomatic relations, and they continued to furnish money for the purchase of this paper; and after the break in negotiations, three days before we declared war, I think there were disbursed by Hays, Kaufman & Lindheim about $200,000 which had been placed at their disposal by the Germans just before they sailed. So that the last expenditure was April 3, 1917.

Senator NELSON. And that was after Bernstorff had sailed?

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes; after he had gone; and it was some money that they left in the control of Hays, Kaufman & Lindheim.

This amount was used for running expenses and improvements. The money in almost every instance passed from H. F. Albert to Hays, Kaufman & Lindheim, thence to Renskorf, Lyon & Co. and from them to the S. S. McClure Newspaper Corporation, which had been incorporated under the laws of the State of New York, to act as a holding company at the time of the purchase.

Senator NELSON. Did Rumely get control of the Mail?

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes; absolute control of the Mail. One hundred and fifty thousand dollars of the latter amount was disbursed by Hays, Kaufman & Lindheim between February 13 and April 3, after Albert's departure.

There are a great many other things with respect to that purchase which ought not to be made public in advance of the trial of the case, but it is short; it was the purchase by the German Government of a daily newspaper for the purpose of influencing American public opinion.

Senator NELSON. Who owns that paper now, Dr. Rumely?

Mr. BIELASKI. No, sir.

Senator OVERMAN. It is in the hands of the Custodian of Alien Property, is it not?

Mr. BIELASKI. I do not know whether it is still in the hands of Mr. Palmer or not. I suppose it is. He took it over.

Senator NELSON. Oh, he did?

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes.

Senator NELSON. Is the publication continued?

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes, sir.

Senator NELSON. Did Rumely have anything to do with the paper before it was purchased?

Mr. BIELASKI. Not before it was purchased; no, sir. He became the editor afterwards.

Maj. HUMES. Senator, for your information, it is in the hands of the Alien Property Custodian, and has been placed in charge of Mr. Stoddard, the former owner of the paper, who is now conducting its publication.

Senator NELSON. And is he a loyal man?

Maj. HUMES. There is no question about that, I think.

Capt. LESTER. No question about it.

Maj. HUMES. It is my understanding.

Senator OVERMAN. Did they ever attempt to purchase any other papers?

Mr. BIELASKI. There was the consideration given for the purchase of the New York Sun, through Untermeyer, which I have described, and a request for the purchase of the Washington Post, and, of course, Dr. Hale made investigations and reports on a great many papers and periodicals, with a view to whether or not it was to purchase them; but I do not think any negotiation or actual was made to purchase others of which we have knowledge. Of course there are a great many payments to small newspapers, particularly foreign-language newspapers, by the Austro-Hungarian Government, which I can give you a list of shortly, and payments were made to individuals for articles printed, and all that sort of thing.

I have here a translation of a memorandum which the Attorney General directs to be submitted to the chairman of the committee for his decision [handing paper to the chairman].

There is a great deal of other material of a similar nature, so I thought we had better cover it all if it is put in.

Mr. O'BRIAN. As I understand Senator Overman, unless it is confined to the German propaganda, it may as well be omitted.

Senator OVERMAN. If it is not confined to German propaganda, it had better be omitted. We want to confine ourselves to matters pertaining to the German propaganda.

Mr. BIELASKI. I think I will omit this entirely, then.

Senator OVERMAN. Yes.

Mr. BIELASKI. I said this morning something about the correspondents who had been sent abroad for the purpose of influencing this country public opinion through the dispatches which they would send back from Germany.

Among the men sent over in that way were Edward Lyell Fox and John D. Archibald, and Edwin Emerson.

Edward Lyell Fox, as already appears, was in the employ of the American Correspondent Film Corporation, which was an indirect method of being in the employ of the German Government.

He went over, first, as a correspondent of the Wildman Magazine and News Service, 118 East Twenty-eighth Street, New York City.

Senator OVERMAN. Was he a correspondent of some newspaper in this country?

Mr. BIELASKI. He was representing this Wildman Magazine and News Service.

This letter, which was published in the New York World in August, 1915, from the foreign office, makes mention of Fox. [Reading]

BIELASKI EXHIBIT No. 40.

MAY 1, 1915.

MY DEAR MR. VON PAPEN: Attached hereto I am sending you a copy of a Berlin communication. Inasmuch as you have connections with Fox, it might be advisable for you to take advantage of the opportunity.

With best thanks in advance,

Respectfully,

J. VON BERNSTORFF

From a third party I understand that the American journalist, Edward L. Fox, representative of the Wheeler Newspaper Syndicate, The American Magazine, and the Illustrated Sunday Syndicate, and the Illustrated Sunday Magazines, would like to again come to Germany as press representative. From the information I have received, these papers of his are in agreement as to the desire, but are not willing to pay the expenses of Mr. Fox. Inasmuch as this gentleman, at the time of his last sojourn in Germany, was of great benefit to me by reason of his good dispatches, it might be possible that the "German Information Service" would this time, as last time, be willing to pay the expenses of a five to six months' stay, which would amount to between 5,000 and 6,000 marks.

I would respectfully request your Excellency to sound Mr. Fox on his intentions, and to make inquiries as to whether the costs of his stay can be raised there in any way.

I shall be glad to have a reply as soon as possible, if possible, by telegram. By order of the chancellor.

STUMM.

The first time he went over, as I say, he went over for this Wildman Bureau.

He was furnished, when he went over, by Mr. Claussen, with letters of introduction from Dr. Dernburg.

When he returned, Mr. Wildman said he seemed rather secretive, and tried to have Mr. Claussen find out what it was that was on Fox's mind.

Fox told Claussen, according to Claussen's statements, that he had proposed some plans to the Germans on the other side; but would not state what they were.

The next day Claussen took Fox to Dernburg at the Ritz—this is according to Claussen's testimony—where Fox stated that he had set certain plans before the people in Germany, and they thought well of them, and that he was going to work them out and report in detail on his return.

He told Dernburg that he proposed hiring prominent playwrights to write plays portraying the Germans as they were, and to get prominent writers to write stories favorable to Germany, the whole plan to cost $1,000,000.

I do not know whether this was the same plan or not which he submitted to Capt. von Papen later, or just an outgrowth of that plan, and so I do not know whether this plan which he submitted was ever considered in Berlin or not; but it is an interesting proposal, whether acted upon or not, because I think it shows the limits to which these people would go, or were going, in even considering any such matter.

This memorandum is as follows. It was inclosed to Capt. Franz von Papen, The German Club, 112 Central Park South, New York, N. Y., marked "Personal. To be opened only by Capt. von P." The handwriting is Fox's on the envelope.

Senator NELSON. What is the date of it?

Mr. BIELASKI. There is no exact date, but I think the date is fairly well apparent as being in the spring of 1915 from some of the context. [Reading:]

BIELASKI EXHIBIT No. 41.

The object of this plan is the termination of United States manufacturers supplying the Allies with ammunition and other munitions of war. If carried through to the end there is a second and incidental goal—the loss to Japan of the German colonies that she now holds. But the object to be held clearly in view is the end of the ammunition traffic. This can be accomplished by fomenting a war scare between the United States and Japan; at the present time this is not dangerous, for the United States Army and Navy men believe that war between America and Japan is inevitable. What better time to strike than now, when Japan can get no help secret or otherwise from England or other European Power? United States Navy officers have said that if we fight Japan today, "We win, but if we wait until Japan's fleet builds to too great proportions, it will be difficult—perhaps very dangerous."

It is known that on May 21, 1913 United States and Japan just missed going to war by the narrowest margin. All the facts of this situation of which Capt. Hobson hinted before the House Naval Affairs Comm last December are in the hands of Edward Lyell Fox, the American correspondent who recently returned from Germany. At Washington this last week Mr. Fox learned from a commanding officer of Corregidor Island during May of 1913, how close the United States and Germany were to war. The source of that situation was California. Cleverly handled, California can be used to create the same situation today. It is a sore spot with the Japanese; they have never forgiven America.

The public mind must be diverted from Europe to the Orient. Pro-German publicity is futile. The thing to do is to make the United States an ally of Germany by a twist of world politics. England allied with Japan cannot be her friend—who else but Germany? Begin this situation by bringing the public here to thinking seriously about Japan. Accomplish this through the medium of creating public opinion—that the English have used so well—the newspapers, the theatre, the thousands of moving picture shows and the cinema. In detail here is a plan:

An examination of the files of the Hearst newspapers will show their business toward Japan. No chance has been passed by them to warn the public against the Japs and to foment trouble in California. Let there develop trouble in California—and presently we shall show it can easily be made—the Hearst papers will lead in the attack on the Japs. Defensively, purely as a news proposition under the direct orders of the Morgan financial group, they have to take up the matter in their columns. Any anti-Japanese move will have the complete support of Mr. Hearst. He is a native of California and in the past has done his utmost against them. Mr. Hearst must not know this is fomenting. When the trouble breaks out he will rush into it quite enough.

Secondly, The Illustrated Sunday Magazine, a publication resembling the Saturday Evening Post in appearance, is a part of each Sunday edition of these newspapers:

Pittsburgh Gazette Times; Minneapolis Tribune; Memphis Commercial Appeal; Detroit Free Press; Boston Herald; Louisville Courier Journal; Worcester Democrat Chronicle; Dayton News; Philadelphia Herald; Columbus Dispatch; Milwaukee Sentinel; Omaha World Herald; Des Moines Register and Leader; Worcester Telegram; Providence Tribune; Buffalo Times. Moreover, it operates another supplement. The Literary Magazine which goes out Sunday with papers in smaller cities. The sworn circulation of the Illustrated is one million three hundred thousand copies a week. The Literary has another two million more. They cover the country and are widely read. They can be used to foment feeling against the Japanese.

They must not be approached through their owners Normal Mack and E. W. Block. They must be approached through their Editor-in-Chief, Hiram Greene. The properties, insofar as deciding what is printed in them, are entirely in Mr. Greene's hands. He is absolute czar over them. Mr. Greene attacks the Japanese in special articles and fiction every week to three million people, if it is made worth his while. This entire matter can be handled by Mr. Fox who is one of Mr. Greene's closest personal friends. Mr. Greene's sympathies have been entirely with Germany since the outbreak of war. He was one of the editors who backed Mr. Fox on his trip to Germany. He can only through his papers can he turn public opinion but he fits into another part of the plan, i. e., the stage and the moving pictures.

There should be a play produced in New York, Chicago, San Francisco, Los Angeles that will send its audiences out of the theatres heated to a fever point against the Japanese. There should be one-act plays sent out to the big vaudeville circuits creating the same effect. There should be a moving picture production anti-Japanese, and put on all the circuits. It should be shown in weekly installments that synchronize with a continued story. The pictures should be syndicated in the same cities the pictures appear. Fox can arrange the entire matter.

Also, in all the musical shows of the summer there should be introduced stage effects, songs and lines fomenting the feeling. This can be done with money given to noted performers and stage directors. Mr. Fox knows the people to reach.

So much for the theatre and newspapers:

The public mind thus prepared, play the trump card with trouble on the Pacific Coast. The thugs who engineered the escape of Harry Thaw from the Matteawan will do anything for $1,000 apiece. Rioting in San Francisco, against a few Japanese would be child's play for them. The riots against the Japanese begun, The Asiatic Exclusion League, the anti-Japanese organization of the Pacific coast, enters the plan. Its president has served a term in jail; he will do anything made worth his while. Then the William J. Burns Agency must be considered. Burns made his reputation by rounding up the grafters in California. He sent the political boss of the state to the penitentiary and he secured evidence on municipal and police officials that he did not use. What about Burns forcing the police to make a demonstration on the riots; what about Burns further fomenting the trouble in a state whose crooked denizens he knows so well? Get every California clergyman behind it. Ministers in this country love to see their names in the newspapers. They would rush to denounce the Japanese—especially if some outrages against women were planted. It would be an easy matter for Burns to use some young and “innocent” prostitutes to the detriment of the Japs.

Mr. Fox is to be Captain Von Papen's assistant in this matter and as such is to come to an agreement with him. Mr. Fox's part will be explained by Captain von Papen with the co-operation of Mr. Fox. Mr. Greene can attend to all these things. He is an experienced playwright. He wrote the following plays: “The House that Kraut Built,” “The Selling Price,” “Miss Strange.” He has letters, etc. from managers that establish his ability in this line. On a special proposition he went to California last year and directed as well as devised the story for the most successful weekly installment moving picture play done up to then in this country—“Lucille Love.” He also planned a second big movie serial “The Trey of Hearts.” A rapid worker, Mr. Greene could turn out an anti-Japanese play in one month; at the same time he could arrange for the vaudeville sketch and moving picture play. Like the drama, these latter should be produced in triplicate, etc. in different parts of the country.

It is suggested that Mr. Green's price for the plan be made great enough to cover the Illustrated Sunday Magazine proposition so that no money changes hands directly on that. The production of the play would cost $20000. Mr. Greene would write a scenario as to plot, etc. and upon approving this Capt. von Papen should pay him $5000. Upon completion of the manuscript and delivery for production $5000-additional should be paid. The other $10000 is to cover the cost of production.

For writing and producing the vaudeville sketch only $2500 would be needed in all. As to the cost of the moving picture play production Mr. Greene could best give the figure but it is not high.

Thus the dramatic vaudeville and moving picture stages can be handled through Mr. Green, as well as reaching three million people every week through his magazine syndicate.

That ends the proposed plan.

Attached to it is another memorandum for Capt. von Papen.
[Reading:]

By the 15th of April—

Senator NELSON. Whose plan is this? Who made this plan?

Mr. BIELASKI. Edward Lyell Fox has admitted making this plan, and submitting it.

By the 15th of April, the French had 800 10.5 C. M. guns ready for service. One of the United States Army observers returning home from Germany by way of Paris, learned this.

Here is another little postscript, in Mr. Fox's own handwriting.
[Reading:]

DEAR CAPTAIN: I enclose the report in full. I would deem it a great favor if tomorrow you could tell me some quietly—

It reads “some quietly” here; I suppose it means “something quietly”— and definitely about the German note. I wish to make some investments in the stock market and shall, of course, maintain the utmost confidence. May I telephone you late tomorrow morning, and if it is agreeable to you then, I could hasten down to your office and from there go to Wall Street.

Best wishes,

E. L. F.

Some drafts of proposed telegrams to the foreign office have some bearing on Mr. Fox's relation with the German Government.

This is December 19, 1914. [Reading:]

BIELASKI EXHIBIT No. 42.

Repeat urgently earlier suggestion about photographer Dawson and war correspondent Fox. It would be most undesirable if both should leave without accomplishing anything. Interview with King of Bavaria or Saxony in particular desirable. In case interview is granted, have Fox send this to local press bureau, care of M. B. Claussen, 264 Riverside Drive, New York. Making pictures by Dawson, with Fox's cooperation, in which, if possible, correspondents themselves appear, urgently desired. Costs would be covered by big newspapers here.

Senator OVERMAN. Who is Fox?

Mr. BIELASKI. He is a correspondent, and he wrote some books also, for the propaganda bureau, which I omitted to mention this morning, because it is a very long list; and he was dismissed from our Army because of these activities of his some time ago.

Senator NELSON. Was he in our Army?

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes; he went to Plattsburg, I think, and, so far as I know, he did nothing after we got in the war that any patriotic citizen might not do. In fact, he offered himself as a soldier, and he went abroad; but, in view of his history, it was not thought satisfactory that he should stay in France.

Here is another mention of Fox. This is not dated. [Reading:]

BIELASKI EXHIBIT No. 43.

Through arrangements with Wildman, the press bureau has an excellent opportunity to place important interviews. Urgently recommends American journalist, Edward Lyell Fox, be secured for an audience with King of Bavaria or Saxony for interview on unity of the German Empire; with the president of the Reichstag on financial and industrial situation; with Albert Ballin on the Kaiser and the people; with the governor general of Belgium and East Prussia on suitable topics. Also desire an interview with a lady, perhaps, with Mrs. Dernburg, on the women of Germany. Fox is not to conduct the interviews, but to send them to Claussen by official channels, and Claussen will forward them to the press bureau. Please hurry censorship, or in given case leave to the press bureau.

When Capt. von Papen returned, he took with him a number of papers, which the British took from him at Falmouth, and among them was a letter by Fox, which has been published in an official British document. Writing from Berlin he says:

BIELASKI EXHIBIT No. 44.

MY DEAR PAPEN: Just a few words to let you know how things are going. I explained to von Herwarth (lieutenant colonel now) the difficulties of your work in New York. I presented your letter to Maj. Deutmoser and delivered and posted everything else. Prince Hatzfeld had me out to luncheon and gave me an interview on America's work in the German Red Cross which I hope to send out from Berlin by Saturday.

Princes Friedrich Leopold, of Prussia, had me out to Potsdam, and we got up an interview on "The Spartan German Woman in Time of War." But best of all there is something big coming through the Foreign Office—Prince Henry on the Freedom of the Seas. So you see I have been fairly busy the short time I have been here.

On Sunday I start on a trip to see the cities of southern Germany in war time, and then I hope to get to the east front.

Your Berlin looks wonderful this summer; the climate, they tell me, is unusually good. Of course, on the part of the masses there is an undercurrent against Americans, but the people worth while are all splendidly broad-minded. It is my sincere conviction, and the belief of many other American correspondents here, that the misunderstandings between our countries is due to the poor advice and the warped viewpoint of the American Embassy in Berlin. President Wilson can not know the German viewpoint under existing circumstances.

Write me how things are going. Best wishes for successful work.

Yours,

E. L. Fox.

Col. Edwin Emerson also went abroad as a correspondent. In his passport application early in 1915, he stated that he was born in New York January 23, 1869, whereas it appears from his statement of facts, which he furnished to Who's Who, that he was born in Germany.

On March 23, 1915, Bernstorff sent Emerson, care Harvard Club, by Postal Telegraph Co., the following message:

I am exceedingly sorry to miss you here, as I have business in New York on Thursday. Papen will inform me. Best regards.

BIELASKI EXHIBIT No. 45.

NEW YORK. April 11, 1915.
Harvard Club, 27 West Forty-fifth Street.

MY DEAR COUNT BERNSTORFF: Since writing you last I have received by registered mail your check of $1,000 for traveling expenses, for which I thank you very warmly.

That was a letter signed "Edwin Emerson."

Maj. HUMES. What paper did he represent?

Mr. BIELASKI. I do not know that he represented any paper here. When he got abroad he represented the notorious Continental Times, I think it was, which was the German propaganda paper printed in English on the Continent and circulated over there, and also smuggled into this country and circulated to some extent in this country.

While he was in this country, in 1915, he traveled around giving a pro-German lecture.

Another bit of information about his activities is contained in reports received from our consular officers abroad.

He stated to the consular agency at Damascus that he was a colonel in the American Army, and was acting as war correspondent with headquarters at Berlin, and that he was writing for the Washington Post, and had come to Turkey to study conditions at first hand. He was presented to Djemal Pasha, the minister of marine, commander of the Fourth Army, to whom he immediately began to state how badly our Army and Government was organized; how little sympathy the people of the country had with the President's action in breaking with Germany, etc. He presented a letter from the German Chief of staff of the Turkish Army, which lauded him very much. He also had a recommendation from Capt. von Papen, which praised him for eminent services rendered to Germany. He was one of the principal writers for the Continental Times.

Our various consular and diplomatic officers have been trying to get his passport from him for a long time, but he knows it, and they have not yet gotten it.

As showing his close connection with the Germans, here is a written note from the Harvard Club, addressed to Albert. [Reading:]

BIELASKI EXHIBIT No. 46.

Our mutual friend, General Consul Killian now with the Foreign Office in Berlin, was kind enough to give me, before I left Germany, several lines addressed to you.

As soon as convenient to you I would like to bring these lines to you.

In the meantime I take the liberty of inviting you cordially to a little address I am to give next Saturday evening, January 30, at the German Verein on West 59th Street.

I sign, Sincerely and Respectfully,

EDWIN EMERSON

. March 18, 1915, writing from 30 Church Street, New York, Albert, he says:

BIELASKI EXHIBIT No. 47.

I regret that I did not find you in your office when I called this afternoon. Since I last had the pleasure of seeing you I have been busily engaged with my war lectures. Every evening except Sunday I gave a lecture, many times twice a day.

Now I have just returned from New England. I gave lectures there at Hartford, Stamford, Boston and Cambridge, at Harvard University.

Everywhere in New England I found the attitude extremely anti-German but my lectures were well attended, and the public was generous enough to give me much applause.

The best was the visit to the Harvard Club of Boston and to the University in Cambridge. Naturally I saw Muensterberg and the other German professors. Ex-Rector Eliot and the present Rector Lowell were also friendly enough to attend my lectures.

At the Harvard Club in Boston the expectation was that I would speak against the Allies. For this reason possibly the large club was jammed full, more than ever since the opening of the club a year and a half ago. Even Theodore Roosevelt, I was told, did not have such a crowd. Naturally the people had to be disappointed when it appeared that I had also a good word for the Germans.

At the university where a great part of the students is not at all in accord with the faculty in its war sympathies, I had such a crowd that in spite of the large room I had to deliver my address an hour before the appointed time.

Respectfully,

EDWIN EMERSON

He has the German habit of thinking rather well of himself.

Another letter from Emerson to Albert, dated May 14, 1915, merely asked him to return a letter which he had left, and shows his connection with Dr. Fuehr.

He says, on May 23, 1915, in a letter to Albert:

What I really had in mind was to again heartily thank you, in conclusion, for your welcome and friendly assistance.

I only wish I had taken more to heart your well-meant tip as to Max Braun. I had only disagreeable experiences with the man.

As showing his activities somewhat, I think on May 10 there appeared an article in the papers, the Washington Post, I think had been written by Carl H. von Wiegand, in which he described Emerson's activities against Ambassador Gerard, and refers to his activities in printing a statement entitled, "Who Betrayed Casement"; all of which goes to show that he was wholly in the service of Germany.

Senator OVERMAN. Before you go to anything else we will take an adjournment until half past 10 to-morrow.

The subcommittee thereupon, at 5 o'clock p. m., adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, December 7, 1918, at 10.30 o'clock a. m.

BREWING AND LIQUOR INTERESTS AND GERMAN PROPAGANDA.

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 7, 1918.

UNITED STATES SENATE,
SUBCOMMITTEE OF THE COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY,
Washington, D. C.

The subcommittee met at 10.30 o'clock a. m., in room 226, Senate Office Building, Senator Lee S. Overman presiding.

Present: Senators Overman (chairman), Wolcott, King, Sterling, and Nelson.

TESTIMONY OF MR. A. BRUCE BIELASKI—Resumed.

Senator OVERMAN. Mr. Bielaski, you may proceed in your own way.

Mr. BIELASKI. I think when we adjourned last night I had told you something of two correspondents who were sent over to Germany, and was about to say something about Mr. Archibald, as I recall it.

Senator NELSON. Is not he the man that the British got hold of and tried?

Mr. BIELASKI. Mr. Archibald is the man that the British got hold of, bearing dispatches to Ambassador Dumba and Capt. von Papen, and Consul General von Nuber, and so on.

Senator NELSON. Did they not try him and execute him?

Mr. BIELASKI. No; they did not. They sent him back to this country, and he has been here ever since.

Senator OVERMAN. I got a telegram this morning, and I want to ask you if you know anything else in regard to Prof. Hart, except what appears in the Fuehr list?

Mr. BIELASKI. Mr. Chairman, if it is agreeable to you, I should like to let that go until after lunch, when I will have an opportunity to look up one or two matters.

Senator OVERMAN. I have asked Maj. Humes to telegraph him to be here Tuesday morning.

I understand, Mr. Bielaski, that you have documents to prove everything you have stated, except when you say that you believe certain things from circumstantial evidence? I notice one of the papers said this morning that you had made certain statements without showing any documents to prove them. As I understand it, you have documents to prove everything you have stated before this committee, except where you state that you believe it from certain circumstances?

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes.

Senator NELSON. That is the way I understood it.

Mr. BIELASKI. Mr. Archibald left this country on the 20th of August, 1915, bearing two letters of recommendation from Ambassador Bernstorff, and a letter from von Papen, dated August 20, 1915, of which the following is an extract from a translation:

Mr. James F. J. Archibald is again traveling to Germany and Austria-Hungary, as on previous occasions, in the capacity of a scrupulously impartial journalist desirous of collecting fresh impressions.

Mr. Bernstorff's letters of introduction are just the usual letters asking that his travel be facilitated.

Here is a photographic copy of a receipt dated April 21, 1915, signed by Mr. Archibald, acknowledging the receipt of $5,000 from the German Embassy in Washington. The receipt is in German.

Senator OVERMAN. I know a good deal about this man Archibald, but will you state for the record who he is, what he has done in this country, and whether he is a native-born American citizen?

Mr. BIELASKI. Mr. Archibald has been a writer, a lecturer, a newspaper correspondent, and was, I think, rather prominent as a correspondent in the Russo-Japanese war. He is an American citizen.

Senator NELSON. Native born?

Mr. BIELASKI. Native born, I think; yes. He is a resident of New York City at the present time, I think.

Senator OVERMAN. He is now living in this country?

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes; I think he has been in this country continuously since he was turned back by the British.

As an evidence of what he really did, he went over ostensibly as the representative of the Wheeler Syndicate. They had contracts with him and with papers to use the material which he was to secure. On October 27, 1914, which was prior to this last experience, Mr. John Wheeler telegraphed Mr. Archibald at the Hotel Bristol, Berlin, as follows:

BIELASKI EXHIBIT No. 48.

NEW YORK, October 27, 1914.

JAMES ARCHIBALD, Hotel Bristol, Berlin,

Papers quit, charging unfairness. We stop. John Wheeler.

Charge to Wheeler Syndicate, Inc.

Senator STERLING. Were any proceedings ever instituted against Mr. Archibald?

Mr. BIELASKI. No, sir; I think it was the view of the department that there was no law which adequately reached his case. The only possible statute, I think, that was considered was section 5 of the Penal Code, which has to do with the carrying or the writing of communications to diplomatic representatives of foreign Governments about matters in controversy between our Government and foreign Governments.

Senator NELSON. The espionage act had not been passed at the time?

Mr. BIELASKI. Oh, no, sir; this was in 1915, and the espionage act was not passed until June 15, 1917, and it was not possible, of course, to show absolutely affirmatively that Mr. Archibald knew the contents of the letters he was carrying. If you are interested in what he did carry, and what that plan was, I can give it to you very briefly. I think I should like first, however, to put in one letter showing ing his attitude in his dispatches. This is a letter dated November 4, 1914, to Archibald, which I believe was written by Mr. Wheeler, of the syndicate. [Reading:]

BIELASKI EXHIBIT No. 49.

NOVEMBER 4, 1914.

Mr. JAMES F. J. ARCHIBALD,
% Archduke Frederick's Headquarters, Austria.

DEAR MR. ARCHIBALD:

I am sorry to have to write you that we have had to terminate your war service with the newspapers. On October 27th we sent you a wireless to this effect, care the Hotel Bristol, Berlin, via the Tuckerton station, the Sayville station refusing to accept commercial messages.

The New York papers refused to continue the service. The New York World claims you promised it to go to Austria, and not to Germany; and all three papers, because your stuff was so pro-German, refused to print the most of it and refused to go on with the service, charging undue bias on your part. By the very nature of the stuff you have sent over, we have been forced to agree with these papers that your matter has not been news, which you agreed to send back, but in the nature of pro-German personal opinions and editorials. Our understanding with the papers was that we were to furnish them with news through you, from the Austrian-German side; instead what we received from you has been in the nature of editorial matter strongly pro-German. The papers wanted battle front news from you, we contracted to give them such news from you, and, naturally, when we could give them nothing largely but your strongly biased personal opinions, they terminated the service, making it necessary for us to terminate the service with you.

Here is a telegram showing the close relationship between Mr. Archibald and the Germans. It is to Mr. Albert from von Bernstorff.

Senator NELSON. What is the date of that?

Mr. BIELASKI. March 15. The telegram is as follows:

BIELASKI EXHIBIT No. 50.

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 15, 1915.

Mr. H. F. ALBERT, 105 E, 53rd St.,

I have received films. Do you want them or shall I give them to Archibald?
J. BERNSTORFF.

It also developes that Archibald had made an arrangement, I think unknown to his employers, whereby the Germans were getting a copy of his dispatches, as well as the syndicate that employed him.

He gave lectures, and I have here a report from a representative of the Secret Service Division of the Treasury Department in 1917, reporting to the chief of that service that Archibald delivered a lecture at the Potter Opera House in Santa Barbara, last April or May; that it was so pro-German that he was hissed, and a number of people left the audience. That is simply to give you an idea of the part the $5,000 played in his services.

The plan that he took over was a plan for propaganda among the Austro-Hungarians, the laboring population.

Senator NELSON. Employed in this country?

Mr. BIELASKI. Employed in this country. It inclosed a memorandum prepared by Mr. William Warm, who at that time was a writer for foreign-language newspapers. Almost immediately after Mr. Archibald's apprehension Mr. Warm made a confession to an agent of the Department of Justice, in which he admitted the authorship of the memorandum, and told the circumstances under which he had presented it to Ambassador Dumba himself at Ambassador's hotel in the presence of Consul General von N... the New York consul for the Austro-Hungarian Government.

I should like to read a part of that memorandum, if I could get my hand on it. I have it in the foreign language, but I can not get the translation.

It is interesting also to note that in connection with this matter it developed that Warm was the author of a moving picture play entitled "Blood is Thicker Than Water," which was financed to the extent of $250 by the Austro-Hungarian Government. I do not remember all the details of it, but the striking point in the play was showing Austro-Hungarian workmen working in munition factories making munitions which were afterward used to kill some of the relatives on the other side, and in one scene the munitions factory which was making the shells was burned down. The play did not attribute the burning to any Austro-Hungarian in the plot at all, but to a rival manufacturer; but the suggestion was rather obvious. We have a copy of the check by which this man was paid the $250.

Senator OVERMAN. The suggestion was of burning the munition plant?

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes; it was an indirect suggestion, so we thought.

Senator OVERMAN. Like the I. W. W.?

Senator STERLING. It probably was for the purpose of the suggestion, was it not?

Mr. BIELASKI. We also have a photographic copy of the letter transmitting the check, and we have Mr. Warm's admission of receipt of the check.

Senator OVERMAN. How much was it?

Mr. BIELASKI. Two hundred and fifty dollars.

The letters which were taken from Mr. Archibald at that time were very well known. They were the letter, for instance, of von Papen to his wife in which he referred to the "idiotic Yankees," and gave himself quite some notoriety thereby. The whole thing resulted in the recall of Ambassador Dumba.

Here is the inclosure which was sent, and which was prepared by William Warm. This is a translation of it. We have in our files a photographic copy of the original, which has been identified by Mr. Warm as a copy of the memorandum he gave to Ambassador Dumba. It is as follows:

BIELASKI EXHIBIT No. 51.

[Translation. Inclosure in Dr. Dumba's letters to Baron von Burian, Aug. 20, 1914]

I must divide the matter into two parts—the Bethlehem and the Middle West Business, but the point of departure is common to both, viz: Press agitation which is of the greatest importance as regards our Hungarian-American workmen, and by means of the Press we can reach both Bethlehem and the West. In my opinion we must start a very strong agitation on this question in the "Freedom", (Szabodsog), a leading organ, with respect to the Bethlehem work and the conditions there. This can be done in two ways, and both must be utilized. In the first place a regular daily section must be devoted to the conditions obtaining there and a campaign must be regularly conducted against these indescribably degrading conditions. The "Freedom" has already done something similar in the recent past, when the strike movement began at Bridgeport. It must naturally take the form of strong, deliberate, decided and courageous action. Secondly, the writer of these lines would begin a Labour-news paper that newspaper much on the lines of Upton Sinclair's celebrated story, and might be published in other local Hungarian, Slovak and German newspapers also. Here we arrive at the point that naturally we shall also require other newspapers. The American Magyar Nepszava (Word of the People) will undoubtedly be compelled willingly or unwillingly to follow the movement initiated by the "Freedom" (Szabodsog), for it will be pleasing to the entire Hungarian element in America, and an absolute patriotic act to which that open journal (the Nepszava) could not adopt a hostile attitude.

Of course it is another question to what extent and with what energy and devotion that newspaper would adhere to this course of action without regard to other influences, just as it is questionable to what extent the other local patriotic papers would go. There is great reason why, in spite of their patriotism, the American-Hungarian papers have hitherto shrunk from initiating such action. The position is as follows. To start with, the Szabodsog which today is one of the greatest, in every respect, of the papers printed in a foreign language in America, has already made gigantic sacrifices from a patriotic point of view. Others have only a faint idea of the magnitude of the homeward migration that will take place directly after the termination of the war, whereas the Hungarian papers have direct and better opportunities of observing the shadow which that gigantic migration homewards always casts before it. It is the fact that the paper alone used by the Szabodsog, for example, in printing only those copies which go to subscribers who are in arrears with their subscriptions, costs at least $1000 a month, while the actual total cost of the paper does not amount to more than $3500. In view of this fact that one-third of the total subscribers get the paper for nothing, or at all events on credit, you can see what a patriotic action this newspaper is performing. Naturally under such circumstances you can hardly expect that such a paper should go much further in the way of violent agitation which would have the result of making their subscribers now in regular work unable to meet their subscriptions, as, for example, the Bethlehem workers. I have long been wishing to start a direct movement in that paper, but the above point view made us hold our hand.

The position of affairs is much the same with the American-Hungarian Hepszara as you might conclude from the special appeal addressed by the editor at the beginning of the war to his readers. The local Hungarian papers also suffer from the fact that a part of their subscribers are in arrears with their subscriptions as they are out of work, while others are slow in paying because they want to go back to Hungary. To what extent this intention of migrating homewards influences the whole matter is shown by the fact that at present very many only pay their subscriptions for a quarter of a year in advance, contrary of their previous custom, for they think that the war will be over before the end of the quarter. In a word, the shadow of the great homeward migration and, in many places, the bad condition of affairs, have brought the American Hungarian papers to such a position that they must be careful in all matters which might cause them further loss by affecting the ability of their subscribers to pay their subscriptions in advance. Under these circumstances, it is not only fair but necessary that if we wish to reckon on the enthusiastic and self-sacrificing support of these papers in the cause of any strike-movement, and we must be in a position to reckon therewith, it will be necessary to give these papers a certain degree of support so that they may not suffer for their action. In the interest of successful action at Bethlehem and the middle west.

* * * besides the Szobodsog, the Nepszava, the new daily paper of Pittsburgh must be set in motion, and those of Bridgeport Youngtown District, etc. also two Slovak papers. Under these circumstances, the first necessity is money. To Bethlehem must be sent as many reliable Hungarian and German workmen as I can lay my hands on who will join the factories and begin their work in secret among their fellow workmen. For this purpose, I have my men Turners in Steelwork. We must send an organizer, who in the interests of the Union will begin the business in his own way. We must also send so-called "soap-box" orators who will know, and so to start a useful agitation. We shall want money for popular meetings and possibly for organizing picnics. In general, the same applies to the Middle West. I am thinking of Pittsburgh and Cleveland in the first instance, as to which I could give details only if I were to return and spend at least a few days there.

I have already shown that much can be done with the Newspapers. We must stir up men's feelings. In Bethlehem a sensation was caused by the articles which appeared at the time of the strike at Bridgeport, and they brought Bethlehem into the affair. It is evident that to start a movement from which serious results can be expected requires a sufficiency of money at the very start. The extent of subsequent expenditure for the most part depends on the work effected. For example, the newspapers must not receive the whole of the sum intended for them all at once, but only half of it.

To the Union agitators only a certain amount should be given at first, a larger sum in the case of success, or of a serious strike on the formation of a Union. It is my opinion that for the special object of starting the Bethlehem business and for the Bethlehem and Western newspaper campaign, $15,000 to $20,000 must be able to be disposed of, but it is not possible to reckon how much will ultimately be required; when a beginning has been made it will be possible to see how things develop, and where and how much it is worth while to spend. The above mentioned preliminary sum would suffice to partially satisfy the demands of the necessary newspapers and to a considerable extent those of the Bethlehem campaign. It is in any case worth while risking a certain amount for it will undoubtedly show some result, and if circumstances are lucky, and the leadership good we can arrive at positive results in the West comparatively cheaply, whereas Bethlehem is one of the most difficult jobs. I will telephone at 8 a. m. and I request you then to let me know where and when I can learn your opinion of my proposal which will require a considerable amount of verbal exposition. Finally I make bold to point out the fact that hitherto I have said nothing on the subject to anyone connected with the newspapers, and am in the fortunate position that in the case of giving effect to this plan I can make use of other names in the case of necessity for I have already in other matters made payments through other individuals. In any event in the case of newspapers, the greatest circumspection is necessary, and no one but the proprietors must know that money is coming to the undertaking from any source.

Senator OVERMAN. Where was that paper, Freedom, printed?

Mr. BIELASKI. In Cleveland, Ohio, I think. It was a paper with which Mr. Warm was connected as an associate editor.

Senator NELSON. In the Hungarian language?

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. Is that the same paper that Horvath was connected with?

Mr. BIELASKI. I am not absolutely certain. Our files show the complete facts with respect to the paper though, and we can give them if you wish.

The last part of this translation relates to the causing of strikes at Bethlehem, and so on. The fourth page of the translation is missing and I will have to complete it for the record later.

Senator NELSON. He advises the inauguration of strikes?

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes.

Senator NELSON. Can you refer to that part of it?

Mr. BIELASKI. I will put it in the record. The fourth page of the translation is missing.

Senator OVERMAN. He did advise strikes though?

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes; and the ambassador transmitted this to his home Government, and in his communication stated that Von Papen thought it was important, and it was for that reason that he was recalled.

Senator STERLING. Reference is made there to the American. Was that another Hungarian paper?

Mr. BIELASKI. No; I think that was a description of the paper as Hungarian-American. That is the way he described it. I am sorry that a part of the translation is missing.

Senator NELSON. You can supply that?

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes.

Senator NELSON. It is very important that that should go in?

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes.

Senator OVERMAN. What did Archibald have to do with that?

Mr. BIELASKI. Archibald carried those papers in his possession, and in the records of Von Igel's office there was maintained a record book which showed on the vessels that sailed for Europe the names of messengers, and opposite the boat on which Archibald sailed, under the heading "messsenger," appears Archibald's name, so that in carrying these things he was acting as a messenger. But as I stated at the outset we could not prove that he knew the contents of the communications he was carrying.

Senator NELSON. Did they have messengers on many boats?

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes; they had messengers on almost every boat that sailed to a neutral country; that is, during the period of our neutrality.

I made mention yesterday of the National Courier, a magazine established here by Mr. Theodore E. Lowe. He was the editor of a magazine known as New York Topics, which went on the rocks, and also published the International Courier, 150 Nassau Street.

He was of German origin, and his wife was a German. I think I read yesterday an extract from Mr. Bernstorff's telegram, which you will doubtless recall, reporting to the foreign office that he was making payments to Lowe.

Senator OVERMAN. Was Lowe established here in Washington?

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes.

Senator OVERMAN. Was his magazine circulated to any extent?

Mr. BIELASKI. It had some circulation. It was advertised quite extensively in the street cars.

Senator NELSON. What was the name of the paper?

Mr. BIELASKI. The National Courier..

Senator NELSON. Here in the city?

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes. They purported to have a woman correspondent. They advertised "Miss So-and-So will say," with respect to the National Courier, trying to get up an interest in the paper.

Here is a letter written from Asheville, N. C., Christmas Day, not dated, but the envelope shows that it was 1916 (reading):

BIELASKI EXHIBIT No. 52.

[Grove Park Inn, Asheville, N. C. Absolutely fireproof. Open all the year. Finest resort hotel in the world.]

CHRISTMAS DAY.

DEAR MR. MORRISON: Received several papers also package for Mrs. Lowe from Chicago. No letter. Did you write Saturday? Were any deposits made? Kindly mail the enclosed letter at once to Dr. Edler. As soon as he phones you to call at the Embassy, please do so. He will pay you $500.—which, please, deposit at the Second National. Wire me "collect" as soon as the deposit has been made.

Wrote to Mr. Garthe regarding Editorials. Writing Miss Stinson and Miss Walling to-morrow.

Best regards to all of you.

Cordially,

THEO. LOWE.

P.—If Dr. Edler asks you what position you fill at the Office, tell him you are my secretary.

Dr. Edler was connected with the German embassy in Washington.

Senator OVERMAN. What hotel was that written from?

Mr. BIELASKI. The Grove Park Inn, a very expensive hotel.

Senator OVERMAN. Most expensive, and one of the best in country.

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes.

Here is a letter showing that Mr. Garthe was connected with a paper. Mr. Garthe is the Washington correspondent for the Baltimore American and was connected with the National Courier. I wired Mr. Lowe April 13, 1917: "Have deposited money at American Security, as requested." I will come to his connection with Albert.

Senator STERLING. You say he was connected with this paper. You mean with the National Courier?

Mr. BIELASKI. With the National Courier; yes. This simply shows his relations with Lowe, and I do not think it worth reading.

Here is a letter written to the ambassador.

Senator NELSON. By whom?

Mr. BIELASKI. It is not signed, but it comes from the files of Mr. Lowe [reading]:

BIELASKI EXHIBIT No. 53.

NATIONAL PRESS CLUB,
Washington, October 27, 1916

His Excellency Count J. VON BERNSTORFF,
Washington, D. C.

YOUR EXCELLENCY: Notwithstanding Dr. Edler's instructions not to communicate with Your Excellency with further communications and the gentleman's apparent desire to have me discontinue the Courier, I deem it necessary to thank Your Excellency once more for all kindness shown to me. Our next issue will demonstrate that our commercial prospects are brighter to-day than ever before.

I discussed with your legal representative, Mr. Clifton, who is aiding in the most unselfish manner, Your Excellency's Secretary's criticism concerning the publication of the French notes as sent to us from Paris from week to week. Mr. Clifton agrees with me that the notes will help the neutral tendency of the National Weekly which, at the same time, endeavors to see the just cause of Germany, next to "Patriotism First." My labors have only just begun and my aim is to serve Your Excellency to my utmost ability.

Your Excellency's
Most grateful servant.

Senator OVERMAN. Who was his legal representative?

Mr. BIELASKI. Mr. John Clifton was a lawyer here, I think in the Woodward Building in Washington. He represented the German Embassy in some prize matters growing out of the Appam, I think. I believe he figured in some affairs in New York City, growing out of Mr. Morgan's office and the disappearance of some papers, and so on. What his connection with that was I do not know. In the matter he handled, I think, the final adjustment between Lowe and the German Embassy. He told me, I think, that he got for Mr. Lowe about $8,000. I do not recall the exact figures, but Mr. Clifton told me about them, and I have no doubt he would furnish the exact details if you wanted them.

Senator OVERMAN. Where is this man Lowe now?

Mr. BIELASKI. The last I heard of him, very recently, I think he was in Philadelphia.

Senator OVERMAN. Is he connected with any press association there?

Mr. BIELASKI. No; I do not think so. He was working in some subordinate capacity there. Our Philadelphia office was keeping in touch with him.

Here is a letter dated January 8, 1917, to Dr. Heinrich Albert, written on the letterhead of the National Courier, signed by Theodore Lowe (reading):

BIELASKI EXHIBIT No. 54.

[National Courier, Second National Bank Building. P. O. box 1242.]

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 8, 1917.

Hon. Dr. HEINRICH ALBERT,
Imperial Privy Counsellor,
45 Broadway. New York.

MY DEAR DR.: I am in receipt of a letter from His Excellency, the German Ambassador, and am informed that the contents of my recent letter to His Excellency have been sent to you. His Excellency directs me to communicate with you directly.

Mr. Louis Garthe will accompany me to New York and he tells me that he will find it most convenient to call on you Thursday morning. Will it be possible to grant us an audience between nine thirty and ten thirty?

Mr. Garthe is known to His Excellency. Since my associate has not the honor of your personal acquaintance, he has asked me to inform you that he refers to Mr. Rudolf Hecht or Mr. Fred Chandler of Chandler and Company.

Trusting to receive the favor of an early response.

Most sincerely,

THEO. LOWE,
Publisher National Courier.

Senator NELSON. This man Garthe was correspondent of a Baltimore paper?

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes. Under date of January 9, evidently having to do with this letter, Theodore Lowe wired Dr. Albert as follows:

BIELASKI EXHIBIT No. 55.

WASHINGTON, D. C., January 9, 1917.

Dr. H. ALBERT,
45 Broadway, N. Y.

Concerning letter yesterday Thursday impossible. Will Friday morning be convenient? Please advise wire.

THEO. LOWE.

To which Albert replied:

BIELASKI EXHIBIT No. 56.

NEW YORK, January 9, 1917.

THEO LOWE,
P. O. Box 1242, Washington, D. C.

Unfortunately prevented from seeing your friend on Friday. Arrange with Dr. Bonn to see him at my office.

ALBERT.

January 4 Mr. Lowe also wrote a letter to Ambassador Bernstorff about the work of the National Courier and sending him a copy of an editorial entitled "Future trade relations of the world."

In this he makes reference to the coming call of himself and Mr. Garthe on Dr. Albert.

Senator STERLING. With what Baltimore paper is Mr. Garthe connected?

Mr. BIELASKI. I am not quite sure. It is the paper of Gen. Felix Agnus.

Senator NELSON. That is the Baltimore American.

Mr. BIELASKI. It is Gen. Agnus's paper in any event.

Dr. Albert received a letter dated January 25, 1917, from Theodore Lowe, in which he tells of having had an audience with the ambassador and hoping to hear from Albert.

A letter dated January 31, 1917, simply shows that they had a conference and asks for the return of certain papers he left there.

Here are a number of letters written by Mr. Edler, of the embassy to Theodore Lowe, but they do not show anything in particular, asking him to call, just simply showing their connection.

Here is a copy of a letter dated February 4, 1917, on the letterhead of the National Courier, not signed, of course, a carbon, which shows the dependency of the paper on the German Embassy.

It is as follows:

BIELASKI EXHIBIT No. 57.

His Excellency VON BERNSTORFF,
Washington.

ESTEEMED EXCELLENCY: We are deeply moved over the events of the last and our heart is open to you with the greatest gratitude for the many proofs of your unlimited friendship.

At any rate it should cause your Excellency great satisfaction to read expressions of recognition and the great respect on the part of the American press in the newspaper reports of to-day.

The thing that your Excellency endeavored to accomplish on a large scale—the use of your diplomatic capabilities—the strengthening of the American friendship for the establishment of a world peace—served me as an inspiration for my plans and efforts in the journalistic field.

I fear indeed that with the departure from this country of my highly valued and helpful friend, the possibility of continuing my work will be greatly limited. And I believed myself so close to the goal, striving with the consciousness that the just cause of our German friends, who play such an important part in their adopted country, could be promoted in the best way through a national newspaper such as I was endeavoring to create.

It may perhaps be within your power, Esteemed Excellency, to cause some of your friends, who are so numerous, to make it possible to continue the undertaking for which, to the greatest extent, you laid the valuable foundation. This, not from the point of view of a philanthropist, on behalf of the representation of German commercial interests, but also as a financial success which I am approaching more and more.

I, too, feel during these serious days that all my ideals for the eventual creation of a newspaper which endeavored to serve the adopted land, America, and my friends in Germany at the same time—endeavors in which I was inspired and supported by your Excellency in an unselfish manner—are lost forever.

Yours respectfully.

That was written the day after the severance of diplomatic relations.

Senator OVERMAN. He speaks of this country as his "adopted land."

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes; he was born in Germany.

Senator STERLING. And the "esteemed and valued friend" then referred to is Count Bernstorff.

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes. Here is the translation of a carbon copy of a letter, dated February 12, 1917, which we believe was addressed to Mr. Bernstorff. It is as follows:

BIELASKI EXHIBIT No. 58.

FEBRUARY 12, 1917

ESTEEMED EXCELLENCY: I have just spoken with Mr. Garthe, who told me about his conference with you. I have also discussed the matter with my wife once more and she feels as I do that my last letters to your excellency have been obviously misunderstood.

On the occasion of the interview which was granted to us a few weeks ago, it was made clear to us that it is not your wish to abandon me now as a failure, since your excellency has become convinced that all my work was carried on in your interest. To repeat your own words—the newspaper should not vanish like a soap bubble after your departure. On your part there appear to be no reasons not to continue to help me, at any rate not to supply me with the sum agreed upon until the first of April, and further to consider the possibility to assist me on a greater scale if circumstances permit, and, if possible, to interest friends on behalf of the enterprise.

Is it necessary today once more to describe to you my situation? The funds which were granted to me were sufficient to pay my co-workers, after defraying the publication expenses of the newspaper, thus leaving me personally totally without means. I explained to your excellency that there are prospects to secure shortly the participations of other interests, which, of course, would be impossible if publication of the paper should suddenly cease.

Of the funds granted to me on April 1st, one half has been paid to me to date, and I shall, therefore, be unable to meet my obligations if your excellency should suddenly withdraw now. My wife, who, next to you, has inspired me in my work, joins me in my urgent request that you grant my most ardent wish. As is known to your excellency, my wife has not been two years in this country and is totally dependent upon me, inasmuch as all her relatives live in Germany.

Respectfully.

Senator OVERMAN. Have you found any connection between Garthe and this fellow Lowe?

Mr. BIELASKI. He contributed, I think, to the paper, and, as shown, was participating in the conferences with Albert. I do not know whether his name appears on the paper or not.

Senator NELSON. I hardly think the Baltimore American could have any connection with it. Felix Agnus is an Alsatian by birth.

Mr. BIELASKI. The Baltimore paper was in no way whatever involved in this.

Senator NELSON. The Baltimore American is as loyal as any paper in the country.

Mr. BIELASKI. I think so. This was purely the connection of a man who happened to be employed by that paper, and I think entirely without the knowledge or consent of anyone connected with the paper. I do not see in this announcement anything that shows that Mr. Garthe was openly connected with it.

There is one little interesting thing that we found in looking up Mr. Garthe which might be considered interesting to the committee because of the way this war started. It shows that back as far as December, 1912, Hugo Schweitzer, who was a German chemist, had arranged an interview between Lowe and George Sylvester Viereck, and that while then connected with the New York Town Topics was being assisted by the brewers. This letter comes from Mr. Lowe's files [reading]:

BIELASKI EXHIBIT No. 59.

[New York Topics, New York's popular weekly. Published every Saturday by Theo. Lowe, 150 Nassau Street, New York City. P. O. box 1080. Office of the publishers. Ten cents a copy, five dollars a year.]

DEAR SIR: The enclosure was published in our publication several weeks ago. We are promoting your interests and ask for your support. The leading brewers in the United States aid us by subscribing for ten copies of our magazine to be sent each week to parties designated by the subscriber. The annual cost of ten subscriptions is fifty dollars.

We have a special department devoted to the interests of the United States Brewers and the articles are prepared by authorities on the subject. We fight prohibition in an effective and dignified manner. Owing to our select circulation, we reach desirable readers. You are probably aware of the fact that Margaret Howe, a niece of President Wilson, is our Social Editor.

The enclosed list gives the names of a few prominent brewers who have aided us in our efforts. Will you kindly return the list with your signature and check?

Please call on us whenever we have an opportunity to serve you.

Most sincerely,

Editor and Publisher

The inclosed list, which contains the signatures of quite a number of breweries, shows the number of copies which they took to supply the publication.

Senator OVERMAN. You had better let it go in the record.

Mr. BIELASKI. It is back in 1912, but it shows the connection between the brewing interests and a man who afterwards was active in the German propaganda.

Maj. HUMES. What is the name of the periodical he was publishing at that time?

Mr. BIELASKI. New York Topics, 150 Nassau Street, New York City. The list referred to is as follows:

BIELASKI EXHIBIT No. 60.

TO WHOM IT MAY CONCERN:

To aid THE INTERNATIONAL AND REVIEW OF TWO WORLDS in pursuing its liberal policy and furthering our interests by means of desirable publicity, we, the undersigned, are desirous of increasing the circulation of said magazine and herewith subscribe to said magazine for such number of copies as specified below:

Theodor Finkenauer Brewing Co.

Theo. J. Finkenauer, Secy Pd. 10 copies

The Roesssle Brewery

Walter Alcarl, Manager Pd. 10 copies

Haffenreffer & Co.

Mr. BIELASKI. Marcus Braun, New York City, was the editor of Fair Play, 501 Fifth Avenue, New York City.

Senator NELSON. Before you go into that please give us the pedigree of Marcus Braun.

Mr. BIELASKI. I have it in the files. He was of Hungarian descent and came to our attention because of his close association with the Austro-Hungarian interests in New York City.

Senator OVERMAN. Was he employed at one time by the Government?

Mr. BIELASKI. He was employed by the Government as an immigration inspector, I think, under the Roosevelt administration, and made quite a study and a long report on immigration conditions.

Senator OVERMAN. He wrote a book on the subject, did he not?

Mr. BIELASKI. He may have done so. He got quite some recognition for his work as an immigration inspector.

The first connection between Fair Play, Marcus Braun, and the Germans that we know anything about is shown in a letter of February 16, 1915, in which he sent to Dr. Albert tickets for a lecture by Col. Edward Emerson, about whom I told you something yesterday.

On February 23, 1915, following up this lecture business, Marcus Braun wrote to Dr. Albert a letter marked "personal," which reads as follows:

BIELASKI EXHIBIT No. 61.

[Fair Play, a monthly review. Edited by Marcus Braun, 501 Fifth Avenue.]

Personal.

NEW YORK, February 23, 1915.

Dr. H. F. ALBERT,
45 Broadway, New York City.

MY DEAR SIR: I take it for granted that you were present at last night's lecture of Col. Emerson, at Carnegie Hall, and judging from expressions heard from other sources, I also take it for granted that you were satisfied with the tone of Col. Emerson's talk. While we cannot claim that the newspapers treated us fairly, yet there appeared enough about it to show that the stuff which was heretofore printed about the German side was nothing but a pack of lies and slowly but surely the truth begins to dribble through the thick sheet of fog.

While the affair was not a success financially, I concluded to continue these lectures, and I am not arranging a tour for Colonel Emerson which will carry us through all important places of the United States, with the hope that it will do a world of good.

I received a letter from His Excellency, Count von Bernstorff, wherein he informs me that you have received a number of new films which we might use to good advantage, particularly those brought by Miss Beveridge and I write to ask whether you could place some of these films at our disposal.

Where I propose to make a particular hit with the "War Talk" of Colonel Emerson is among the American population and not among the Germans and Austro-Hungarians because they know the truth without the lectures.

I need some moral and financial support, hence I appeal to you, not so much for the lecture tour, as for my publication "FAIR PLAY" which has suffered considerably since it started to take the only honest course a decent publication can take, that of telling the truth. I wish to emphasize that "FAIR PLAY" is not pro-German, nor pro-anything else but pro-American and above all, pro-truth, and because of that it suffered considerably since the outbreak of the war. It ought to be a weekly publication thereby its usefulness would be more than hundred-fold, because even as it is now, it is liberally quoted all over the country by American newspapers.

I would like to have the honor of a personal interview with you and would thank you for an early reply when and where it would be convenient for you to see me.

Yours respectfully,

MARCUS BRAUN.

CLL-MB

Here is the carbon of a letter dated February 25, 1915, addressed to Marcus Braun [reading]:

BIELASKI EXHIBIT No. 62.

FEBRUARY 25, 1915.

Mr. MARCUS BRAUN,
Editor Fair Play,
501 Fifth Avenue, New York City.

MY DEAR SIR: Replying to your letter of February 23rd I regret to say that, in spite of the great interest I take in your monthly review "Fair Play," it is impossible to assist you financially, as the funds here are already taxed to the utmost. For this reason, I am afraid that a personal interview would not alter the situation.

"As regards the films for the lecture of Col. Emerson, I shall advise you later. I will have to confer with the proper party and shall reply shortly concerning this matter.

Yours very truly,

Senator STERLING. Is that from Bernstorff?

Mr. BIELASKI. That is from Albert, and at a later date he writes him and advises him that he has no films at his disposal.

The New York World printed, and we also have copies of, a letter dated March 15, 1915, which reads as follows:

BIELASKI EXHIBIT No. 63.

[German Embassy, Washington, D. C. J. No. 4344.]

WASHINGTON, D. C., March 15, 1915.

MY DEAR MR. BRAUN: In answer to your favor of 12th instant I beg to state that I have read the monthly "Fair Play" for the last three years, and I state that this publication has been living up to its name and that it has always taken the American point of view. During the last 7 months "Fair Play" in its editorial policy, treated all belligerents justly and thereby rendered great services to the millions of foreign born citizens of this country, especially those of German and Austro-Hungarian origin? "Fair Play" has fought for the rights of the latter and for truth, always maintaining an American attitude and showing true American spirit.

You are at liberty to show this letter to anybody who is interested in the matter, but I beg you not to publish it, as to this would be contrary to the instructions of my Government, who does not wish me to publicly advocate any reviews or newspaper.

Very sincerely yours,

J. BERNSTORFF

MARCUS BRAUN, Esq.,
Editor of Fair Play, New York City.

In connection with that is a check, dated May 28, 1915, which is as follows:

BIELASKI EXHIBIT No. 64.

No. —

NEW YORK, May 28, 1915.

KUHN LOEB & Co.,
William and Pine Streets:

PAY TO THE ORDER OF FAIR PLAY PRINTING & PUBLISHING COMPANY FIVE THOUSAND ————— $5000.00.

J. BERNSTORFF

Under date of April 16, 1915, we have a check, "Pay to the order of Fair Play Publishing Company $2,000," drawn on Riggs National Bank, and a copy of a receipt, dated New York, April 19, 1915 [reading]:

BIELASKI EXHIBIT No. 65.

NEW YORK, April 19, 1915.

His Excellency Count JOHAN B. BERNSTORFF,
Imperial German Embassy, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: We are very pleased to acknowledge receipt of your cheque this morning for $2,000 and to thank you for the same together with the other description of $1,000 given some time ago.

Thanking you again, we are,
Yours truly,

FAIR PLAY,
Per J. P. BRYAN

Again:

BIELASKI EXHIBIT No. 66.

NEW YORK, April 20, 1915.

His Excellency Count VON BERNSTORFF,
German Embassy, Washington, D. C.

YOUR EXCELLENCY: I beg to acknowledge the receipt of your kind letter of the 16th instant, together with the enclosure of a check for $1,000.

MARCUS BRAUN

And a receipt dated May 3, 1915:

BIELASKI EXHIBIT No. 67.

Received $1,500 (One thousand five hundred dollars) from German Embassy, Washington.

Washington, D. C., May 3, 1915.

MARCUS BRAUN.

There is other correspondence here——

Capt. LESTER. Mr. Bielaski, that last payment of $1,500 was a personal payment to Marcus Braun from the German Embassy, was it not, and not in connection with Fair Play?

Mr. BIELASKI. There is nothing to show that it was. The receipt I think shows that it is a part of the official receipts of the German Embassy. It has a number on the corner, 228.

Capt. LESTER. Mr. Marcus Braun in his statement before Mr. Becker admitted receiving from the German Embassy $10,000 for the Fair Play magazine, but denied that he ever received any money personally.

Mr. BIELASKI. I do not know of any way of determining just what that was.

Capt. LESTER. In his statement he said all the checks were paid to the Fair Play Publishing & Printing Co.

Mr. BIELASKI. I would take it from that receipt—that does not say a check. It says "$1,500," and is signed personally by him instead of by Fair Play.

Capt. Lester suggests the introduction into the record of a photographic copy of a code message which was taken from the von Igel papers. Von Igel was the successor of Capt. von Papen after he returned. It shows the German code numbers with the code words from them, and the translation is as follows:

• BIELASKI EXHIBIT No. 68.

In re No. 303. Euphrat was sent by me to India in October of last year, and is so far as known here reliable. He was indeed recommended at the time by Marcus Braun. Please intimate to him cautiously that he should not tell this person too much about his orders received in Berlin.

San Francisco is being informed.

For: Hatzfeld.

Mr. Euphrat was sent to India by the German Government, and was a Government witness in the Hindu trial at San Francisco.

Senator STERLING. For what purpose was he sent to India?

Mr. BIELASKI. I do not know just what his testimony was out there in San Francisco, but the obvious purpose was to observe and report on conditions in India with respect to anti-British agitation.

Senator NELSON. The work of the German propaganda was to get up insurrection?

Mr. BIELASKI. That was their propaganda, and in addition it was their active efforts. As you know, they have been convicted in large numbers in San Francisco for actually inciting that sort of thing.

Senator NELSON. The consul general and the whole staff were convicted?

Mr. BIELASKI. For actually setting on foot in this country military expeditions intended to bring about a revolution in India. They shipped arms and ammunition, a number of Hindu leaders going along, but their plans miscarried.

Under date of December 24, 1915, is a letter from Marcus Braun to Dr. Albert. He acknowledges with thanks the receipt of information sent by Albert, and he asks that Albert in communication with him do not use the mails. He does not think it is safe. The letter is as follows:

BIELASKI EXHIBIT No. 69.

[Marcus Braun, editor Fair Play, 501 Fifth Avenue, New York.]

DECEMBER 24, 1915

Dr. H. ALBERT,

Privy Councillor, 45 Broadway, City.

MY DEAR SIR: I beg to acknowledge with thanks the receipt of the late copies of the weekly report published by the American Association of Commerce and Trade in Berlin and thank you very much for your readiness to place them at my disposal. While they arrived too late to be of much use for the January issue, I may be able to use the information contained therein, later.

I would like to invite your attention to the fact that when addressing me kindly not use the United States Mail. As strange as it may seem, I note that my mail is being tampered with both at my office as well as my home. I have already two complaints to the Post Office Inspectors, but so far I have not received a satisfactory reply to my complaints. In answer to my first complaint I was told that I am mistaken. The second, which I made about a week or ten days ago, I am still awaiting the reply to. If I do not get relief from that source I shall endeavor to have a Congressional investigation made.

While I do not think for one moment that the Post Office authorities of this country are in any way to blame for the tampering with my American mail, yet I must assume that some foreign agents or representatives of our sensational press have corrupted some man in the employ of the Post Office Department who probably have the opportunity of opening my mail before delivery and while I have no correspondence with any one which could not be scrutinized by anybody, yet as a citizen of this country I resent an unlawful act of this sort and if I should be able to lay my hands on the malefactor I shall certainly go a long way to see that proper punishment is meted out. In the meanwhile, the less occasion given to tempt such culprits in their unlawful acts, the better; and hence my request not to use, if possible, the U. S. mail for the time being.

With renewed thanks for your readiness to secure for me the information needed, I beg to remain,

Yours very truly,

MARCUS BRAUN.

Under date of January 21, 1916, Albert addressed Mr. Lindheim a letter which reads as follows:

BIELASKI EXHIBIT No. 70.

Strictly confidential.

NEW YORK, January 21, 1916

Mr. NORVIN R. LINDHEIM,

60 Wall Street, New York City

MY DEAR MR. LINDHEIM: Mr. Marcus Braun, who claims to have done very much for the German cause by making the "Fair Play" a pro-German publication, has informed the Ambassador and myself that unless he is furnished with funds to the amount of $4,600—the "Fair Play" as well as his newspaper service, "The Universal Press Association," must become bankrupt.

I hate to pay this sum and would very much prefer to let the undertaking become bankrupt. Braun is quite willing to agree to this if we had no objection to what he calls, the unavoidable publicity. Will you please inform me what kind of publicity might arise of such a bankruptcy case.

I need not mention that there are some particular delicate points in connection with this matter which I would like to discuss with you, as soon as you have looked over the papers which I send you herewith. As the matter is rather urgent I would be obliged to you if you could discuss the matter with me to-morrow morning between 10 and 12 o'clock.

Yours, very truly,

Senator OVERMAN. By whom is that letter signed?

Mr. BIELASKI. That is a copy of a letter which I believe to have been written by Mr. Albert.

Under date of January 26, 1916, is the translation of a letter addressed to Ambassador Bernstorff, written from New York, I think by Dr. Albert.

It is as follows:

BIELASKI EXHIBIT No. 71.

[Translation.]

NEW YORK, January 26, 1916.

YOUR EXCELLENCY: You gave me the authorization to come to a final understanding with Marcus Braun in the matter of the suspension of his publication "Fair Play."

Mr. Braun has been receiving lately, as you remember, on the basis of an authorization from Berlin, a monthly subsidy of $1,200 to which sum I succeeded in reducing his original demand of $4 000 per month. Braun declared as lately as last December, that he could not make both ends meet with that figure and would have to suspend publication unless he received a larger subsidy. With reference to this, I discussed with him, with Your Excellency's authorization, the usefulness of his publication in the German cause and made clear to him, according to my construction, we should not have sufficient interest in it to continue the publication or to subsidize it with a greater sum. Mr. Braun thereupon declared that we would be obliged in such circumstances, to let the undertaking go into bankruptcy. He referred to the publicity involved which would be undesirable for us a reference which embodied the hint which was not to be misunderstood that he, in case he were left in the lurch, would have no interest in avoiding the scandal for the German cause which would arise in case of the bankruptcy of "Fair Play." What this hint means, needs no further explanation.

Although I believe with your Excellency, that the scandal should be avoided in any case, and, therefore, with your authorization, take pains to come to a peaceable compromise with Braun, I still considered it from the beginning out of the question to satisfy his demands to the full extent. Such a yielding would have incited him to continual new demands and also extortion without end. I, therefore, declared to him at first that we would not be afraid of a bankruptcy,—that it might rather be desirable for us insofar as the lack of any support on the part of Germany, would thereby come to life, and similar arguments. At the same time asked him for substantiation of his statements. It appears from the enclosed summary that about $3,000 of debts have been incurred while the payments on shares in the undertaking amount to approximately another $3,000.

Mr. Braun claimed on this basis about $6,000. and took occasion on account of my refusal to annoy Your Excellency by personal calls or calls from his wife, to increase the pressure. As the matter stands these calls will be, in fact, regarded upon as undesirable.

Under the circumstances, I finally came to an agreement with him that bankruptcy was to be avoided. To this end I would put at his disposal sufficient means to meet his debts. The stockholders, on the other hand, would have no claims in the bankruptcy proceedings. Therefore, there was no occasion for me to take over these amounts. It should rather be left to the stockholders to see what they could do with their shares which, in the absence of assets, are valueless. Braun finally agreed to these terms. The sum of $3,074.20 was paid to him on that understanding. He has given a receipt, which is enclosed, for this sum.

I think I may assume that the above solution is the best way to dispose of the affair so far as an understanding can be arrived at now with a "black-letter." There is no complete security in this direction. I have, however, a well based hope that further payments for the avoidance of a scandal which, for political reasons, is undesirable, are not necessary. The amount expended by me was returned to me from the propaganda fund of Mr. Fuehr.

Senator KING. Have you any record of payments made to Braun by the Austrian Embassy or representatives of the Austrian Embassy for Dumba?

Mr. BIELASKI. I do not think we have. We have records showing that Braun, when he went abroad, carried with him certain records of the consulate to be delivered in Vienna. They disappeared from the boat, according to his testimony. We also have testimony from people who were associated with Braun that the purpose of his trip to Vienna was to get a subsidy from the Austro-Hungarian Government, and that he stated while over there that he had succeeded in doing it. We have not any documentary evidence, and I do not know what the actual facts are.

Senator KING. My recollection was that there was some evidence either in your department or the Post Office Department, showing contributions to him by Mr. Dumba.

Mr. BIELASKI. I am not certain as to that. I have already introduced records of payments from Bernstorff. I have no knowledge that he actually got payments from the other people.

Maj. HUMES. What was the date of that last letter you read?

Mr. BIELASKI. January 26, 1916. Inclosed in the letter is a statement of the assets and liabilities of the Universal Press Association which was the Fair Play Co.

Maj. HUMES. Who was associated with Mr. Braun in Fair Play?

Mr. BIELASKI. A man named Joseph P. Bryan. Joseph P. Bryan is one of the men who obtained money from the German Embassy.

Senator NELSON. Is the paper Fair Play still published?

Mr. BIELASKI. I do not know.

The only other interesting thing here is a proposed draft of a circular letter which was inclosed, which Mr. Braun was going to send out, which is as follows:

. BIELASKI EXHIBIT No. 72.

PROPOSED DRAFT OF CIRCULAR LETTER.

DEAR SIR: The subscribers, friends and supporters of this publication will learn, perhaps with regret, the announcement that the publication of the periodical has been temporarily suspended. All claims for any indebtedness have been, or will be paid in full and so will all unearned subscriptions be refunded in every instance.

The main reason for the suspension of the publication lies in the fact that, owing to the peculiar conditions existing at present in this Country, and more particularly owing to the hue and cry that is being raised against every person who is not out and out pro-Ally, I have decided to take this step. Personally I could well afford to have me called names, to have suspicion cast upon me and to have my Americanism questioned, but I cannot afford that the same fate and the same annoyance and the same suspicion should be cast upon my friends and supporters, many of whom have been harassed by visits, inquiries and threats from real or alleged secret service men, agitators, provocateurs and representatives of yellow newspapers. While it is a very sad commentary on the seemingly insane attitude of the country, I feel quite certain that the American public as a whole cannot and should not be blamed for it. It is however a pretty sad testimony for the spirit presently dominating this country, when a public man after twenty-five years of residence and nineteen years of citizenship, out of which nineteen years he spent seven in the service of the Federal Government and for four years was an officer in the State of New York, should have his good citizenship and his Americanism questioned by a man like Rathbone of Providence, R. I. or by men of the type of Prof. Pupin, Dr. Gorizer, and for that matter, also by greater and less "lights" who are temporarily running the destinies of this country. If Americanism should depend on a certificate of good character from such individuals, then I say, it is not worth while having such citizenship.

However, that is neither here nor there. The publication will be temporarily suspended, until such time when the sane people of this country will again come into their own: then, I hope to revive the publication again.

Thanking one and all for the support which has been given this publication for over four years, I beg to remain

Yours respectfully,

Senator OVERMAN. Do you know what position Braun held in New York as an officer?

Mr. BIELASKI. I do not. I suppose it was something in connection with immigration. That was his connection with the Federal Government.

Capt. LESTER. He was special immigration officer.

Maj. HUMES. Do you know whether or not Joseph P. Bryan was formerly connected with Viereck's Magazine?

Mr. BIELASKI. I do not know. Mr. Bryan, of course, became an assistant to the Government, and gave us a great deal of information, and we have a complete story of his history in our files. I have not got it with me.

Maj. HUMES. Do you remember how the stock that was issued to Bernstorff was held? Was it delivered to him, or was it held in escrow or otherwise by a third party?

Mr. BIELASKI. I think it was held by a third party. That appeared in some of the correspondence.

There is one more mention of Mr. Braun, which is of interest, which appears in the English translation of a cipher from Bernstorff to the foreign office, dated October 27, 1916. This letter discusses a number of things and particularly Marcus Braun. I read part of it yesterday, but I think I might as well read it all. [Reading:]

BIELASKI EXHIBIT No. 73.

In the official accounts for the first and second quarter of 1916 will be found entries of payments to Mr. Theodore E. Lowe. As to this I have to report that this gentleman is a German origin and married to a German lady. He offered us his services, as he founded a weekly paper in Washington, the "National Courier." This offer came at the time when we were deploring the death of Mr. John R. Maclean. This latter had given his newspaper an entirely anti-English character, so that his death left a great gap which the "National Courier" can unfortunately never hope to fill. The "Washington Post" has since been fairly neutral, but may be entirely lost to us if it can not, as is very desirable, be put into the hands of Mr. Hearst.

As to the value of weekly papers in general, there are here very different views. Mr. Bayard Hale wishes me to propose to you the founding of a first class weekly, whereas I in my report No. 412 recommended the starting of a monthly. Personally I think it entirely depends upon whether we make a happy choice in respect to the editor. In this respect we have had a very unfortunate experience with the "Times Mail." Only the future can show whether we shall have better luck with Mr. Huntington Wright and Mr. T. E. Lowe? In either case the expenses already incurred, or to be incurred, are insignificant. Moreover we could only grant them in order to help the publications in question over the difficult initial period. A permanent support has neither been promised nor asked for. The fact of an American newspaper being subsidized can never be kept secret because there is no reticence in this country. It always ends in my being held responsible for all the articles of any such newspaper. This is particularly undesirable when, as now, we are in an electoral campaign of the bitterest character, which is turning largely upon foreign policy.

I have therefore with much satisfaction to myself at last succeeded in getting out of all relations with "Fair Play" of Marcus Brun. I should also be glad to be free from the "Fatherland" which has shown itself to be of little value.

It is particularly difficult in a hostile country to find suitable persons for help of this sort, and to this, as well as the Lusitania case, we may attribute the shipwreck of the German propaganda initiated by Herr Dernburg. Now that opinion is somewhat improved in our favor, and that we are no longer ostracised, we can take the work up again. As I have said before, our success depends entirely upon finding the suitable people. We can then leave to them whether they will start a daily, weekly or monthly, and the sort of support to be given. In my opinion we should always observe the principle that either a representative of ours should buy the paper, or that the proprietor should be secured by us by continuous support. The latter course has been followed by the English in respect of the "New York" ——— and our enemies have spent here large sums in this manner. All the same I do not think that they pay regular subsidies. At least I never heard of such. This form of payment is moreover inadvisable, because one can never get free of the recipients. They all wish to become permanent pensioners of the Empire and if they fail in that, they try to blackmail us.

I therefore request Your Excellency to sanction the payment in question.

This is a very true statement of Mr. Bernstorff, I think.

In the sentence, "The latter course has been followed by the English in respect to the New York ———", the translation of that name does not appear, and I understand it could not be translated.

Senator NELSON. By whom was that sent?

Mr. BIELASKI. By Bernstorff to the German foreign office.

Maj. HUMES. What was the date?

Mr. BIELASKI. October 27, 1916.

Senator STERLING. Who is the Huntington Wright referred to in that letter?

Mr. BIELASKI. I did not bring our files along. Suppose you let that go until after lunch, and I will get the file about him.

Under date of November 2, 1916, we have the English translation of a telegram from Bernstorff to the Foreign Office, through Buenos Aires and Stockholm, which was furnished us by the State Department, as was the one I just read, with permission to use it. [Reading:]

I request by return, telegraphic authority for payment of $50,000 to establish a first class monthly magazine.

Senator NELSON. By whom was that sent?

Mr. BIELASKI. To the German foreign office via Buenos Aires and Stockholm.

Here are a series of telegrams furnished by the State Department. The first one is an English translation of a telegram from Von Jagow, sent through Stockholm and Buenos Aires to Bernstorff on January 31, 1916. [Reading:]

Klaessig's wireless telegrams are much too long and give the impression of being much too one-sided, a thing which absolutely must be avoided.

Here is the English translation of a cipher dispatch from Bernstorff to the Foreign Office, dated February 2, 1916, which reads as follows:

A 61. The Director of the Press Bureau, Dr. Fuehr, has been paid $20,000 from the Embassy Fund as advance for his press expenses. The Press Bureau will send in a statement as the expenditure and the sum will be entered in the fourth quarter of the Embassy Accounts.

Here is the English translation of a telegram from Berlin to Washington via Stockholm and Buenos Aires dated September 16, 1916. [Reading:]

BIELASKI EXHIBIT No. 74.

The reports of the Wolff Bureau agent are rightly criticised by a part of the German Press as one sided, as he has reported for some time nothing but indignation against English encroachment which nobody here takes seriously.

As the matter will probably be taken up in the Reichstag more unbiased reports seem to be urgently desirable.

Please advise Klaessig in this sense.

Some of the other activities of Mr. Klaessig can be briefly sketched.

August, 1915, he was in conference with Boy-Ed about the sending of a cable on the preceding Friday about the Arabic.

Senator OVERMAN. How do you spell that name?

Mr. BIELASKI. K-l-a-e-s-s-i-g.

Senator OVERMAN. What is his business?

Mr. BIELASKI. He is the New York representative of the Wolff Agency. He is an American citizen, lives over in Jersey, I think, but his work is in New York City.

October, 1915, Boy-Ed made a special request to Klaessig to get wide publicity for the story of the killing of certain German sailors by the steamship Nicotian, and also to send wires to the other side.

Klaessig was particularly anxious to know whether the ambassador was asking this favor of him and wanted to get credit for everything he did.

October 7, 1915, Klaessig and Boy-Ed had another conference about the same matter. On the same day they had a second conference.

October 13 Boy-Ed sent to Klaessig a lot of data in connection with this same story.

All during October, 1915, and November, 1915, Klaessig and Boy-Ed were in constant touch about the sending of pro-German stories from this country to Germany. Boy-Ed was particularly concerned at that time because of the Hamburg-American Line case which was on trial, and in which, of course, he was involved. He was very desirous that Klaessig should show Boy-Ed up in the proper light to the Berlin folks at home in his messages, and he had a great many conferences with him for that purpose.

Senator STERLING. Klaessig has not been proceeded against in any way?

Mr. BIELASKI. No; and I do not know of any way in which he could be.

I said something awhile ago about the play "Blood is Thicker than Water," and this is a photographic copy of the communication from the man who succeeded Dumba in charge of affairs at the Austrian Embassy, sending a check for $250. Here is an extract from that memorandum, of which I did not have the complete translation. [Reading:]

I am under the impression that we could, if not entirely prevent the production of war material in Bethlehem and the middle west, at any rate strongly disorganize it and hold it up for months, which according to the statement of the German military attaché is of great importance, and which amply outweighs the relatively small sacrifice of money.

Senator NELSON. In whose letter is that?

Mr. BIELASKI. That is in the letter of Ambassador Dumba to the foreign office transmitting this plan.

Senator NELSON. Of Archibald's?

Mr. BIELASKI. Of Warm's, which was taken from Archibald's.
 Senator NELSON. Yes.

Mr. BIELASKI. Warm was a very interesting character, formerly a member of the parliament of Austria-Hungary. He is dead now.

Senator OVERMAN. Was there any prosecution of Warm?

Mr. BIELASKI. No; there was never any prosecution of Warm. Warm, as I said, confessed shortly after this, to an agent of the department here in Washington, and made a very complete statement, and we had hoped to use Warm as a witness in the prosecution of Consul General Von Nuber. That was the plan of the department; but it did not develop.

The American embargo conference is a matter with which I suppose every Member of Congress has a great deal of familiarity. It was organized in the summer of 1915, and a good statement of its early history and intentions is contained in a report addressed to William Bayard Hale. This is addressed, for some reason, to the Hon. William Bayard Hale, 342 Riverside Drive, New York City. [Reading:]

BIELASKI EXHIBIT No. 75.

DEAR SIR: The following is the report of the American Embargo Conference to the members of its national board, on the work of the conference during the month of August.

Hale's name was put on the letterhead of the American embargo conference, relying on his well-known attitude, but he did not desire to remain on, and asked that it be taken off, and it was taken off.

Senator NELSON. What date is that, what year is it?

Mr. BIELASKI. This was in 1915. [Continuing reading:]

The organization of the American Embargo Conference was first formally discussed at a meeting held in Detroit on July 10. This meeting was attended by representative men from Illinois, Ohio, Indiana, Michigan, Minnesota and several other States.

At this meeting numerous plans were canvassed in an effort to adopt the one that would be most likely to bring about the success of an embargo movement, and when the plans had been outlined the committee adjourned to allow the representatives to consider them all thoroughly with the understanding that they would be again canvassed at a meeting to be held in Chicago on July 24.

On this date, July 24, the committee again met in Chicago and spent the entire day in going over the different suggested plans. After a long and satisfactory debate it was finally decided by all present that the American Embargo conference should become a permanent organization, and that it would proceed along the plan that will now be outlined.

THE PLAN.

It was decided by the representatives of the Conference that the only hope to accomplish results was to set at work to bring about a thorough and complete organization of the voters of the United States who were in favor of having an embargo declared upon the shipment of arms and munitions of war to the belligerent nations.

It was decided that the only successful way to bring about such an organization was to inaugurate a postal card canvass of the entire country.

It was decided that mass meetings where speakers aired their opinions and the delegates passed resolutions calling upon congress and the administration to act were a waste of time as congress and the administration—far away in Washington—were not affected by the airing of sentiment in any one local community.

It was decided that the circulation of petitions calling upon Congress and the Administration to act were a waste of time and of money for Congress and the Administration have been continually flooded with petitions and memorials until the direct route of a petition or memorial is from the post office to the waste paper basket.

It was decided that the only way in which practical results could be hoped for was to proceed in a practical way, and it was decided that this way was the circulation of postal cards bearing pledges that all signers should sincerely promise to stand in line at all times in support of the movement. It was made plain that this work should include the task of impressing upon each signer that he was not signing a mere petition—always so useless—but that he was joining a movement where he was not only expected to give the support of his own vote but was expected to win over other voters.

And this has been made plain at all times during the canvassing work of the Conference with the result that we can say that so far as it is humanly possible to know the enrolled pledges on the Conference lists are the names of voters who will back the organization in all of its demands for an embargo.

This, in brief, was the original plan of the Conference. Since that time we have held true to the original plan but since headquarters have been opened and the work has been pushed experience has taught us where to improve upon the original outline.

The first weeks of the campaign taught us that it would be necessary for the Conference to depend in many ways upon the workers in the different localities and this brought about the plan to establish local branches of the Conference in all of the cities, towns and villages of the United States.

This work has been pushed rapidly during the past two weeks and already the Conference has found that the local organization plan will make it possible to have the vote lined up and under orders in time to make it possible for the voters to show the congressmen a strength that they will be afraid to ignore.

The method of doing this has been to secure the name or names of persons in different localities who are known to be strongly in favor of an embargo. We have secured these names in different manners. In one way we sent out letters to the editors of the different German papers of the country asking them to supply us with names. Again we took the names of writers who had secured some of our postal cards and had not contented themselves with sending in their pledges but had written for more cards, or had sent in contributions to help the movement, or had written to ask in what manner they could give their services.

To all of these men letters were sent explaining the plans of the Conference. With the letters went copies of our campaign book (a copy has been sent to you) and then the men have been called upon to call together as many sincere friends of the movement as they could find, to form a committee, elect officers to represent the local branch of the American Embargo Conference, to appoint ward or district leaders and to instruct these leaders to enlist workers who would not only sign the pledges but who would join in the canvass and secure additional voters.

And again we must point out that in each case it has been emphatically pointed out that the enlistment of voters must be the enrollment of only those who are for an embargo, that the voter who is willing to sign any petition presented to him and then forget it is not wanted, and that it is imperative that we have only voters completely for us on our lists.

In addition to all this a staff of German-American speakers under the direction of Dr. Herman Gerhard, has been at work among the German-American organizations of Chicago, the state of Illinois, of Indiana, of Michigan, Wisconsin and Nebraska, and these speakers have been teaching the doctrine of organization until we can say that it has been well drilled into the German-Americans of these sections and already they are at work lining up the voters of other nationalities.

The active work of the Conference has been in progress but a month. Headquarters were opened in Chicago on the first of August in office suite 905 of the City Hall Square Building. At the July 24th meeting the Rev. George B. Hancher, of Mt. Carroll, Ill., was elected chairman, Will R. MacDonald, of Chicago, was elected secretary.

In the absence of the chairman, Mr. Hancher, Mr. G. H. Jacobsen has been acting as chairman.

With the headquarters opened the work of organizing the voters was at once taken up. Attention was first paid to the city of Chicago, then the surrounding towns and villages were taken up and then the work extended to the cities and towns of the state. The work spread to Indiana, Iowa, Wisconsin,

Minnesota and Nebraska, and now we can report that organization work is being rapidly pushed in the following states:

Illinois, Arkansas, Minnesota, North Dakota, South Dakota, Iowa, Alabama, Texas, Missouri, Wisconsin, New York, Michigan, Wyoming, Ohio, Nebraska, Montana, and California.

To aid in the initial work in Illinois Dr. Gerhard, an excellent speaker and a most successful organizer, was brought to Chicago from Texas, and as has been said before was placed in charge of the speakers of our German-American bureau. Dr. Gerhard first devoted his time to the German-American societies of Chicago and his success in securing their hearty support and offering assistance was such as to lead the Conference to determine to add more speakers and these men are now being sent out as rapidly as our funds permit. The Conference is in need of more speakers for these men hurry their work of organization in the different towns and make it possible for the committee to begin work properly and with the correct knowledge of what they have to do, but lack of funds prohibits the employment of others just now.

IN CHICAGO.

It can be reported to you that the work in Chicago, and in the state of Illinois as well, is now well organized and each day adds hundreds of people to those already sent in to us by the citizens of Chicago. The same may be reported from the state. Our cards have now reached all sections of Illinois and with each mail we are getting orders for additional cards.

We would call your attention to the fact firstly that these cards are not filled with the names of German-American voters, but include in their list many names distinctly English, French, Irish, Swedish, Danish and of other nationalities.

That many of the voters who call at our headquarters are of nationalities other than German; that some of the most enthusiastic letters received are from men whose names indicate that they are NOT German-Americans, and that all in all our canvass and the enrollment of voters is proving more and more each day that there is a great and growing sentiment in favor of the embargo simply waiting to be called out and organized and that neither the administration or the politicians appreciate what the real feeling of the country is.

In this regard we would refer you to the letter from United States Senator John D. Works of California. He reports that he finds this condition of sentiment existing in the west and what he has found in California and that situation of the country we are finding in the middle west.

We cannot state too emphatically that the sentiment exists throughout the country. Lack of moral courage, as Senator Works states, is the only thing that is curbing its expression, and if we can push our work in a large enough way we are sure that the necessary moral courage can be distributed.

Aside from Chicago and the state of Illinois which are being well cared for at the present time we must point out that with the short time we have been at work we are already well established in Indiana, Iowa, Wisconsin and Nebraska.

Our organization work in the Indiana towns has been directed by skilled men of political experience—many of them former workers of the Progressive party—and we can say that Gary and Hammond are well organized; that Fort Wayne is being attended to at the present moment with two organizers from here at work there—a state convention of the German alliance being in session—that our work in Evansville will be started by Evansville men as soon as they return from the Fort Wayne convention, and that in Indianapolis the work of organizing the local committee has been started.

Nebraska is making a wonderful showing. Dr. Gerhard made a trip through a number of the cities and towns of that state and since then work of organization has been started in practically every northern and western town of the state. We are finding in Nebraska some of the most enthusiastic workers of our organization. Bankers, churchmen and professional men are calling on us for orders and for cards and we feel sure that Nebraska will be one of the first of the states to be thoroughly organized and that it will be able to show a vote total that will make the representatives of that state take notice when the demand is made.

In Milwaukee the work is being taken up by a number of prominent men there. Mr. Jacobsen visited them last week and outlined what we were planning.

ning to accomplish and we expect to soon be able to make a full report on the work in Wisconsin.

Following his visit to Milwaukee Mr. Jacobsen accompanied a number of the Milwaukee men to St. Paul and Minneapolis and after a series of conferences held there with certain leading men it was decided that this group of men there would take care of the organization work in Minnesota and the two Dakotas. We have already done some work in Minnesota and have started several local organizations and when the St. Paul group take up the work we will turn over this work to them.

In the other states listed in this report some of the towns are organizing but this work has not had time to progress very far as yet, but there has been a very good return of signed cards from all of these states. We are depending a lot on the names on these cards and the letters that come with them to furnish us the names of the men that we must call upon to take charge of the organization work.

For Chicago we are receiving from 1,500 to 2,000 pledges daily, and from the country at large the number of daily pledges received can be placed at from 1,000 to 1,500. When it is pointed out that these pledges from the country at large are coming in with almost no organized and systematic work, other than from the headquarters here it can be seen what local organization and complete systematic campaigning will be able to do.

In regard to the returns of pledges it must be pointed out that during the short time that we have been at work we have been seriously handicapped through no fault of the Conference. To begin with the so-called "exposés" of the New York World, printed in the Chicago Tribune and other papers of the middle west, hurt us as it made those who were weak in moral courage hesitate about declaring their real sentiments. Fortunately these "exposés" were so laughable that they failed in their purpose and really did good, though we have to wait for results, as they brought home to the people just how desperate were the attempts to brand everything as a "pro-German propaganda."

But before the sensation of the "exposés" had died down there came the mysterious murder of a minister in Gary, Ind., and again the press instead of devoting its columns to stories of the murder shouted German plot and tried to involve the Conference in the scandal. Representatives of the press, particularly of The Tribune and The Journal—the last named a rabid anti-German paper—called at our headquarters and endeavored to secure some fact that would identify us with the general sensation.

They failed in this as we were able to show that the slain minister was not a member of our Conference, and the visit of the press men gave us the opportunity to drive home the fact that ours was an American organization, that all of its members had to be Americans as our members had to be voters, and when it was shown that the organization was receiving the moral support of such men as Senators Hitchcock, Works and Hoke Smith they departed satisfied that this was one organization that was not a "pro-German movement."

In this way the murder mystery too probably aided us for our future work as the Chicago newspapers are now satisfied that this movement is an American one.

THE CANVASSING WORK.

A word as to the method of working in this canvass. German literature prepared by Dr. Gerhard (Copy sent to you) was, and is being, distributed throughout Chicago and the country at large. This, of course, goes to the German-American societies and to the German Americans who have demonstrated their interest in the movement.

In addition to this we have been extensively circulating the Dr. Hale pamphlet "Thou Shalt Not Kill"; the Rev. Dr. Charles F. Aked's pamphlet "Private Profit and the Nation's Honor"; another pamphlet including an editorial by William Randolph Hearst on "If We Cannot Support Ourselves with Arms in Time of War; Why Not Supply Ourselves Now"? the editorial by George W. O'Reilly "England Has Stopped Our Shipment of Cotton, Should We Stop Our Shipment of Arms?" and the speech "Our Patriotic Duties" delivered before the Chautauqua meeting at Jacksonville, Ill., this month by Col. Jasper Tucker Darling. (All of these sent to you) Also to the workers who have volunteered to aid us in organizing we are sending copies of our campaign book which outlines our plan and what we hope to accomplish.

Added to this we arranged with the Chicago American to send throughout the country copies of the paper that carried the editorials of Mr. Hearst and

Mr. O'Reilly. More than twelve thousand copies of these papers were sent out. They went out in bundles of from 25 to 300 and letters went at the same time calling upon the men that they were sent to to see that they were properly distributed.

We would call attention to the fact that every one of these papers reached a reader and that all of the men who had been called upon to help the distribution wrote back and reported that he had gladly done so and asked what he could do next. When it might be said that many of these men called upon were men whose names had been given to us as men who might be interested in our work and that without an exception they proved to be men willing and anxious to help the cause it might be taken as a good indication of how the sentiment is to be found around the country. These papers went to Minnesota, Wisconsin, Nebraska, Montana, Texas, Florida, Alabama, Iowa, Indiana, Michigan and Dakotas.

Their distribution also found us a number of men to act as organizers for local committees for we answered all letters showing interest in our work and called upon the volunteers to take up organization for us.

Not only are the voters of the different towns and cities showing by their prompt response to our letters that they believe that our plan is the practical plan and the one that will be able to accomplish results but they are writing to tell us that they feel that we are going about it the right way and the only practical way.

Moreover it is being proved that many think our plan the practical way because we are receiving letters from men of worldly experience who have heard nothing of us except some mention in the paper and who hasten to warn us to avoid petitions and mass meetings and to spend our funds in some practical way.

We are attaching a letter of this kind which was sent to us while a letter from us was on our way to the writer in which we were asking him to undertake some of the organization work for us. A study of this letter will show that Mr. Lohss was unconsciously calling for what we have undertaken.

We are also attaching copies of letters from Senators Works and Hitchcock. We call your attention particularly to the letter of Senator Works and to the part where he outlines how Los Angeles stands and what he believes should be the sentiment throughout the country.

The one point that we want to make plain to you in making this report is that as we proceed with the work we are becoming daily more convinced that it is the only practical method that can assure success.

Our canvass of the country, and the reports brought to us by men who are continually traveling about the country, demonstrate that—outside of Washington and New York—the sentiment of the country is rapidly turning in favor of having an embargo declared.

This feeling is growing daily and now is the time to push the work to the utmost.

The people are ready for it.

The American Embargo Conference has weathered all charges of being "pro-German propaganda" and has forced the papers to believe that it is, as it claims, an American movement.

The people are beginning to be brave enough to come out and declare for what they have long felt—an embargo.

And we repeat that with the time ripe for striking hard and rapidly everything possible should be done for this one movement.

We are doing all that is possible with the funds at our command. With more funds the work could be pushed more rapidly. As the local organizations come into existence they must be supplied with campaign literature and with all important postal cards for the pledges.

There is not the slightest doubt in our minds that the voters who are joining our organization will stand with us. Also there is no doubt but what already the congressmen and other politicians are beginning to realize that this vote is being organized.

We have now reached the point where we are willing to let them know that it is being organized, and in fact we want them to know that it is being organized.

The time is past when they can stop our work with cries of "pro-German propaganda" or "German plot."

Today J. J. Tobias, of the Friends of Peace, in an interview in the Chicago Herald declared that the Teutonic voters of the country to the number of 5,000,000 were "going to raise hell with any party not in our favor."

month ago this statement would have called down the wrath of a score of editorial writers. Today the editorial writers and the politicians are wondering just how close to the right number of voters Mr. Tobias was when he put the figure at 5,000,000.

And if the American Embargo Conference's success continues to grow as it has been growing during these early and trying weeks of its short career the politicians of the country will find that the "Teutonic voters" of the country are not standing alone but are lined up with other Americans in a body of Americans who are all real Americans and of so many nationalities that no one will dare to drag out one nationality and attempt to hold it up to scorn as the friends of the Munitions forces have been attempting to do with the German-American vote.

We will now report briefly on the business end of the work of the Conference.

Since our organizing the contributions have totaled.....	$4,273.20
Our expenditures have been.....	4,002.40
Debts unpaid.....	765
Contributions uncollected.....	750.00

Of the expenditures $750 went for the initial expense of fitting up our headquarters, for furniture, typewriters, installing telephones, office supplies, etc.

Of the amount still unpaid $659.25 is for printing of cards and pamphlets.

Cards have been printed especially for; the City of Chicago; Illinois, Indiana, New York, Arkansas, Alabama, Kansas, Minnesota, Missouri, Ohio, Texas, Nebraska, Iowa, Wisconsin, and Michigan.

Attached to this you will find the copies of the letters referred to in this report.

Very truly yours,

THE AMERICAN EMBARGO CONFERENCE.
Per.....

Acting Chairman.

Senator NELSON. In that document which you have just read you refer to Jacobsen. I suppose he was the German consul?

Mr. BIELASKI. No; Reisswitz was the German consul, but Jacobsen has been convicted and is under penitentiary sentence for his activities.

Senator NELSON. That is Jacobsen?

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes; he ranks, therefore, very easily with the German consul.

Senator OVERMAN. We hear a good deal about this man Gerhard and his activities. Is he from Texas?

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes. There are two Gerhards, Senator; Meyer Gerhard, who returned to Germany, who came over here as a member of the original Dernburg-Albert commission, and this man.

Senator OVERMAN. By whom was that long document signed from the American Embargo Conference that you read a moment ago?

Mr. BIELASKI. That was not signed, Senator. It has at the bottom "per Acting Chairman," and the acting chairman was Jacobsen.

Senator OVERMAN. It was written to Hale, was it not?

Mr. BIELASKI. It was written to Hale, yes; and found its way to Dr. Albert.

Senator NELSON. Have you a list or could you furnish a list of the principal men who attended this meeting?

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes; we will come to that, Senator.

Senator NELSON. All right; proceed.

Mr. BIELASKI. We will also come to the part the German Government had in it, and so on.

I think these letters from Mr. Herman Lohss are not particularly interesting.

I think this letter from Senator Hitchcock has been published. I will read it, if you say so. I believe it was published.

Senator NELSON. I do not recall it. Read it.

Mr. BIELASKI. It is addressed to G. N. Jacobsen, room 905, North Clark Street, Chicago, Ill., and is dated August 4. This copy or purports to be a copy which is attached to this report given to Hale. It is not an original letter.

Senator STERLING. That is August 4, 1915?

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes. It reads as follows:

BIELASKI EXHIBIT No. 75.

DEAR SIR: I have your letter of July 28th announcing the completion of preliminary organization work of the Embargo Conference and I am glad they are progressing with your enterprise.

I am not, however, able to give my consent to become a member of the national board. I have uniformly declined to join any organization for any purpose however much as I may approve it. I have no time that I can give to the work of management and I do not like to be responsible in whole or in part for what others may do.

As you know, I am willing to do all I can in my position as United States Senator and all that is possible as the publisher of the World-Herald to do about an embargo on the exportation of arms and ammunition.

I believe the sentiment in favor of an embargo is growing. I notice it among the religious element as a moral issue, and I believe it is growing in the South partly out of resentment because of the interference with the trade in cotton. At the time my amendment to the shipping bill providing for an embargo on arms and ammunition came to a vote in the Senate I got very little support from Southern Senators, and I believe the case would be far different today if the matter came to a vote.

Yours truly,

G. M. HITCHCOCK,
United States Senator

Here is another letter dated August 16, to W. R. McDonald, Secretary American Embargo Conference, Chicago, Ill., from Senator John D. Works. [Reading:]

BIELASKI EXHIBIT No. 76.

MY DEAR MR. McDONALD: I am just in receipt of your favor of the 11th instant, informing me of the objects and purposes of the American Embargo Conference and asking me to become a member of the national board of advisors.

I am very earnestly in sympathy with the views and objects and purposes of your conference. I have expressed my views on the subject of the exportation of arms and munitions of war to the belligerent nations pretty frankly in a speech made by me in Pasadena, California, before the Commercial Law League. I have taken the liberty of sending you a copy of a newspaper containing my speech in full. From it you will see that I am in sympathy with your movement but I have made it a rule not to connect myself in any way with any organization that is seeking legislation through Congress or the object of which is to influence Members of Congress in any direction.

That rule must prevent my connecting myself with your organization as you request.

Sincerely yours,

JOHN D. WORKS,
United States Senator

Here is another letter, of August 28, 1916, to McDonald, from Senator Works. [Reading:]

BIELASKI EXHIBIT No. 77.

MY DEAR MR. McDONALD: I think the sentiment in this country against the exportation of munitions of war to the belligerent nations is much stronger and more widespread than is generally supposed. I had expected that there would be much opposition on the part of its members to the speech that I delivered before the Commercial Law League at Pasadena. On the contrary, the speech was well received, no opposing sentiment was expressed, by unanimous vote I was made an honorary member of the league and the speech was ordered printed in pamphlet form at the expense of the league—something that had never been done before, I was informed by the president.

I have met with many people and have received letters from others who agree with me fully on that subject. I have not come in contact with very many of the leading citizens of Los Angeles in dealing with this question but I am giving you the names of a few persons whom you might communicate with and who, no doubt, could give you the names of others who feel as we do. They are—

Senator KING. Mr. Chairman, I feel that this committee should be exceedingly careful not to do any injustice to any innocent person or any person not directly involved in this examination. This letter evidently refers to the names of a number of individuals living in Los Angeles to whom the writer states communication might be made. There is nothing to indicate that those parties actually were in sympathy with this movement or that they did anything to advance the cause of these propagandists.

Unless there is something subsequently to be offered that would connect those individuals with this propaganda, I would feel that it was rather unfair to put their names into the record.

Senator OVERMAN. I wish to make this investigation impersonal if possible. I do not want it to be a personal investigation. I want to make it impersonal as far as possible. Unless it can be shown that these persons have some connection with the propaganda, I think Senator King is right. What do you think, Senator Nelson?

Senator NELSON. I think that is right as to the names, but I think the letter should go in.

Senator OVERMAN. Yes; there is no objection to that.

Mr. BIELASKI. The remainder of the letter is as follows:

The Los Angeles Times, one of the leading papers of Los Angeles, has declared editorially very strongly in favor of an embargo on munitions of war. The Los Angeles Examiner, another of the leading papers, has taken strong grounds in the same way, and so have the Los Angeles and the Los Angeles Express. So that, as far as the newspapers are concerned, all of the leading journals are in favor of an embargo.

The difficulty is that the politicians, including Members of Congress, have not the moral courage to stand up against the powerful influences that are profiting by the exportation of war materials. If they could be made to see that the great majority of the American people are opposed to the exportation of munitions of war, as I believe they are, there would be a revolution of sentiment and a change of action on the part of public officials.

I wish you every success in your efforts to bring out this sentiment and to establish the fact that the people are opposed to our efforts to continue the war by furnishing the needed materials to carry on the war.

Sincerely yours,

JOHN D. WORKS,
United States Senator.

Senator OVERMAN. I want to ask you where you got that paper?

Mr. BIELASKI. That is a question, Senator, which I think, for reasons which will be apparent to you, I would not want to answer or say anything which would in any way reveal the activities of the Bureau of Investigation.

Senator OVERMAN. That is a good excuse, but I would like to know whether that was ever in the hands of Mr. Albert or Von Bernstorff?

Mr. BIELASKI. It was in the hands of Albert. If you would to look at the original, you can see Mr. Albert's initials on it.

Senator KING. I make this suggestion: That when any witness testifying, and the names of individuals appear, those names be submitted to the committee before they are put in the record.

Senator OVERMAN. Yes. They will be submitted to the chairman and I will submit them to the committee to determine whether or not they shall appear in the record.

Senator KING. Yes; I think they should be submitted to the chairman before they go into the record.

Senator OVERMAN. Govern yourself accordingly, Mr. Bielaski, unless you can connect them up by some other evidence which you have.

Mr. BIELASKI. I do not know. That is such a minor point in the matter that we never made any effort to follow that up.

We have had the entire files of the American Embargo Conference with the correspondence, and just what was written to those people undoubtedly; but it is such a small matter that I could not say a word about it.

Here is a sample card which was sent to various points [reading]

BIELASKI EXHIBIT No. 78.

[American Embargo Conference, Chicago, Ill.]

We, the undersigned voters, hereby declare ourselves strongly in favor of an embargo on munitions of war and pledge our support to this cause when the demand is made at the next session of Congress. ——— Congressional District of the State of Pennsylvania.

This one happens to be for the State of Pennsylvania.

I might say, in regard to reading that letter which was referred to a moment ago, that I read it with the understanding that it had already been published.

Senator OVERMAN. It has already been in the papers?

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes; that is my understanding of it, Senator.

I do not know whether you are interested in having samples of what this embargo conference sent out or not.

Senator OVERMAN. You can put them in the record, and we will read them.

Senator NELSON. The literature they sent out.

Mr. BIELASKI. The names?

Senator NELSON. The names of those who signed the letters.

Senator KING. But the pamphlets and arguments in favor of the embargo—I should not feel that we ought to encumber the record with them.

Senator OVERMAN. No; I think they may be left out.

Senator NELSON. But these letters and telegrams, it seems to me ought to go in.

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes; I will give those to the reporter to be put in the record.

The embargo conference also sent out large numbers of circulars in German, of which there are translations.

Senator KING. With reference to these pamphlets and leaflets, which are arguments, I take it, in favor of the view for which the writer was contending, there may be some of them here that should go into the record. I suggest that Maj. Humes look them over very carefully, and if there is any point in these pamphlets and leaflets that is illuminating, or that he thinks is essential, he shall give it to the reporter and have it inserted.

Senator OVERMAN. Yes. Maj. Humes, will you look those over and see what you think of them?

Maj. HUMES. Yes.

Mr. BIELASKI. Here are some other pamphlets, Senator, sent out in German, attached. These are only some of them. There are quite a lot of them.

Senator KING. Mr. Chairman, the one by Dr. Hugo Gerhard, in German, and the translation, I would like to see go into the record.

Senator OVERMAN. Very well; that may be put in.

(The document referred to is here printed in the record, as follows:)

BIELASKI EXHIBIT No. 79.

For Real Humanity.

For Honest Neutrality.

For Speedy Peace.

[American Embargo Conference. Dr. Hermann Gerhard, room 905, 139 N. Clark St. Tel. Randolph 3189.]

CHICAGO, [Date of the Post Mark.].

DEAR SIR: The Embargo movement is growing day by day and is spreading to all points of the compass to the most remote part of the United States during the short time the American Embargo Conference had existed. The signed ballots are pouring in to our office from all sides.

All this is a clear proof:

1. That we have entered upon the right path.
2. That this movement is a distinctly popular one.

But one thing is necessary! The threads which have been spun in this way through the whole territory of the United States must be woven together into a close organization.

In every city, in every village, in every township, a local embargo committee of three or five members should be formed with which we at the national office at Chicago can be in constant communication, to which we can send the necessary campaign literature, and which comes forward first of all, as soon as Congress is opened, at a definite time, either by telegrams or letters to the representatives in all Congressional districts, to exert the necessary pressure upon the gentlemen at Washington. Furthermore, this committee should see to it inside its own district that the papers (both English and German) accept for publication the Embargo articles sent to them by us.

If the papers should object we will show the committee the ways and means (through advertising patronage, etc.) to attain the object in spite of them.

If we actively organize in this manner so that when the signal is given we can hammer at all points, then, considering our connection with the ballot campaign, we are sure of success.

So be up and at work German-American: We need in every village, in every city, only three determined men to stand guard and the cause of true humanity and honest neutrality will be triumphant, Columbias shield of honor will again beam clear and bright.

Will you please inform me immediately as soon as you have found these men who are ready to form such an Embargo committee, and send me their exact addresses, that I may always be in position to keep this committee informed concerning the Embargo movement.

With German greetings,

DR. HERM. GERHARD,
Leader of the German Division of the American Embargo Conference.

Mr. BIELASKI. The State Department made public some time ago the following telegram from Count Bernstorff to the foreign office in Berlin, which was sent in September, 1916:

BIELASKI EXHIBIT No. 80.

September 15th. With reference to report A. N. two hundred and sixty-six of May tenth, nineteen sixteen. The Embargo Conference in regard to which earlier fruitful cooperation Dr. Hale can give information, is just about to enter upon a vigorous campaign to secure a majority in both houses of Congress favorable to Germany and requests further support. There is no possibility of our being compromised. Request telegraphic reply.

Under date of January 22, 1917, Mr. Bernstorff sent to the foreign office the following communication, which has been made public by the State Department:

BIELASKI EXHIBIT No. 81.

I request authority to pay out up to $50,000 in order as on former occasion to influence Congress through the organization you know of, which can perhaps prevent war. I am beginning in the meantime to act accordingly. In the above circumstances a public official German declaration in favor of Ireland is highly desirable, in order to gain the support of Irish influence here.

Senator KING. Have you any reply in your files to the telegram from Bernstorff to the foreign office in September, 1916?

Mr. BIELASKI. No, sir.

Senator KING. All right. Proceed.

Mr. BIELASKI. I have one other message here furnished to us by the State Department, which has not been made public, and which I will read. It is connected with a number of other things, but mentions the embargo conference also. It is from Washington to Berlin, November 1, 1916 [reading]:

BIELASKI EXHIBIT No. 82.

Despatch from Washington to Berlin November 1, 1916.

As you will have learnt from my previous reports, we have since the LUSITANIA case endeavored to wind up all the so-called German propaganda, and especially to get rid of all dubious individuals. I can now say with a good conscience that we are no longer compromised. Some of the old affairs still hang on, but are more or less settled, although they will cause some further expenditure.

At the beginning of the war many things were undertaken by the Dernburg Propaganda which would never have been undertaken if we could have seen that the war would be so long; because nothing can for long be kept secret in America. Since the LUSITANIA case we have strictly confined ourselves to such propaganda as cannot hurt us if it becomes known. The sole exception is perhaps the Peace propaganda, which has cost the largest amount, but which also has been the most successful.

Latterly I have been using the Embargo Association and some entirely reliable private intermediaries. I have also made use of the German University League, founded since the war. This has done its best to take the place of the German (?)—

There is a word which can not be translated.

Association, which has been of no use during the war on account of its management. The League has published under my collaboration an excellent collection of reports on the war, which will be of great service to our cause. The support which I have already given the League is entered in the First Quarter's account for 1916, item No. 208. On the occasion of later installments to them, I will refer to this report.

I ask that this be sanctioned.

(Signed)

BERNSTORFF.

The reference there to the American Embargo Conference is brief—"latterly I have been using the Embargo Association."

Senator STERLING. What is the league referred to?

Mr. BIELASKI. We will have considerable to say about that later, if you are interested, Senator.

Senator STERLING. Yes.

Mr. BIELASKI. Another communication is one addressed on December 21, 1915, an English translation of a decoded cipher addressed to the ambassador, German Embassy, Washington [reading]:

BIELASKI EXHIBIT No. 83.

CHICAGO, ILL., Dec. 21, 1915.

IMPERIAL GERMAN CONSULATE,

J. Nr. 17923/15

The Embargo Conference, regarding whose activities Councillor Albert possess a detailed written account, has, considering the conditions, rendered service worthy of acknowledgment. The question now arises whether it is to be dissolved in January, or whether it is to be continued until presidential candidates are named, that is not until summer. This would require an assistance to the amount of 6 to 7 thousand dollars. The contemplated continuation of the enterprise would, according to my opinion be favorable to the entire German vote, and would facilitate that of Deputy Vollmer.

Kindly indicate if there will be any chance that such a sum might be used in the manner as above mentioned. The same of course could be done in such a manner that official cooperation would not be apparent.

(Signed) REISWITZ.

That is signed "Reiswitz," who was the consul at Chicago.

Maj. HUMES. In that connection, Mr. Bielaski, you will remember that there were some exhibits with reference to Congressman Vollmer collected from the United States Brewers' Association files that were submitted?

Mr. BIELASKI. I think he was indicted.

Mr. O'BRIAN. He was tried and the jury disagreed.

Mr. BIELASKI. He was tried for violation of the espionage act after we got into the war.

Senator NELSON. Yes; that is my recollection. He was indicted.

Mr. BIELASKI. This letter was sent to Albert for his information.

There was also a draft of a communication, which is in our possession, which we have good reason to believe was prepared by Albert, dated March, 1915 [reading]:

BIELASKI EXHIBIT No. 84.

After reconsideration and consultation with Dr. Hale, of the Press Bureau, I withdraw my suggestion respecting a German note on supply of arms. Only chance for embargo on export of arms if it is done purely for American interests. Emphasis of the German interest, by Germany, might even be harmful at the present time.

December 28, 1915, there is what purports to be a letter addressed to the ambassador at Washington by Albert, which reads:

BIELASKI EXHIBIT No. 85.

NEW YORK, December 28, 1915.

In reply to your favor of December 26, 1915.

J. Nr. A 8442.

Although I agree with your Excellency that it is expedient to restrict propaganda to the extreme limit, if not to suspend it entirely, nevertheless I raise the question whether it is advisable to allow an existing organization to drop which possibly can be of use to us in a critical moment. Everything considered 6-7000 dollars plays no decisive role. For this reason I should like to recommend, as I have already informed Prince Hatzfeldt over the telephone without mentioning the subject, that we follow the proposal of Reisswitz. I am fully conscious of the fact that an organization which ostensibly numbers such rich people among its members, should really be in a position to raise the expenses itself. Experience, however, has taught us, that this principle does not hold at the present time.

I enclose the material mentioned by Reisswitz and request a reply in regard to the decision reached.

To his Excellence, The Imperial Ambassador, Sir Count von BERNSTORFF,
Washington, D. C.

George Sylvester Viereck, it might be mentioned in passing, furnished propaganda material to the embargo conference to be distributed.

The next activities of the embargo conference that excited great attention were the sending in of a tremendous number of telegrams to Congressmen and Senators from all over the country.

The embargo conference submitted to people forms of telegrams to be sent, and of course the identity of language immediately aroused the suspicion of every one here who received them. Here is a sheet containing samples [reading]:

BIELASKI EXHIBIT No. 86.

Please sign one of these telegrams and have voters each sign one telegram. Cross off the telegrams that are not signed and then hold this sheet until we wire you to telegraph it. Then please send it without delay.

These are a series of draft telegrams, 1916; night letters:

BIELASKI EXHIBIT No. 87.

Your constituents urge and expect you to stand like a rock against the passing frenzy of insane and criminal folly on the part of the small portion of interested persons who are clamoring for war. We want peace. Nothing warrants any other action.

The second proposed telegram reads:

BIELASKI EXHIBIT No. 88.

If warlike rumors coming from Washington are true will you let me reassure you that the great majority of your constituents stand for peace, believe war now unnecessary and uncalled for, and will resent being participated [sic] into the European conflict.

Senator NELSON. What is the date of this?

Mr. BIELASKI. This is just a draft of the telegrams, Senator. We can give you the dates they were actually sent.

Senator NELSON. They were sent immediately before we declared war?

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes.

Here is another one.

BIELASKI EXHIBIT No. 89.

As today's reports indicate that this country is likely to be rushed into the European war, let me assure you that I and your constituents who will be the real sufferers will bitterly resent anything but calm action and calm action means peace continuing.

Senator STERLING. Those are forms of telegrams sent out by the Embargo Conference?

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes; with instructions to sign them and hold them until they got the word to send them.

Senator NELSON. We were flooded with them just before we declared war. I have a bundle of postal cards and letters signed.

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes; you have, and a great many Senators and Congressmen sent to our department the original telegram, so that there is no question about their having been sent.

Senator OVERMAN. This was a telegram framed up to be sent out. Who framed them?

Mr. BIELASKI. The American Embargo Conference.

Mr. O'BRIAN. Of Chicago?

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes; they had a New York office finally.

Those particular telegrams, or forms of telegrams, that I read are supposed to be addressed to Mr. Stephens—this particular set. These are typical sets. They were addressed and sent to all Congressmen and Senators—to Senator Reed, to Congressman Hamilton—I think they are all alike, and one set is sufficient, I suppose.

Senator NELSON. They had two or three kinds?

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes; there is a set of seven kinds here.

Senator NELSON. Yes.

Mr. BIELASKI. You sent quite a strong letter, Senator, at the time you received yours.

Senator NELSON. Yes; I think I called the department's attention to it.

Mr. BIELASKI. You did, repeatedly.

Here are various other circulars they sent out. Here is a copy of the campaign book of the American Embargo Conference, giving its purposes, its work, its reasons, plan, and so forth.

These are copies of telegrams, showing the people who were interested in it—Mr. Monett, who was at one time, I think, attorney general for Ohio, and who was indicted in connection with the activities of Rintelin in Labor's National Peace Council. He was interested, as shown by his correspondence and telegrams here.

Senator STERLING. Did they send out a form of telegram from Chicago in regard to the embargo? These forms you have been reading relate to the declaration of war.

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes. I put in the form of telegram they sent.

They also sent out a form to Congressmen, which I think I have here, asking them to declare immediately how they stood on the embargo proposition. I think I will come to that in a moment.

Senator OVERMAN. That must have taken a great deal of money—that great organization—and it only shows so far about $7,000.

Mr. BIELASKI. Here is a photographic copy of a form, which was sent out to be sent in. This copy says:

The Congressman in my district is Frank Buchanan, Seventh Congressional District. I understand his attitude on the question of an embargo to be—

And then there is a line to be filled in, and this fellow says:

Emphatically in favor of an embargo.

It is signed G. Theiss; address, Route 1; Roselle, Ill.

Then here is a photographic copy of a form on the letterhead of the American Embargo Conference, reading as follows:

BIELASKI EXHIBIT No. 90.

DEAR SIR: As the Conference is very anxious to keep an accurate and up-to-date minute check on the attitude of the Congressmen, on the question of embargo we are asking you to fill out the report attached to this letter and return the same to us at the earliest possible moment.

Many of the Congressmen have given us their attitude others refuse to commit themselves, but we wish to have the reports of the voters themselves on what they believe is the position of their Representatives in Congress.

Though you may have reported on this before, we earnestly urge you to make this new report so that we may have the latest advice possible. In so doing you will be greatly aiding the success of the campaign.

Very sincerely yours,

THE AMERICAN EMBARGO CONFERENCE

Then follows the form of the report. This is another place where the writer fills in:

BIELASKI EXHIBIT No. 91.

Report: The Congressman of my district is James Buchanan. I understand his attitude on the question of an embargo to be favorable. His position on the war question is well known, and needs no explanation to you.

Signed, Albert S. Olins; address, some town in Illinois.

There are a number of other copies of reports from different voters that have been sent in here.

Here is a photographic copy of a letter dated January 5, 1917, written on the letterhead of the House of Representatives, reading as follows:

BIELASKI EXHIBIT No. 92.

MY DEAR SIR: In acknowledgement of yours of recent date, I wish to assure you that I am heartily in accord with House Resolution 377, and will do what I can to secure the passage of this resolution or other legislation that will prohibit the shipment of munitions of war from our ports to belligerent nations.

With good wishes, I am

Very truly yours,

FRANK BUCHANAN

Here is a letter to Jacobsen, acting head of the American embargo conference, from Congressman Buchanan, dated August 21, 1917, reading as follows:

BIELASKI EXHIBIT No. 93.

In response to your favor of July 29th addressed to me at the New Willard Hotel, Washington, D. C., which, due to the delay in forwarding, has just come to my attention, will say that I am very much interested in the aim of the American Embargo Conference and the results it seeks to accomplish. I shall be glad to lend my support to the conference in every way possible but prefer that my name should not be included in those composing the National Board.

Regretting the unavoidable delay in responding to your communication, I am

Yours very truly,

FRANK BUCHANAN

There are other letters here written by Congressman Buchanan.

Here are a few original telegrams which were sent in. For instance, this is to Hon. John A. Key, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C., dated Dayton, Ohio, April 25, 1917 [reading]:

BIELASKI EXHIBIT No. 94.

Your constituents joining with me in sending this message are deeply alarmed by rumors that this country is near to being plunged into the European war. You know your constituents want peace and we emphatically urge that you so express our sentiments: We know we can depend upon you.

ADOLPH BLECK.

Then there are two or three other telegrams showing that they were actually sent upon the same form. Large numbers of them were sent. I suppose there is no use in putting the rest of these in.

Here is a copy of the campaign book they got out. Perhaps Maj. Humes would like to look these over.

Senator KING. Yes. That would be a good idea.

Mr. BIELASKI. Here is a pamphlet they circulated, entitled "The embargo and Congress;" and another one, "Liberty or License," and Hale's famous pamphlet, sent out by the hundreds of thousands, "Thou Shalt Not Kill," and another one: "The views of three Americans," and another one; "The embargo."

Senator NELSON. Put in those that are most material.

Mr. BIELASKI. Here is a speech made by the late Senator Paul Husting, of Wisconsin, which, of course, is in the record.

Senator NELSON. Yes; he took that matter up.

Mr. BIELASKI. In the forms of the telegrams, and what he received, and so on.

Senator STERLING. He showed them up.

Senator NELSON. He showed up the whole thing.

Mr. BIELASKI. The American Embargo Conference then sent out a telegram saying:

Stop sending telegrams. Continue getting signatures. Hold for gigantic petition, or send us when blanks are filled.

That date is April 27, 1916.

Senator NELSON. Senator Husting's speech stopped the telegrams?

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes.

Here are three original telegrams sent telling them to stop sending the telegrams.

Senator KING. The Senate, some of these days, should pause long enough to pay a deserved tribute to Senator Husting, a strong and courageous American.

Senator OVERMAN. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. In that connection, Mr. Bielaski, have you a record showing who paid for these telegrams in the various localities?

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes. They were paid for by the American Embargo Conference. They admit the payment of them.

Maj. HUMES. Were all of them paid that way?

Mr. BIELASKI. Not all of them. Some of the individuals paid for them. The great bulk of them, however, were paid for by the conference. Individuals in a great many instances paid for them themselves.

Maj. HUMES. It is my understanding that some other elements paid for a certain number of them that came from Chicago. Have you any record of that?

Mr. BIELASKI. I do not know what you mean; no. I think, of course, that the German Government paid for them, in the long run.

Senator OVERMAN. You have no evidence showing how much money the German Government contributed, if any, to this embargo conference?

Mr. BIELASKI. Nothing except such as I have introduced in evidence, which is not specific as to the amount.

Senator OVERMAN. It is now 1 o'clock, and we will adjourn until half past 2.

(Whereupon, at 1 o'clock p. m., a recess was taken until 2.30 p. m.)

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The subcommittee, pursuant to the taking of the recess, met at 2.30 o'clock p. m.

TESTIMONY OF MR. A. BRUCE BIELASKI—Resumed.

Senator OVERMAN. The committee will come to order. Proceed Mr. Bielaski.

Mr. BIELASKI. Mr. Chairman, in discussing the American Embargo Conference this morning I omitted to read the translation of a rather important letter from the German consul at Chicago, Mr. Reisswitz, dated July 22, 1915. It is particularly interesting as showing how early the German Government was involved in the American Embargo Conference, right at its organization—its inception.

BIELASKI EXHIBIT No. 95.

CHICAGO, July 22, 1915.

YOUR EXCELLENCY: I have received your very welcome letter, together with the newspaper clipping. I will see to it that the question of the part which American army officers are playing in the production of munitions and arms for our enemies is laid before the coming mass meeting of the embargo conference and in order to further this purpose I have turned your newspaper article over to the persons by whom it will be considered.

Everything else concerning the proposed embargo conference you will please find in the enclosed copy of the report to the Ambassador. A change has, however, come up, as the mass meeting will have to be postponed on account of there being insufficient time for the necessary preparations. It will probably be held here in about two weeks.

Among others the following have agreed to cooperate: Senator Hitchcock, Congressman Buchanan, William Bayard Hale, of New York, and the well known pulpit orator, Dr. Aker (born an Englishman), from San Francisco.

Hitchcock seemed to be very strong for the plan. He told our representative at a conference in Omaha: "If this matter is organized in the right way it will sweep the United States."

You note he says "our representative."

For your confidential information I would further inform you that the leadership of the movement thus far lies in the hands of two gentlemen (one in Detroit and one in Chicago).

There is nothing to show who those men were, except from general information as to the management and activities of the organization. We believe Jacobsen, of Chicago, who was convicted of sending agents abroad in behalf of the Germans intended to go to India, and was sentenced, I think, to the penitentiary for a considerable term, was one, and Mr. Karl E. Schmidt, a very wealthy German-American of Detroit, a tanner, was the other. The list of voluntary contributions made to the American Embargo Conference will show that Karl Schmidt was by far the largest individual contributor of money.

It is also true that he, in the month of January, 1917, I think, was in New York City, at the Claridge Hotel, according to the testimony of men whom we have examined, where he met Dr. Fuehr, the treasurer and German head of the press bureau; and while there is no evidence to show that he did in that way receive any German funds, there was the opportunity for him to have them from the man who was disbursing them.

Speaking of these two gentlemen, he says:

who are firmly resolved to work toward the end that the German community, which, of course, will be with us without further urging, shall above all things remain in the background, and that the movement, to all outward appearances, shall have a purely American character. I have known both the gentlemen very well for a long time and know that personal interest does not count with them; the results will bring their own reward.

For the purposes of the inner organization, to which we attribute particular importance, we have assured ourselves of the co-operation of the local Democratic boss, Roger C. Sullivan, and McDonald, the latter of the Chicago American. Sullivan was formerly leader of the Wilson campaign and is a deadly enemy of Wilson, as the latter did not keep his word to make him a Senator; therefore, principally, the sympathy for our cause.

We well know that the task is great and the time is very short; notwithstanding, however, we have to consider that the present moment is very auspicious, as in the Middle West, the West and even the South the opinion is gaining more and more momentum that the German requests are not without merit, and that at last something must be done to put a stop to the English encroachments, which are seriously jeopardizing the business and industries of this country.

A pertinent article from the local Hearst paper Examiner is respectfully inclosed herewith. I do not believe it is going too far to presume that, inasmuch as a crisis is developing for the near future in the German-American negotiations, public opinion in the United States, with the exception of that in the East, which will, of course, remain irretrievably pro-English, will turn more and more against the encroachments of England.

I must refrain from communicating the above facts in my report to the Ambassador, as the matter could be too easily compromised thereby. Perhaps you will find an opportunity to inform Count von Bernstorff verbally. As soon as the matter has first gained more headway, I believe Mr. von Alvensleben, who has taken part in the whole development here, will come to New York in order to inform the Ambassador fully regarding prevailing frame of mind here as well as regarding the movement, provided, however, that is desired.

Mr. von Alvensleben will also at that time present another plan with reference to the purchase of the Wright aeroplane factories in Dayton, Ohio, which, in my opinion hold great possibilities for us. With some $50,000 we would acquire a control over the whole Wright patents, and thereby over the aeroplane factories in the whole United States, for about one year. We would thereby probably be placed in the position of being able to prevent the greatest part of the export of flying machines from the United States.

But, aside from this, the plan, so far as can be foreseen, appears to be a lucrative financial undertaking. We could then, in case we so desired, take over the Wright works on the ground of the contracts to be carried out.

At the present time there is pending, so I have heard, an action, Wright vs. Curtis, in which Wright complains of default in the use of his patents. The action will come before the Supreme Court in Washington in September. In the first two trials Wright won, and it is to be expected with quite a good deal of certainty, that the last trial will be decided in his favor also. Whether other possibilities may not present themselves by which Curtiss can carry on his business is, in view of the flexibility of the local patent laws, at least questionable. Regarding this question the opinion of an experienced patent attorney of Washington or New York should be first secured.

We previously only contemplated the acquiring of an option for the purchase of the Wright Company inclusive patents for some three or four weeks which, with the assistance of one of Wright's intimate confidential men and a local business man, we will be able to do without cost. On the basis of the option we would then be in a position to examine carefully into the matter and then to make our decision. All other details, some of which are a little complicated, can be worked out at an oral conference.

So also the copies of the both judgments in the lower and higher courts have gone in. These, as also all other documents necessary for the determination of the matter, Mr. von Alvensleben will bring with him personally.

Please be kind enough to let me know as soon as possible whether the Ambassador is interested in the matter, and, if so, whether he will see Mr. von Alvensleben. With best wishes, your devoted

P. REISWITZ.

That shows that the German Government was concerned not only in financing this organization after it was established, but in the organization and direction of it, particularly through Messrs. Jacobsen and Schmidt, from the outset.

At the time that Mr. Karl Schmidt was in New York at the Hotel Claridge, he was consulted, according to testimony largely of Mr. Claussen, as to the buying of a press association named the American Press Association, of which Mr. Courtland Smith was president.

Senator STERLING. Before proceeding with that, may I not call your attention to a statement in the letter just read, and that is a statement in regard to the inclosure from one of the Hearst papers. Do you have the inclosure yourself?

Mr. BIELASKI. I do not know whether I have or not, Senator. You see I selected these papers, and I would have to look through the rest of the files to see whether I have it or not. I do not think I have it with me.

Senator STERLING. You need not take the time to look for it now.

Mr. BIELASKI. The New York World, August 15, 1915, printed a memorandum [reading]:

BIELASKI EXHIBIT No. 96.

I have obtained a thirty-day option, without cost to me, of a controlling interest of the American Press Association, a $1,600,000 corporation, with main office in New York, and seventeen branch offices and plants in the principal cities of the United States. The price is $900,000. One hundred thousand dollars more would have to be available for the installation of a news service by means of tickers, the patents for which are controlled by the American Press Association. There are only two news tickers suitable for this work, the other being controlled by the Central News Company, which is an English corporation.

This memorandum showed that it had been submitted to Dr. Albert's office.

Mr. Claussen first denied that he was involved in this matter, but subsequently stated to agents of the department that he did secure this option from Mr. Courtland Smith. So far as I know Mr. Smith has not denied it.

Senator OVERMAN. Has anything been done with Claussen?

Mr. BIELASKI. No, sir. The fact, however, that in 1917 there was a discussion as to the advisability of obtaining control of this same press association is interesting; and, as of possible interest, and showing further the way this was considered, is the following memorandum:

BIELASKI EXHIBIT No. 97.

MEMORANDUM.

1. The American Press Association places its whole organization at the disposal of Mr. H. F. Albert, in order to spread pro-German news or to suppress anti-German news or to make pro-German propaganda in any other way compatible with its organization. It is understood that this arrangement will keep within the limit of sound business principles, i. e. that the pro-German propaganda shall not be more accentuated than compatible with not diminishing the profits of the organization. It must absolutely be avoided that the American Press Association becomes a recognized pro-German organization.

2. This arrangement to be valid from July 15th until October 31st, 1915. Within this time Mr. Albert has to declare whether he will make use of the option to buy the control of the aforesaid association by paying the amount of $900,000.

3. As recompensation for extending the option to the 31st of October 1915 and placing the good will of the Association at the disposal of Mr. Albert, the aforesaid Association will receive the sum of payable the first of each month. Mr. Albert will designate his delegates who will confirm, if necessary, in daily conferences with Mr. Smith the general policy to be pursued and the practical steps to be taken.

4. If the option is executed the sum stipulated under No. 3 will be deducted from the final payment to be made under this contract.

Attached thereto is a statement: "Assets and Liabilities, June 1, 1915, American Press Association."

Senator NELSON. Who were the controlling men of that association?

Mr. BIELASKI. I think Courtland Smith was the head, and I assume he controlled it. I do not know that, however.

Maj. HUMES. Senator, you remember that is the association that there was a discussion of in the brewers' records that have been filed in the case?

Senator NELSON. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. And they were considering the advisability of acquiring it about the same time.

Senator NELSON. Yes.

Mr. BIELASKI. Nothing came, in 1915, of course, of this matter, as is apparent from this letter, written in New York, July 15, 1915, to Mr. M. B. Claussen, 30 East 42nd Street, New York City:

BIELASKI EXHIBIT No. 98.

MY DEAR MR. CLAUSSEN:

I am very much obliged to you for having taken the trouble of securing an option for the controlling interest of the American Press Association. To my regret, however, the party, authoritative in this matter, has declined to buy that interest or to place at my disposal funds for extending the option and for procuring the good will of the American Press Association for six weeks or longer.

I have received the best impression of the leading personality of the Association, Mr. Smith, and feel sure that our interests would be well cared for in his hands. However, I am convinced of the impossibility, especially when the press is concerned, to keep a matter secret in this country, and if it becomes known that the Association is controlled by German interests it would never be a success. At the present animosity against Germany, it would even mean risking the whole enterprise. If, on the other hand, we operate the news service in such a cautious manner that the German interest cannot very well be discovered it will not be of much use at all. At any rate, it will never be worth $900,000 dollars or more than 4 million marks.

Although I fully recognize your far-seeing efforts in this matter, I think that, under the circumstances, it will be better to acquire or perhaps establish a news service after the war.

Believe me, dear Mr. Claussen,

Yours very truly.

Senator NELSON. This Courtland Smith is a brother-in-law of Arthur Brisbane, is he not?

Mr. BIELASKI. I do not know, sir.

Capt. LESTER. Mr. Brisbane testified that he was, the other day.

Senator NELSON. Yes.

Senator OVERMAN. He is not the Smith that you spoke of, in Detroit?

Mr. BIELASKI. No; that is a name with an entirely different spelling. The Mr. Schmidt in Detroit is S-c-h-m-i-d-t.

Senator NELSON. A German Smith—his name is Karl, is it not?

Mr. BIELASKI. Karl E. Schmidt; yes.

Certain notes appearing in Dr. Fuehr's diary that I have, have been suggested as of interest to the committee.

The first one is Friday, January 14.

Senator NELSON. What year?

Mr. BIELASKI. 1916. [Reading:]

Itzeln and McGuire called; the latter brought his new book, What Germany could do for America. It is becoming more and more evident to me that we should not worry about an official (?) embargo, which will be after all unobtainable, but a prohibition of traveling by Americans on British vessels, since submarine warfare will probably be taken up again in the war zone.

That was January 14, 1916, and shows Dr. Fuehr's belief in resumption of the submarine warfare.

Senator NELSON. There was a propaganda taken up on that question, about not having Americans traveling on foreign ships?

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes.

On Sunday, January 16, 1916, he says:

Dined with Mr. and Mrs. Hale.

H. thinks the opinion of a large number of Senators favorable to a general embargo.

Saturday, January 22, he says:

"Special opera (German Press Club patrons). Had box, invited Mr. and Mrs. Hale," and others.

Again, on Tuesday, March 14, 1916:

"Evening; dinner at Viereck's; others present, Consul General von Huber, Dr. and Mrs. Hale," and some other people.

Senator STERLING. The McGuire referred to there is the same McGuire that you referred to yesterday in the testimony?

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes; clearly, from the reference to that book, of which he was the author; James K. McGuire, connected with the Irish propaganda.

Just briefly, in order to make the record somewhat complete, not because it is of special interest, the German Government was interested in the International Press Exchange, which is interesting. This letter is dated October 4, 1915. [Reading:]

BIELASKI EXHIBIT No. 99.

Mr. WALTER S. KAUFMANN,
60 Wall Street, New York City.

DEAR MR. KAUFMANN: We have organized a special cable service to and from Rotterdam. This service is carried on under the name of the "International Press Exchange."

Will you please ask Mr. R. why the Evening Mail does not use this cable service, although it is remarkably neutral in its substance and form and is used by other newspapers. The expense for the service is so small that this question can not be of any importance.

Senator STERLING. The "Mr. R." referred to there is Rumely?

Mr. BIELASKI. I think so; unquestionably.

Senator NELSON. Yes; that is Rumely.

Mr. BIELASKI. In a memorandum submitted to Dr. Albert there are 102 of the leading newspapers and magazines mentioned who have accepted the photographic service of the International Press Exchange and agree to pay $1 for each picture used. That is not significant in so far as any of the papers are concerned, but simply showed that this bureau was trying to spread its pictures. It simply offered to the newspapers pictures which, if they used, were paid for at the rate of $1 each.

A separate list of papers was submitted, 74 in number, as having printed cables, 6 of them paying for them at a regular space rate, and the others receiving them through a syndicate which paid $25 a week for the service.

I now will refer to a letter dated May 20, 1915, addressed to Dr. Georg Barthelme, who was pretty well known in Washington. He was connected with, I think it was, the Cologne Gazette, and got into difficulties down at the Press Club here because of his offensive attitude toward this country, and was a very active collector of press material of a kind useful to Germany. He went back, I think, either with Bernstorff or with a party that went back shortly after, because of some general arrangement whereby newspaper correspondents in Germany and this country were to be allowed to go home, by mutual agreement between the countries.

Senator STERLING. Was he an American citizen?

Mr. BIELASKI. Oh, no; he was a German, and came over here purposely, at the outset of the war, to help German propaganda.

He received a letter from Amsterdam, dated May 20, 1915, from a man named Guenther Thomas, in which he tells of being acquainted with him some time ago, and that he has been made business manager and chief editor in the German Overseas Service Trans-Ocean Limited. He says:

BIELASKI EXHIBIT No. 994.

Up to the present we have been exclusively dependent upon the use of the wireless stations for our service to the United States and South America, which work very irregularly, and are subject to many atmospheric disturbances, and besides are dependent upon the mercy of Americans who are influenced by vacillating sentiment.

I said to myself, that we must finally, somehow, find a way by which we can open up the cable connection over Holland to us, as all the rest are doing. That we have to reckon with the arbitrary power of English, is an after thought which we will have to accept as the others have with the bargain. The main thing is that the English do not discover by whom the service in reality is given, and what its meaning is, that is, it must be so arranged, that it will appear as a bona fide news-service between two newspapers, or syndicates of such. I have just taken care of Holland and, the question now is, if you will be in a position to take care of the American end. That your task is the much more difficult one is obvious, because of the prevailing conditions of this time. We hope and trust that because of your intimate knowledge of the conditions, and your genuine skill, you will be successful in overcoming the difficulties.

I have entered into an agreement with the owner and publisher of the New Amsterdam Courler, published in Rotterdam, that his paper will forward the despatches to the addresses, which will be received from you, and will thus act as go-between for us. It would therefore be necessary, that you offer to an anglo-American paper say, for instance, "Washington Post" or any other, a regular Berlin service as a special service, either for a consideration or without, just as you think expedient, and stipulate as reciprocal terms, the immediate forwarding of the dispatches to you, on account of sending same to Central and South America. I believe it would be best, if one would quietly say, that definite arrangements exist for that, for that could not injure the exclusive use of the dispatches in America—of course the publishing of same in the U. S. must be exclusively reserved for the paper or syndicate in question. These would of course come into question which do not now have a special correspondent in Berlin.

In case it is necessary we will get in touch by telegraph with the Embassy in Washington, through the Foreign Office, and perhaps by that time you will have learned something in this way about the matter. Still I have great doubts if that will be possible. I beg you, in any case, to make some agreement with the Embassy, and especially with the gentleman who forwards our wireless messages to Central and South America. Great obstacles must for a long time have been in the way, in this respect, for the service does not work as clearly as is to be wished, for the interest of the cause. Lately, it has however been much improved. For all that, it is still urgently necessary that the thing should rest in one hand, and handled with care. It is further necessary, that our service, even if it consists solely of wireless telegrams, that it be enlarged through news from America, for instance, through press sentiment favorable to us, for which above all, journalistic vision and experience, as well as knowledge, are the surrounding circumstances.

We would ask you, that in the interest of the cause that you further inform yourself from the competent gentlemen of the Embassy, about the financial side, the different places, which the service reaches, etc., mainly, the most important principle, is to work harmoniously hand in hand with the A. A., especially with the press department under the ministerial Director Hamman and his assistant Legation Secretary Weber, and the same holds good as to Washington.

In case now, you should be successful in establishing the so much desired connection on the American end, then please give me, immediately the signal to begin by the following dispatch: "Nygt Rotterdam. Will you have our telegrams address Here would follow the cable address of the particular paper. Mr. Nygt is the publisher of the "Nieuve Rotterdamsche Courant," who will forward the dispatch to us. We have chosen the form of questions, in order to attract the least possible attention from the English censor, to the matter. It is especially important that the receipt of every dispatch from us is immediately acknowledged to Rotterdam. A form must be agreed upon, with the paper in question, from which perhaps an example of the manner of the acknowledging of the wireless telegram will be given. To cable the number of words is forbidden in itself, because the English censor suspects therein a code or market quotation and will in no case let it go through.

I think I have said in the above, what is to be said for the present. If you will have the kindness to write me always under the cover of Director Nygt, Nieuve Courant, Rotterdam, Witte de Wit Straat 73, what you think of my proposition, I would be very grateful to you. We all work in common, for the good and best of our fatherland.

Then he devotes some time to a discussion of the war situation, about Italy's entrance into the war, and so on, and tells about how their new class is coming on.

He says, among other things:

I hope the dear Yankees are becoming reconciled with regard to the Lusitania.

And he sends his regards to Bernstorff.

On June 10, 1915, appears a memorandum apparently by Prince Hatzfeldt of the German Embassy. He says:

BIELASKI EXHIBIT No. 100.

In Mr. Thomas a new person turns up who asserts that he is authorized by the Trans-Ocean Service of the Foreign Office to superintend the further spread of German news. The Imperial Embassy has heard nothing about Mr. Thomas direct from the Foreign Office. It therefore really does not know how far he is really authorized to dispose of imperial moneys. As far as his proposal is concerned, I assume that it is merely a question of a momentary makeshift. As such I have strong objection to the same.

He winds up by saying:

It would be best to say to Dr. Barthelme that the plan does not seem feasible here, the reasons for this will be communicated to the Foreign Office in a safe way.

Mr. Claussen, however, in a letter addressed to Albert July 7, 1915, says:

BIELASKI EXHIBIT No. 100½.

In regard to letter from the German Oversea Service to Dr. George Barthelme, I beg to say that the New York American, Sun and World have agreed to take a service.

The other papers no doubt will follow their example.

I have sent today a cable the copy of which I attach. This will start the service, but I desire to impress upon you that if they fail to send good and reliable news of value to the Press here, this service will be of very little value.

I would like to suggest that if I can get 40 or 50 papers throughout the United States to use this service it would be a good idea for me to send one or two men abroad, one to Holland and the other to Berlin.

I will send you a memoranda as soon as other papers indicate a desire to receive the service.

Yours very truly,

M. B. CLAUSSEN.

The inclosure is dated New York, July 7, 1915. It is as follows:

BIELASKI EXHIBIT No. 101.

Nygt. Rotterdam.

Will you have your telegrams addressed International Press Exchange, 30 East 42nd St.

Which is in accordance with the form suggested in Thomas's letter.

Under date of July 9, 1915, what purports to be a copy of a letter is addressed to Prince Hatzfeldt from Albert. It is as follows:

BIELASKI EXHIBIT No. 102.

Enclosed herewith I return you the Ambassador's letter of June 6, with the following report:

After mature consideration, I had intended to do everything to find a way to make use of the suggestion made by Mr. Guenther Thomas. I therefore commissioned Mr. Claussen to get in touch with the local papers and ascertain to what degree they would be inclined to use a daily cable service such as was suggested. The "New York American," the "Sun" and the "World" declared themselves as in favor of it. In consequence the cable agreed upon was sent to Thomas. We must now wait and see if the service works well. If it does, we hope to be able to extend it to about 40 or 50 papers in the United States. I will communicate further with you regarding this.

I hope in the course of the next week to have the pleasure of seeing you again. Perhaps you will dine with me some evening at one of the pleasanter "roofgardens."

With friendly greetings,

Always your respectful

The list of papers which was submitted as using that was just five or six, and the ones that were in this syndicate were mostly all very small papers.

Senator NELSON. Have you a list of the men that contributed to the embargo program?

Mr. BIELASKI. The contributors?

Senator NELSON. Yes.

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes; I have one, and will put it in the record.

Senator NELSON. All right.

(The following is a list of the principal subscribers to the American embargo conference:)

BIELASKI EXHIBIT No. 103.

July 20, 1916—Contributions up to date.

Carl E. Schmidt.....	Detroit, Mich.....	$10,600.00
Donations from New York.....		5,000.00
Geo. Ehret.....	New York.....	3,000.00
Bernard H. Ridder.....	".....	2,550.00
William Boldenweck.....	Chicago.....	1,600.00
Collections by Dr. S.....	New York.....	1,500.00
Dr. O. L. Schmidt.....	Chicago.....	1,500.00
Fred Klein.....	".....	1,250.00
A. W. Huber.....	".....	1,200.00
G. H. Jacobsen.....	".....	1,000.00
Mrs. Carl Buehl.....	".....	1,000.00
The Bayer Company.....	New York.....	1,000.00
R. Pagenstecher.....	".....	1,000.00
Dr. Franz Koempler.....	".....	1,100.00
Collections by Albrecht.....	".....	1,000.00
Donations solicited by G. H. J.....	Chicago.....	1,000.00
Paul Tietgen.....	".....	1,000.00
Dr. Christian Dencker.....	".....	1,000.00
Dr. Henry F. Helmholtz.....	Evanston, Ill.....	1,000.00
F. W. Matthiessen.....	La Salle, Ill.....	1,000.00
Hugo Lieber.....	New York.....	1,000.00
Fritz Worm.....	La Salle, Ill.....	700.00
Dr. Paul Carus.....	".....	650.00
A. B. Steffens.....	Chicago.....	600.00
Henry P. Runkle.....	".....	600.00
Dr. Samuel Amberg.....	".....	500.00
Dr. Alex. C. Wiener.....	".....	500.00
A. R. Hoffmann.....	St. Louis, Mo.....	500.00
E. R. Behrend.....	Erie, Pa.....	500.00
Chas. Hulsman.....	New York.....	500.00
A. L. Peterson.....	Davenport, Iowa.....	500.00
W. P. Almelk.....	New York.....	400.00
Benj. Anderson.....	".....	400.00
T. H. Hinkland.....	".....	400.00
E. Janensch.....	Chicago.....	400.00
F. W. Labahn.....	".....	300.00
Jos. Brennemann.....	La Salle, Ill.....	300.00
E. Roth.....	Peru, Ill.....	300.00
Collections at Cincinnati.....	Cincinnati, Ohio.....	300.00
Simond Lewald.....	New York.....	300.00
F. M. Seiler.....	".....	300.00
Theo. Guienheimer.....	".....	250.00
Henry Bartholmay.....	".....	250.00
Theo. H. Lamprecht.....	".....	250.00
Paul Wenzel.....	".....	500.00
Hugo Fiegel.....	".....	300.00
Collections at Dubuque.....	Dubuque, Iowa.....	221.00
Collections at Waterloo.....	Waterloo, Iowa.....	208.00
Alex. O. Gettler.....	New York.....	200.00
Edward G. Uihlein.....	Chicago.....	200.00
Schoenhofen Brewing Co.....	".....	200.00
Keeley Brewing Co.....	".....	200.00
Grommes & Ullrich.....	".....	200.00
Fritz Von Frantzius.....	".....	200.00
H. A. Langhorst.....	".....	200.00
K. W. Kempf.....	".....	200.00
P. S. Theurer.....	".....	200.00
Geo. S. McConnell.....	".....	200.00
Geo. Engelking.....	".....	200.00

Collections at Cincinnati.....	Cincinnati, Ohio.....	150. 00
Louis Hollweg.....	Indianapolis, Ind.....	200. 00
Collections at Blue Island, Ill.....	126. 75
Dr. F. C. Harnisch.....	Chicago.....	125. 00
G. A. Schnull.....	Indianapolis, Ind.....	100. 00
Chas. H. Issel.....	Cleveland, Ohio.....	100. 00
Fitzger Brewing Co.....	Duluth, Minn.....	100. 00
Hugo Jaeckel.....	New York.....	100. 00
Udile Schweitzer.....	".....	100. 00
J. M. Huber.....	".....	100. 00
Andrew Hebel.....	Peru, Ill.....	100. 00
H. Hoerner.....	".....	100. 00
F. Widman.....	St. Louis, Mo.....	100. 00
A. Melzer.....	Evansville, Ind.....	100. 00
C. A. Wellendorf.....	Louisville, Ky.....	100. 00
Henry Weis.....	Waterloo, Iowa.....	100. 00
Frank J. Reitz.....	Evansville, Ind.....	100. 00
J. P. Frenzel.....	Indianapolis, Ind.....	100. 00
Standard Brewing Co.....	Chicago.....	100. 00
R. H. Boericke.....	".....	100. 00
E. G. Pauling.....	".....	100. 00
The Fuerst Kerber Cut Stone Co.....	".....	100. 00
W. A. Wieboldt.....	".....	100. 00
Bernard F. Weber & Co.....	".....	100. 00
Chas. Weeghman.....	".....	100. 00
Jacob Birk.....	".....	100. 00
L. Wolff Mfg. Co.....	".....	100. 00
O. C. Doering.....	".....	100. 00
Paul Schulze.....	".....	100. 00
Arthur Nollau.....	".....	100. 00
Wm. Hartig.....	Watertown, Wis.....	75. 00
Collections at.....	".....	67. 25
Collections at Social Turner Verein.....	Chicago, Ill.....	70. 72
First Eisenberger Kranken Unt. Verein.....	".....	67. 00
Collections at Toledo.....	Toledo, Ohio.....	67. 00
Collections at Niles Center, Ill.....	Niles Center, Ill.....	62. 47
Collections at Marshalltown.....	Marshalltown, Iowa.....	59. 50
Dr. A. F. Jonas.....	Omaha, Nebr.....	50. 00
Geo. Weinhausen.....	Milwaukee, Wis.....	50. 00
Henry Paulsen.....	Stockton, Iowa.....	50. 00
Herman F. Lieber.....	Indianapolis, Ind.....	50. 00
Fred Faegnley.....	".....	50. 00
Albert Lieber.....	".....	50. 00
G. T. O. Becker.....	La Salle, Ill.....	50. 00
Henry Gund (John Gund Brew. Co.).....	La Crosse, Wis.....	50. 00
John H. Fendrich.....	Evansville, Ind.....	50. 00
A. A. M.....	St. Louis, Mo.....	50. 00
Chas. H. Wacker.....	Chicago.....	50. 00
Albert Breitung.....	".....	50. 00
Max Schuckardt.....	".....	50. 00
Chas. Gindele.....	".....	50. 00
Count Bopp von Oberstadt.....	".....	50. 00
William Legner.....	".....	50. 00
August C. Magnus.....	".....	50. 00
E. G. Halle.....	".....	50. 00
Platt Deutsche Gilde.....	".....	50. 00
A. F. Madlener.....	".....	50. 00
Mrs. Phoebe Seipp.....	".....	50. 00
Birk Bros. Brewing Co.....	".....	50. 00
O. F. Mayer & Bro.....	".....	50. 00
Carl Sulzer.....	".....	50. 00
John Hetzel.....	".....	50. 00
J. L. Hoerber Brewing Co.....	".....	50. 00
Edward Landsberg.....	".....	50. 00
George K. Schmidt.....	".....	50. 00
Peter Hand Brewing Co.....	".....	50. 00
A. C. Schmidt.....	".....	50. 00

Fenske Bros.....	".....	50
R. J. Weller.....	".....	50
Leo Ernst.....	".....	50
Carl Eitel.....	".....	50
Adolph Schoeninger.....	".....	50
Carl Roessler.....	".....	50
Max Teich.....	".....	50
Westlicher Krieger Bund.....	".....	50
Central Verbund German Vet. Soldiers Society.....	".....	50
Rudolph Brand.....	".....	50
William Laas.....	".....	50
Badischer Unt. Verein.....	".....	50
Arthur C. Strassheim.....	".....	50
Henry Kleine & Co.....	".....	50
Int. Union United Brg. Workman's Local Union No. 18.....	".....	50
National Brewing Co.....	Chicago.....	50
Koester & Zander.....	".....	50
Badischer Unt Verein.....	".....	50
In. Union United Brewery.....	".....	50
Order der Herman's Soehne.....	Columbus, Nebr.....	48
A. A. Burger.....	Chicago.....	40
Rudolph Wagner, Buerger Verein.....	".....	38
Gustav A. Imm.....	Denver, Colo.....	35
John Hettermann.....	Louisville, Ky.....	30
Rev. C. Ziehe.....	Mason, Texas.....	30
Dr. Christopher.....	Chicago.....	30
Anton Meyer.....	Terre Haute, Ind.....	30
Rev. Karl Rest.....	Marshalltown, Iowa.....	30
United Singers of Philadelphia.....	".....	30
Collections of Marshalltown.....	Marshalltown, Iowa.....	29
J. H. Brase.....	Battle Creek, Mich.....	28
Ferdinand Walther.....	Chicago.....	25
Deutsche Krueger Kameradschaft.....	".....	25
A. C. Wackenreuter.....	".....	25
American Oven & Machinery Co.....	".....	25
H. Piper Co.....	".....	25
G. W. Cramer.....	".....	25
Spielman Bros Co.....	".....	25
Frank S. Seng.....	".....	25
N. N.....	".....	25
Paul Brauer.....	".....	25
Casper Brauer.....	".....	25
Platt Gilde Germania No. 37.....	".....	25
E. R. Hasse & Co.....	".....	25
Oesterreicher Kranken & Unt Verein.....	".....	25
Platt Gilde "Habsa" No. 38.....	".....	25
Edwin O. Raster.....	".....	25
Otto C. Schneider.....	".....	25
Platt Gilde "Fritz Reuter No. 4".....	".....	25
J. M. Kranz.....	".....	25
A. Bauer Dist. Co.....	".....	25
William Heineman.....	".....	25
Rev. L. Kohlman.....	".....	25
Adam Ortseifen.....	".....	25
Platt Gilde, No. Chicago No. 9.....	".....	25
Platt Gilde "Lake View No. 3".....	".....	25
Hamburger Club.....	".....	25
Platt Gilde "Treue Brueder No. 60".....	".....	25
Henry C. Dovenmuehle.....	".....	25
Gustav A. Bunte.....	".....	25
Platt Gilde "Eckentweig".....	".....	25
Schwaben Verein.....	".....	25
Chas. E. Schlytern.....	".....	25
Collections at Joliet, Ill.....	".....	25
Stein Ebertshaeuser & Co.....	".....	25

B. A. Eckhart	"	25. 00
Frank Trankhorst	"	25. 00
Herman Petersen	"	25. 00
Brand Brewing Co.	"	25. 00
Sieben's Brewing Co.	"	25. 00
Manhattan Brewing Co.	"	25. 00
N. N.	Terra Haute, Ind.	25. 00
C. Stahl	"	25. 00
N. Bendtorff	"	25. 00
Cohen, Friedlander & Martin	Toledo, Ohio	25. 00
German Historical Society	"	25. 00
C. A. Feist	Watertown, Wis.	25. 00
Platt Gilde "Nord West No. 12"	Chicago	25. 00
Henry C. Wemmer	"	25. 00
Kingston Branch A. E. C.	Kingston, N. Y.	25. 00
Deutscher Pioneer Verein	Toledo, Ohio	25. 00
Platt Gilde "Miles Center No. 32"	Niles Center, Ill.	25. 00
Francis Lackner	Chicago	25. 00
Arthur C. Lueder	"	25. 00
Chas. J. Swain	"	25. 00
John Traeger	Chicago, Ill.	25. 00
Chas. E. Schick	"	25. 00
Carl Buehler	"	25. 00
N. N.	"	25. 00
Reinischer Verein	"	25. 00
Arion Singing Society	"	25. 00
Louis C. Hartling	"	25. 00
A. A. Burger	"	25. 00
Platt Gilde "Junkerman No. 20"	"	25. 00
Verein Thue Recht & Scheue Niemand.	"	25. 00
Chas. Kroeschel	"	25. 00
H. Zitzwitz	2.	25. 00
Geo. Lauterer	"	25. 00
Jos. Hook	"	25. 00
Saml. Gessler	"	25. 00
Gegenseitiger Unt. Verein No. 14	"	25. 00
Fred LaBahn	"	25. 00
William Greiner	"	25. 00
C. Gallauer	"	25. 00
E. H. Knoop	"	25. 00
Henry Wedemeyer	"	25. 00
Peter Reinberg	"	25. 00
Best Brewing Co.	"	25. 00
Haegle Ice Co.	"	25. 00
Phil Rinn Co.	"	25. 00
Northwestern Terra Cotta Co.	"	25. 00
Francis Kaiser	Milwaukee, Wis.	25. 00
Texas Staats Verein Ger. American Alliance	San Antonio, Tex.	25. 00
Julius Niels	Cass Lake, Minn.	25. 00
Theo. Lange	St. Louis, Mo.	25. 00
E. C. Franke	Louisville, Ky.	25. 00
Wm. F. Tafel	"	25. 00
Otto Seelbach	"	25. 00
The Phillip Hollenbach Co.	"	25. 00
Louis Seelbach	"	25. 00
Geo. L. Everbach	"	25. 00
Wm. Ruedeman	"	25. 00
American Embargo Conference	Kingston, N. Y.	25. 00
C. Steinmeyer	LaSalle, Ill.	25. 00
Otto Froehles	"	25. 00
Carl Vogt	Lake Forest, Ill.	25. 00
Texas Staats Verband	San Antonio, Tex.	25. 00
Cake Bakere & Conf. Verein	Philadelphia, Pa.	25. 00
F. M. Bachman	Indianapolis, Ind.	25. 00
Dr. C. Thienhaus	Milwaukee, Wis.	25. 00
Wm. J. Uihlein	"	25. 00

Freeker Bros. & Co.....	Duluth, Minn.....	25.
Geo. G. Eitel.....	Minneapolis, Minn.....	25.
J. H. Hass.....	Davenport, Iowa.....	25.
German Alliance.....	Alleghany, Pa.....	25.
W. G. Kutsch.....	LaSalle, Ill.....	25.
A. L. Meyer.....	Omaha, Nebr.....	25.
Hugo Haubens.....	".....	25.
Storz Brewing Co.....	".....	25.
R. C. Strehlow.....	".....	25.
Metz Bros. Brewing Co.....	".....	25.

Mr. BIELASKI. It does not begin to total any such amount as was necessarily spent. It just simply lists the voluntary contributions from people who were genuinely interested in it.

Senator NELSON. Yes; I understand. Have you the men that attended the first embargo conference at Chicago?

Mr. BIELASKI. I think that is in some of the reports that we have yes.

Senator NELSON. Could you prepare that and put it into the record?

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes.

Senator NELSON. I think it is a good plan to get that in the record.

Mr. BIELASKI. We have so much material about the American embargo conference that I was afraid I would tire you by reading too much of it.

Senator NELSON. We can put it into the record. I would like to know who attended the first meeting at Chicago.

Mr. BIELASKI. All right, Senator.

(A report in regard to the Embargo Conference, produced from the files of the Military Intelligence Division of the War Department is here printed in full as follows:)

BIELASKI EXHIBIT No. 104¹.

MEMORANDA ON AMERICAN EMBARGO CONFERENCE.

G. H. Jacobson, founder, indicted Chicago about June 1, 1917, on charge of conspiring to violate the neutrality of the U. S. in that he spent German money in furtherance of a conspiracy in violation of the laws and dangerous to the peace of the U. S. Sentenced, now serving term.

Origin: G. H. Jacobson, a Chicago real estate dealer, started work in summer 1915. Got assistance of Wm. Boldenweck, former assistant U. S. Treasurer at Chicago, and Mrs. Carl Buehl, stockholder in Eidelweiss Brewery Co. of Chicago. He put up $1,000, engaging Will R. Macdonald, former managing editor of the Washington Times and at time on the editorial staff of the Chicago American, as press agent. William Bayard Hale, Rev. Charles F. Aker and Col. Jasper Tucker Darling got in. Organized Sept. 14, 1915, with G. F. Hancher, president. Incorporated Illinois. By laws provided that there should be no dues nor assessments, and gave five members: Hancher, Jacobson, Macdonald, Darling and Hale. A self-perpetuating, close corporation. On Dec. 16, Wm. D. Falk was elected a member to succeed Hancher, who funct. and Hale withdrew, Feb. 12, 1916. Macdonald made general manager and J. H. Forrest of the Chicago American, secretary. Macdonald formed plan to put pressure on Congress through floods of letters and telegrams.

Activities: Report made Nov. 1, 1915, to Carl E. Schmidt of Detroit, stating 500,000 pledges of assistance had been received, and there had been mailed 60,000 copies of a letter by Aker and Dr. Walter Rauschenbusch.

50,000 copies of a pamphlet by Hale.

50,000 copies of a speech by Senator Works against the traffic in arms and ammunition.

30,000 copies of a pamphlet with speech by Col. Darling and editorials by Geo. Riley and Hearst.

¹ Further extracts from the files with respect to the German Embargo Conference may be found at page 1381 of these hearings.

In April, 1916, organized movement to send to Congress a flood of letters and telegrams protesting against supposed danger of war with Germany. About 250,000 messages sent, seven forms being used, and A. E. C. paying all tolls, estimated at near quarter of a million. Denounced by Husting. As result, Macdonald stopped the flood as suddenly as it began.

Purposes: Incorporation papers give sole aim of A. E. C. to be the prevention of shipment of arms and munitions to the Allies. A letter to a contributor of articles said:—

"We want the articles to be as fair as possible, especially at the beginning of the campaign, so that we can be the more sure that they will get into the papers. By 'fair' I do not mean that yours have been unfair, but that the editors who will have to be 'induced' to print our stuff will be looking for excuses and will reject anything that in any way compares Germany and England in a way that would give Germany the better of the comparison. I could explain what I mean much better in talking to you, but I think you get the idea. I do not mean that we should hold back any publicity in favor of Germany or against England, but we have to build the comparison articles on a thoroughly American background."

That the A. E. C. also worked by "direct action" was shown by the following letter sent out from headquarters to an organizer on Feb. 29, 1916:—

"Under the informal opinion of some of the Department of Justice officials in Washington, any letter, telegram or appeal to a munition worker asking him to quit work, or giving him reasons why he should not work in a munition factory, can be construed as a violation of neutrality.

"Now, can you re-write an article in such a way as to make it an abstract argument rather than a personal one?

Colon Schott, Cincinnati, $300.

Henry F. Helmholtz, Evanston, $1,000.

A. W. Hunber, $1,000.

A. R. Hoffman, St. Louis, $500.

Agents:—Cleveland, Carl Raid, Edward Fisher, Charles Wehnert. Hans Reh binder.

Cincinnati:—Howard C. Wurlitzer.

Detroit:—Dr. Otto Scherer.

St. Louis:—Hans Wulff.

San Francisco:—Daniel O'Connell, A. D. Bauer.

Chicago:—Herman Gerhard.

Brewer, etc., agents in Wisconsin only—active workers and helpers. Henry Gund, pr. John Gund Brewing Co., La Crosse, Wisc.

William G. Uihlein, Milwaukee—Uihlein Family.

August Storck, treas. Storck Brewing Co., Ripon, Wisc.

W. R. Wolfe, buffet keeper, Arcadia, Wisc.

Carl Michel, pres. C. & J. Brewing Co., La Crosse, Wisc.

J. W. Kieckhefer, pres & treas, Kieckhefer Box Co. Adv. reads "Wooden boxes for bottlers."

Mr. BIELASKI. You asked me this morning about Prof. Albert Bushnell Hart?

Senator OVERMAN. Yes.

Mr. BIELASKI. I have here a copy of his book: The War in Europe, which I have not had time to examine critically.

Senator OVERMAN. Give it to Maj. Humes to look into.

Senator STERLING. What is the date of the publication of that book?

Maj. HUMES. 1914.

Senator NELSON. If there is anything bad in it, have it put in the record.

Maj. HUMES. Mr. Hart has asked to appear here, and he will be here on Tuesday. I will go over this in the meantime.

Mr. BIELASKI. This morning I could not find the final page of a translation of this inclosure of Dr. Dumba's letter to Baron Von Burian, though I afterwards read to you the substance of it. I can put that in the record, or read it to you.

Senator NELSON. Is it long?

Mr. BIELASKI. I will read you an extract from it:

It is my opinion that for the special object of starting the Bethlehem and for the Bethlehem and western newspaper campaign, $15,000 must be able to be disposed of, but it is not possible to reckon how ultimately be required; when a beginning has been made it will be to see how things develop, and where and how much it is worth while. The above mentioned preliminary sum would suffice to partially satisfy demands of the necessary newspapers and to a considerable extent the Bethlehem campaign.

Senator NELSON. That Bethlehem campaign was——

Mr. BIELASKI. To bring about a strike.

Senator NELSON. To bring about a strike among the Hungarians and other foreigners?

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes, sir.

He also says:

It is in any case worth while risking this amount for it will undoubtedly show some result, and if circumstances are lucky, and the leadership can arrive at positive results in the West comparatively cheaply. Bethlehem is one of the most difficult jobs.

I read a cablegram this morning from Ambassador Bernstorff at the Foreign Office in which he made mention of the fact of the German University League, and the use he was making of it.

Senator OVERMAN. Was that a league of university men in your country?

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes, sir.

I have here the constitution, trustees, and officers of the German University League, 1914 and 1915, apparently printed in New York, November, 1915.

Its constitution states its purpose to be:

1. To establish in the United States a well-organized center for students at German universities and other German institutions of higher learning, and to set standards in Germany, Austria-Hungary and other countries.

2. To cooperate with every effort to strengthen the regard for the German people and for their aims and ideals and to secure for them fair play and appreciation.

3. To correct misinformation about German conditions and problems, and to place before educated Americans and before the press of this country reliable material bearing on German affairs.

Senator NELSON. Who are the officers?

Mr. BIELASKI. The officers for 1915 and 1916 are:

President, Professor Camillo von Klenze. Vice Presidents: M. J. William R. Shepherd.

It seems to me Hein was Vierick's father-in-law, or something of that sort.

Mr. Shepherd was, I think, a professor at Columbia.

Maj. HUMES. And one of those whose names appear on the list submitted yesterday?

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes. [Continuing reading:]

Treasurer: H. C. A. Seeborn. Assistant treasurer: R. Pagenstecher. Recording secretary: Hugo Kirbach. Executive secretary: O. J. Merkel.

Pagenstecher was a man who, I think, contributed to even the most successful German organization ever organized in the United States.

Merkel is an alien enemy, the active operator of the concern of the Germans, and now interned.

The trustees, elected to serve from one to four years were:

Ernst Bilhuber, Dr. J. F. Boldt, Prof. A. Busse, Louis Doelling, F. Haas, M. R. Hein, Dr. Hugo Kirbach, Dr. Henry G. Krause, Dr. U. D. Marquardt, Hon Chas. Nagel, R. Pagenstecher, Prof. W. W. Rockwell, H. C. A. Seeborn, Carl L. Schurz, Dr. Hugo Schweitzer, Prof. Wm. R. Shepherd, H. E. Stoebr, of the woolen mills.

Prof. Camillo von Klenze, Dr. Edmund von Mach, Dr. F. Zimmerman.

Elected to serve for the current year: Prof. Starr Willard Cutting; Ad. K. Fischer, of Philadelphia, who was involved to some extent at least, in fact to a considerable extent, in the smuggling charges brought against the kommandant of the German war vessel Etel Frederick when she was in the harbor at Philadelphia; Louis Guenzel; W. S. McNeill; O. J. Merkel; Dr. Anton Schoen; F. Stallforth—that is Frederick Stallforth, the alien enemy, now interned, who was intimately associated with Rintelen, and active in a number pro-German propaganda activities—G. Steinhagen, and Dr. W. L. Wirbelauer. Dr. Wirbelauer was connected with the Sanders and Wunnenberg matter to some extent.

Senator OVERMAN. Have you a list of the members of the association?

Mr. BIELASKI. I think I have that also; yes. This pamphlet includes a lot of reports by various people, a list of pamphlets and books, and I will give it to Maj. Humes, and he can examine it and see if there is anything in it of interest other than what I have read.

Senator NELSON. Maj. Humes can pick out whatever he thinks is important.

Maj. HUMES. Did you want a list of the members of this league included in the record?

Senator NELSON. Yes; a list of the members of the league. You have given a list of the officers.

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes. Here is the next report, for 1915 and 1916, in which the officers have changed. This was printed in New York, November, 1916. It is the annual report and anniversary speeches. The speeches were by Prof. Camillo von Klenze, Prof. Edwin Jones Clapp, about whom I have already told you something, yesterday, who was the author of that book, called, I think, The Economic Aspects of the War.

Senator NELSON. With what college was he connected?

Mr. BIELASKI. The New York University; Hon. George Fred Williams, Dr. Edmund von Mach and Prof. Ernst Voss.

Senator OVERMAN. Is that George Fred Williams of Massachusetts?

Mr. BIELASKI. I do not know who he is.

Senator OVERMAN. He is a politician, is he?

Mr. BIELASKI. Let me see who he is. His address was entitled: "American Interpretation of German Civilization."

The speeches are all here.

Senator NELSON. I think he was a Member of Congress from Massachusetts at one time.

Mr. BIELASKI. Here is an original list which I think is a list of the membership, in the original book. It is divided more or less by territory.

Senator NELSON. By States?

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes.

Senator NELSON. Have you got Minnesota there?

Mr. BIELASKI. I happened to open the book right at N Senator; there are several pages.

Senator NELSON. The University League of Minnesota?

Mr. BIELASKI. I do not think this man seems to understand location of Minneapolis, Minn., because most of the people there under Minneapolis, Minn., live in Milwaukee. Possibly would like to look that over, Senator?

Senator NELSON. Yes; I would like to see it.

(The list referred to is here printed in full in the records:)

BIELASKI EXHIBIT No. 105.

BOSTON, MASS.

Ahlborn, Emil, 258 Marlborough St., Boston, Mass.
 Barus, Carl, Brown University, Providence, R. I.
 Benecke, A. O., 36 W. Cottage St., Boston, Mass.
 —Clemens, Konrad, 887 E. Main St., Bridgeport, Conn.
 Curtis, Mary F., 90 Hancock St., Cambridge, Mass.
 Dohmen, Franz J., 21 Walker St., Cambridge, Mass.
 Fox, Rudolph H., 54 Oak St., Hartford, Conn.
 Francke, Kuno, Germanic Museum of Harvard Univ., Cambridge,
 Green, Robert M., 78 Marlborough St., Boston, Mass.
 Goettling, Gerhard M. W., 39 Boylston St., Boston, Mass.
 Haass, Clemens A., "Cedar Top," Milton, Mass.
 —Hall, Arthur P., 33 Hillside Ave., Arlington Hgts.
 Henderson, Ernest F., Monadnock, N. H.
 Henderson, Yandell, 440 Prospect St., New Haven, Conn.
 Huetz, Rudolf, 32 India St., Boston, Mass.
 Kerstein, Max., 272 Tremont St., Boston, Mass.
 Kilburn, Henry W., 192 Marlborough St., Boston, Mass.
 —Liebau, Richard, 25 Hubinger St., New Haven, Conn.
 Meyer, Fritz N., 30 Woodlawn Terrace, Waterbury, Conn.
 Moshack, Gustav, c/o Mrs. Smith, 6 Green St., Milford, Conn.
 Olmstead, James M., Post Office Bldg., Boston, Mass.
 Osgood, W. F., 74 Avon Hill St., Cambridge, Mass.
 Palmer, Arthur H., 221 Everitt St., New Haven, Conn.
 Paterson, Eleanor Robb, 51 Brattle St., Cambridge, Mass.
 Perrin, Marshall L., Boston University, Boston, Mass.
 Rehder, Alfred, 62 Orchard St., Jamaica Plain, Mass.
 Schmidt, Karl, 128 Professor Row, Tufts College, Mass.
 *Schmitz, Eugene A. R., c/o Conyers Farm, Greenwich, Conn.
 Schoenemann, Friedrich, 7 Avon St., Cambridge, Mass.
 Seeler, Felix, 3 Boyd Road, Derry, N. H.
 Staun, C., University Club, Providence, R. I.
 Sternberg, Kurt, Springfield, Mass.
 Tollen, L. K., 217 Springfield Ave., Pittsfield, Mass.
 *Volkmann, Arthur L. K., 40 Norfolk Road, Chestnut Hill, Mass.
 Von Jagemann, H. C. G., 113 Walker St., Cambridge, Mass.
 Von Klock, Max Otto, 143 Federal St., Boston, Mass.
 Von Ladenberg, Max, P. O. box 92, Monterey, Mass.
 Von Mach, Edmund, 48 Shepherd St., Cambridge, Mass.
 Walz, John A., 42 Garden St., Cambridge, Mass.
 Wendte, Charles W., 163 Hunnwell Ave., Newton, Mass.
 Wheeler, J. H., 11 Grant Ave., Newton Center, Mass.
 Grossmann, E. H. Paul, Simmons College, Boston, Mass.

NEW YORK CITY, N. Y.

—Abbe, Franz, 90 West St., New York City.
 Adler, Leon N., 100 William St., New York City.
 Albrecht, Louis, 50 Church St., New York City.
 *Alkier, Arthur, 243 E. 5th St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

- *Ambos, Carl Ludwig, 1583 Washington Ave., Bronx, N. Y.
- *Arnold, Felix, 317 W. 89th St., New York City.
- Arnold, J. Loring, 468 Warburton Ave., Yonkers, N. Y.
- Arnold, Mrs. J. Loring, 468 Warburton Ave., Yonkers, N. Y.
- Aronson, George G., 507 Fifth Avenue, New York City.
- Artmann, Florence, 415 W. 148th St., New York City.
- *Baettenhaussen, Theo., 542 Fifth Avenue, New York City.
- Baruch, Emanuel, 57 E. 77th St., New York City.
- *Bauer, Siegfried, 15 W. 107th St., New York City.
- Baum, William, Gen. Elec. Co., Schenectady, N. Y.
- Becher, Eugene, 25 Madison Ave., New York City.
- Beck, E. A., 90 West St., New York City.
- *Benedict, Clare, Pomery Place, New York City.
- Berkemeier, Gottlieb C., Wartburg Orphans' Farm School, Mt. Vernon, N. Y.
- Bernhardi, R., 56 Nostrand Ave., Brooklyn, N. Y.
- *Bernheim, Alice (Mrs), 170 W. 73rd St., New York City.
- *Bertling, Karl O., 137 E. 21st St., New York City.
- Betz, Hermann, 136 College Ave., Ithaca, N. Y.
- Bewer, Julius A., 70 Brewster St., New York City.
- Beyer, Wm., 70 Brewster St., Tompkinsville, S. I.
- Bickell, Otto, 701 Madison Ave., New York City.
- Biechy-Peltzer, Lina, 43 Columbia Ave., Arrochar, S. I.
- Bischoff, Ernst, 84-86 W. Broadway, New York City.
- Bloom, Selina, 616 Madison Ave., New York City.
- Boehme, Traugott, Columbia University, New York City.
- Boeker, H., 20 E. 90th St., New York City.
- *Boerker, John, 251 Fourth Ave., New York City.
- *Boldt, J. H., 39 E. 61st St., New York City.
- Born, R. O., 284 Lexington Ave., New York City.
- Breitenfeld, S., 221 E. 68th St., New York City.
- Buschler, August F., 616 Madison Ave., New York City.
- *Buehler, Conrad, 260 Fourth Ave., New York City.
- *Buchholz, Otto, 1170 Broadway, New York City.
- Burkard, Philip, 109 E. 14th St., Steinway Hall, New York City.
- Burchard, A., 602 W. 135th St., New York City.
- Busse, A., Hunter College, New York City.
- *Brazier, Emma Jeannette, 203 W. 78th St., New York City.
- Bilhuber, Ernst, 45 John St., New York City.
- Breuer, Max C., 33 Allen St., Buffalo, N. Y.
- Chittenden, J. Brace, 162 Montague St., Brooklyn, N. Y.
- Cillis, Hubert, 50 Union Square, New York City.
- Coblentz, Virgil, 595 Third St., Brooklyn, N. Y.
- Cohn, Felix, 31 E. 60th St., New York City.
- *Cortis, Mrs. Harold G., 14 E. 60th St., New York City.
- Cronson, R., 132 W. 122d St., New York City.
- Culmann, Julius, Rosebank, S. I., 116 Vanderbilt Ave., New York.
- Danckworth, Bruno, 456 E. 18th St., New York City.
- Dattan, Hermann, 804 McBride St., Syracuse, N. Y.
- Dawson, Edgar, Hunter College, New York City.
- Davidson, H. C., Highland Ave., Ithaca, N. Y.
- De Liagre, Alfred, 200 Fifth Avenue, New York City.
- *Delin, B., 29 Broadway, New York City.
- Diedmann, Friedrich, College of the City of N. Y., New York City.
- Dick, Erwin R., 261 Broadway, New York City.
- Dieterich, Eugene, 476 Marion St., Brooklyn, N. Y.
- Doelling, Louis K., 26 Colonial Place, New Rochelle.
- D'Oench, A. F., 105 W. 40th St., New Rochelle.
- Dreier, Katherine S., 135 Central Park W., New Rochelle.
- *Du Cassé, William L., 421 W. 144th St., New York City.
- Duncan, Elizabeth, 360 N. Broadway, Yonkers, N. Y.
- *de Lange, Siegfried, 152 E. 83d St., New York City.
- Eggers, Carl, 850 Park Avenue, New York City.
- *Ehrmann, H. A., 471 Park Avenue, New York City.
- Eilers, A., 751 St. Marks Ave., Brooklyn, N. Y.
- Elmer, August, 190 Riverside Drive, New York City.
- Eissing, Wilhelm F., 225 Fifth Avenue, New York City.
- Erdtmann, Ida, Dobbs Ferry, N. Y.

- Ernst, Frederic H., 2414 Creston Ave., New York City.
 *Eulenstein, H., 433 Ocean Parkway, Brooklyn, N. Y.
 *Emgel, L., El Paradiso, Howard Ave., Stapleton, S. I.
 Fallert, Berthold, 1310 President St., Brooklyn, N. Y.
 Faust, Albert B., Cornell University, Ithaca, N. Y.
 Fetts, Elizabeth W., 535 W. 135th St., New York City.
 Fischer, Carl, 213 Water St., New York City.
 Fischer, Hermann, 111 E. 81st St., New York City.
 Fischer, Richard F., 1256 Ocean Ave., Brooklyn, N. Y.
 Fohr, Franz, 132 Nassau St., New York City.
 Fontheim, Alphonse E., Hamburg Amer. Line, 45 B'way, New York City.
 Frank, Karl Georg, 90 West St., R. 1017-1019, New York City.
 *Franke, Clara E., 130 Claremont Ave., New York City.
 *Franke, Julius, 25 Madison Ave., New York City.
 Franze, Waldemar A., 201 E. 83d St., New York City.
 —*Freidus, A. S., N. Y. Public Library, New York City.
 Freund, Frank E. W., 424 W. 120th St., New York City.
 *Frey, Joseph, 71 S. Washington Sq., New York City.
 Friedman, C. A., 123 E. 95th St., New York City.
 Freudenthal, W., 1003 Madison Ave., New York City.
 Funke, August M., 515 Park Ave., New York City.
 Fussner, George, 252 W. 84th St., New York City.
 *Feldmann, M., 387 Fourth Ave., New York City.
 *Finke, W. F., 420 Riverside Drive, New York City.
 *Callasch, B. George, 759 East Ave., Rochester, N. Y.
 Gangloff, Theodore, 117 Hudson St., New York City.
 Ganss, Hermann, 22 W. 26th St., New York City.
 Garbat, A. L., 71 E. 91st St., New York City.
 *Geisenheimer, Theo., 134 Cedar St., New York City.
 Gelbach, Marie, 1 Prospect Terrace, Park Hill, Yonkers, N. Y.
 Genssler, O. H., 530 Canal St., New York City.
 Genthe, Arnold, 1 West 46th St., New York City.
 Gerster, A. G., 34 E. 75th St., New York City.
 Gessler, Albert, Rosebank, S. I., New York City.
 Glaeser, W., 1019 Prospect Place, Brooklyn, N. Y.
 Goetting, E. C., Suffern, N. Y.
 Goodman, A. L., 136 W. 87th St., New York City.
 *Gossler, Gustav H., 112 W. 59th St., New York City.
 Griepe, A. W. H., 707 Prospect Ave., Bronx, N. Y.
 Grill, J. G., 400 W. 149th St., New York City.
 Grosse, Friedrich, 200 W. 88th St., New York City.
 Gruetzner, Fritz P., 48 Thurston Pl., New Rochelle, N. Y.
 Gutman, Hugo, 34 Jay St., Schenectady, N. Y.
 Grossmann, Carl Georg, 45 Broadway, New York City.
 Goedel, Adolf, 58 Water St., New York City.
 Haas, H. F., 405 Lexington Ave., New York City.
 —Haeberlein, Max, 90 West St., New York City.
 *Haessler, Louise, 100 Morningside Drive, New York City.
 Hager, H., 117 Hudson St., New York City.
 *—Hall, Thomas C., Union Theo. Seminary, Broadway & 120 St. City.
 Halle, Konrad, 15 Jackson St., Tompkinsville, S. I.
 Handler, Sigmund, 53 Vassar St., Rochester, N. Y.
 *Hanfstaengl, Ernst, 545 Fifth Ave., New York City.
 Hartmann, Jacob W., College of the City of N. Y., New York City.
 *Hasslacher, Jacob, 100 William St., New York City.
 Heberlein, Kuno B., 61 Broadway, New York City.
 Hecht, George, 1160 Jackson Ave., New York City.
 Hecker, Anton Jos., 200 W. 88th St., New York City.
 Hecker, E., 248 W. 52nd St., New York City.
 Heckmann, Jacob, 156 E. 80th St., New York City.
 Heimann, Walter James, 108 W. 87th St., New York City.
 Hein, Max R., 41 E. 21st St., New York City.
 Hellmann, Alfred, 2 W. 86th St., New York City.
 —Henschel, Albert E., 475 Central Park W., New York City.
 Herzog, Karl, 550 W. 157th St., New York City.
 *Hess, Dorothea C., Hunter College, New York City.

Heydner, R., 27 E. 21st St., New York City.
 Hinck, jr., Claus Fr., 338 E. 26th St., New York City.
 —Hirsch, William, 52 E. 64th St., New York City.
 Hirschland, F. H., 120 Broadway, New York City.
 *Hitzigrath, W., 673 Decatur St., Brooklyn, N. Y.
 Hoch, August, Wards Island, New York City.
 *Hodgskin, T. Ellett, 869 President St., Brooklyn, N. Y.
 Hoevel, H. F., 50 Church St., New York City.
 Hoffmann, Felix, 212 West 104th St., New York City.
 Holz, Julius, 24 N. William St., New York City.
 Homburger, Viktor, 132 Pearl Street, New York City.
 *Horn, John, 72 E. 92nd St., New York City.
 Hothorn, E. G., 42 Broadway, New York City.
 Hoving, Johannes, 125 W. 112th St., New York City.
 Hubbe, Paul W., 743 President Ave., Brooklyn, N. Y.
 —Hummel, A., 250 Argyle Road, Brooklyn, N. Y.
 Huth, Wener, 17 Battery Place, New York City.
 *Huttlinger, Oscar, 116 Broad St., New York City.
 Heuser F. W. J., Hamilton Hall, Columbia Univ., New York City.
 *Hahn, Mrs. Ernestine, 1293 Bergen St., Brooklyn, N. Y.
 Hervey, William A., 607 W. 138th St., New York City.
 Haberman, J. Victor, 60 W. 85th St., New York City.
 Igen, Ernst, 689 St. John's Place, Brooklyn, N. Y.
 *Jaches, Leopold, 27 E. 95th St., New York City.
 *Jaedicke, Fritz, 308 West 82nd St., New York City.
 Janke, H. Alfred, 2 Rector St., New York City.
 Jellinghauss, C. F., 1161 Park Ave., New York City.
 Jonas, Stephen, 71 Broadway, New York City.
 *Jone, Hugo, p. o. box 37, Sta. A., Brooklyn, N. Y.
 Jordan, Richard, 165 W. 58th St., New York City.
 Kallenbach, Oscar, 119 Saranac St., Rochester, N. Y.
 *Kappelmann, Otto F., 45 William St., New York City.
 Kandt, Hartwig, 2209 Clarendon Rd., Brooklyn, N. Y.
 Kaufmann, Jacob, 52 E. 58th St., New York City.
 Kaupe, Gottfried, 115 E. 179th St., New York City.
 Kayser, C. F., 71 E. 87th St., New York City.
 Keith, Harriet H., 527 W. 121st St., New York City.
 *—Kellmann, F., 606 W. 113th St., New York City.
 Kemmerich, W., 117 Hudson St., New York City.
 Keppler, F. L., 101 Park Ave., New York City.
 Kern, Albert J. W., Jamaica, L. I.
 Kessler, Eugene G., 315 E. 87th St., New York City.
 Kilbourne, Joseph B., 1125 Madison Ave., New York City.
 Kirbach, Hugo, 118 Classon Ave., Brooklyn, N. Y.
 Klasky, Lena H., 527 W. 121st St., New York City.
 Klemperer, G., 54 Franklin St., New York City.
 Klingelhoefter, Karl, 40 Arietta St., Tompkinsville, S. I., N. Y.
 *Klingmann, A., 2361 8th Ave., New York City.
 Kneer, Ferdinand G., 236 W. 51st St., New York City.
 Knoefel, Rudolf, 45 John St., New York City.
 —Koehler, Hans C., 600 E. 164th St., New York City.
 Koelle, Carl, 82 Beaver St., New York City.
 —*Koempel, J. A., 440 E. 156th St., New York City.
 *Koempel, Ludwig, 968 Bedford Ave., Brooklyn, N. Y.
 *Koller, Carl, 681 Madison Ave., New York City.
 Konermann, Helene V., 2676 Morris Ave., Bronx, N. Y.
 Krah, Otto, Hotel Astor, R. 647, New York City.
 Krause, C. A., 1087a Prospect Pl., Brooklyn, N. Y.
 Kruskal, N., 329 Grand St., New York City.
 *Kudlich, H. C., 233 Broadway, New York City.
 Kudlich, Hans E., 104 W. 87th St., New York City.
 *Kudlich, Hermann F., 104 W. 87th St., New York City.
 Kuhl, A., 117 Hudson St., New York City.
 Kuhn, Ernst Fritz, 12 Fifth Ave., New York City.
 *Lagemann, Eric, 112 Wall St., New York City.
 Langer, Edward, 470 W. Broadway, New York City.
 Leibholz, Henry, 520 W. 139th St., New York City.

—Lendle, Henry, Forest Hills, L. I., N. Y.

Lenssen, Nicholas F., 34 Nassau St. (Davies Auerbach & Cornell), City.

Lenz, George J., 12 W. 103rd St., New York City.

* Leuchs, Fritz A. H., 600 E. 164th St., New York City.

Leuchs, John, 600 E. 164th St., New York City.

Levandowski, Otto, 19 S. 11th Ave., Mt. Vernon, N. Y.

Lieber, Hugo, 25 Madison Ave., New York City.

* Liesching, Bernard, 692 Mt. Hope Ave., Rochester, N. Y.

* Liesmann, Curt H., Pier 36, North River, New York City.

Lindenhayn, Rolf, 1434 58th St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

* Link, Charles C., 445 Bainbridge St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

Lissau, O. F., 13 Bedford Road, Schenectady.

Loeb, Eugene, 27 W. 23rd St., New York City.

* Loes, Franz, 35 W. 32nd St., New York City.

Loewenstein, Alice Lill, Univ. of St. Lawrence, Canton, N. Y.

—* Ludewig, H. E., Wappler Elect. Co., 173 E. 87th St., New York City.

Lufft, Hermann, 611 W. 136th St., New York City.

Lyons, Joseph, 25 Wendell Ave., Schenectady.

* Lawrence, Mrs. Amelia P., 101 E. 92nd St., New York City.

* Maass, H. C., 52 Broadway, New York City.

Maneke, Phillipp, 1058 Bushwick Ave., Brooklyn, N. Y.

Maneke, Phillipp, 1058 Bushwick Ave., Brooklyn, N. Y.

Mannheimer, George, 41 W. 51st St., New York City.

* Marburg, William, 90 West St., New York City.

Marquardt, U. D., 142 W. 83rd St., Apr. 8, New York City.

Mausolff, Paul, 100 William St., New York City.

—McLowth, Lawrence, Schwab House, Univ. Hgts., New York City.

* Merkel, O. J., New York City.

* Merz, Max, 414 Madison Ave., New York City.

Merzbach, Joseph, 204 8th Ave., Brooklyn, N. Y.

Metz, Rudolf, 52 E. 58th St., New York City.

Meyer, Julius, 1236 Madison Ave., New York City.

Meyer, Willy, 700 Madison Ave., New York City.

Meyn, Hans H. A., 25 Broad St., New York City.

Michaelis, G., 541 Western Ave., Albany, N. Y.

—Miloche, Alex, 441 E. 87th St., New York City.

Mittendorf, W. F., 399 Park Ave., New York City.

Mock, Johann W., 328 Central Ave., Brooklyn, N. Y.

* Moeffett, Rudolph D., 830 Park Ave., New York City.

—Monteser, Fr. Fredk., 605 Van Cortland Park Ave., Yonkers.

Morgenstern, Max, 5 Nassau St., Hallgarten & Co., New York City.

* Mormann, William, 302 N. Goodman St., Rochester, N. Y.

* Moschcowitz, A., 925 Madison Ave., New York City.

Moschcowitz, Ell, 41 W. 83rd St., New York City.

Mothwurf, Arthur, 117 Hudson St., New York City.

Muller, Hans, 8 State St., New York City.

Muller, Richard, 201 W. 85th St., New York City.

Muller, Dr. Richard W., 10 E. 58th St., New York City.

—Mussaeus, H. W., 204 Macon St., Brooklyn, N. Y.

Neubecker, Jean, 436 E. 136th St., New York City.

* Neuburger, Anton, 2 W. 69th St., Apr. 4, New York City.

Neuburger, Hugo, 24 W. 45th St., New York City.

* Neuhoff, Karl W., 30 East 21st St., New York City.

* Niebel, G., 7 W. 103rd St., New York City.

* Nida, Emilie, 453 W. 155th St., New York City.

Nielsen, Carl, 138 Rutland Road, Brooklyn, N. Y.

Nimphius, Herman, 117 W. 84th St., New York City.

Oberbeck, A., 272 Manhattan Ave., New York City.

Ornstein, Georg, 18 E. 41st St., New York City.

Oulman, L., 1239 Madison Ave., New York City.

Pabst, R. J., 117 Hudson St., New York City.

Pagenstecher, Rudolf, 30 E. 42d St., New York City.

—Pass, Walter, 112 W. 59th St., New York City.

Patz, E. O., 215 Water St., New York City.

* Peck, Mrs. H. Tangermann, 498 West End Ave., New York City.

* Pennrich, H. C., 244 Riverside Drive, New York City.

Petsche, B. W., 60 Elmwood Ave., Yonkers, N. Y.
 *Pfitzner, Felix, 500 W. 176th St., New York City.
 Plass, Ludwig, % Bradley Ax. Co., Newburgh, N. Y.
 Popcke, William, 338 E. 84th St., New York City.
 Porges, Alexander, 44 Whitehall St., New York City.
 Pulvermacher, Albert, N. Y. Staats-Zeitung, New York City.
 Portack, Hans, N. Y. Staats-Zeitung, New York City.
 Pariser, R., 545 West End Ave., New York City.
 Rapp, Rudolf P., 318 E. 4th St., New York City.
 Raubenheimer, Otto, 1341 Fulton St., Brooklyn, N. Y.
 —Rauschenbush, Walter, 4 Portsmouth Terrace, Rochester, N. Y.
 Rehling, Max, 132 E. 60th St., New York City.
 Reiffert, Edith A., 451 Convent Ave., New York City.
 Reinthaler, Jonas E., 22 W. 89th St., New York City.
 *Reisinger, Curt H., 11 Broadway, New York City.
 Renn, Pius, 129 E. 92nd St., New York City.
 —Ridder, B. Hermann, N. Y. Staats-Zeitung, New York City.
 Riess, Ernst, 221 W. 113th St., New York City.
 Ripperger, A., 616 Madison Ave., New York City.
 Rischbieter, Theo. W., 308 W. 115th St., New York City.
 Robb, W. L., P. O. box 592, Troy, N. Y.
 Rockwell, William W., Union Theo. Seminary, New York City.
 Rodemann, Georg, 63 New York Ave., Brooklyn, N. Y.
 Roeder, E. F., 239 W. 39th St., New York City.
 Roller, Emil, 574 Amsterdam Ave., New York City.
 *Roschen, William, 23d St. & 3d Ave., New York City.
 Rossbach, M. J. H., 55/57 Frankfort St., New York City.
 Rosenow, Albert, 301 W. 108th St., New York City.
 Rothmaler, Ernst, 1293 Bergen St., Brooklyn, N. Y.
 Rumely, Edward A., 21-27 City Hall Place, New York City.
 *Rubino, Henry A., 50 Broad St., New York City.
 Runge, William, 783 Bushwick Ave., Brooklyn, N. Y.
 Richter, Kurt E., 2730 Creston Ave., New York City.
 Reis, Herman, 805 St. Nicholas Ave., New York City.
 Saarbach, Ludwig, 114 Pearl St., New York City.
 Sachs, Bernard, 116 W. 59th St., New York City.
 *Sachs, Daniel, 848 Greene St., Brooklyn, N. Y.
 Saegmueller, George M., 1100 St. Paul, Rochester, N. Y.
 Saegmueller, George N., Rochester, N. Y.
 Seeborn, H. C. A., 117 Hudson St., New York City.
 Seeligman, Gustav, 53 E. 72d St., New York City.
 *Segin, Adalbert, 117 Hudson St., New York City.
 Seitz, Oskar, 52 Wall St., New York City.
 Seitz, Erwin, 276 E. 161st St., New York City.
 Seligmann, Eustace, 9 Wall St., New York City.
 *Sesso, Pauline M., 303 E. 161st St., New York City.
 Schaefer, George L., 801a Willoughby Ave., Brooklyn, N. Y.
 Schaharum, Franz, 637 E. 7th St., New York City.
 Scharnberg, Alfred, 80 Maiden Lane, New York City.
 Schehr, Lazor, 74 Broadway, New York City.
 Schell, John H., 212 Prospect Pk. W., Brooklyn, N. Y.
 Sherwin, Carl, 2627 Webster Ave., New York City.
 Schill, Emil, 25 Broad St., New York City.
 Schirmer, Rudolph E., 3 E. 43d St., New York City.
 *Schirrmacher, M., 603 W. 140th St., New York City.
 *Schlegel, Ludwig, 1840 Belmont Ave., Bronx, N. Y.
 *Schlicke, C. P., 440 Washington St., New York City.
 Schmatolla, Ernst, 150 Nassau St., New York City.
 Schmid, H. Ernst, 169 Railroad Ave., White Plains, N. Y.
 *Schmidt, Walter, 95 Madison Ave., New York City.
 Schmidt, W. A., 162 E. 83d St., New York City.
 *Schneider, Carl, 423 Broadway Ave., Watertown, N. Y.
 Schniewind, Willy, jr., 18 W. 18th St., New York City.
 Schnitzler, Paul C., 165 Broadway, New York City.
 *Schoelde, Emma J., 1362 Fulton Ave., Bronx, N. Y.
 Schoedler, Ulrich, 249 W. 107th St., New York City.
 Schoeffler, Hermann, 154 W. 18th St., New York City.
 Schoen, Anton, 238 E. 12th St., New York City.

- *Schoenrock, Hedwig, 309 E. 162d St., New York City.
- Schoenstadt, A., 2 Duane St., New York City.
- Schoeps, George, 206 W. 122d St., New York City.
- *Schrader, F. F., 63 E. 59th St., New York City.
- Schreiter, Heinrich, 50 Broad St., New York City.
- Schultz, W. M., 65 Atlantic Ave., Rochester, N. Y.
- *Schulze, Henry H. L., 43 Ridge Drive, Yonkers, N. Y.
- Schulze, Hermann, 43 Ridge Drive, Yonkers, N. Y.
- Schurz, Carl L., 45 Broadway, New York City.
- Schwarzenbach, Robert J. F., 470 Fourth Ave., New York City.
- Schweitzer, Heinrich, 218 W. 69th St., New York City.
- Schweitzer, Hugo, 117 Hudson St., New York City.
- Schüpphaus, Robert C., 175 Pearl St., New York City.
- Sidenberg, Charles, 43 W. 76th St., New York City.
- Stallforth, Albert, 120 Broadway, New York City.
- Stallforth, F., 120 Broadway, New York City.
- Stauffen, Ernst, Sharp & Dohme, 41 John St., New York City.
- *Stechert, F. C., 29-35 W. 32nd St., New York City.
- Steffen, I., 30 Beckman Pl., New York City.
- Steffens, Wilhelm C. M., 471 W. 141st St., New York City.
- Stenzel, Werner, 597 Fifth Avenue, New York City.
- Stoehr, Hans E., 200 Fifth Avenue, New York City.
- Stoechr, Georg, 200 Fifth Ave., New York City.
- *Stoechr, Máx W., 200 Fifth Ave., New York City.
- *Stoss, Alvin, 53 Woodbine St., Brooklyn, N. Y.
- *Strahmann, Henry C., 1411 Broadway, New York City.
- Strum, Otto, 1690 Clay Ave., New York City.
- Stutz, Richard, Gen. Supt. N. Y. & Pa. Co., 200 Fifth Ave., New York City.
- *Sutro, Theodor, 320 W. 102nd St., New York City.
- *Saleski, Mary Agnes, 230 E. 196th St., New York City.
- Schulze, Paul, 351 W. 20th St., New York City.
- *Schmahl, Philipp J. R., 904 Bronx Park So., New York City.
- Spaeth, Chas., 706 Chamber of Commerce, Rochester.
- Stroebe, Lillian L., Vassar College, Poughkeepsie, N. Y.
- Snider, Melville, 780 Riverside Drive, New York City.
- Schäfer, Otto, 120 Broadway, R. 3328, New York City.
- Staiger, Wm., 556 W. 149th St., New York City.
- Talmey, B. S., 12 W. 123rd St., New York City.
- *Tauscher, H., 320 Broadway, New York City.
- Thiersch, Curt, P. O. Box 65, Mad. Sq. Sta., New York City.
- Tilley, Lydia L., 611 W. 156th St., New York City.
- *Timme, E. F., 251 Fourth Ave., New York City.
- *Timme, Otto, 251 Fourth Ave., New York City.
- *Timmermann, F. J., 210 W. 137th St., New York City.
- Tombo, Rudolf, sr., 321 St. Nicholas Ave., New York City.
- *Torek, Franz, 1021 Madison Ave., New York City.
- Traeger, Max, 155 E. 89th St., New York City.
- *Trau, Fred, 2128 3rd Ave., New York City.
- Taylor, Marion Lee, 66 Orange St., Brooklyn, N. Y.
- Unger, Gustav E., 825 Forest Ave., Brooklyn, N. Y.
- Untermeyer, Mrs. S., 675 Fifth Ave., New York City.
- *Velt, Theodore, 141 Noble St., Brooklyn, N. Y.
- Vezin, Charles, 349 Broadway, New York City.
- *Viereck, George S., 1123 Broadway, New York City.
- Vockroth, George, 512 W. 207th St., New York City.
- Vogel, Felix A., 25 Broad St., New York City.
- Vogelstein, Ludwig, 42 Broadway, New York City.
- Vom Bruck, Jos., 30 Church St., New York City.
- Vom Saal, F. M., 49 Morningside Ave. E., New York City.
- Vom Saal, Rudolf, 536 W. 114th St., New York City.
- Von Gontard, Alex., 82 Beaver St., New York City.
- Von Klenze, Camillo, 736 Riverside Drive, New York City.
- Von Schmidt-Pauli, E. 17 Battery Pl., E. P. R. F., New York City.
- *von Unworth, Frida, 527 W. 121st St., New York City.
- Wagner, William, Monticello, N. Y.
- *Wagner, A. P., 867 W. 181st St., New York City.
- *Wallach, Sidney, 189 Broadway, New York City.

Wallerstein, Leo, 171 Madison Ave., New York City.
 Wallerstein, Max., 171 Madison Ave., New York City.
 Wandke, Walter, 331 W. 14th St., New York City.
 —* Wappler, F. H., 173 E. 87th St., New York City.
 * Wappler, R. H., 1350 Madison Ave., New York City.
 Ward, Willard P., 15 Broad St., New York City.
 Weber, H. A., 1 Riverview Terrace, New York City.
 Weber, Louis, 171 Madison Ave., New York City.
 Weber, M. G., 71 Central Ave., Tompkinsville, S. I.
 —Webster, V. K., 1397 Eastern Parkway, Brooklyn, N. Y.
 Weinberg, Ernst A., Broadway & 79th St., New York City.
 Weingartner, E., 100 William St., New York City.
 —Wellmann, Bernhard, 132 Pearl St., New York City.
 Wencker, Rudolf J., 315 E. 19th St., Flatbush, N. Y.
 * Wesendonck, Max, 50 Union Square, New York City.
 —* Westerhaus, Franz, 800 E. 173rd St., New York City.
 Willhöft, F. O., 535 W. 112th St., New York City.
 * Windolpf, August P., 35 W. 33rd St., New York City.
 Wittel, August, 361 E. 178th St., New York City.
 Woelfert, Ludwig, 63 Morgan Ave., Brooklyn, N. Y.
 Wolf, Heinrich F., 4 W. 83rd St., New York City.
 Wolf, Henry J., 119 W. 86th St., New York City.
 Whitney, Marian P., Vassar College, Poughkeepsie, N. Y.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.

—*Athaway, H. H., jr., Chester, Pa.
 Bachmeyer, W., 6212 Penn Ave., Pittsburgh, Pa.
 Bachofner, K., 122 Cottage St., Irvington, N. J.
 Banning, C. F., 1407 H. W. Oliver Bldg., Pittsburgh, Pa.
 Behrend, Ernst R., % Hammermill Paper Co., Erie, Pa.
 —*Bengel, William F., P. O. Box 304, Media, Pa.
 Bernheim, Albert, 1225 Spruce St., Philadelphia, Pa.
 Blau, Max F., 27 Bank St., Princeton, N. J.
 *Bliss, Mrs. A. A., 117 So. 20th St., Phila., Pa.
 Blix, Martin, 1305 Locust St., Phila., Pa.
 *Buseck, Otto, 31 Highland Ave., Landsdowne, Pa.
 Bilhuber, Ernst A., Maywood, N. J.
 Cronmeyer, William C., 3001 Cliff St., McKeesport, Pa.
 Curtz, Hermann J., 138 N. 7th St., Erie, Pa.
 Collbohm, Max H., 117 Miltch Ave., Swissvale, Pa.
 Dannenbaum, H., 3339 N. 16th St., Phila., Pa.
 Davis, Gwilym G., 1814 Spruce St., Phila., Pa.
 Debreczeni, Alexander, 1832 Green St., Phila., Pa.
 *Degenring, Elsie, 1148 E. Grand St., Elizabeth, N. J.
 De Long, Irwin Hoch, 523 W. James St., Lancaster, Pa.
 Donner, C. L., 4505 Spruce St., Phila., Pa.
 Ducca, W. A., 910 Church Lane, No. Bergen, N. J.
 Engels, W. H., 1 Darmstadt Ave., Rahway, N. J.
 Fasolt, Hugo, 75 Grove St., Passaic, N. J.
 Fischer, Ad. H., 6904 Wissahickon Ave., Phila., Pa.
 *Fitzpatrick, P. T., 349 W. Lemon St., Lancaster, Pa.
 Foersterling, H., 380 High St., Perth Amboy, N. J.
 Francksen, Aug., 4803 Garden St., Phila., Pa.
 —Frazier, Charles H., 1724 Spruce St., Phila., Pa.
 Gebauer, Rudolf, 92 Prospect St., Passaic, N. J.
 Gelbach, R. W., 809 Hudson St., Hoboken, N. J.
 Gensheimer, Phil., 202 Stiles St., Elizabeth, N. J.
 *Granger, Alfred H., 671 Bullitt Bldg., Philadelphia, Pa.
 Grossgebauer, John, 105 Coral St., Paterson, N. J.
 Grau-Wandmayer, Alex, % Austria-Hungarian Consulate, Pittsburgh, Pa.
 Haneman, F. T., 219 Burnett St., E. Orange, N. J.
 Hanzlik, Henry, 102 N. Government Ave., Trenton, N. J.
 Hauck, Adolf W., 50 Norwood Ave., Plainfield, N. J.
 Hellmer, R. E., 5032 Schuyler St., Phila., Pa.
 Hellmund, Rudolph E., 349 Rosedale St., Pittsburgh, Pa.
 Heinemann, Gustav, 7423 Sprague St., Phila., Pa.

*Heinrichs, E. H., Westinghouse Bldg., Pittsburgh, Pa.
 Henkensiefkin, I. A., 2425 N. 29th St., Phila., Pa.
 *Heppe, Florence J., 117 Chestnut St., Phila., Pa.
 Herring, Carl, 210 South 13th St., Phila., Pa.
 Hesse, Hans A., 321 Central Ave., Hackensack, N. J.
 Himes, Charles F., Carlisle, Pa.
 Hirsch, M. A. L., 213 Fairmount Ave., Newark, N. J.
 *Holz, August, 13 Sherman Pl., Irvington, N. J.
 Holzrichter, Fritz, 54 Glen Ridge Ave., Glen Ridge, N. J.
 Hornbostel, Edward, Maywood, N. J.
 —Hoschander, Jacob, 2307 N. 13th St., Phila., Pa.
 Hoskins, John Preston, 22 Bank St., Princeton, N. J.
 Hering, Rudolph, 40 Lloyd Road, Montclair, N. J.
 *Ill, Edward J., 1002 Broad St., Newark, N. J.
 —*Ill, Charles L., 188 Clinton Ave., Newark, N. J.
 *Kattermann, August, 815 Broadway, Paterson, N. J.
 Kayser, P. O., 158 Hamilton Ave., Paterson, N. J.
 Keil, Konrad, 812 Fulton Bldg., Pittsburgh, Pa.
 Keller, Harry F., 2313 Green St., Phila., Pa.
 Keller, Edwin R., 1213 Race St., Phila., Pa.
 Keppelmann, E. P., 5871 Beacon St., Pittsburgh, Pa.
 *Kern, Emil A., 328 So. 7th St., Newark, N. J.
 Kessier, J. M., 100 Chestnut St., W. Orange, N. J.
 Kippenberg, H., 15 Darmstadt Ave., Rahway, N. J.
 Kleber, C., Grove, Clifton, Passaic, N. J.
 Krause, Henry G., 317 So. Orange Ave., Newark, N. J.
 *Krause, O. H., Prospect Ave., Hackensack, N. J.
 Kremer, Gustav, 624 E. 27th St., Paterson, N. J.
 *Kribs, H. A., University of Pa., Phila., Pa.
 Krueger, G. C., 97 Canal St., Newark, N. J.
 Lehmacher, Franz, 166 Springfield Ave., Newark, N. J.
 Leisel, Albert, 91 Mechanic St., Newark, N. J.
 Lippe, Carl, 217 Fairmount Ave., Newark, N. J.
 Lohstoeter, Friedrich, 3 Clarendon Pl., Pittsburgh, Pa.
 Lowy, Hugo M., Holtwood, Pa.
 Maass, Frank, 400 Ellison St., Paterson, N. J.
 Machlet, jr., Georg, 1008 Lafayette St., Elizabeth, N. J.
 —Malter, Heinrich, 1937 N. 33rd St., Philadelphia, Pa.
 Mahler, W., 2106 7th Ave., Beaver Falls, Pa.
 Martens, P., % Goldschmidt Detinning Co., Chrome, N. J.
 Marvin, Walter, Rutgers College, New Brunswick, N. J.
 Meyer, Albert, Smelting & Rfg. Works, Irvington, N. J.
 Mezger, Robert, 175 Delavan Ave., Newark, N. J.
 Murphy, Wm. Hembert, 437 Locust Ave., Roselle, N. J.
 Neu Alfred, 423 Summitt Ave., W. Hoboken, N. J.
 Neumann, Norbert, P. O. Box 62, York, Pa.
 Nicholas, A., 243 Pennington Ave., Passaic, N. J.
 —*Niebling, Charles, 210 Fairmount Ave., Newark, N. J.
 Obermaier, Carl E., P. O. Box 595, York, Pa.
 —O'Malley, Austin, 2228 So. Broad St., Phila., Pa.
 Ortman, A. L., Carnegie Museum, Pittsburgh, Pa.
 Palmer, P. M., So. Bethlehem, Pa.
 —Post, Otto T., Trevanian Ave., Swissvale, Pa.
 *Prieth, Benedict, 225 Washington St., Newark, N. J.
 *Puller, Gustav, 208 Fifth Ave., Paterson, N. J.
 Reis, A., 910 N. Franklin St., Phila., Pa.
 Rennert, Hugo Albert, University of Pa., Phila., Pa.
 Riehl, Wilhelm, 29 Clinton Pl., Newark, N. J.
 Riethmuller, Richard, 7133 Cresheim Rd., Phila., Pa.
 —*Rigby, J. M., Media, Pa.
 —*Rigby, M. H., Media, Pa.
 *Ritter, R. M., 908 Chestnut St., % The Bayer Co., Phila., Pa.
 —Roeder, Edward M., 862 Ave. C., Bayonne, N. J.
 Roehlig, Georg Gustav, 145 Dayton Ave., Passaic, N. J.
 Roessler, Franz, Perth Amboy, N. J.
 Rosenberg, S. L. M., Girard College, Phila., Pa.
 Runge, Werner, 130 Union St., Newark, N. J.

Rys. C. F., 517 Carnegie Bldg., Pittsburgh, Pa.
 Sattler, L. R., 22 17th Ave., Newark, N. J.
 Seeley, Levi, 482 W. State St., Trenton, N. J.
 Seher, Otto P., 105 Montclair Ave., Newark, N. J.
 Schaefer, Ludwig, Maywood, N. J.
 *Seidensticker, Clara, 65 Montrose Ave., S. Orange, N. J.
 *Schaefer, Eugene, Maywood, N. J.
 Schiedt, Richard C., Franklin Marshall Col., Lancaster, Pa.
 —Schneider, August, Y. M. C. A., Paterson, N. J.
 Schlachter, Carl H., 286 Harrison St., Passaic, N. J.
 Schmidt, Folkert M., 239 Lake St., Newark, N. J.
 Schneider, Emil, 1026 Garden St., Hoboken, N. J.
 Schuchard G. C., 338 Boulevard, Passaic, N. J.
 —Schwarz, Bernhard, 1411 Kenwood Ave., Camden, N. J.
 —Starker, C. W., Hotel Lorraine, North Hillandair, Pittsburgh, Pa.
 Stein, Walter M., 3409 Race St., Phila., Pa.
 Stengel, George H., 4136 Grant Boulevard, Pittsburgh, Pa.
 —Stern, Arthur, 24 E. Jersey St., Elizabeth, N. J.
 Stockmayer, Hugo, 124 Prospect Pl., Rutherford, N. J.
 Strecker, Alex H., 235 Mt. Pleasant Ave., Newark, N. J.
 Strubin, Paul % Chas. Lenning & Co., Bridesburg, Phila., Pa.
 Sickenberger, Ernest F., Carlstadt, Pa.
 Stattmann, C. Adolf, 206 Ashland Ave., Bloomfield, N. J.
 *Thews, Edmund R., jr., 5008 Walnut St., Phila., Pa.
 *Thies, C. E., Hoboken, N. J.
 Trubek, M., Carlstadt, N. J.
 —Uebe, George A., Smull Ave., Caldwell, N. J.
 Vaterrodt, Peter, 400 Hudson St., Hoboken, N. J.
 von Bermgueller, Adolph, P. O. box 337, Clifton Hgts., Delaware County, Penna.
 von Maltitz, Edmund, Bridgeton, N. J.
 von Rechenberg, W., 54 Holdsworth Court, Passaic, N. J.
 *Wallhauser, H. J. F., 47 New St., Newark, N. J.
 —Wechsberg, Otto, 2514 Napas St., Phila., Pa.
 Weiland, Carl, 617 Vine St., Phila., Pa.
 Wenz, Eugene, 21 Paul St., Pittsburgh, Pa.
 Wiroelauer, W. L., 96 E. 39th St., Paterson, N. J.
 Woefel, Paul L., Oliver Bldg., Pittsburg, Pa.
 Zeh, Edward, Ave A & Vanderpool Ave., Newark, N. J.
 Zeller, Albert T., 603 Locust Ave., McKeesport, Pa.
 *Ziegler, Louis A., 836 S. 12th St., Newark, N. J.
 Zimmerman, S. R., 38 Scherer St., Newark, N. J.
 Zimmermann, Hans, 7435 Sprague St., Mt. Airy, Phila., Pa.
 Haussmann, Carl F., 6129 Musgrave St., Germantown, Phila., Pa.
 Zimlick, Arthur John, N. E. cor. Green & Harvey St., Phila., Pa.

CLEVELAND, OHIO.

—Baehr, Rudolf, Cincinnati, O.
 Bleite, A. M., 218 King Ave., Columbus, O.
 *Billing, Mrs. Henriette, 6 Beechwood Place, Cincinnati, O.
 Engel, Henry J., 955 Oakland Ave., Cincinnati, O.
 —Holmes, Carl F., Cincinnati, O.
 —Holmes, Carl R., 8 E. 8th St., Cincinnati, O.
 —Holmes, Christian R., jr., 10 E. 8th St., Cincinnati, O.
 —Holmes, Julius F., Cincinnati, O.
 Katzenberg, George A., Greenville, Ohio.
 Keidel, Heinrich C., 2281 Indiana Ave., Columbus, O.
 Loew, John, 2733 Market St., Youngstown, O.
 Poll, Max, Univ. of Cincinnati, Cincinnati, O.
 Reese, Heinrich W., Ohio State Univ., Columbus, O.
 Tressler, Victor, 615 Fountain Ave., Springfield, Ohio.
 von Egloffstein, C., 2907 Urwiler Ave., Cincinnati, O.
 *Wirthwein, Louis, 175 Deshler Ave., Columbus, O.
 Doernenburg, Emil, 29 So. College St., Athens, O.

RICHMOND, VA.

Abel, John J., Johns Hopkins Med. Sch., Baltimore, Md.
 Allner, F. A., 1611 Lexington St. Bldg., Baltimore, Md.
 Collitz, Hermann, Johns Hopkins Univ., Baltimore, Md.
 Dachnowski, Alfred G., Bureau of Plant Industry, Wash., D. C.
 Derendinger, Ernest, Frederick, Md.
 *De Wolf, Richard C., 1930 Kilbourne Pl., Washington, D. C.
 Dohme, A. R. L., 310-317 Pratt St., Baltimore, Md.
 Droste, C. L., P. O. Box 1356, Richmond, Va.
 DuBrau, Hermann, Cumberland, Md.
 Engelhardt, H., 303 W. Pratt St., Baltimore, Md.
 *Palter, Philip H., Lexington St. Bldg., R. 1606, Baltimore, Md.
 Fitzhugh, Thomas, University of Virginia, Charlottesville, Va.
 Flemer, J. A., Westmoreland Co., Norma P. O., Va.
 *Frommel, Frieda, 2200 20th St., NW., Wash., D. C.
 Glaser, Charles, 2135 Bolton St., Baltimore, Md.
 Haase, Robert, 1304 Madison Ave., Baltimore, Md.
 Holler, H. P., 1702 Oregon Ave. NW., Wash., D. C.
 *Hilken, H. G., 4 Bishops' Road, Baltimore, Md.
 Kent, Charles W., University of Va., Charlottesville, Va.
 Langenbeck, Karl, 1625 Hobart St., Wash., D. C.
 Lahser, Conrad, Greensboro College for Women, Greensboro, N. C.
 Mattern, Johannes, Johns Hopkins Univ., Baltimore, Md.
 McNeill, W. S., 805-9 Travelers' Bldg., Richmond, Va.
 Wood, Henry, 109 North Avenue W., Baltimore, Md.

ATLANTA, GA.

Schulze, Karl George, Orange Park, Florida.
 Conant C. Everett, Univer. of Chattanooga, Tenn.
 *Gessner, Hermann B., 1105 Maison Blanche Bldg., New Orleans
 Kohlmann, Dr. W., 1544 State St., New Orleans, La.
 Sanborn, Herbert C., Vanderbilt Univ., Nashville, Tenn.

CHICAGO, ILL.

Abele, L. H., 209 So. State St., Chicago, Ill.
 Abt, Isaac, 104 So. Michigan Ave., Chicago, Ill.
 Amberg, Emil, David Whitney Bldg., Detroit, Mich.
 Amberg, Samuel, 735 Fullerton Ave., Chicago, Ill.
 Ballin, Mas., 355 Woodward Ave., Detroit, Mich.
 *Barlow, Burt E., 160 W. Chicago St., Coldwater, Mich.
 Bartlett, Frederick C., 2901 Prairie Ave., Chicago, Ill.
 Bernhardt, Carl, Rock Island, Ill.
 Bidtel, Ernst, Golconda, Ill.
 Brand, Horance L., 24-28 S. 5th St., Chicago, Ill.
 Brassert, H. A., Ill. Steel Co., So. Chicago, Ill.
 Carus, Paul, LaSalle, Ill.
 Cutting, Starr Willard, University of Chicago, Chicago, Ill.
 DeLee, Joseph, 5028 Ellis Ave., Chicago, Ill.
 Frank, Edwin, Urbana, Ill.
 Franz, Hugo, 22 E. Washington St., Chicago, Ill.
 Freyn, Heinrich J., 1122 E. 52nd St., Chicago, Ill.
 Goldbeck, Edward, 921 Ridge Ave., Evanston, Ill.
 Guenzel, Louis C., 332 So. Michigan Ave., Chicago, Ill.
 Helmholtz, Henry F., 1015 Michigan Ave., Evanston, Ill.
 *Huber, A. W., 931 Winona St., Chicago, Ill.
 Koessler, Karl K., Monroe Bldg., Chicago, Ill.
 Kuh, Sydney, 30 N. Michigan Blvd., Chicago, Ill.
 Luckhardt, Albert E., 815 Oakdale Ave., Chicago, Ill.
 Leistner, Oscar, 321 N. Randolph St., Chicago, Ill.
 Meurer, E., Muskegon, Mich.
 *Meyer, J. W., 704 Jefferson Ave., Laporte, Ind.
 Mohr, F. J., 4514 N. Racine Ave., Chicago, Ill.
 *Mohrenstecher, Otto, Quincy, Ill.
 Neef, Fritz, 802 Woodward Ave., Detroit, Mich.

Obermaier, C. A., 195 151st St., Woods Mobilette Mfg. Co., Harvey, Ill.
 —Peters, A. T., P. O. box 43, Peoria, Ill.
 *Proelss, O., La Salle, Ill.
 Puening, F., 2657 Stewart Ave., Evanston, Ill.
 Riebel, E. C., 6500 Harvard Ave., La Salle, Ill.
 *Robinson, C. L., 2312 N. Halsted St., Chicago, Ill.
 Roth, E., La Salle, Ill.
 *Rubens, Harry, 1418 Westminster Bldg., Evanston, Ill.
 *Schapper, Ferdinand C., 617 Arlington Pl., Chicago, Ill.
 Scherger, George L., Armour Institute, Chicago, Ill.
 Schevill, Ferdinand, 5745 Blackstone Ave., Chicago, Ill.
 Schlichter, Anton, 214 Beethoven Place, Chicago, Ill.
 *Schmidt, Carl E., Oscoda, Iosco County, Michigan.
 *Schreiber, F. R., 352 Mt. Vernon Ave., Gd. Rapids, Mich.
 Simons, F. H., 1108 Clay St., Chicago, Ill.
 Stempfel, Theodore, Fletcher American Nat'l Bank, Indianapolis, Ind.
 Stroebel, Charles, 1744 Monadnock Block, Chicago, Ill.
 von Schuckmann, Max, 2144 Hudson Ave., Chicago, Ill.
 Vos, Bert John, Bloomington, Ind.
 —Wahl, Robert, 1135 Fullerton Ave., Chicago, Ill.
 Wood, Francis A., 5407 Greenwood Ave., Chicago, Ill.
 *Wuelfing, Hugo, 1000 Lemcke Bldg., Indianapolis, Ind.

ST. LOUIS, MO.

Almstedt, Hermann, University of Missouri, Columbia, Mo.
 Alt, Adolf, 316 Metropolitan Bldg., St. Louis, Mo.
 Breyer, E. F., Rivermines, Mo.
 *Busch, August A., Annheuser-Busch Brewing Co., St. Louis, Mo.
 Johnston, Eva, Columbia, Mo.
 Kompfe, Anna E. L., Girl's High School, Louisville, Ky.
 McDermott, Edward J., Inter-Southern Bldg., Louisville, Ky.
 Meyer, Clara, 1921 Virginia Ave., St. Louis, Mo.
 Mudd, H. G., St. Louis, Mo.
 Nagel, Charles, Security Bldg., St. Louis, Mo.
 *Peifer, Johann Baptist, Shively, Ky.
 *Schachner, August, 844 Seventh Ave., Louisville, Ky.
 Tuholske, Herman, 543 N. Taylor Ave., St. Louis, Mo.
 von Walther, Eckart, University of Louisville, Louisville, Ky.
 *Brun, Theo. F., 3546 Page Blvd., St. Louis, Mo.
 Heller, Otto, Washington University, St. Louis, Mo.
 Kraus, Chas., 3237 Longfellow Bd., St. Louis, Mo.
 Jonas, Ernst, Lister Bldg., St. Louis, Mo.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.

Aichelin, Karl, 232 17th St., Milwaukee, Wis.
 Augspurger, L. F., Chemists Bldg., Madison, Wis.
 Baars, Srnst S. H., 585 Conway St., Milwaukee, Wis.
 Baum, C., 486 Cass St., Milwaukee, Wis.
 Bernhard, A., 1300 Grand Ave., Milwaukee, Wis.
 Benecke, E., 623 Milwaukee St., Milwaukee, Wis.
 Bossert, G. F., 719 Franklin Place, Milwaukee, Wis.
 Brown, Horace M., 311 Prospect Ave., Milwaukee, Wis.
 Buess, Max, 540 Logan Ave., Milwaukee, Wis.
 Conzelmann, Fred J., Winnebago, Wis.
 Dernehl, P. H., 717 Majestic Bldg., Milwaukee, Wis.
 Dressmann, Rud., 508 Jackson Ave., ed. of German Herold, Milwaukee, Wis.
 *Duhne, Francis, 412 Ch. of Com., Milwaukee, Wis.
 —Eiselmeyer, John, 558 Broadway, Milwaukee, Wis.
 —Engel, Otto, Norwalk, Wis.
 Engelmann, Karl, 409 24th St., Milwaukee, Wis.
 Ernst, George R., 2825 State St., Milwaukee, Wis.
 Feldmann, Adolf, 1st Natl. Bank, Milwaukee, Wis.
 Fischer, Richard, Madison, Wis.
 Frank, Louis, 2300 Grand Ave., Milwaukee, Wis.
 Frantzke, Emil J., 1310 Majestic Bldg., Milwaukee, Wis.

Gaenslen, F. G., 141 Wisconsin St., Milwaukee, Wis.
 Griebsch, Max, 558 Broadway, Milwaukee, Wis.
 Goes, Ed. F., % The Vitter Mfg. Co., Milwaukee, Wis.
 Gansewitz, Arthur P., 303 Railway Exchange, Milwaukee, Wis.
 Herschman, A. J. 379 27th St., Milwaukee, Wis.
 Hohlfeld, A. R., 104 Breese Terrace, Madison, Wis. .
 Hottelet, Max., 693 Farwell Ave., Milwaukee, Wis.
 Jenner, Albert J., 501 Marshall St., Milwaukee, Wis.
 Jermain, Louis F., 1901 Grand Ave., Milwaukee, Wis.
 Kahlenberg, Louis, 234 Lthrop St., Madison, Wis.
 Kerber, Julius, 492 13th St., Milwaukee, Wis.
 Kissling, C. L., 626 Galena St., Milwaukee, Wis.
 Kopf, H., 78 Juneau Ave., Milwaukee, Wis.
 Kremer, Waldemar R., % the Vitter Co., Milwaukee, Wis.
 Kreutzer, Alfred G., 1st National Bank Bldg., Milwaukee, Wis.
 Leonard, William Ellery, 415 N. Park St., Madison, Wis.
 Levi, Louis E., Pfister & Vogel Lea. Co., Milwaukee, Wis.
 Liepe, Arthur C., 1412 Greenburg Ave., Milwaukee, Wis.
 *Lutz, Werner, 150 Ogden Ave., National Knitting Co., Milwaukee.
 Muenzuer, R. J., 128 Wisconsin St., Milwaukee, Wis.
 Nolte, Ludwig, 727 Cass St., Milwaukee, Wis.
 Oberempt, Bernard W., 800 Majestic Bldg., Milwaukee, Wis.
 Oesterlein, Wm., 491 Jefferson St., Univ. Club, Milwaukee, Wis.
 Owen, Ralph A. D., 558 Broadway, Milwaukee, Wis.
 Pfister, Franz, Majestic Bldg., Milwaukee, Wis.
 Puls, Arthur J., 400 1st Nat'l Bank Bldg., Milwaukee, Wis.
 Quaden, S. R., 640 34th St., Milwaukee, Wis.
 Reiche, D. M. O., 4504 Pabst Ave., Milwaukee, Wis.
 Rohde, H. W., 1275 Stowell Place, Milwaukee, Wis.
 Ruhland, George C., City Hall, Milwaukee, Wis.
 Ruschhaupt, L. F., 267 26th St., Milwaukee, Wis.
 Schedler, A. J., 484 34th St., Milwaukee, Wis.
 Schmit, Louis, 407 Garfield Ave., Milwaukee, Wis.
 Schroeder, W. R., 774 6th St., Milwaukee, Wis.
 Schneider, J., Pabst Theater Bldg., Milwaukee, Wis.
 Silbor, Heinrich, 658 Mineral St., Milwaukee, Wis.
 Strauss, Simon, Albert Lee, Minn.
 Stern, Leo, Milwaukee, Wis.
 Steinhagen, G., 20 Mack Bldg., Milwaukee, Wis.
 Steigleder, Emil, University of Wis., Madison, Wis.
 —*Thienhaus, C. O., Madison, Wis.
 Tietsche, Ernest, 1227 12th St., Milwaukee, Wis.
 *Uihlein, William J., 717 Shepard Ave., Milwaukee, Wis.
 *Von Koenig, Arthur, 305 Watkins Bldg., Milwaukee, Wis.
 Voss, Ernst K. J., 175 Nelson St., Madison, Wis.
 Wigge, Wm. F., 835 Caswell Block, Milwaukee, Wis.
 Wild, Robert, First Natl. Bank Bldg., Milwaukee, Wis.

KANSAS CITY, KANSAS.

Becker, Henry, 528 Park Ave., Omaha, Nebr.
 Bilharz, O. M., Baxter Springs, Kans.
 —Cooper, Carl H., Muskogee, Okla.
 Flothow, Max, Storz Brewing Co., Omaha, Nebr.
 Frizell, Arthur B., 1010 E. Euclid Ave., McPherson, Kans
 Gengenbach, Frank Paul, 1434 Glenarm, Denver, Colo.
 *Grummann, Paul Heinrich, U. 111 Station S, Lincoln, Nebr.
 Jonas, A. F., 454 Brandeis Bldg., Omaha, Nebr.
 Thiele, Felix Carl, 209 W. 4th St., Coffeyville, Kans.
 *Von Rahden, M. C., Creighton, Nebr.

DALLAS, TEXAS.

—Butte, Charles George, Univ. of Texas, Austin, Tex.
 Graustein, W. C., Rice Institute, Houston, Tex.
 —Halker, J. Olay, Belton, Tex.

Keasbey, Lindley M., Univ. of Texas, Austin, Tex.
 —Provosch, Eduard. Univ. of Texas, Austin, Tex.
 Weber, Rolf Felix. Rice Institute, Houston, Tex.

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

Bauwens, George. San Joaquin L. & P. Corp., Fresno, Cal.
 Beckh, G. C., Hotel Richelieu, San Francisco, Cal.
 Benzinger, R., 1437 Chestnut St., Oakland, Cal.
 *Budde, H. F., 440 Sansome St., San Francisco, Cal.
 *Dehn Karl, 1112 L. C. Smith Bldg., Seattle, Wash.
 Elschner, Carl, 1933 Home St., Berkeley, Cal.
 Fimmen, M. E., Room 1, Crosley Bldg., San Francisco.
 *Geoggel, Wm., 1328 Hyde St., San Francisco.
 Gottlieb, A., 1661 Sacramento St., San Francisco.
 Klausmann, H., 304 Physicians Bldg., San Francisco.
 Kremser, Alois, 2315 Dwight Way, Berkeley, Cal.
 Kreutzmann, H. F., 1054 Sutter St., S. Francisco.
 Krotoszyner, Martin, 999 Sutter St., S. Francisco.
 Kuehne, Paul, 165 E. 33rd St., Portland, Oreg.
 Lehning, Albert, 1453 Bellevue Ave., Los Angeles, Cal.
 Lyman, George, 240 Stockton St., S. Francisco, Cal.
 Nicklas, Ph., 243 Sansome St., S. Francisco, Cal.
 Peters, H. H., P. O. Box 552, Oxnard, Cal.
 Pischel, K., Butler Bldg., S. Francisco, Cal.
 Raith, T., 2166 Sutter St., S. Francisco, Cal.
 Rendtorff, Karl, 318 Lincoln Ave., Palo Alto, Cal.
 Riessner, Wm., 1225 Lombard St., Sa. Francisco.
 Schorr, Robert, Postal Telegraph Bldg., Sa. Francisco.
 Seiler, Paul, 1480 10th Ave., Sa. Francisco.
 Treskow, F., Kentfield, Marin Co., California.
 Uhlig, Carl, Perry Building, S. Francisco.
 Von der Leith, H., 1035 Ashbury St., S. Francisco.
 Vowinkel, F. W., 1200 Octavia St., S. Francisco.
 Weil, C., 1912 Clay St., S. Francisco.
 Wissner, John P., 1935 Yolo Ave., Berkeley, Cal.
 —Abele, Paul, Sunnibend, Alberta, Canada.
 *Mayerhofer, A. F., Dannhelm, Waldhof, Germany.
 Liebeleisen, O., Central Delicias, Oriente, Cuba.
 Gabel, Chas., 805 Georgia St., Manila, P. I.
 Zaller, Mauricio, % Electric Works, Merida, Yucatan, Mex.

Mr. BIELASKI. I think it should be said that Prof. A. Busse, of Hunter College, resigned his position as secretary because he learned from various college men that the activities of the league were regarded as a species of German propaganda; and he gave some information about the operation of it.

Senator OVERMAN. I see here, in "Who's Who," George Fred Williams studied at Heidelberg and some other college in Germany, and was a Member of Congress and Minister to Greece.

Senator NELSON. That is the man; he was a Member of Congress and Minister to Greece.

Mr. BIELASKI. This document contains a list of the members as of 1917. I will put this list in the record, if you wish.

Senator OVERMAN. Let it go in, please.

(The list is here printed in the record, as follows:)

BIELASKI EXHIBIT No. 106.¹

President Edmund von Mach
 Vice-Presidents M. R. Hein Charles Nagel Camillo von Klenze
 Treasurer H. C. A. Seeborn

¹ Further data in relation to the German University League will be found printed at p. 1372 of these hearings.

Assistant treasurer R. Pagenstecher

Recording secretary Hugo Kirbach

Executive secretary O. J. Merkel

Trustees: Elected to serve from one to four years: Ernst Bill Dr. H. J. Boldt, 1918; Prof. A. Busse, 1917; Louis Doelling, 1920; 1917; M. R. Hein, 1917; Dr. Hugo Kirbach, 1918; Dr. Henry G. K Dr. U. D. Marquardt, 1918; Hon. Charles Nagel, 1918; R. Pagenst Prof. W. W. Rockwell, 1917; H. C. A. Seeborn, 1918; Dr. W. L. 1920; Ad K. Fischer, 1920; Prof. W. R. Shepherd, 1920; H. E. S Prof. Camillo von Klenze, 1919; Dr. Edmund von Mach, 1919; Dr. mann, 1919. Elected to serve for the current year: Prof. Starr A ting, Prof. Albert B. Faust, Louis Guenzel, Prof. Hans Carl G. von Prof. Thos. C. Hall, W. S. McNeill, O. J. Merkel, F. Stallforth Schoen, Carl L. Schurz, Dr. Hugo Schweitzer, G. Steinhagen.

Mr. BIELASKI. I find also in this file what appears to be is headed, really, "Draft," "Professor Shepherd: Member University League and Friends"—and I assume it is a d speech. He says one thing which has just struck my eye. [

To my mind, Deutsche Kultur is that stage of human achievement reached by an efficient application of the best results of activity in of knowledge gained at home and chosen from abroad to the we individual in the State.

That is not "culture," he says, but it is "kultur"—or I venture to think. This seems to be quite a pro-German

Senator OVERMAN. There are a lot of them in Boston you handed me.

Senator NELSON. I only find one in the list from Minn the Minneapolis people seem to be Milwaukee people.

Mr. BIELASKI. I notice that, Senator.

Senator NELSON. I find only one man there, Simon S Albert Lee, from Minneapolis.

Mr. BIELASKI. In 1917, Edmund von Mach had become dent of this German University League. I think he app original list as director, or trustee, or something like tha the author, I think, of "What Germany wants," "Germ of view," a chapter on Germany in "Why Germany is at think he first came to Harvard in 1893.

Senator NELSON. These books were published in Engl

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes, sir.

Senator OVERMAN. I see on this list, "Tauscher, H., 320 (this is the notorious Krupp agent in the United States acquitted of conspiracy in the plot to blow up the Well now in Germany)." Opposite his name on this list are "Don't send mail." What does that mean?

Mr. BIELASKI. I think that was a suggestion not to v mail might be seen by somebody, he having come pub attention of the authorities.

In addition, Von Mach made many speeches and v articles criticizing the Government officials, the Cabinet the course of the administration in general. He was the organization intended to ship milk to Germany, which great deal of publicity. He, according to the testimony o members who was associated with Von Mach, received a s per week as executive chairman and an allowance of $5 a expenses. He was born August 1, 1870, in Germany, and

2. Ruthless naval warfare, i. e., the establishment of military areas on the high seas, with the threat to sink all ships entering them unwarned, was first proclaimed by Great Britain, who on November 2, 1914, by an admiralty order, established a military area on the high seas where all ships were to be sunk, unwarned, 'by mines . . . and warships.'

The first American ship sunk in a 'military area,' unwarned, during this war, was sunk as the result of this British' order.

The first American lives lost on ships so sunk were lost through the instrumentality of the British, when the American steamships Carib and Evelyn were sunk.

The first passenger steamers sunk, unwarned, during this war were Austrian passenger steamers sunk by torpedoes from entente submarines in the Mediterranean.

Germany established the first war zone on the high seas three months later than Great Britain, claiming that Great Britain's ruthlessness forced her to take this action, and offering to rescind her order as soon as her enemies would do likewise.

3. The British admiralty order of November 2, 1914, which began ruthless naval warfare, has been omitted from the Official White Book published by our Department of State. The German order has been printed, which gives the appearance that Germany and not Great Britain started the mode of warfare which has aroused American resentment.

The loss of American ships and American lives as the result of the British order has been suppressed as much as possible. The loss of American ships and American lives as the result of the German order has been fully published.

Our Department of State has not protested against the British order. It has protested against the German order.

4. At the outbreak of the war our Department of State asked the belligerents whether they were willing to abide by the Declaration of London. This declaration embodies the rules of naval warfare which the delegates of all the maritime nations of the world had accepted in 1909 as in keeping with the standards of modern civilization. Germany accepted our proposal. Great Britain rejected it.

Since then Germany has twice offered to conform her mode of warfare to the rules of this declaration, and even today it is not unreasonable to assume that she would be willing to forego the use of her submarines and abide by the standard of naval warfare set up by this declaration, if we can force the recognition of the same high standard by all the belligerents.

5. The Constitution has committed to Congress the definition and the punishment of "offenses against the law of nations." (Article I, Section 8, No. 10) "Great changes have occurred in the conditions and means of naval warfare since the rules hitherto governing" it were formulated (American note to Great Britain, March 10, 1915). Let Congress now define, as already suggested by Senator McCumber, what, in view of these changes, the United States feels obliged to regard as offenses against the laws of nations. Let Congress establish definite rules, and let us then enforce them impartially!

6. The submarine is a new, and as many believe, the coming weapon of naval warfare. When this war is over, the nations of the world will have to rewrite their "law of nations" with reference to it.

Our contention is that the submarine should obey the laws accepted for over-water craft. Germany's contention is that new weapons need new rules.

The attitude of the neutral nations in this war, except ourselves and China, is more favorable to Germany's contention than to our own. At least, this would seem so from their refusal to accede to the President's request to join us in breaking with Germany.

If we go to war to vindicate our interpretation, and suffer the untold horrors of war, and sow the seeds of hatred which in wartime are scattered like weeds, it may happen that the council of nations, after the war, may decide that the invention of the submarine has forced a change in the rules. This is, for instance, the contention of the American inventor of the submarine, Mr. Simon Lake.

In that case our boys will have died in vain!

7. Before the invention of powder, men did not fight each other in battle without giving an individual challenge, by a special warning, to the men they intended to attack.

After the invention of powder, when men could shoot at each other from a distance, the individual warning became obsolete.

Possibly the introduction of the submarine may make the individual obsolete, and a general warning take its place, as was suggested in the Austrian note.

8. The present unrestricted use of the German submarines has been imposed upon the German Government by the unanimous will of the Great Powers. The German Government had been willing, until recently, to restrict the submarines out of deference to our wishes.

It is the German people who have forced the Government to carry out what was said in the first German note on the submarine question. (Annals of the League, Book, No. 1, p. 57.)

"If England invokes the powers of famine as an ally in its struggle with Germany with the intention of leaving a civilized people, the alternative is starving in misery or submitting to the yoke of England's political and military will, the German Government is today determined to take up the challenge and to appeal to the same grim ally."

9. The German use of the submarine carries with it no hostility towards neutrals, least of all towards the United States, where millions of German blood have found a cherished home.

The German people regret as deeply as any of us that their Government and our Administration have been unable to find a solution to the great problems which have arisen between them and us as the result of what our Government of State has called 'the great changes which have occurred in the methods and means of naval warfare since the rules hitherto governing it have been violated. (Official White Book, No. 1, p. 70.)

10. "These great changes" have made it impossible for Great Britain to declare a legal blockade of the coasts of Germany. She has, instead, resorted to the illegal proclamation of 'military areas' on the high seas, which she has stopped our legal commerce with Germany.

The German people cannot understand why they should submit to British "military areas," where all neutral ships are threatened with destruction by "mines and warships," as officially announced by Germany, and should refuse to submit to the German "war zones," where they are threatened with destruction by submarines.

If the loss of American lives in the British "military areas" has been comparatively small, this is due to the fact that our Administration has secured its support from all who dared to enter them.

If we were to follow the same course with respect to the German "war zones," established by Germany as a retaliatory and defensive measure against Great Britain, we should avoid additional loss of American lives, and remove all danger of friction with Germany.

11. If we feel that we can no longer submit to having first one and then another belligerent close certain areas of the high seas to our commerce, we say to both that we shall no longer tolerate any interference with our commerce, and that we request both of them instantly to rescind their orders, and clear the high seas of mines sown by them and warships and submarines.

12. At the outbreak of the European war three states, out of a total of fifty-seven independent and sovereign states under which the population of the world are organized, owned more than one-half of the land area of the world. There are only about fifty millions of square miles.

In addition, these three held sway over practically all the strategic points of the water area of the world.

These three are Great Britain, Russia, and France.

All three are Colonial Empires, and therefore plutocracies.

13. Germany, their chief opponent in the war, is smaller than Texas, and her colonial possessions, with few exceptions, are of no great importance.

She is an economic democracy with a monarchical form of government, which Senator Hitchcock said in the Senate on March 4, last:

"That great people has grown up in the last forty-five years under the powers of an Empire. They occupy what for centuries has been the heart of Europe. Only within the last forty-five years have the Teutons been privileged to live in security and prosperity. We are wont to credit the German Government, and because our sympathies go strongly toward the German Government, we forget that the Government of Imperial Germany has done for its common people, the masses of the German people, during the last forty years than any country in Europe, at least, has done for its people."

14. During the period between 1890 and 1910, the period of German commercial expansion, Germany added to her territory only about ten square miles of extraneous land, chiefly for coaling stations, and always by way of purchase or lease. ("America's Relations to the War," by Professor John William Burgess.)

During the same period "the three great Colonial Empires (Great Britain, Russia, and France) added millions of square miles to their colonial areas, and almost always by means of war and bloodshed."

15. During the entire long reign of Queen Victoria there was not one single year when the British Empire was not at war somewhere in the world.

The German Empire had been at peace with the world from the year of its creation in 1871 to the outbreak of the war in 1914.

16. Germany is today fighting a war at odds such as the world has never seen. Numerically, these odds against Germany are almost seven to one! And territorially, so far as the square miles of the world's surface are concerned, on the resources of which the respective belligerents can draw, the odds against Germany were at the beginning of the war, almost forty to one!

These figures do not take into account the United States, who during almost the whole of the war have been permitted to serve as the granary, and the treasury, and the arsenal of the Entente Allies.

A people which can fight against such odds is sustained by the conviction of the righteousness of its cause.

This wonderful spirit of the German people is described by an American woman who recently returned from abroad in these words: "I was in Germany two weeks, and felt all the time as if I were in church."

17. In spite of the enormous odds against her, Germany has at all times been willing to fight the war according to the rules of naval warfare agreed upon in 1909 by the representatives of all the large maritime nations, including the United States, and laid down in the Declaration of London.

All the measures taken by her which have aroused the indignation of the American people have been measures of retaliation against the unlawful measures of her opponents.

Germany claims that all the disputes between her and us are incidental to her proclamation of a war zone on the high seas. This proclamation, she argues, has been forced upon her by the illegal declaration of war zones or 'military areas' previously issued by her opponents, and by the submission to these British decrees by the neutral nations.

18. GREAT NATIONS FIGHT WHEN THEY ARE FORCED TO FIGHT. FOR PRINCIPLES. IT IS THE PRINCIPLE WHICH COUNTS, AND NOT THE LOSS SUSTAINED.

The principle at stake at the present time is the illegal establishment of war zones on the high seas. If it is true that Great Britain established those war zones first, and that we have not protested against them, we have forfeited our moral and legal rights in this matter.

LET CONGRESS, THEREFORE, AT ONCE CALL UPON THE DEPARTMENT OF STATE FOR A COMPLETE LIST OF ALL THE ORDERS AND PROCLAMATIONS OF SUCH WAR ZONES, AND OUR ANSWERS TO THEM. WITHOUT THESE PAPERS CONGRESS CANNOT DO ITS DUTY.

EDMUND VON MACH.

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 2, 1917.

(Inside of back cover:)

CONGRESS AND WALL STREET.

Anglo-French War Bonds to the value of several hundred millions of dollars, which the general will not buy, are tying up the funds of financiers who prefer to have their funds fluid.

The Bethlehem Steel Company has stated in its official report that it has $35,000,000 tied up in these bonds. The United Steel is said to have $40,000,000 tied up, and J. P. Morgan & Co. and other bankers of the syndicate have on hand several hundred millions of these bonds which they have been unable to sell.

If we loan large sums of money to the Entente Powers, taking for this purpose the money of the American people, Great Britain and France are expected to take care first of those American financiers whose funds are at present so unpleasantly tied up.

Making large loans to the Entente Powers, whatever patriotic motives may animate Congress, will amount to taking the money out of the pockets of the people and putting it into the pockets of Mr. Morgan and his friends.

(Outside of back cover:)

ARE YOU A LOYAL AMERICAN?

Loyal American Citizenship Consists in Keeping Unsullied One's to The Constitution and to the Principles on which this Nation was Founded—Humanity, Justice, and Good-will Toward All.

Mr. BIELASKI. Here is a communication which is issued to prevent a declaration of war—about a four-page circular. I do not suppose it is necessary to put that in.

In a letter written by George S. Viereck, December 7, 1916, was early, of course, he says he has received a letter from von Mach "which I consider to be a matter of grave importance. Mach desires an answer at once."

I do not know what the subject matter was, but that was addressed to Albert, and shows their intimacy.

Here are copies of the various circulars issued by the Committee for Food Shipments, with offices in the Woolworth Building, and with the treasurer in the Mills Building.

After we got in the war he was very active on behalf of the Germans who were interned, in trying to determine that they were held illegally.

He came down here to Washington and had as a press agent J. Ernst Hurst, who, I think, resides in Washington, or at least at that time, at 720 Twelfth Street NW.

He told us that Dr. von Mach had been very active for several days, but had succeeded in getting but one paper to publish a copy, the Washington Times, which published an advertisement for him—"Facts"—on Sunday and Monday before war was declared.

He was unable to get any information as to the source of the money that Dr. von Mach was spending. He paid his expenses in cash, and had a large supply with him, and made strenuous efforts to get in touch with Congressmen—unsuccessful for the most part, or altogether; and clear up until the morning of April 5, 1917, he seemed to believe that he would be successful in preventing a declaration of war.

He became convinced on the 5th of April that his efforts were hopeless, and returned to New York City.

Senator OVERMAN. What became of him?

Mr. BIELASKI. He is up there still—in Boston.

Here is a copy of a circular, addressed, "Dear Mr. Congressman," by Edmund von Mach, which was sent to us by Congressman Shaw. It was dated April 4, 1917, two days before we were declared at war, and was an effort to prevent action. It is short, and you may want to have it in the record, inasmuch as it is addressed to the members of Congress.

(The letter referred to is here printed in the record as follows:)

BIELASKI EXHIBIT No. 108.

DEAR MR. CONGRESSMAN: If we go to war, we shall do so in accordance with the principle that the seas are free, and that the establishment of naval bases of the like on the high seas is forbidden.

The facts, as they have become known officially and by the press, are different from the facts as many of us believe them to be.

Important documents have been suppressed, even in official publications.

Mr. C. E. Richardson, Librarian of Princeton University, referring to one such suppression writes:

"I know of no single act of intentional or accidental misleading of public opinion more flagrant or more directly bearing on vital issues of peace or war than this suppression."

Congress should have the facts. Will you not, therefore, please call on the Department of State at once to submit to Congress all the orders and proclamations issued by both sets of belligerents establishing "war zones," "military areas," "danger-zones," and the like on the high seas, and copies of our replies and protests sent in each case?

There can be nothing unpatriotic in calling for the facts. The facts will become known either now or later. We shall have to face them some time. Why not make sure that we are right before we go to war?

Very sincerely yours,

EDMUND VON MACH.

Mr. BIELASKI. He was in correspondence with Albert at various times, seeking his advice as to what points to be used in pro-German articles, and I think the telegram which I read this morning from Bernstorff to the foreign office shows clearly the source of his money. It came from the German Embassy.

The German Publication Society: This was an organization whose principal business—

Maj. HUMES. Before you get away from the citizens' committee for food shipments, do you know where that was organized?

Mr. BIELASKI. I did not know where it was organized until after I talked with you. You told me of some records from the military intelligence office of an authentic character showing that it was organized at the residence of Samuel Untermyer.

Maj. HUMES. Yes. The statements taken by the clerk at the time of the organization show that it was organized at the residence of Samuel Untermyer.

Mr. BIELASKI. This German Publication Society was first organized on July 15, 1912, but seems to have slept peacefully until about June, 1915, when it was revived for the purpose of distributing this work known as the German classics.

Theodore Sutro was president at one time, and C. S. Huntley, treasurer, and I think Mr. Huntley afterwards became the president. Its letterhead shows most all of the names, of course, German.

Maj. HUMES. Before we get away from that citizens' committee on food shipments there are two or three questions I would like to develop, that I am sure you are familiar with, at least with your recollection refreshed a little bit.

Did they ever actually do any shipping of foodstuffs, or were the funds used for other purposes?

Mr. BIELASKI. I think that they did attempt to make some very small shipments of parcels through the mail; but the $30,000 which, as I recall, our records show was collected, a very small part of them could have been used in any possible food shipments.

Maj. HUMES. Is it not a fact that the only foodstuff that they undertook to ship was some condensed milk, or canned milk of some kind, and they shipped that by first-class mail?

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. And that the postage rate on what they did ship was far in excess of the value of the product itself?

Mr. BIELASKI. That may be. I do not know the comparative but it did not amount to much, as compared with the $30,000.

Maj. HUMES. Was not Dr. Rumely active in the organization of this committee?

Mr. BIELASKI. I do not know that he was active in its organization. I know he was active in connection with it.

Now, to get back to this German Publication Society, that June 15, 1915, Huntley, the treasurer, addressed a letter to Boaz, who is one of Albert's assistants, according to which Boaz was to furnish $600 for two consecutive months for page ads, or a less amount than this if it is decided to take a full page, for advertising in the Literary Digest of the Classics; Mr. Boaz acting for Mr. Albert.

Under date of April 17, 1915, Mr. Huntley sent the copy of the ad to Boaz.

September 30, 1915, Huntley wrote to Boaz concerning advertisements, one in the Outlook, one in the New York Times, in the Nation and Outlook, advertising the sale of "German Classics."

Under date of November 30, 1915, he reported a list of sales.

On November 22, 1916, Mr. Huntley addressed a letter to the ambassador von Bernstorff concerning the need of funds for the organization, in which he goes very thoroughly into its liabilities and winds up by saying:

Finally, I take the liberty of again appealing to your Excellency that the aid sought is urgently needed to avoid the handicapping of the continuing the promotion and sale of this splendid work of ours, which without every set placed in public libraries, college libraries, or with private individuals is lending additional interest and belief in the greatness of Germany.

To eliminate a lot of correspondence about the subject matter, Mr. Albert advanced to this organization at one time $5,000, and I think, $20,000, the last advance being made through Mr. Schweitzer, for use in circulating these German classics as propaganda, and he took a mortgage on the plates of the publication to secure his $25,000.

As usual, Mr. Sylvester Viereck had something to do with it, that he was very active in the attempted distribution of the German classics, even after we went to war, but stopped it as the espionage laws were passed, and the amendments to them.

Senator STERLING. What did the German classics include?

Mr. BIELASKI. There is quite a description of them here. They are just about what their name would indicate, with great emphasis upon the greatness and invincibility of Germany.

I see here a memorandum on February 6, 1917, three days after the break in diplomatic relations, this memorandum being written by Wolff von Igel and Heynen, which says:

20,000. The above amount was paid to Dr. Hugo Schweitzer for the use of German Publication Society as per authorization of the Ambassador.

Maj. HUMES. Will you explain who Carl Heynen is, in connection with your testimony?

Mr. BIELASKI. Carl Heynen was the Tampico, Mexico, agent of the Hamburg-American Line. He was very active in the business down there, came to New York, and soon became one of the right-hand men, if not the right-hand man, of Albert in his commercial enterprises. He was one of the most intelligent and most clever of the German agents. He was a man selected by the ambassador to remain here and to close up the financial transactions having to do with the sale of German bonds in this country, and, I think, the funds with respect to those matters, which were with the Chandler firm of Philadelphia, were subject to Heynen's checks. He was interned, and is still interned, but he was particularly active in all sorts of commercial ventures, notably the Bridgeport Projectile Co., in which he practically was the directing hand behind the scenes. I think he officially occupied with that company the position of treasurer.

For the information of the committee—I suppose you are all familiar with it—that company, the Bridgeport Projectile Co., was a large munition factory located in Bridgeport, which was entirely financed by the German Government, the object being to tie up the powder supply in part, to get a monopoly for a time of certain kinds of presses that were used in the manufacture of munitions. The German Government put into it through Albert's office as I recall $3,400,000.

Senator NELSON. That was after the war in Europe commenced?

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes. That really started about the summer of 1915, and they built a plant at Bridgeport. They bought a lot of powder and held it for awhile, but were able to get their money back on it by selling it to the Spanish Government, which was neutral. In that way they got back out of the money advanced to the Bridgeport Projectile Co. something over $1,000,000 at that time.

Senator KING. What finally became of the plant?

Mr. BIELASKI. It was transferred, I think, to American ownership, but before we got into the war, I think.

Senator KING. Is there any question as to the bona fides of the transaction?

Mr. BIELASKI. The Alien Property Custodian of course has been into that very thoroughly and can speak much better than I can. We have simply made it available——

Capt. LESTER. That company is in the hands of a receiver.

Maj. HUMES. Mr. Bielaski, what do you know of the German control of the Bridgeport Projectile Co. for the purpose of causing industrial disturbances in other munition plants?

Mr. BIELASKI. I do not know a great deal about it, except that that was suggested, and that we find constant references to the Bridgeport situation, and some suggestion that by manipulation of wages or something of that kind, to cause disturbance and unrest in other munition factories.

We have here the original memorandum with respect to the agreement made between the Bridgeport Projectile Co. on the 17th day of April, 1916, and Wolff von Igel, who was the successor of von Papen as the military attaché here.

To get back to this subject of the German Classics, to finish that up, the $20,000, as I just read from that original memorandum, was put at their disposal through Dr. Hugo Schweitzer on February 6,

1917, three days after we severed diplomatic relations. The ing is a letter addressed to Dr. Hugo Schweitzer on that same

BIELASKI EXHIBIT No. 109.

NEW YORK, February 1

Dr. HUGO SCHWEITZER,
117 Hudson Street, New York City.

DEAR DOCTOR: I send you enclosed $20,000 in cash with the request this sum in the form of a two-year loan at the disposal of the German cation Society, 597 Fifth Avenue, New York City. As security for the company gives us a mortgage on the plates of the book, "German
The papers as well as the specifications of the plates are in the poss
Mr. Lindheim under whose guidance I beg you to conduct the furt tations. The responsible manager of the company is Mr. Huntley you to communicate with this gentleman and, advise him that your owner of the mortgage would appear on the papers and that you w to give the money. The money will be repaid in weekly installments eight weeks after the beginning of the loan, and will bear 4 per cent to be calculated semi-annually. May I ask you to receive this intere for us?

With marked esteem,
Sincerely yours,

H.

That is initialed "H" in Mr. Heynen's handwriting and
Mr. von Igel's.

Just in passing, for whatever interest it may be, there is here of correspondence with Mr. Wolff von Igel with the So Modern Art, New York City, in which the treasurer ackno receipt of a letter concerning the proposed loan of $4,000 society.

This was January 26, 1917, in which they wanted a loan years. However, they decided that the conditions on Jan 1917, were not satisfactory for such a loan, but they left th open, and on February 5 sent Dr. Hugo Schweitzer, that is, to Dr. Hugo Schweitzer, a check for $4,000, so that they did ally go into the matter.

Just to put in the record the facts with respect to the American Literary Defense Committee, it had its headqu
150 Nassau Street. The executive secretary was Alfred A.
This man Sander was one of the men convicted of sending England for Germany, and that was his organization.

I find May 29, 1915, that Sander writing as executive sec this defense committee sent Dr. Albert to Mr. Reginald Ru with a note of introduction, stating that he wanted to go ov other side.

Mr. Hale apparently—at least the note is written from 1123 Broadway, June 1, 1915—wrote the following:

BIELASKI EXHIBIT No. 110.

[Room 614, 1123 Broadway, New York.]

JUN

DEAR DOCTOR ALBERT: I see no reason to alter the report I made
Mr. Rutherford's case. I think we should hesitate to employ in an confidential work any one whom some of us do not thoroughly know.

While this correspondence would indicate that at this time Mr. Hale and Dr. Albert were not favorable to Rutherford's going abroad, he actually did go abroad as a German spy and served as a German spy in Holland for a considerable period. We made some effort to get him back in this country for the purpose of trying him, but were unsuccessful. He could not be extradited, and he preferred to stay in Holland.

Senator KING. Does he still desire the climate of Holland?

Mr. BIELASKI. I think he does. He was, of course, active also in one of the Irish societies. I do not just recall the name, but it will probably come to me in a minute. His name appears on the letter-head as one of the officers.

The American Truth Society, the agency which was most active on behalf of German propaganda. Mr. Jeremiah O'Leary was the president. Mr. O'Leary is under indictment in New York City for his activities, as I said before, in connection with the confessed German agent Madame Victorica and a man who was named Karl Roediger. for their activities after we went to war.

Some idea of the get-up of this society is found possibly in this copy of a postal telegram sent:

BIELASKI EXHIBIT No. 111.

[Postal telegram. E. 42d St. 501 Fifth Ave.]

NEW YORK CITY, N. Y., April 10, 1916.

RUDOLF PAGENSTECHER,

30 East 42nd St., New York, N. Y.:

Washington situation very serious. An important conference concerning will be held at offices of American Truth Society, 210 Fifth Avenue, Wednesday evening, April twelfth, at eight o'clock. Your presence is urgently requested. Matters will be discussed there that will have great bearing on the situation.

GEORGE SYLVESTER VIERECK.

JOSEPH FREY.

BERNARD H. RIDDER.

FREDERICK H. SCHRADER.

Rev. G. C. BERKEMEIER.

MICHAEL H. O'ROURKE.

CHARLES A. COLLMAN.

CHRIS. REBHAN.

HUGH MONTAGUE.

JEREMIAH A. O'LEARY.

Pagenstecher was a participator in most of the German societies.

Maj. HUMES. What year was that?

Mr. BIELASKI. This was April 10, 1916. Many of those names here of course have been referred to already in the testimony. The only name that I think I have not mentioned before is that of Charles A. Tollman, who was the author of one of the German pamphlets I think circulated by the German information bureau.

Some of the pamphlets which came from the files of the American Truth Society I have listed here. Several of them are widely known among the pamphlets used as German propaganda. Their titles are: A voice in the Wilderness, September, 1917. Are American Industries in Peril? J. A. O'Leary. British v. German Imperialism, by Neutral Publishing Co. Campaign Book of American Embargo Conference. Militarism by Rutherford. American Truth Society's Letter to Woodrow Wilson, 1912. Fair Play for Germany, an address by J. A. O'Leary. Chicago, 1915. Truth Society Replies, March 23, 1912. Free Speech and Press by Weinberger of New York Bar. Would a German Victory be a Calamity for the World, by Harry Carr of Los Angeles Times, reprinted Deember 16, 1916. American-Irish Historical Society, 191 Oration, 1915, Boston. The Faith of a Hyphen, by L Sanborn. Answer of Hon. T. St. John Gaffney. In Conciliation, 1915. Report of Bank Depositors' Commi organized by American Truth Society. Sir Edward's Peace Movement and Democratic Government, by J. A Private Profit and the Nation's Honor, by Charles Al View of the Cause of the War, Dublin reprint, 1914. The ness of America, by W. M. Butler. The Proposed Coi Act, by J. A. O'Leary. Who Wants War, by J. A. O'L Viereck-Chesterton Debate. Germany and the War, by Gruner, 1915. The Lies of the Allies by Frank Koeste Violation of Geneva Convention, by French Troops. Conspiracy by Alex Grau-Wandmayer, etc., published b American Defense Committee, 150 Nassau St. German About the Freedom of the Seas. Damaging Evidence Ag lish Hypocrisy, by Dr. M. M. Rifat, Berlin, May 15, 1915.

Senator KING. Who was Charles Aked?

Mr. BIELASKI. Charles Aked was a clergyman of note Pacific coast.

Senator KING. A famous English clergyman, a man v this city recently delivering lectures?

Mr. BIELASKI. He became an American citizen, I think.

Senator KING. I know Dr. Aked. That is, I have met h wondering if I knew him.

Mr. BIELASKI. Just how much the German Government financing the American Truth Society has never been fully We found the record of the transfer of some $10,000, I th on the books of Kuhn, Loeb & Co., if I recall correctly—I ing from recollection about this—which money, we think. the German Government. In any event, on April 20, 19 a check drawn on the National City Bank, "Pay to the ord tav Dopsleff $500," signed by an officer of Speyer & Co.. sent pursuant to the following letter of Dr. Albert, on head:

BIELASKI EXHIBIT No. 112.

[H. F. Albert, 45 Broadway, New York.]

NEW YORK, April .

MESSRS. SPEYER & Co., 24 Pine Street, New York City.

DEAR SIR: I herewith inclose check to your order for $3,000.—(th dollars) which amount please place to my credit.

Please issue your cashier's check for $500.—(five hundred dolla of Gustav Dopsleff, and debit my account accordingly.

Yours, very truly,

H.

Of course, a cashier's check would not show from who the money came.

That check for $500 bears the indorsement of Gustav credit account of American Truth Society, Gustav Dopsleff

Dr. Albert was also furnished with some of the materi by the American Truth Society. The list of directors of contains the names of Jeremiah A. O'Leary, G. W. Mea yard Smith, G. Sylvester Viereck, Bernard H. Ridder Schoenfeld, Joseph Frey, James K. McGuire, Julius Holz, Rev. G. C. Berkemeier, James F. Quinn, Mr. Seitz, P. J. Reilly, L. C. Kelly, Hugh Montague, Henry Cordts, Mr. Hoffmeyer, Herman Kind, Watson A. Guthrie, William Keavy, Frederick Schroeder, Dr. Franz Koempel, Wm. Strittmatter, Frederick Schang, and John J. Ruth.

I think from 80 to 90 per cent of the names of the contributors to this society were Germans, evidently. They, however, collected a good deal of money in small amounts, and we have a list of the contributors, which, I take it, is not of any particular interest to the committee.

Senator STERLING. There were a good many Irish names, were there not?

Mr. BIELASKI. A good many, but the German names are far more numerous. Otto Hein, $200. Whether that was his own money or not I do not know. We have a report here containing the comments of Mr. Bernard H. Ridder, made to one of our agents, and some of the chief contributors. If you would like to have me do so I will read it.

Senator NELSON. All right.

Mr. BIELASKI. It reads as follows:

BIELASKI. EXHIBIT No. 113.

C. F. W. Graef: A German business man located at 99 Nassau street who is thoroughly disgusted with O'Leary and his methods, and might give some interesting information about him.

Julius Holz: Publisher of the German "Herold" and a strong pro-German partisan.

Otto Heins: A German subject, I believe, and connected with the Bosch-Magneto Co., or was until recently. Suspected by the rabid German element of being untrue to their cause.

H. Janssen: Proprietor of the Hofbräu House, 30th street and Broadway; strongly pro-German.

W. Knauth, of Knauth, Nachod & Kuhne, 120 Broadway: Pro-German, but timid and not active.

Jeremiah A. O'Leary: A scheming politician and agitator, crafty and disreputable; a blatherskite in print, but a physical coward without the courage to appear in public as a speaker to advocate his disloyal views, preferring to stay behind and offer his legal assistance; has little or no following, except such a low heeler as John Gill, who, I suspect, may some day try to do me bodily injury because I have repudiated his master O'Leary.

John J. O'Leary: A brother of Jeremiah, having no money of his own; a mere shadow of the other.

R. Pagenstecher: An American-born son of a very fine old German gentleman. R. undoubtedly has in his possession papers pertaining to the workings of the "Society." Prominently connected with the German Club.

A. Pavenstedt: The greatest German today in American territory. A subject of Germany, but a thorough Democrat at heart, whose dream is to go to Germany after the war and preach world-wide Democracy.

R. Erbslöh: One of the finest and most loyal Americans in this city, though of German birth.

I had neither time nor inclination to attend meetings of the American Truth Society, and when I realized how disloyal its tendencies were, I got out of it.

If you are interested in the story of Otto Heins, he was manager of the Bosch Magneto Co. George von Skal, who was attached the office of von Papen, accused him of accepting contracts for furnishing magnetos to the English for aeroplane use. He defended himself on the ground that he was not violating the German law with respect to aiding the enemy, because his purpose in accepting the contracts was to retard their production. He would not deliver anything. He would put them off from month to month, and so materially their industry. The thing developed into quite a scrap between Skäl, of von Papen's office, and Capt. Boy-Ed, of von Papen's office. Boy-Ed standing by Heins and delivering, according to the document, an elaborate defense of Heins. It seems that this was brought to the attention of Dr. Albert, and he sided with Heins and decided that Heins in his effort was entirely justified, and did not have any intent except that of aiding the German cause. This is a very long story from the official papers, but I think I have enough to show what it was.

There is a summary here of the entire matter, a copy of which Heins made, September 15, 1915, to Boy-Ed, giving information about what was going on for the allies in the control of boats, shipment of munitions, and so on.

Senator KING. Before this record is completed, with these numerous documents, I suggest that Maj. Humes go over them and then submit to the chairman of the committee a list of them as he thinks should go into the record, and if the committee approves, then let them go into the record.

Mr. BIELASKI. Jeremiah O'Leary was the man to whom the president sent his telegram telling him that he would be deeply grateful to have anybody like him vote for him. O'Leary got out a letter which takes I do not know how many pages, in answer.

Senator OVERMAN. We do not want that.

Mr. BIELASKI. It was circulated by the American Truth and all of these other cartoons.

Senator OVERMAN. Maj. Humes, will you go over that and see if there is anything in it that we want to print?

Senator KING. Have you anything in your files, or is there anything to which you can testify, showing the activities of the Sinn Feiners in connection with German propaganda or any connection between their organizations and the German propagandists in this country?

Mr. BIELASKI. I do not know as an organization. Of course there were men who were members of the organization who were active for the German cause, but I do not know that they were as an organization that their official action was.

Senator KING. But the Sinn Feiners were active in the German cause?

Mr. BIELASKI. Oh, yes.

One other form of German propaganda was the sending of agitators around, of whom Miss Ray Beveridge was an example. She was an American who had spent much time in Germany. She came over here from Germany and undertook to work on behalf of the German Government.

Mr. Albert, in writing to the embassy under date of April 1, 1915, says:

Out of the funds placed at my disposal I have paid $3,000 to Miss Ray Beveridge. As is well known, Miss Beveridge is to give lectures in the United States in favor of the German cause and show stereopticon pictures.

May I humbly ask repayment of the above amount, and in the form of a check on New York to the order of G. Amsinck & Co. This sort of thing is advisable in order that I may not appear in the matter.

Receipt for the disbursed amount of $3,000, is adjoined hereto.

That receipt, as I recall, was really in the name of H. A. Boaz, who was Albert's assistant and who managed Miss Beveridge's affairs.

Senator NELSON. Was the naval attaché?

Mr. BIELASKI. No; Boaz was an employee of the Hamburg-American Line, who assisted Albert.

Miss Ray Beveridge received a couple of telegrams from Bernstorff, one dated February 19, 1915 [reading]:

BIELASKI EXHIBIT No. 114.

WASHINGTON, D. C. February 19, 1915.

Miss RAY BEVERIDGE,

Care-Mrs. Gue, Hempstead, N. Y.

Many thanks for letter as I cannot be in New York for some days when I hope to see you there. Please communicate with or see Doctor Dernbergh Hotel Ritz-Carlton. I did not receive any parcel yet.

J. BERNSTORFF.

The next one was dated Washington, February 20, 1915, and reads as follows:

BIELASKI EXHIBIT No. 115.

Miss RAY BEVERIDGE,

Care Mrs. Gue, 460 Fulton Ave, Hempstead.

Many thanks have just received parcel hope to see you end of next week Ritz Carlton.

J. BERNSTORFF.

We have no definite way of knowing what that parcel contained, but believe it was certain propaganda films which she brought over, and possibly some private messages. A contract was entered into between Miss Ray Beveridge and Mr. Boaz, and Werba and Luescher, a New York corporation, covering her lecture tour, which gives in detail the arrangement, except that it does not show that the financing was from the German Government. She traveled around the country and collected considerable money at her lectures, under the guise of collecting for the German Red Cross. She retained some parts of the collection for her own expenses, and sent some of them to the German representatives of the Red Cross.

I find here a record which may be of interest to you, of the purchase of the control of La Reforma, a paper in Mexico which was controlled by the Germans and used by them in furtherance of their propaganda work. I do not think you will be interested in all the papers. It simply shows that they financed the paper absolutely.

Senator OVERMAN. I think that list of the members of the University League had better be printed. We ought to know their names. I do not want any of them to teach in my State.

Senator NELSON. I think that is important.

Mr. BIELASKI. As of some interest I want to call your attention to the plan for a big press bureau which was drawn up and submitted to Dr. Albert, the facts concerning which were printed in the New York World for August 15, 1915. It involves the organization of a press service here and in Germany which was to be used for the German cause. I do not think anything came of it, because while it was a very elaborate scheme, gone into very fully, the fact that it was made public was enough to make it difficult to work, but the copy of the memorandum is here, if you wish to see it.

Senator NELSON. Mr. Bielaski, have you any data about propaganda in Mexico?

Mr. BIELASKI. Oh, yes. They had a regular service down here.

Senator NELSON. You can give us some facts on that?

Mr. BIELASKI. I can give you some facts on that, but I did not say anything, because I thought you were primarily interested in propaganda here. They had a regular bureau in Mexico City, from which they distributed German propaganda.

Senator NELSON. A good deal of what you have presented is to be called academic. However, you know all about their attempts to get up strikes, and getting up strikes, and blowing up our factories.

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes.

Senator NELSON. And blowing up bridges and that?

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes; but I did not consider that violation of law came under the head of German propaganda. Most all of the facts about their violations of law have been made public. I can give you a résumé of that, with respect to their causing strikes and blowing up bridges.

Senator NELSON. I wish you would give us a brief résumé of what has been done in that direction. You need not state a great deal of evidence, but state the cases.

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes.

Senator NELSON. We ought to have that go into the record. I would be glad to have you show up their attempts to get up a revolution in India, their attempts to blow up bridges in Canada, over on the west coast of British Columbia, their attempts to blow up the Welland Canal, their attempts to get up strikes in the coal mines, and their manufacturing of bombs to put on our vessels, commencing with the activity of that man who attempted to blow up the bridge at Vanceboro, Me.

Mr. BIELASKI. Werner Horne.

Senator NELSON. Yes; give us an outline of it, so we can put it in the record.

Senator OVERMAN. A brief history of it.

Senator KING. I should like to ask Senator Nelson whether he thinks that all he has outlined is embraced within this resolution.

Senator NELSON. I think so. It is a part of the German propaganda.

Mr. BIELASKI. There are some important matters with respect to German propaganda we have not reached yet, but I suppose I will put them off until the committee meets again.

Senator OVERMAN. We will meet at 12 o'clock Monday, and if the Senate does not meet, we can run all day.

(Thereupon, at 4 o'clock and 25 minutes p. m., the committee adjourned until Monday, December 9, 1918, at 12 o'clock noon.)

BREWING AND LIQUOR INTERESTS AND GERMAN PROPAGANDA.

MONDAY, DECEMBER 9, 1918.

UNITED STATES SENATE,
SUBCOMMITTEE OF THE COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY,
Washington, D. C.

The subcommittee met at 12 o'clock noon, in room 226, Senate Office Building, Senator Lee S. Overman presiding.

Present: Senators Overman, Sterling, King, and Nelson.

Senator OVERMAN. I have received a telegram this morning reading as follows:

NEW YORK, N. Y. 8

HONORABLE LEE S. OVERMAN,
Chairman Judiciary Subcommittee,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

I shall be in Washington at the Treasury Tuesday and ask the opportunity to appear before your committee then or at your later convenience to explain my connection with matters about which you are inquiring. Will submit a written statement for the record if you prefer. I request that meantime there be noted my respectful protest against the use of your records as a medium of public pillorying and misrepresenting loyal and public spirited citizens for having in nineteen fifteen joined a movement which was supported by the authorities and given wide publicity by the press at the time to secure aid of the State and Post Office Departments in furnishing milk to starving German babies. The same thing was being done for French babies and by some of the same people including myself.

I did not know of the circumstances but it now appears that in nineteen fifteen Mrs. Untermeyer committed the heinous crime of not only permitting but of actually abetting a meeting at her home to devise ways and means of urging upon our State and Post Office Departments that they secure the consent of Great Britain to the lifting of its blockade insofar as to permit dried milk to be sent to the starving babies of Germany. Our Government was then insisting that the blockade was contrary to international law and a personal appeal was made to President Wilson. It further appears that this widely advertised "Criminal" organization was to furnish the milk and that Mrs. Untermeyer not only encouraged but actually contributed to this malign "Propaganda." And that too at a time when we were at peace with Germany as well as with the rest of the world. As soon as Mrs. Untermeyer found that our Government was unable to do anything to get the milk to Germany over the blockades she reluctantly resigned. She of course knew nothing about Dr. Von Mach's other activities if he had any. It so happens that a like organization which has been successful in raising money and in furnishing large shipments of milk to babies of France was and is still receiving my support and is in possession of my home at six seventy five Fifth Avenue in this city free of rent at a cost to me of over twenty five thousand dollars a year for rent and advertising. It is having no difficulty in feeding French babies. I ask whether in all fairness it is right to permit such activities to be characterized and widely advertised by the hated name of propaganda and thus to mislead the public into suspecting the motives of citizens whose public spirit they would applaud if they knew the facts. I request that this message be read into your record so that it may receive as wide publicity as was given the sensational and unjust implications it is intended to correct.

SAMUEL UNTERMEYER.

I wrote him we would be glad to hear him at some time but not to-morrow.

Senator NELSON. I have a telegram here, Mr. Chairman. Mr. Simon Strauss, of Albert Lea, Minn., who was the only one who appeared to be connected with that educational propaganda had testimony about the other day, from Minnesota. I will have that telegram put in the record.

Senator OVERMAN. All right; that may be done.

Senator NELSON. I will read it, as it is brief [reading]:

ALBERT LEA

Hon KNUTE NELSON,
U. S. Wash'n, D. C.

In today's Minneapolis and St. Paul papers I see my name mentioned as the only Minnesotan who was a member of the German University League in 1914. As represented to me by circular letter this was a league for the study of scientific subjects only. Flattered by the offer of membership and on this representation I accepted the membership. This was never declared and so far as I know my membership was never renewed. I am not now a member. Since the United States entered the war I have taken an active and loyal part in promoting all our war plans and activities. I have purchased bonds made contributions to the various drives and assisted in the sale of bonds by public speaking and otherwise. I protest against being called a pro German and trust you can get this protest read into the record for I count myself a loyal and active United States citizen.

SIMON STRAUSS

Senator OVERMAN. I also had a conference with Mr. Garfield. His name was mentioned here, a newspaper man connected, I think with the Courier, and he wishes to be heard. I told him he could be heard any time. He claims that he has been at all times pro-American instead of pro-German.

Now you may proceed, Mr. Bielaski.

TESTIMONY OF MR. A. BRUCE BIELASKI—Resume

Mr. BIELASKI. Mr. Undermyer's telegram reminds me that in connection with the memorandum which Dr. Albert made public, the explanation of the so-called World exposé article in August, 1915, in Dr. Fuehr's notebook or diary for 1915 appears the following:

SUNDAY, AUGUST 1, 1915

The World publishes exposé regarding the German propaganda against Dr. Albert, Viereck, Van Papen, Schweitzer. Drive to Cedarhurst for conference with Albert, Hatzfeldt. Called on Undermyer.

That was the first day that the World made public its disclosures.

There was a species of propaganda among the laboring Germans and Austro-Hungarians with a view to having the employment of all organizations engaged in the production of material which was useful to the allied Governments in the war.

On June 19, 1915, the following circular letter was sent to Bernstorff to the German consulates at New York, Philadelphia, Cincinnati, St. Louis, San Francisco, and Chicago. This is a translation of it:

BIELASKI EXHIBIT No. 116.

CEDARHURST, N. Y., June 19, 1915

Strictly Confidential.

It is asserted from any sources that in the industries in the United States which have turned to the delivery of war material, many German occupy leading positions. According to directions received by me from the Imperial Chancellor, these subjects are to be notified that their employment in such industries is contrary to the duty which they owe to their Fatherland, as the said local industries work exclusively for the enemies of Germany. In this connection, special attention is called to paragraph 89 of the "Imperial Penal Code."

Which he quotes.

I therefore request your Honor to determine what persons in your consular district come within this category, and then to get into communication personally and orally—

The words "personally" and "orally" are underscored—

With such persons in your district as

1. Are beyond any doubt German subjects
2. Are employed in positions above that of common laborer, etc.

Such persons must vigorously be taught their duty toward their country. The fact must also be brought to their attention that this self understood duty does not give them the right, after giving up said employment, to demand of the Empire that they be given other equally profitable employment, or the continuance of their previous pay. I will remark confidentially, however, that in individual cases, after careful investigation, the question of giving assistance will be considered, where it is absolutely necessary.

And then he outlines what assistance will be given.

Senator NELSON. That is von Bernstorff?

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes.

In cases wherein doubt may arise as to whether the products of a certain plant shall be regarded as war material, or whether the plant is delivering to our enemies, I request that Herr Military Attaché be communicated with, at the following address: Care of German Consulate General, 11 Broadway, New York City.

I also request that you send your report to the same address as to the steps taken by you in this matter.

Following that, Capt. von Papen received reports from various persons as to the employment of Germans and Austro-Hungarians, and later the Hungarian Government issued similar instructions, and had inserted in the papers a notice calling attention to the provisions of their law.

In connection with that movement to take Austro-Hungarians and Germans out of the munition and other factories, they organized what was called the Hans Liebau Relief Bureau. Hans Liebau was, I think, an architect in New York City, and always maintained to the public, representatives of the press, and others, that this bureau was a philanthropic organization supported entirely by contributions from individual persons. As a matter of fact it was organized and under the direction of the representatives of the German and Austro-Hungarian Governments, and financed by them.

Mr. Liebau also maintained, I believe, that he was serving without compensation; whereas the records of Capt. von Papen's office, some of which came into the possession of the department at the time of the arrest of Von Igel, showed that he was receiving a salary, I think, of $75 a week, and that other of their employees were also paid.

Senator NELSON. What was his nationality?

Mr. BIELASKI. He was of German descent. I think he had been naturalized. He maintained a principal office in New York City and branches in five or six cities around the country including, I think, Bridgeport, Cleveland, Chicago, Cincinnati, and Philadelphia.

Under date of March 24, 1916, there is a communication which makes mention of the manner in which this bureau was organized.

(The document referred to is here printed in the record as follows:)

BIELASKI EXHIBIT No. 117.

NEW YORK, March 24, 1916.

I take the liberty to refer to the communication of the Imperial and Royal Austro-Hungarian Chargé d'Affaires, dated March 4, concerning the Bielaski Bureau ("Liebausche Buro"), copy of which was sent here.

I see from that communication that nothing is known to the Imperial and Royal Chargé d'Affaires, relative to the arrangements of the Imperial and Royal Ambassador Dumba, which included a subsidy of the aforesaid Bureau for a lengthy period.

My inquiries have disclosed that in the course of a conference with Captain Von Papen, Messrs. Rittmeister Hecker, Dr. Von Kleinwaechter and Consul Otto. The Attaché Prince Hohenlohe, as representative of the Imperial and Royal Ambassador, advised that the Imperial and Royal Government, as well as the German Government, (Note: The word "Reichsregierung" is interpreted by translator as German Government) would support the undertaking. On the strength of that announcement the activities of the Bureau were also extended to subjects of the Imperial and Royal Austro-Hungarian monarchy.

Entering into the particulars concerning the success of the Bureau, I wish to state that at the end of February, 1916, after an activity of 6½ months, over 8,000 applications had been received, of which 4,744 were new applications. (Inasmuch as the Bureau assigns to each applicant a position immediately, in order to avoid, as far as possible, the payment of relief moneys, it frequently occurs that the applicant is not suited for the particular position and after a short time reports back again. On the other hand, as a result of the above method, those who are unwilling to work and who merely applied in order to secure relief funds, are quickly found out and eliminated). On the whole, 4,466 positions were permanently filled. One third were subjects of the Austro-Hungarian monarchy. Sixty per cent of all applications came from people who were working in war-material-industries. There can hardly be any doubt but that the remaining forty per cent would in all probability, have turned to such industries where shortage of labor existed, that is to say, the war-material-industries, had it not been for the activities of the Bureau.

Engineers and people in the better positions who had means of their own were induced by the propaganda of the Bureau to withdraw from war-material-concerns, and without claiming any workman's relief, they sought occupation elsewhere. Cases of this nature frequently came to the knowledge of the Bureau.

The calls from war-material-concerns for technically equipped forces, of which there is shortage everywhere—calls which particularly lately have been received with frequency—furnish a proof of the Bureau's success. Inquiries on the part of the Bureau have ascertained that the commercial employment bureaus of the country have absolutely no offers of unemployed technical men to make.

Patriotic sentiment and allegiance for the Fatherland among the workmen has undoubtedly been awakened through the activity of this employment agency. Repeatedly people have visited the central and branch offices, in order to express their thanks for the assistance furnished them. However, I will not go into the question now as to whether or not the continuation of the Bureau after the war appears desirable.

At any rate, for the period of the war the continuation of this Institution is desirable and will be maintained for military reasons by the German Government even if the Imperial and Royal Government should withdraw its support from the Bureau. Many disturbances and vacancies suffered by the war-material-concerns, which could not always be removed quickly, but on the contrary often resulted in long drawn strikes, can be traced back to the energetic propaganda of the Workmen's Relief.

It is to be emphasized that the Bureau keeps absolutely within the scope of the law of the country and it takes care only of such people as will not work in the war-industries. As already stated in my previous report, even the Department of Justice has recognized the legality of the Bureau after a thorough investigation. Furthermore, voluntarily the Bureau asked for cooperation with the state employment agencies and submitted to state supervision. Under these circumstances and especially inasmuch as all the gentlemen who are permitted to inspect the organization and the financial support of the Bureau are officers of the German Government, I can not share the apprehensions of the Imperial and Royal Chargé d'Affaires to the effect that the Imperial and Royal representative might be injured as a result of unavoidable indiscretions.

Here is another communication, which I think would be of interest to put in the record, and yet I doubt the advisability of reading it; but it gives more details of the financing of the organization by the German and Austro-Hungarian organizations; the amounts they have spent, and so on.

Senator NELSON. What is the total amount they have spent?
Mr. BIELASKI. It was $8,000. That was the organization of which Mr. Lieban was the head.

Senator NELSON. Let that go into the record.
(The letter referred to is here printed in the record in full as follows:)

BIELASKI EXHIBIT No. 118.

No. 184/16.
Secret.

NEW YORK, March 1, 1916.

This office has received a communication from the Austro-Hungarian Consulate General at this place to the effect that Baron von Zwiedenik, Austro-Hungarian Chargé d'Affaires, is of opinion that the proposition made by Captain von Papen for an employment bureau for German and Austrian subjects who leave war-material factories does not fulfill its purpose and that for this reason he could not assume the responsibility of granting further pecuniary assistance to this bureau.

I would respectfully request your excellency upon occasion to call the Austro-Hungarian Chargé d'Affaires's attention that it is now impossible to withdraw from the arrangements made by his excellency, Mr. Dumba, the Austro-Hungarian Ambassador. The obligation on the part of Austro-Hungarian subjects to leave war-material factories exists now as much as five months ago.

It is impossible for the employment Bureau now to refuse to help Austrians and Hungarians whether for no reason or even for the reason that there is no money available for them. On the other hand, the Austro-Hungarian Charge D'Affaires can hardly demand that the German government should furnish the funds in order to help Austro-Hungarian subjects.

No doubts are entertained here but that the Bureau has worked with great success under the most difficult conditions.

Up to March 1, of this year, 4,301 persons were furnished employment in peaceful industries as follows:

German subjects.....	2, 832
Austrians and Hungarians	1, 479

In assistance a total of $8,000 was given from the German fund of which, according to the above statement, $2,750 would be due from the Austro-Hungarian government.

Thus far, the Austro-Hungarian embassy has furnished $2,000 so that we ought to request the refund of $750, which is the amount expended by us over and above the said sum.

The results attained by the expenditure of the money can by no means be restricted to the foregoing statement relating to persons procured employment in peaceful industries. Much larger is the number of those whose conscience was awakened by the publications emanating from the Bureau and who voluntarily severed their connections from war material factories and sought other employment without applying to the Bureau for help.

The best proof of the effectual work of the Bureau consists in the constant attacks which were made from all quarters against the enterprise. All such attacks were fruitless; on the contrary, the investigations by the Department of Justice, resulted in showing the absolute legality of the undertaking. (See enclosure.)

I beg of your excellency to kindly call the attention of Baron Zwiedenik to this latter point as there is an impression here that the apprehension that his money checks might become known and utilized against him contributes greatly toward his unfavorable attitude toward the Bureau.

If the money is sent in cash through the Military Information Bureau here, the secrecy of the transaction will be guaranteed.

Persons furnished employment up to the last of February 1916.

Germans	2,822, or about $\frac{2}{3}$
Austro-Hungarians	1,479, or about $\frac{1}{3}$
	<hr/> 4,301

These figures may be somewhat changed when the final reports of the Branch Offices are received.

Received :

German	$6,000
Austro-Hungarian	2,000
	<hr/> 8,000

The proper proportion would be :

For Germany	$5,250
For Austro-Hungary	2,750
	<hr/> 8,000

Furnished employment up to the end of January 1916 :

Germans	3,889, $\frac{2}{3}$
Austro-Hungarians	1,127, $\frac{1}{3}$
Received from Germany	\$4,000, or $\frac{2}{3}$
Received from Austro-Hungary	2,000, or $\frac{1}{3}$
	<hr/> 6,000

Mr. BIELASKI. We have, in addition, detailed statements and monthly reports which were made to the office of Capt. Von Papen by this bureau. For instance, I just happened to find here a monthly report for February, 1916, which gives the number of applications, a statement of the activity of the organization, the expenses, and a detailed statement of the amounts received and of how this money was spent, including numerous entries of salaries to Hans Liebau of $75.

Senator OVERMAN. Let that go into the record.

Senator NELSON. Yes; that is a good thing to go in.

Mr. BIELASKI. That is a complete statement. Then it takes up the expenses of the branch offices.

Maj. HUMES. Is that the organization that was in charge of Zacharias in Pittsburgh?

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes, sir; he was the head of the Pittsburgh office.

Maj. HUMES. Have you with you any of the form of cards that they used, showing that they maintained not only an industrial but a military enrollment of the men?

Mr. BIELASKI. I have not that with me; but the record we have shows all sorts of data about it.

Maj. HUMES. I thought perhaps you had one of those cards with you.

Mr. BIELASKI. No; I have not. The Pittsburgh office was in charge of W. Zacharias. His salary was $20 a week. This report bears on the New York office.

Senator OVERMAN. Let that go in.

(The report referred to is here inserted in the record in full, as follows:)

BIELASKI EXHIBIT No. 119.R. D. v. M. T.*MONTHLY REPORT FOR FEBRUARY 1916.

During last month, the number of fresh applications was 835, the number of re-applications 862, and a total of 983 positions were filled.

Since the beginning of activity of the "Central Bureau," from August 1914 to the end of February, 2828 German subjects and 1638 Austro-Hungarian subjects were given employment. The total number of new applications and reapplications thus far, has amounted to over 8,000. 60% of the whole number came from ammunition and the war material factories and 40% would have gone to these factories if the Central Bureau had not taken care of them.

The labor statistics have also been prepared more in detail than previously and now afford a better view and better information regarding the activity of the laborers' relief (institution).

The frequency of applications to the Bureaus unquestionably would still have further increased if the general situation of the labor market had not improved. In many cases persons who had originally applied here, found better positions without our assistance even in neutral factories or work, after they had been placed on the right path by us.

The activity of the organization is making itself felt, for the reason that, as our success becomes better known, more and more persons give up their positions in war material factories even without availing themselves of the direct assistance of our Bureau. To mention a particular case: Mr. Ludewigs, member of the Newark Technical Association, resigned his post as operative engineer with Zeh and Hanemann, because this factory had begun to give indirect aid to ammunition production. In his new position he receives a considerably less salary. Mr. Lieubau found in the Newark Technical Association a keen interest for the laborers' relief, just as told in the above mentioned case, of a change of conditions.

The internal organization was rendered more compact by transferring Mr. Uhde from Bridgeport to Pittsburgh. Mr. Liebau inspected the Grant offices at Bridgeport and Philadelphia, during the month and in Pittsburgh and Chicago, an official of the Central office was remarkably successful in acquainting the directors of the branch offices with the system of the New York Central Bureau.

The constant inquiries of the salaries asked and actually paid is gradually becoming very noticeable. The indirect influence of the war material manufacturer is recognizable. Hand in hand with this goes the comparatively quicker ability to find employment not only for skilled artisans but also for unskilled and ordinary factory laborers. Many large works are now being compelled to make all kinds of concessions of which they would not have stopped before, such as allowances for traveling expenses, payment of advances, and some attention (although not much) to providing quarters for workmen, etc. We have frequently called attention in the press to present conditions in the labor market, and we have made an urgent request of employers not to take advantage of the needy situation of our proteges by offering abnormal low wages. Even direct discussions with certain factories have had good results as the accompanying correspondence shows. We may mention our efforts in this respect with reference to the charge made against us in socialistic newspapers, that we were lowering wages by furnishing too cheap labor. We hear from Philadelphia that the Ruthian Bishop Ortynsky at that place is taking a specially keen interest in our cause by calling the attention of his people every Sunday to our organization from his pulpit and impressing it upon their conscience.

The zealous activity of Mr. Lauter of Bridgeport is to be thanked for the fact that the German American Central Union of the state of Connecticut has interested itself in our organization, to such an extent that we have twice received a check for $25.00 from this union.

At Detroit, a sub-division of the Cleveland Branch office has been established under the management of Mr. H. Hanson. The suggested opening of a branch office at Boston and the contemplated subdivision of the New York Central office at Newark have had to be given up for the time owing to the difficulty of financing them. Furthermore a branch office at Cincinnati and at least one in the far west would be very desirable according to frequent inquiries from these regions.

FINANCES.

The expenses for February amounted to $2392.38 or about $2.43 per head of persons furnished employment as against $2.98 in January, and $2.95 in December.

The total expenditures including Branch offices had amounted to $15,179.23 up to the end of February, 1916. There remains a balance of $802.12 at disposal so that we must count upon larger contributions in March for maintenance of the enterprise. The voluntary contributions in February were not very satisfactory, but we have reason to hope, that the month of March will show an improvement in this respect. Mr. Albrecht is going to visit Philadelphia and Reading.

Enclosed:

1. Labor statistics for February 1916.
2. Extracts of accounts of the Central and Branch Offices.
3. Correspondence with the Atlantic Terra Cotta Co.

(Signed) K. ROTTE (?)

MONTHLY EXTRACT OF THE CENTRAL OFFICE AT NEW YORK CITY
FEB. 1916.

1. Balance brought forward-----	$883. 75	1. Petty fund (Bargmann)-----	2. 00
2. International Silver Co. Re- imbursement-----	3. 00	" Labor fund F. Lauter, Bridge- port-----	50. 00
3. Mrs. Adele Krueger (Kueh- nem Pamphlet)-----	10. 00	" Travelling expenses, Meriden, Max Tuerck-----	3. 00
9. Albrecht collection-----	700. 00	" Petty fund (Boyes)-----	5. 00
" Conn. Central Union-----	25. 00	2. Office rent-----	75. 00
10. Miss B. Weisbarth-----	50. 00	" Salvation Army Meal and Lodging allowances-----	12. 80
		2. Foster Scott Ice Co-----	2. 60
		" Towel Supply-----	1. 40
		4. Travel Allowance, Plainfield Paul Tanselow-----	6. 00
		" Postage (Stein)-----	2. 00
		" Petty fund (Boyes)-----	5. 00
		5. Expenditure for information (Hoffman)-----	1. 50
		" "-----
		(Mayer)-----	6. 00
		" Salary Hans Liebau-----	75. 00
		" " L. Bargmann-----	8. 00
		" " W. Boyes-----	25. 00
		" " K. Stein-----	14. 00
		" " G. Kobecke-----	20. 00
		" " J. Dobriansky-----	14. 00
		" " S. F. Meyer-----	18. 00
		" " J. Hoffman-----	10. 00
		" " F. Harbig-----	14. 00
		" " J. Vincent-----	20. 00
		" " A. Albrecht-----	25. 00
		" Journey to Bridgeport Cen- tral Union, Liebau-----	7. 50
		" Labor fund, J. Nashohold, Phila-----	50. 00
		" " " W. Zacharias, Pittsburgh-----	60. 00
		" " " F. Lauter, Bridgeport-----	40. 00
		8. Fire Insurance, 136 Liberty St-----	15. 47
		" Drinking water-----	1. 60
		" Stationery-----	6. 50
		" Petty fund (Boyes)-----	3. 00
		" Labor fund, Doctor Niven Chicago-----	60. 00
		" " C. H. Weh- nert, Cleve- land-----	60. 00
		10. " " F. Lauter, Bridgeport-----	60. 00
		" Foster & Morgan, Lawyers
		8. Support Lothar Fritsch-----	1. 00
		" Bridgeport-----	25. 00
		" New York Telephone Co-----	15. 00
		11. Labor fund W. Zacharias, Pitts-----	75. 00
		" Traveling expenses, 9 men Keasby, N. J-----	4. 50

Carried forward-----	$1671. 75
Carried forward-----	1671. 75
14. Bridgeport, Saugin Slick Soc-----	10. 00
15. J. D. Aug. Hartz-----	10. 00
" Bern. Vess Ice Co-----	10. 00
" Blit Schmelke-----	5. 00
" G. A. Stoneware Works re- imbursement-----	13. 75
16. Mrs. E. Maurer-----	2. 00
19. Mrs. L. Schmidt (Brook- lyn)-----	10. 00
Carr'd For'd-----	$1, 733. 50
Carried forward-----	$1, 733. 50
21. Mrs. L. A. Diestelkamp-----	5. 00
" For Kuhnemann Pamphlet-----	4. 00
22. Mr. Hennigson-----	10. 00
" Through Dr. Bertling- (Staats-zeltung)-----	26. 00
23. Alfred G. Lange-----	1. 00
" Theresa Sommer-----	5. 00
24. Anonymous-----	500. 00
" Milwaukee-----	100. 00
25. Miss Helen Schraeder-----	10. 00
26. Albrecht Collection-----	800. 00

Carried forward-----	$894. 60
Carried forward-----	$894. 60
11. Postage fund (stein)-----	2. 00
" Expenditures for informa- tion(Hoffman)-----	. 80
12. Expenditures for informa- tion (Meyer) and collect- ing premium-----	18. 25
" Salary, Hans Liebau-----	75. 00
" " L. Bargmann-----	8. 00
" " W. Boyes-----	25. 00
" " K. Stein-----	14. 00
" " G. Kobecke-----	20. 00
" " J. Dobhiansky-----	14. 00
" " S. F. Meyer-----	18. 00
" " J. Hoffman-----	10. 00
" " F. Harbig-----	14. 00
" " J. Vincent-----	20. 00
" " A. Albrecht-----	25. 00
14. Petty fund (Boyes)-----	5. 00
" Account H. W. Riker painter-----	1. 75
15. Labor fund, Dr. Niven Chicago-----	65. 00
" Petty fund (Bargmann)-----	2. 00
16. Expenditures for informa- tion (Hoffman)-----	1. 05
17. Labor fund, F. Lauter Bridgeport-----	50. 00
" Labor fund, J. Naschold (Philadelphia)-----	50. 00
18. Traveling expenses, eight men Kesby, N. J-----	1. 40
19. Journey Liebau (Philadel- phia)-----	12. 00
" Salary, Hans Liebau-----	75. 00
" " L. Bargmann-----	8. 00
" " W. Boyes-----	25. 00
19. Salary, K. Stein-----	14. 00
" " G. Kobecke-----	20. 00
" " J. Dobriansky-----	14. 00
" " S. F. Meyer-----	18. 00
" " J. Hoffmann-----	10. 00
" " F. Harbig-----	14. 00
" " J. Vincent-----	20. 00
" " A. Albrecht-----	25. 00
" Expenditures for informa- tion (Meyer)-----	6. 00
" Expenditures for informa- tion (Hoffmann)-----	2. 00
" Traveling expenses, Bridge- port, Pittsburgh (Uhde)-----	20. 00
" Collecting premium paid (Stein)-----	1. 75
" Hungarian translations (Bela Dettre)-----	2. 00
" Loan, Sam Klein-----	. 50
Carried forward-----	$1, 625. 10
Carried forward-----	$1, 625. 10
19. Traveling expenses, Pitts. to Chicago (Vincent)-----	20. 00
" Postage fund (Stein)-----	2. 00
21. Petty fund (Boyes)-----	5. 00
" Hungarian trans. (Bela Dettre)-----	2. 00
" Traveling allow. (Passaic, Zilske)-----	. 75
21. Assistance in drawing ta- bles Carl Thurnblaeser-----	1. 00
" Translations, Josef Yargin-----	5. 00
23. Labor fund, Dr. Niven; Chi- cago-----	50. 00
23. Labor fund, C. Wehnert, Cleveland-----	50. 00
" " " W. Zacharis, Pittsburgh-----	60. 00
24. " J. Naschold, Phila- delphia-----	50. 00
" " Assistance in draw- ing, Curt Kind-----	1. 50
25. Traveling txp. 6 men, Tot- tenville-----	2. 10
" Relief, Ernst Tunkel-----	1. 50
" Assistance in drawing, Curt Kind-----	1. 50
26. Petty fund (Boyes)-----	5. 00
" Assistance in drawing, Curt Kind-----	1. 50

	" Relief, Adolph Schleicher--	1
	" Postage fund (Stein)-----	2
25.	Trav. Allowance, Allentown Gangeloff-----	1
24.	Trav. Allowance, Easton, P. Blumenthal-----	1
23.	Cost of Transporting safe and desk-----	5
25	Labor fund, F. Lauter, Bridgeport-----	50
	" Expenditures for information (Hoffmann)-----	2
26	" " for information (Meyer)-----	6
	" Salary, Hans Liebau-----	7
	" " L. Bargmann-----	8
	" " W. Boyes-----	2
	" " K. Stein-----	1
	" " G. Kobecke-----	2
	" " J. Dorbriansky-----	1
	" " S. F. Meyer-----	1
	" " J. Hoffman-----	1
	" " F. Harbig-----	1
	" " J. Vincent-----	2
	" " A. Albrecht-----	2
	" Labor fund, C. Wehnert Cleveland-----	4
	" Labor fund W. Zacharias, Pittsburg-----	3
	" " " Dr. Niven, Chicago-----	4
	" Expenditures for elevator service-----	2
	" Traveling exp. 9 men, Newark-----	2
29	Administrative Expenses January 1916-----	80
	" Balance-----	802

$3, 194. 50

Mar. 1 Bal. Carried forward $802. 12.

8, 194.

K. Ro. (initialed)

Extract of account of the Philadelphia branch office, February, 1916.

Febr. 1916
1	Balance.....	$49. 18	1/29	Office expenses, Trav. money, etc..... $7. 25
1/29	Kuhnemann's.....	3. 50	"	Printed matter..... 7. 00
5	Liebau.....	50. 00	2	Telephone, Keystone.. 1. 50
15	F. Schuler (paid back).....	. 15	"	" " Bell, Jan. and Feb..... 6. 71
15	Paul Krag.....	. 15	1/29	Salary Louis Schwab.. 50. 00 5 wks.
17	Kuske—paid back.....	. 30	"	" Naschold..... 80. 00 4 "
18	Liebau.....	50. 00	"	" Assistant..... 19. 00 4 "
25	".....	50. 00	1/31	Mich Zahn..... . 10 relief
			2	Max Wolfgang..... . 75 Trav. M
			"	G. Steinbach..... . 50 "
			"	Max Fischer..... . 50 "
			"	Franz Albrecht..... . 25 "
			"	A. Muller..... . 25 "
			3	G. Steinbach..... . 50 "
			4	Fisher, Max..... . 20 relief
			4	Steinbach, G..... . 20 "
		$203. 28		$174. 71

Feb. 29, 1916..... 203. 28

Balance carried for..... $24. 87

February 1916.

1916. Brought forward..... $174. 71

2/14 Carl Steckerl..... . 25 Trav.

" Alois Steckerl..... . 25 "

" Jose Herzog..... . 25 "

" Fritz Herzog..... . 25 "

18 Jos. Hoffmann..... . 20 "

18 Franz Schutz..... . 75 "

23 Franz Schafer..... 1. 00 "

" Franz Honicke..... . 50 "

25 Adolph Schilling..... . 25 relief

Feb. 29. Balance..... 178. 41

24. 87

$203. 28

(Signed) JACOB NASCHOLD.

Branch office at Bridgeport Conn. February 1916.

1. Balance -----	$15. 30	1. Portfolio of documents-----	1. 25
1. Cash-----	50. 00	2. Traveling expenses to New Haven-----	3. 65
7. Check, central office-----	40. 00	2. Supplementary payments for stationary (?) typewriters for January-----	1. 50
1. " "-----	60. 00	5. Salary for Carl Uhde, week ending Feb. 5-----	15. 00
8. Paid back by Nitzsche-----	3. 00	8. Relief K. Elmann-----	1. 00
8. Donation, unknown-----	2. 00	8. " Hein, Drescher-----	1. 00
8. Check, Central Office-----	50. 00	10. " Herm. Krampfel-----	. 50
4. Donation, Seller-----	. 50	10. Traveling expenses to Hartford, so Manchester, Meriden, and New Haven, from Feb. 7-10-----	16. 45
4. " Schuetzer-----	. 50	11. Office rent, Cole Co-----	15. 00
5. Cash-----	50. 00	11. Domestic servant for cleaning-----	2. 00
	$271. 80	11. Elevator boy-----	. 25
		11. Letter register-----	. 25
		12. Payment on typewriter (receipt Jan.)-----	10. 00
		12. Salary of Carl Uhde, week ending Feb. 12-----	15. 00
		12. Relief M. Lenowelt-----	. 60
		12. " Otto Kopp-----	. 60
		14. " M. Lenowelt-----	. 75
		14. Traveling expenses to New York-----	3. 10
		15. Relief M. Lenowelt-----	. 30
		19. " M. Lenowelt-----	1. 15
		19. Salary, Carl Uhde, week ending Feb. 19-----	15. 00
		19. Traveling expenses to New Haven on Feb. 19-----	2. 55
		23. Stamps (15¢ to 2¢ each)-----	. 30
		23. Street car fares-----	1. 15
		23. Partial payment on typewriter-----	5. 00
		25. Relief, H. Mahlmann-----	. 50
		26. " H. Mahlmann-----	. 50
		26. Fare to New York-----	3. 10
		26. Salary of Andrew Scabo for week end. Feb. 26-----	15. 00
		28. Fare to Beacon Falls, Conn.--	. 60
		28. Paper-----	. 10
		28. Fare for three persons to Beacon Falls-----	1. 47
		29. Paper and ink-----	1. 25
		29. Postal cards-----	. 10
		29. Salary of F. Lauder from Jan. 31 to Feb. 26-----	80. 00
			216. 97
		Balance-----	54. 83
March 1, 1916 Bal. Carried for--	$54. 83

Extract of account of the Chicago Branch Office for February, 1916.

10. Check, Central. Feb. 8-----	$60	Assets -----	$25. 06
7. Check, " " 15-----	65	Rent -----	10. 00
6. Check " " 25-----	50.	Postage, fares, telephone-----	3. 80
From Dr. Niven-----	24. 28	(5) salaries -----	33. 00
		Advertisements -----	1. 40
		Stationary -----	. 83
		Printing -----	3. 00
		Franked envelops-----	1. 04
		Postage, fares, telephone-----	4. 50
		(12) salaries-----	33. 00
		Advertisements -----	. 72
		(19) Salaries-----	33. 00
		Postage, fares, telephone-----	5. 60
		Advance to W. C. Brown-----	4. 00
		Gas -----	2. 10
		Printing -----	2. 00
		(26) Salaries-----	33. 00
		Washing -----	. 70
		Special delivery-----	. 10
		Help -----	2. 50
			199. 35
		Deb. to Dr. Niven-----	24. 35

FINANCIAL REPORT OF THE BRANCH OFFICE AT PITTSBURGH, for February, 1916.

RECEIPTS.		EXPENDITURES.
Date.		Date.
1. Balance from Jan-----	1. 58	2. Table for office-----	1
5. Check, H. Leubau-----	60. 00	4. Salary, W. Zacharias-----	2
11. Reimbursement Roesslerl-----	. 51	4. " M. Marian-----	2
14. Reimbursement Franke-----	. 50	4. " M. Marian to Feb.-----	2
14. Gift, Franke-----	. 25	12. -----	2
14. Check, H. Liebau-----	75. 00	7. Office rent-----	2
19. Reimbursement Bechtold-----	. 60	4. Traveling allowance Marian-----	1
19. Gift Bechtold-----	. 40	8. Myer LL for services-----	2
24. Check, H. Liebau-----	60. 00	12. Salary W. Zacharias-----	2
29. " "-----	80. 00	15. Office material-----	2
Total-----	229. 84	15. Postage stamps-----	2
29. Furnished by W. Z-----	12. 72	15. Cards and letter paper-----	2
Total receipts-----	$242. 56	18. Office material-----	2
		19. Salary, W. Zacharias-----	2
		24. Office material-----	2
		26. Salary W. Zacharias-----	2
		26. Salary K. Uhde-----	1
		28. Advance to K. Uhde-----	1
		29. "-----	1
		29. Newspapers in Feb-----	1
		29. Extra expenditures in Feb-----	1
		29. Office material-----	1
		29. Relief granted in Feb-----	1
		Total-----	$242. 56

90 furnished employment
Pittsburgh, February 29, 1915.

W. ZACHARIAS
Extract of Account of the Cleveland Branch Office for February, 1916.

1. Balance-----	$48. 36	1. Relief, Anton Schmidt-----	$4
2. Steve. Domansky reimburse- ment-----	. 25	1. Rent, February-----	1
3. N. Manalak-----	. 05	1. Relief, Hans Wagner-----	1
4. Check, Weisbalch-----	8. 00	1. " Herman Haberlein-----	1
7. N. Manalak, reimburse-----	. 20	2. " Steve Domaski-----	1
8. Herman Haverlein-----	. 30	2. " Carl Meisner-----	1
9. Check #162, Central office-----	60. 00	2. " Hermann Haverlein-----	1
9. J. E. Jordan, reimburse-----	1. 00	2. " Peter Hoffman-----	1
9. Johann Vogt, reimburse-----	. 80	3. " Nicholas Manalak-----	1
10. Johann Vogt-----	. 80	3. " Adolph Krueger-----	1
12. J. E. Joradan-----	. 50	3. " Johan Motyl-----	1
12. Johann Vogt-----	. 80	4. " Joe Milbauer-----	1
12. Herman Moehring-----	. 20	4. "-----	1
12. Johan Motil-----	. 50	4. Printing-----	7
14. Hermann Baeberlin, reimburse-----	. 30	4. Salvation Army-----	1
14. Christian Schalling-----	. 10	4. Relief, Emil Ritter-----	1
14. J. E. Jordan-----	. 50	4. "-----	1
14. Carl Braun, reimbursement-----	. 10	5. Salary, C. Wehnert-----	9
15. Carl Braun-----	. 10	5. " D. Heiner-----	7
19. George Helmster, reimburse- ment-----	2. 00	5. Relief, George Helmster-----	1
19. Robert Lange, reimbursement-----	. 25	3. " Adolph Krueger-----	1
23. Paul Pietsch-----	. 25	3. " Albert Lettek-----	1
23. S. Domansky-----	. 50	7. " Carl Braun-----	1
24. George Helmster-----	1. 50	7. " George Helmster-----	1
24. Check #174-----	50. 00	7. " Albert Dinkel-----	1
26. Peter Baumann-----	1. 35	7. " Anton Schmid-----	1
26. Peter Baumann-----	. 25	8. " Albert Drickel-----	1
26. Christian Schallman-----	. 20	9. " George Helmster-----	1
28. Check #178, Cen. Office-----	40. 00	9. " Herman Moehring-----	1
		9. Relief Hans Dietze-----	1
		10. " Frank Schultz-----	1
		10. " George Helmster-----	1
		11. " Robert Lange-----	1
		11. " Adolph Krueger-----	1
		11. " George Helmster-----	2
		12. Relief Christain Shellman-----	1
		12. "-----	1
		12. Salary C. Wehnert-----	9
		12. " R. Zucker-----	7
		12. Relief Albert Dinkel-----	1
		14. " George Helmster-----	1
		15. "-----	1
		15. " Frank Wydawka-----	1
		15. " George Konradus-----	1
		17. " Emmeri Ugrowitsh-----	1
		17. " Harry Maier-----	4
		18. " Fred Schwartz-----	1
		18. Typewriter rent-----	1
		18. Relief, Carl Kraemer-----	1
		18. Relief, Fritz Vollmer-----	1
		19. Salary, C. Wehnert-----	9

19.	"	R. Zucker	8. 50
19.	Relief	Alex. Schulz	. 50
19.	Telephone,	half	5. 05
19.	Relief,	Frank Soga	. 50
19.	"	J. E. Jordan	1. 00
19.	"	Carl Braun	. 50
19.	"	Carl Moissner	. 50
19.	"	N. Nanalak	8. 00
19.	"	Fritz Vollmer	1. 00
21.	"	J. E. Jordan	. 50
21.	"	Carl Meissner	. 50
21.	"	George Helmster	. 35
21.	"	Frank Soga	. 50
22.	"	H. Domansky	. 50
22.	Trip to	Detroit	12. 80
22.	Relief,	Harry Maier	8. 00
23.	George	Helmster	. 75
23.	Relief	Frank Soga	. 50
23.	"	Paul Reiber	. 25
25.	"	Von Goeritz	1. 00
25.	Check, #48	H. Hanson	20. 00
25.	Relief	George Helmster	. 50
25.	"	Frank Soga	1. 00
26.	Salary	C. Wehnert	9. 00
26.	"	R. Zucker	7. 00
26.	Relief	Nicholas Manalak	1. 00
26.	"	George Helmster	1. 50
28.	"	Fritz Vollmar	1. 00
28.	"	J. E. Jordan	1. 00
28.	"	H. Haberlein	. 25
28.	"	Fred Schwartz	1. 00
28.	"	George Helmster	1. 00
28.	"	Henry Maier	6. 00
29.	"	Fritz Vollmar	1. 00
28.	"	Fred Schwartz	1. 00
			<hr/>
			201. 26
			<hr/>
			213. 16
			<hr/>
			21. 90
			<hr/>
			235. 06

Mr. BIELASKI. Here is a translation of a copy of a letter addressed to the Imperial German Embassy by Zwiedenik, who acted after Dumba left for the Austrian Government. This simply shows that while he did not know anything about the original organization, after taking cognizance of the report sent him from the Imperial German Embassy, which originated with the military bureau in New York, of which Capt. von Papen was the head, he asked for authorization to pay the required $2,000, and received instructions to abstain. But he says that he assumes that his Government does not intend to become unfaithful to assurances given, and he therefore transmits a check for $750, with the request that this amount be transmitted to the Liebau Bureau. He says:

Senator OVERMAN. Let that go in the record.

BIELASKI EXHIBIT No. 120.

IMPERIAL GERMAN EMBASSY,
Washington.

ing to the number of the report cited, related first of all to the action in inducing our subjects to leave the factories in question. The idea was evidently that such action, carried on on a small scale, could have no practically important result, whereas the unavoidable indiscretions would afford the desired pretext for against the Austro-Hungarian representatives. agitation)

Nevertheless, after taking cognizance of a report sent me on January 13, last, by the Imperial German Embassy, coming from its Military Information Bureau, I asked for authorization to pay out the required $2000, whereupon I received on February 28th the instructions: "Abstain".

Now, as I assume that my government does not intend to become unfaithful to assurances given, I nevertheless have the honor to transmit herewith a check for $750, with the request that this amount be transmitted to the Libau Bureau, since, according to a calculation of Private Counselor Albert, this amount is due from us for employment already secured in the past. At the same time, I am writing again to Vienna and setting forth the grounds mentioned by Private Counselor Albert for authorization to add the sum of $1250 to the aforementioned sum of $2000 for the said Bureau.

I wish, however, to request that the Military Information Bureau be informed that I consider any payments beyond this amount to be unwarranted. According to information received by the Embassy, only a part of the Austrian and Hungarian applicants for work who were procured employment really for ammunition and arms factories and there is no sufficient reason for the presence why a general employment agency should be maintained for our subjects. Moreover, the great majority of our subjects are unskilled laborers who can be replaced at any time without difficulty. I hope that the Imperial German Embassy will not see in this attitude any failure to appreciate the idea underlying the establishment of the employment Bureau or an inadequate appreciation of the patriotic motives of the gentlemen connected therewith.

(Sgd) ZWIEDENIK,

Austro-Hungarian Chargé D'Affaires.

Mr. BIELASKI. Did I understand you to say that you thought that these reports of the consul ought to go in the record?

Capt. LESTER. Yes; some extracts ought to go in the record. I think there is one of April 10 to go in.

Senator OVERMAN. Is that a report in connection with the same bureau?

Capt. LESTER. In connection with the Libau Bureau, showing the working of it, and their objects.

Mr. BIELASKI. This one of April 10 that I have here does not relate to the bureau but relates to their efforts to get a witness, who was in a criminal case, kept from telling the truth.

Maj. HUMES. Then I think that ought to go in the record, for other reasons.

Mr. BIELASKI. It is interesting. This was a communication sent by the office of Capt. von Papen to the embassy. It has no bearing on the Libau case, but it was a case that had a great deal to do with the destruction of the Welland Canal, a second conspiracy. This is dated New York, April 10, 1916. It reads as follows:

BIELASKI EXHIBIT No. 121.

[Copy.]

Secret.]

NEW YORK, April 10, 1916.

I hereby send you the accompanying clipping from the New York American of today for your Excellency's information.

Tucker is being held by the authorities in order to confirm as a witness the charges against von der Goltz.

Tucker has so far denied everything, but there is danger that under the pressure being exerted over him he will gradually yield. It would therefore be desirable to have the man feel that we are concerned about him. It has been impossible for about eight days for us in this office to come in contact with him. It is also impossible for the Imperial Consular General to do anything on a legal basis, as Tucker did not invoke the help of the Consulate General and the latter has no proof that Tucker is a German subject.

I leave it to your Excellency's discretion in case there are no political objections, to have the matter unofficially discussed in the State Department. Such a step would certainly afford Tucker the desired relief.

K. N. St.
(Military Information Bureau.)

His Excellency
COUNT VON BERNSTORFF
Imperial Ambassador
Washington, D. C.

Tucker was one of the men who went along on the expedition, and they were afraid that he would tell the truth about his connection with it.

Capt. LESTER. This is the particular one, dated March 14, that I had in mind.

Mr. BIELASKI (after examining paper). This was not a report of the consul.

Capt. LESTER. No; it was a report of Otto.

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes; of Otto.

Capt. Lester suggests that this letter of March 14, 1916, from Theo. Otto Von Hatzfelt, be put in the record.

Senator OVERMAN. Tell us again who Otto is.

Mr. BIELASKI. Otto, I think, is a doctor of Allentown, Pa., who undertook to keep the Germans informed of the progress of munition shipments, and so on. He made a number of reports, of which we have copies, and this is one of them.

Senator OVERMAN. Put it in the record.

Mr. BIELASKI. It reads as follows:

BIELASKI EXHIBIT No. 122.

ALLENTOWN, PA., Mar. 14, 1916.

Imperial Embassy Counselor VON HATZFELT.

Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. COUNSELOR: Since Von Papen went to Germany, I have neglected no effort to keep well informed about the munition factories situated here and in this vicinity, but hitherto there has been nothing of special importance to report, that is, nothing that had not been made known to Mr. Von Papen by me. If I take the liberty today of writing to you, it is because it seems to me that the following facts may be of interest to the Imperial German Government.

As is known, The Traylor Engineering Company of Allentown, Pa., has contracts with England for the delivery of high explosive shrapnels, and up to a short time ago 3" shrapnels were delivered regularly in large quantities. For about two months shrapnels of this calibre have no longer been produced there, but, on the other hand, there are at present about 6,000 to 8,000 four inch shrapnels there in stock, while the company mentioned is making every effort to produce as perfect a six inch projectile as possible. I was informed confidentially that England wants 60,000 of these as soon as possible, but that it cannot reach an appreciable output for the time being because the machinery necessary for the purpose is not yet perfected. I succeeded in obtaining a drawing according to which the work is done; if it is of interest please inform me and I will promptly send it to you. I also have a specimen of a three inch shrapnel which I will gladly furnish to the Imperial Embassy if wanted.

I was able, in my capacity as a physician, to establish relations with officials of almost all of the munitions factories situated in this vicinity, and if further information of this kind should be of interest to the Embassy, please inform me, as you gentlemen may depend me as well as upon yourselves.

I recently had an interview with a gentleman friend in regard to the dye calamity, and this gentleman, who has been engaged in this industry for years, told me that the United States was suffering very much from this calamity. Our conversation drifted to the military preparedness of the United States and I heard that a relative of this gentleman held a position in which he was able to give information in this regard. Perhaps it might be opportune to follow out this clew further.

With assurances of my loyalty and devotion, I remain, etc.,

(Signed) THEO OTTO.

Maj. HUMES. Have any proceedings been taken against Mr. Otto?

Mr. BIELASKI. No proceedings were taken, because that was during the period of our neutrality. We did not know of any particular way that it could be done. He was kept very closely under observation, however, from that time on and during the war.

Maj. HUMES. Is he a citizen?

Mr. BIELASKI. I think he is a citizen. I am quite sure he is. Otherwise, he would have been interned. He was not.

Here is another report from Consul Otto about the Hans Liebau Bureau, which I think ought to go in the record.

Senator OVERMAN. Put it in.

(The paper referred to is here printed in full in the record, as follows:)

BIELASKI EXHIBIT No. 123.

NEW YORK, March 20, 1916.

I take the liberty of answering as follows the letter of Baron von Zwiedenik, Austro-Hungarian Chargé D'Affaires, under date of March 4th, 1916:

In a conversation participated in by the Austro-Hungarian Attaché, the Prince zu Hohenlohe, Mr. von Papen, Captain Hecker, Doctor von Klenwaechter, and the undersigned, the Prince as representative of the Austro-Hungarian Embassy, stated that the Austro-Hungarian government would support the undertaking in the same way as the German Government.

His Excellency the Austro-Hungarian Ambassador, Doctor Dumba, also informed us through the Austro-Hungarian Consulate in New York that he, the Austro-Hungarian Ambassador, was willing if necessary, to pledge himself personally up to $100,000 for the maintenance of the Employment Bureau. His Excellency personally assured me of his assistance shortly before his departure.

The employment Bureau, during an activity of 6½ months up to the end of February 1916, received over 8000 applications, of which 4774 were new applications, a total of 4466 positions having been supplied; of these about one-third were subjects of the Austro-Hungarian monarchy, Sixty per cent. of all applications were from persons coming from munition and war material industries, and the remaining forty per cent. would also have been driven into the war industry had it not been for the propaganda for workmen's assistance. Engineers and the better class of persons had as a result of the propaganda, left the factories of their own accord and, without asking for assistance, they sought and found employment elsewhere; we know of such cases. If we had, by agitation and speeches, gotten the unskilled laborers in masses out of the factories the government would without doubt have proceeded penally against the Bureau and its activities would have ceased. Moreover, the result would have been that laborers would have been convinced that the activity of the employment agency was illegal and they would have calmly remained in their positions, whereas they are now gradually leaving them. Overhaste would only have hindered us and any indiscretion had to be avoided.

In spite of many endeavors the Department of Justice has not succeeded in finding any pretext against the Liebau Bureau. The Bureau keeps absolutely within its scope of the laws of this country. It looks after persons who do wish to work in the war material factories. The statistics of the Bureau prove that more and more applicants are appearing as the organization gains greater publicity.

The underlying idea of the Bureau has materialized to the extent that at the present time inquiries for laborers are frequently received from manufacturers of war materials because technical laborers are scarcely to be had in commercial employment agencies. Thus, for instance, the Simplex Automobile

Company, which has a contract for aeroplane motors from the French government, tried to obtain workmen under the best of conditions, but it was of course rejected. It is generally recognized among employers that Hungarians are reliable workmen who only too gladly accept employment even as unskilled laborers to operate dies, as machine assistances for packing, etc.

Another effect of the employment agency has been to arouse the patriotic zeal and loyalty of the workmen for their native country, for they notice that they have not been forgotten. A proof of this is found in the fact that persons are continually visiting the central and branch offices in order to offer thanks for having been assisted.

I wish further to remark that the result from a political standpoint has been very favorable, but I wish to express myself on this point only personally and orally; these results are known to Mr. von Papen.

If it is taken into consideration that the allied government have thus far contributed only $8600 to help the laborers it must be admitted that it has been one of the best establishments in this country if we compare the result accomplished by the propaganda to this sum.

It would also be of the greatest importance for the allied governments to pledge their financial help also in the future; an abandonment of the Bureau would make a very bad impression on all parties concerned and have a very disadvantageous effect.

Furthermore, in case the Bureau continues after the war the records gathered will form very valuable statistics. Let us suppose that the country were to need additional hands in one or another Home industry. It would be an easy matter to find available material with the aid of the records. This organization would represent a bond of union between the old and new home of the subjects employed in technical enterprises in America.

(Sgd.) K.—OTTO.

Mr. BIELASKI. There are a great many other documents here, also reports of the German Government and the reports of consuls, and so on, but they contain nothing of much particular interest.

Senator STERLING. In the first letter that you read, I think it was from Bernstorff in regard to the Libau Bureau, reference was made to seeing German workmen personally.

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes; orally.

Senator STERLING. Yes.

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes, sir.

Senator STERLING. Have you any evidence of activity along that line?

Mr. BIELASKI. The consuls reported back from various districts to von Bernstorff, as reported in the circular. Many of them said—in a number of cases, at least—that the Germans had already been fired from those places, because they did not trust them, and there were not a great many of them left in positions of importance who could be approached. Von Papen was, of course, especially interested in that latter matter, and he corresponded directly with the consuls. He sent a circular out under date of July 21, about the subject.

Senator STERLING. What was the purport of that?

Mr. BIELASKI. He said:

BIELASKI EXHIBIT No. 124.

I most respectfully request in relation to the proclamation of the Imperial German Embassy of June 19, J. No. A-3805, that information be sent to me as soon as possible as to the extent to which German subjects are employed in arms and munition factories in respective consular districts, in order that for the present a general view may be had of the existing situation.

In view of the extraordinary rapid growth of this branch of industry, and of the momentous significance which this constantly increasing production and the new plants ever springing up, has for the outcome of the present war, I would be extraordinarily interested in receiving further reports as to the success attained in the steps taken in the sense of proclamation. In connection herewith I respectfully remark that according to reports received from the consular district in which the Allis-Chalmers Manufacturing Co. of Milwaukee, Wis., is located, a large number of Germans are to be found on the board of directors as well as among the leading engineers, and I would be especially thankful for a report as to whether this information is founded upon facts, and whether there is any indication, as rumored, that the Allis-Chalmers is to be bought by the Bethlehem Steel Co.

Bernstorff put the whole situation up to Bethmann-Hollweg on August 7, 1915, and asked him what he should do, in a long letter, and in an answer dated November 12, 1915, the Chancellor outlined the attitude which he desired taken. It was a sort of a straddle as to whether they should all leave or not. The question to be determined was the same one which was raised, he says, in the Bosch Magneto case, where Heins, the manager of the concern, admitted taking orders from Great Britain for the purpose of delaying and retarding the aircraft program, and which developed the scrap between von Papen's office and Boy-Ed's office as to whether Heins should not be really punished under the German law. Bethmann-Hollweg approved of the stand taken by Albert in that case, saying that where the intention of the man was to injure the cause of the Allies, the fact that he furnished them some material was not a violation of their code.

Senator STERLING. That the retarding of the work would more than offset it?

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes; he thought that by his withholding work he had put back the British program some months.

Copies of these communications, translations of them, between Bernstorff and Bethmann-Hollweg can be put in the record if you wish. They are several pages long.

Senator OVERMAN. Put them in.

Mr. BIELASKI. There is one which appears in this file which is possibly of interest which I did not read. That is a cipher dispatch which was sent to Von Papen by the German consul at St. Louis, Mo., under date of June 19, 1915. Its translation is that—

BIELASKI EXHIBIT No. 125.

Two agents of the Organized Brotherhood of Metal Workers, 34 Park Street, New York City, named Sam Scarlett and J. U. Kelly, expelled from the organization by the president, Charles Heyde, have informed me that said organization has begun a movement, the object of which is to effect the stoppage of shipments of munitions of war. Meetings are soon to be held, especially at Alton, Ill., and afterward other steps taken.

Regarding the information from Privy Councillor Meyer Gerhard, I must not fail to acquaint you with the foregoing, and ask your advice as to whether I should, as requested by the above-named persons, advance $40 expenses as requested by them, through a confidential person.

It is my recollection that one of those men was convicted as an I. W. W.

Senator KING. Scarlett was secretary of a local organization in my own State at one time of the I. W. W.

Mr. BIELASKI. It shows a direct connection between the I. W. W. and the military attaché's office.

Maj. HUMES. Scarlett was an organizer for the I. W. W., was he not?

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes.

Senator OVERMAN. Was he connected with Boy-Ed?

Mr. BIELASKI. He was mentioned in this communication from the consul at St. Louis to Von Papen, the military attaché.

Senator OVERMAN. All right.

Mr. BIELASKI. And I think $40 was afterwards sent out there, or he was authorized to advance it, although I do not see that before me.

(The letters last referred to are here printed in the record as follows:)

BIELASKI EXHIBIT No. 126.

Imperial Germany Embassy, J. No. A. 3805.
Strictly confidential!

CEDARHURST, N. Y., June 1, 1915.

It is asserted from many sources that in the industries in the United States which have turned to the delivery of war material, many German subjects occupy leading positions. According to the directions received by me from the Imperial Chancellor, these subjects are to be notified that their employment in such industries is contrary to the duty which they owe their Fatherland, as the said local industries work exclusively for the enemies of Germany. In this connection, special attention is called to Paragraph 89 of the Imperial Penal Code. Attention must be called to an annotation upon this paragraph, which says: "The (criminal) intent lies in the knowledge that aid is given to the enemy Power, or hindrance to the German or its allied Powers. The corresponding intention is not necessary to be shown. See Goldt A. 19396, but especially Schwartz, Treason to the Nation and Treason to the Military Forces '897), 39 ff. AA John Holtzand, Handb. 352."

I therefore request your Honor to determine what persons in your Consular District come within this category, and then to get into communication personally and orally with such persons in your district as

1. are beyond any doubt German subjects.
2. are employed in positions above that of common laborer, such as foremen, superintendents, engineers, etc., in industries engaged in the production of war material. (Factories for making arms and munitions, or those which produce parts of the same, powder and other explosives, as well as benzol refining plants, automobile and aviation machine works engaged in the export business, farms which sell horses and mules for export, as well as submarine wharfs, are especially included therein.)

Such persons must vigorously be taught their duty toward their country. The fact must also be brought to their attention that this self-understood duty does not give them the right, after giving up said employment, to demand of the Empire that they be given other equally profitable employment, or the continuance of their previous pay. I will remark confidentially, however, that in individual cases, after careful investigation, the question of giving assistance will be considered, where it is absolutely necessary. This assistance, however, must be limited to the minimum figure, and it must also be expected that the person concerned shall leave no means untried to secure employment himself. In handling this matter, however, everything should be done to avoid embittering the persons in question in a way to lead them to expose the whole affair and cause hostile publicity.

In cases wherein doubts may arise as to whether the products of a certain plant shall be regarded as war material, or whether the plant is delivering to our enemies, I request that the Herr Military Attache be communicated with, at the following address: Care of German Consulate-General, 11 Broadway, New York City.

I also request that you send your reports to the same address as to the steps taken by you in this matter.

(Signed) THE IMPERIAL AMBASSADOR
BERNSTORFF.

To the Imperial Consular Authorities in New York, Philadelphia, Cincinnati, St. Louis, San Francisco and Chicago.

Mr. BIELASKI. On August 7, 1915, Von Bernstorff wrote the following letter to Von Bethmann-Mollweg, German Imperial Chancellor:

BIELASKI EXHIBIT No. 127.

VON BERNSTORFF TO VON BETHMANN-HOLLWEG.

Imperial German Embassy No. A 237
1 inclosure

CEDARHURST, N. Y., Aug. 7/15.

Doubt has recently arisen concerning the full scope of Paragraph 89 of the Imperial Criminal Code Book as well as of the Supplementary Decisions pro-promulgated since the beginning of the war. A number of American firms operated either entirely or partially with German capital, managed by German subjects and now in doubt as to the admissibility of deliveries abroad as well as in the United States, have applied to the Embassy or to the Consulate-General for advice.

In answering the questions, the Imperial Consulate-General as shown in the inclosed copy of the communication of July 29, takes the stand that business and deliveries of goods from under Paragraph 89 where the slightest possibility exists that, directly or indirectly, whether in a military political or economic sense, they may be of use to the enemy power or persons with whom we are connected. This stand-point has the advantage of offering a simple and lucid solution of the question so far as, in view of the present material and personal connection of American industry and that of our enemies, it makes practically all deliveries of any sort of goods impossible even when deliveries are made to American firms. The question is as to whether this application of legal decisions correctly represents them in fact and meaning. It would be tantamount to a complete shutting down of the industries in question.

I do not believe I should cease making continual representations in this matter, as the question very closely concerns the work which is being done by the various members of the Embassy as well as by Privy Councillor Albert toward hindering or limiting the exportation of war material from the United States to our opponents. In the course of this work we have in various ways had our attention drawn directly to such firms. The latter proceed upon the assumption that the approval of deliveries in individual cases by the Imperial Representatives precludes liability to prosecution, because thereby the consciousness of criminality, or of delivery intent is abolished.

In view of the importance of the question and assuming that the home authorities have had occasion to deal with it, may I most respectfully ask your Excellency to kindly advise me how the decision upon Paragraph 89 and the Supplementary decisions are to be interpreted; whether a permit in isolated cases precludes liability to prosecution, and, if so, what grounds should govern the issuance of a permit. If the approval of the Imperial Agents abroad does not bar prosecution, or the giving of approval in special and exceptional cases is not regarded with favor, it would nevertheless appear to me to be desirable to receive instructions as to how the legal decisions are to be construed in order to know how to answer correctly the numerous inquiries received by myself and the Consulate-General and to work out a uniform plan of procedure.

Paragraph 89 of the Imperial Criminal Code described it as an act of treason for a German purposely, during war, to give aid to the enemy power or work to disadvantage to the military forces. Similarly, the decision promulgated in the Fall of 1914 provides a penalty for those who knowingly violate a German embargo by exporting goods directly or indirectly to the Enemy Country. The text of this late decision is not at hand in authentic form.

When in the first place I regard the deliveries in question in the light of Paragraph 89 of the Imperial Criminal Code, I would assume, in view of the history and text of said paragraph, that the penalties attach not simply to aid including intermediate, deliveries which may be redound to the benefit of the enemy country. The conception of the giving of aid as well as the infliction of injury, is brought into connection with the enemy power and respectively with the military forces of the German empire, etc., and therefore may be limited to acts which are helpful or detrimental to the military operations as the case may be. The provisions of Paragraph 89 were not intended to apply to an economic war, as it is now conducted. If all deliveries of goods came unconditionally under the purview of Paragraph 89 it would not have been necessary to provide a new penalty for a knowing violation of the embargo rules.

If this interpretation is correct, it resolves itself, according to my view so far as it concerns the delivery to our opponents, into an investigation of the questions as to whether materials involved, the delivery which aids the military operations of our opponents. Under the new decision, this would apply, in the German export embargo. On the other hand, the delivery of other goods would have excelled the free of penalty.

Further difficulties attend the interpretation if the decisions as to penalty are held to apply to deliveries which are not bad to our enemies, which exclusively to American firms within the territory of the United States. Even if the class of goods, about the sense of the foregoing interpretation, it is still an open question as to the extent to which a delivery is to be regarded as an interme- diate delivery to our enemies. The connection is established without further adieu if the goods are desired to be exported, or when it is a matter of delivery to American manufactories in which war material for the Allies is made. Doubts arise, however, in cases wherein goods are delivered to American factories which produce war material, partly for the Allies and partly for domestic use, and it cannot be determined to a certainty for which part of the production the goods delivered by a German are to be used. But even when the fact has been established that the goods delivered to the Americans are applied only to domestic use, the further question arises as to whether, through the support in production of goods for domestic use the American factories are not strengthened in their capacity for the production of war material for the Allies.

Under the existing circumstances attending the distribution of labor here, whereby factories employed on war materials, repeatedly, in taking orders from our enemies, transfer their former productions of material for domestic use to other factories in order thereby to increase their productive capacity, a wide interpretation of the penalties leads to the conclusion that every delivery in the United States contributes also indirectly to the advantage of our enemies, because in that manner the drawing of American products into the service of the Allies, which is taking place increasingly on all sides, is indirectly furthered.

For the above-mentioned reasons it appears to me necessary that there be a limitation in the range of the penalties. If such limitation cannot be based upon the nature of the wares involved, the only means left is an examination into individual cases. Such examination will yield results variously according to the special features of the situation. A delivery of wares which in itself is admissible may through the temporal (?) volume of the delivery and the size of the order lead to an indirect aid. On the other hand, even the delivery of small quantities of war material to our enemies may be expedient and free of penalty. I have a special report (words "in cipher" erased) on a case of this kind. Consideration may also be given to the question as to whether the goods can be delivered demonstrably in equal quantity, value and time, from another source.

There may be no doubt, and I quite agree with the argument of the Consul-General, that individual private interests have no claim for consideration. Like every German subject, the German subject in foreign lands has to bear his share of the general sacrifice. A damage to the operation of his plant, even if it should lead to complete stoppage, could not, if a sensible interpretation of the law were necessary, be given any consideration.

The only question is as to how far the general interests may lead to a consideration of private interests. England systematically wages an economic war upon Germany to appropriate her foreign trade already during the war. Is it desirable to encourage this effort through a too rigorous interpretation of the legal decisions, or can a way be found to make it possible for Germans domiciled in foreign countries to maintain their plants, especially as thereby sources of income for Germany arise which, taken altogether, may prove to be of importance to the efficiency of Germany and to her economic staying-power? The matter of foreign exchange can be left out of the question here, as the natural factors which influenced the market values have gone out of course, and the deliveries herein considered could have no effect upon the value of the mark.

In the interests of what I deemed the necessary uniformity in handling the decisions, I have requested the consulate-general to keep in touch with me in the future, have reports accessible to me and send me copies of past reports as well. If, after looking into the matter, I deem it necessary to issue a supplemental statement, I will most respectfully reserve the same for a further report.

(Signed) BERNSTORFF.

To his Excellency
The Imperial Chancellor
Herr von Bethmann-Hollweg.

A carbon copy of the following communication of Zimmermann, the German Minister of Foreign Affairs, to Von Bernstorff was, under date of October 7, 1915, forwarded to Von Papen by Haniel, of the German Embassy at Washington:

BIELASKI EXHIBIT No. 128.

THE GERMAN MINISTER OF FOREIGN AFFAIRS TO VON BERNSTORFF.

(Copy.)

BERLIN, Sept. 12, 1915.

In dealing with the question of the permissibility of deliveries through German firms or German subjects in the United States of America to our enemies your Excellency takes the stand that the Imperial representatives are in duty bound give to interested parties, upon inquiry, authoritative answers concerning the range of concomitant legal decisions, especially with regard to Paragraph 89 of the criminal code, and that the declaration of agreement made by an Imperial official excludes culpability of the person making the delivery. Neither assumption holds good. The question as to whether a business is liable to penalty under Paragraph 89 is a matter to be decided exclusively by the court having jurisdiction in the case. The "approval" of an administrative authority is devoid of significance, and, above all, has not the effect of absolving the person advised from his responsibility to the criminal judge.

In this matter it is also not feasible to accede to the request of your excellency to be provided with instructions relative to the interpretation of the legal decisions. There has been too little adjudication under Paragraph 89 of the Criminal Code to admit of the promulgation of general rules governing its interpretation; on the other hand, your information, based upon this or that commentary would not be regarded as possessing any protective significance for any of those seeking advice.

Relative to inquiries pertaining thereto, the fundamental stand is taken here that German firms, including those in foreign countries, must discontinue all business which may contribute to the resources of the enemy, and give the enemies aid even indirectly. Whether this presumption applies in the individual case, or whether it is a case involving completely neutral business that is undoubtedly of no consequence to the prosecution of the war, is a matter that can be looked into only in the rarest instances by the official who has been asked for advice, and he will therefore be obliged to withhold a permit. (Per cited note on margin evidently written by Von Papen says: "I think this is a matter for the courts to decide?") The principle enunciated by High Privy Councillor Albert, that an unlawful transaction is not shown when in the event of default in delivery by German firm, the enemy state would get it from another firm, can it be regarded as decisive.

The business transactions referred to of the Bosch Magneto Co. and Orstein & Koppel give cause for considerable concern. There should really be no difference between the delivery of arms and munition and the delivery of parts of aviation apparatus and military automobiles, of railroad rails, steel beams and cars. With regard to both firms, who were orally represented in the case here, it is held that no administrative authority or agents of the same are authorized to determine the permissibility of their transactions, and that their approval would not protect said firms from the possible consequences of an unlawful business deal.

Secretary of State for the Interior to whom the case of the Bosch Magneto Co. was reported from here, has announced that he cannot share the view held by Herr Albert and that it is not in conformity with the practice following in the Imperial Department of the Interior; and that the fact concerning the business methods of the firm have been referred to the Imperial Department of Justice for further action.

The utmost caution would be advisable in the giving of advice, upon practical as well as ethical grounds. The exportation of arms and munitions from the Union has caused such a high degree of bitterness in Germany against the United States that every effort is required to prevent a general and far-reaching boycott movement. There is therefore reason to fear that the heightened feeling of patriotism will lead, through appearances such as that under discussion to undesirable criticism of the attitude of our officials who are located abroad.

Under these circumstances, may I request your Excellency to adopt the following view: It may become necessary to impart information to the public. As I am not in a position to lay down a uniform line of procedure of the Imperial Embassy, a General is necessary in this matter, I have accordingly referred the matter through Herr Hossenfelder for consideration. In handling economic questions both offices will be able to give results may be hoped for therefrom, especially in the case of a powerful aid who, by reason of technical training intimate knowledge of American industries, numerous connections, long experience and tried, sober and practical judgment seems just now to be especially qualified to cooperate in dealing with economic questions, and who cannot be replaced by Herr Albert, who naturally is lacking in experience and in the necessary knowledge of conditions in America, which are not simple.

(Signed) ZIMMERMANN.

To Count von BERNSTORFF, Excellency,
Washington.

Senator OVERMAN. Was Otto engaged in furnishing supplies to the German Government?

Mr. BIELASKI. Furnishing information.

Senator OVERMAN. Information?

Mr. BIELASKI. Information of supplies being furnished to the allied governments.

Senator OVERMAN. Not to the Germans?

Mr. BIELASKI. Not to the Germans; no, sir. The Staats-Zeitung, of New York City, was used to present the German viewpoint of war matters to German readers who read the German language.

I find here a letter on this letterhead addressed to Capt. von Papen, signed by Bernard H. Ridder, its editor. This letter and reply read as follows:

BIELASKI EXHIBIT No. 129.

[New Yorker Staats-Zeitung The Great German Medium Established in 1834. 182 William Street, corner Spruce Street, New York City.]

JUNE 21, 1915.

Captain von PAPEN,

c/o G. Amsinck & Co., 6 Hanover Street, New York City.

MY DEAR CAPTAIN: The party that I sent out West has enlisted the services of some rich Chicago friends and will continue the propaganda which we have started. They are sending out several men in the Far West for the purpose of combining strength for the man they are interested in. We have nothing to do with that matter, financially or otherwise. I advanced him $200.00 which he has used for the purpose as outlined to you. We have furthermore spent $295.00 in Greater New York among the labor element and in sending the man to Boston on Friday. This campaign is now finished so far as we are concerned, and, personally, I believe the money used for it has been particularly well spent. The Staats-Zeitung advanced this $495.00 as explained by me to you.

The fund of $9,000.00 which has been subscribed for agitation among the labor parties has been increased by $4,000.00 more. Labor meetings will be held throughout the West this week and next week. I feel sure that the cause of peace has been very much advanced during the last ten days.

Very truly yours,

BERNARD H. RIDDER.

BIELASKI EXHIBIT No. 130.

NEW YORK, July 1, 1915.

MY DEAR MR. RIDDER: In reply to your favor of June 21st, and in pursuit of our recent conversation I beg to state that to my great regret I am for various reasons absolutely unable to refund to you any money that served political purposes.

Acknowledging very heartily everything you have done for our common great cause, I consider it imperative that the representatives of the Imperial German Government keep entirely out of the domestic politics of the United States of America.

Very sincerely yours,

IMPERIAL GERMAN MILITARY ATTACHÉ.

BERNARD H. RIDDER, Esq.,
New York City.

Senator KING. Is the Staats-Zeitung still being published?

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes, sir. It reads like that was written for publication; but in any event, Mr. Albert writes on July 6, five days later, to Capt. von Papen, as follows:

BIELASKI EXHIBIT No. 131.

NEW YORK, July 6, 1915.

Hon. HERR VON PAPEN: With reference to the enclosed correspondence with Mr. Bernard H. Ridder I am sending you enclosed a cashier's check of the Equitable Trust Co. for $495.00 with the request for a receipt.

Very truly yours,

H. F. ALBERT.

Under date of New York, July 8, 1915, there is a receipt for $495, signed W. Van Leyen. The Albert letter seems to be an original document.

Senator NELSON. That first letter of Ridder's which you read would seem to indicate that they were mixing up in a political campaign somewhere in the West, would it not?

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes.

Senator NELSON. Have you any idea what it was?

Mr. BIELASKI. That was in June, 1915. June, 1915, was the time when the agitation among the labor organizations was at its height. Franz von Rintelen and Labor's National Peace Council were very active at that time. The American Embargo Conference, which was a political agitation, was also beginning to be active. I do not know just exactly what Mr. Ridder had reference to.

Senator NELSON. I did not know but that it referred to some particular man.

Mr. BIELASKI. It does not appear from the letter, at all.

Senator NELSON. Or from anything else you have?

Mr. BIELASKI. No, sir.

Senator KING. It refers to meetings of labor organizations, and I gather from a perusal of it and your reading of it that it referred to some labor campaign that was being carried on.

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes; it may be. It might, of course, relate to a campaign whereby Congressman Buchanan would be elected president of the American Federation of Labor, but I do not know, at all, that that was it.

Capt. Boy-Ed was rather frequently in correspondence with the Staats-Zeitung with respect to the matters it was printing, commenting on what had been written and making suggestions as to what should be written, and so on. There are a number of these letters. I do not know whether you care to have them read into the record or not. There is one which, I think, is especially interesting.

Senator KING. As I understand, Mr. Chairman, the plan with respect to these documents, letters, and various memoranda submitted by the witness, or by other witnesses, where they are not read into the record, but perhaps a portion of them should go into the record, that Maj. Humes is to go over them very carefully and determine what, in his judgment, is relevant and material, and then submit that matter to the chairman, and the chairman is to pass upon the question and put into the record what he deems relevant and material, so that it shall not be left to any witness or to Maj. Humes to be the determinators of what shall go into this record?

Senator OVERMAN. I think that is understood.

Senator STERLING. Except, I suppose, as the chairman may direct that any particular matter may go into the record at the time it is presented.

Senator KING. Certainly.

Senator STERLING. There have been instances of that kind.

Senator KING. Yes. I had reference to those cases where we deferred action.

Senator STERLING. Yes.

Mr. BIELASKI. There are a great many of these letters. I am trying to find one in which he even goes so far as to tell the editor of the Staats-Zeitung that his editorials should be made shorter, and should be printed in larger type, and so on.

Senator STERLING. Just going back to the last few letters that you read, the one written to the editor of the Staats-Zeitung, and then with reference to the payment to him by Dr. Albert: My interpretation of that was this, that the first letter, in which they refused to contribute anything for political purposes, was written for a record, and for the purpose of making a record, and that Dr. Albert received his instructions to make payment of that $495 to the Staats-Zeitung?

Mr. BIELASKI. The amount was paid.

Senator STERLING. The amount was paid?

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes.

Capt. Frantz Rintelen, about whom a great deal has naturally come to your attention and the attention of the public because of the prosecutions in which he has been involved, came over to this country, I think, in April, 1915, for two or three purposes. One was to prevent the exportation of munitions to the allied governments, and the second was to bring about the shipment into Germany of supplies which she needed. He was a member of a very prominent family in Germany, a young banker, probably as prominent a young banker as any man in Germany, and a captain on the staff—I think a reserve captain of the navy—under Admiral von Tirpitz.

Senator NELSON. And he came here as the representative of the German Government?

Mr. BIELASKI. He came here as the representative of the German Government. He was involved in the placing of fire bombs on vessels carrying supplies to the allies, for which he has been convicted.

He was involved in an effort to get an American passport fraudulently for his own use, for which I think he has been indicted, and he was involved in what was known as Labor's National Peace Council, a movement intended to interfere with the activities of the allies in the shipment of munitions of war, to be used in part to handicap them in their efforts to get a loan in this country, and to be useful in peace propaganda as well.

Rintelen, through Prof. Hall, who was mentioned Saturday, and I think was an exchange professor in Germany, and who, as Mr. O'Brien stated, was decorated by the Kaiser, gave to Rintelen the name of David Lamar as a man especially familiar with conditions over here, and who could be of help to him.

David Lamar was the notorious man known as the wolf of Wall Street, who was convicted and served his sentence for having impersonated a Congressman some years ago.

Senator NELSON. That was the Present Alien Property Custodian A. Mitchell Palmer?

Mr. BIELASKI. Congressman A. Mitchell Palmer; yes.

Senator NELSON. Was there not a man by the name of Martin who was a sort of assistant to him.

Mr. BIELASKI. Mr. Martin was Mr. Lamar's man Friday.

Senator NELSON. Yes; he was his man Friday.

Mr. BIELASKI. He was also convicted. He was associated with Mr. Lamar in numerous ventures before the Labor's Peace Council.

Senator NELSON. I am sorry to say that many years ago he was a resident of Minneapolis.

Senator OVERMAN. Martin was connected with the Antitrust League?

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes.

Senator NELSON. They were the whole league?

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes; Lamar was the power behind the throne in the league, also.

Lamar, through Martin and Schultheis—just to sketch briefly what he did, because the facts have already been brought out fully in the public trials—got in touch with labor organizations and got them to adopt resolutions favorable to Labor's National Peace Council, to send delegates to conventions, and financed them all, paid the expenses from money which Martin got from Lamar, and which Lamar got from Rintelen.

It is believed that Lamar got approximately $500,000 from Rintelen. He spent very little of it for Rintelen's purposes. Most of it he kept himself. He made a practice of taking credit for anything that would happen in the way of agitation which was favorable to Germany.

I think there was a mass meeting of some kind held up in Jersey. I think it was, in which Secretary of State Bryan spoke, and Lamar took credit for that. It happened, however, that the facts as to the other people who were interested in promoting the meeting came to the attention of Rintelen and made him somewhat suspicious. I think probably for the first time, of Lamar's activities.

Senator NELSON. He got $500,000 from von Rintelen?

Mr. BIELASKI. Approximately that, we think.

Senator OVERMAN. They are all in the penitentiary now, are they not?

Mr. BIELASKI. No; the case has not been decided on appeal yet.

Senator NELSON. He graduated in that other case?

Mr. BIELASKI. Oh, yes; he has served his time in the other case, and he will be at home when the case is decided on appeal.

Congressman Buchanan was at that time indicted, in that case, but the jury disagreed as to him.

Senator NELSON. As to whom?

Mr. BIELASKI. As to Frank Buchanan. Frank Buchanan was the first president of Labor's National Peace Council.

I wanted to give you something of the organization. Rintelen was connected with Scheele, a chemist, and financed him in the making of these fire bombs.

Senator NELSON. That were put on the ships?

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes. He was a man who had been working for Von Papen, and was loaned to Von Rintelen by Von Papen for use in this particular plot.

Senator NELSON. And those bombs were manufactured on these interned German vessels, were they not?

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes; that is, the containers were manufactured on the Vaterland, I think; then they were taken to Scheele's place and loaded.

Senator OVERMAN. What became of Scheele?

Mr. O'BRIAN. He is in custody at the present time; in custody of the Federal officials at the present time.

Mr. BIELASKI. He was indicted. He is under indictment.

Senator NELSON. Is Scheele interned, or is he out on bail?

Mr. BIELASKI. He is neither, Senator. He is in custody, in a perfectly safe place; and I think what he is doing and has done will be satisfactory to the committee.

Rintelen, apparently, got in touch with Lamar in April, 1915.

Senator NELSON. How long did he continue in touch with him?

Mr. BIELASKI. He continued in touch with him until Rintelen sailed, about the 4th or 5th or 6th of August.

The personnel of this organization, as shown by this very excellent résumé which the Military Intelligence Office prepared, was Rintelen, Lamar, Martin, and Schultheis. Schultheis was an assistant of Martin's and also connected with this antitrust organization of Lamar's here.

Senator NELSON. Was he convicted?

Mr. BIELASKI. I do not think Schultheis was.

Mr. O'BRIAN. The jury disagreed as to Schultheis.

Mr. BIELASKI. Mr. Buchanan and Mr. Fowler, who was a former Member of Congress, and other lesser lights among the labor organizations were also connected with this.

Martin sent a few men around the country prompting the labor organizations to adopt resolutions; and they had their first meeting, I think, in Washington in May, 1915.

They then had a further meeting here in Washington, June 21 and 22, at the St. James Hotel, where they organized, Buchanan being elected president.

The following resolutions were adopted, which give some idea of their purposes:

BIELASKI EXHIBIT No. 131½.

Whereas the purpose of this call is to crystallize the prevailing sentiment for peace, and

Whereas the American Federation of Labor favors peace, but can not take action,

Resolved by the representatives of labor in peace congress assembled, That an organization be established having for its purpose the establishment and maintenance of peace universal; that the officers of Labor's National Peace Council consist of a president, etc., such officers to act in conducting the further business of Labor's National Peace Council.

Resolved, That Labor's National Peace Council recommends to the President of the United States that the policy of President Washington prohibiting the shipment and sale of munitions be followed by a proclamation prohibiting the sale and shipment to belligerent nations of munitions as well as of all materials used in the production of the same.

At this time Buchanan, as you will recall, made an effort to see the President, and was unsuccessful, and it resulted in his letter to the President, which was made public, and brought special attention to his activities.

This organization, like a great many other things, never accomplished anything of consequence for the German Government.

The failure was in great measure due to the wisdom and action of the president, Mr. Samuel Gompers, of the American Federation of Labor at that time. He absolutely refused to give the movement any support, and his attitude prevented its having any possible success in organized labor.

The organization made particular efforts to get in touch with the farmers' organizations, to bring them into the movement also. But of course, when Rintelen was forced to get out of the country, he leaving in August, the support dropped out; Lamar put up no more money, and the thing petered out.

Senator OVERMAN. Have you any evidence there showing the activities of these agents among the colored people of the South?

Mr. BIELASKI. I have not any here, Senator. We have had a large number of investigations of that sort of thing, finding, in a few instances, the circulation of appeals among the negroes intended to influence them in favor of Germany, but we have not been able to connect those things with any official German source. There were all sorts of stories started among the negroes, of various kinds, to the effect that there was no hanging in Germany, for one thing, and that they would be given each a piece of land over here if Germany was victorious.

Senator OVERMAN. Forty acres and a mule?

Mr. BIELASKI. And other things of that sort. One piece of propaganda that was interesting was that they were rightfully really the original owners of this land, that they were the descendants of the Indians, and that the country rightfully belonged to them, and that the white people were wrongly in possession of it. Also that England had sided with the South during the Civil War, because she wanted to keep the negroes in slavery, and that therefore the negroes should be opposed to England at this time.

There were all sorts of stories of that kind, but they were never brought home to any official German source.

Senator OVERMAN. I remember receiving some letters from my State that there were organizations and meetings held there by colored people in certain parts of the State with respect to this matter.

Maj. HUMES. It is my understanding that there have been a great many precautions by the Department of Justice and under the espionage act for individual offenses in connection with this propaganda among the colored people, Mr. Bielaski?

Mr. BIELASKI. I suppose so. I do not know how many there have been, but there have been a great number of prosecutions; I do not know just how many of them were for statements of that kind. Some of them were.

Senator OVERMAN. I want to say that they did not take with the negroes. The negroes have been very loyal.

Mr. BIELASKI. That is true.

Just for the information of the committee the Printers' and Publishers' Association, Inc., was an effort made, headed by Dr.

Hugo Schweitzer, a German, and Max W. Stoehr, Emil Kipper, and Henry Weisman, to get a newspaper which would be a factor in influencing public opinion. It was to be organized openly. "Get your own real American newspaper" was the heading of their prospectus. It provided for the raising of $2,000,000 for the purpose of buying a paper. I do not think it ever got anywhere. The German consul was very much opposed to it. He gave his reason, after commending all the men, by stating that there was no possibility of a paper having those men connected with it being known as anything other than a German paper, and that it could not be a factor in influencing public opinion.

Mr. O'Brian suggests that we might emphasize who these men were a little bit. Dr. Hugo Schweitzer was a very capable chemist, connected with the Bayer Chemical Co.

According to testimony which we have from other German agents, he was for years a German agent in this country for the purpose of reporting back to Germany chemical discoveries for their use over there.

He was mixed up in a number of transactions which we have told you something about; for instance, in connection with the German classics, he was the intermediary in handling the money there and occupied a very prominent position in New York.

Emil Kipper, for instance, is now under indictment for treason for having assisted known German agents during the time we were at war in this country.

He received communications for them, it is alleged in the charges against him, paid money to them, and so on, those agents being the two that are also under indictment in New York State.

Max W. Stoehr was connected with the Woolen Co., the companies which I think the Alien Property Custodian has taken charge of.

Senator OVERMAN. Who is Weismann?

Mr. BIELASKI. I think Henry Weismann is a lawyer in New York City, who is an American citizen.

Capt. LESTER. He is president of the German-American Alliance.

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes; he is an American citizen, however.

Senator STERLING. You mean to say he is now president?

Capt. LESTER. He is the president of the State German-American Alliance, and also was active with Jeremiah O'Leary in the Friends of Peace Society.

Mr. BIELASKI. Dr. Albert's office, in addition to his propaganda work, was engaged in very large numbers of commercial enterprises—the shipping of material to Germany and the purchase of steamers, the organization of companies—all that sort of thing; not exactly propaganda, and as to which there are some reasons for not making public all of the facts at this time. I assume that the committee does not care to know about them, except to know that, in a general way, he was spending some millions of dollars in getting into Germany, through adjoining neutral countries, supplies that Germany wanted, all, of course, being done under the guise of American or other agencies.

Senator NELSON. Was he successful to any extent?

Mr. BIELASKI. A great many of his cargoes, I think, wound up in the prize courts of Great Britain. Some of them got through.

One of the most noted instances of where they attempted to ship through was in the steamer Wilhelmina; that was a load of food supplies, which was sent out on the Wilhelmina intending to go straight to Hamburg and to be used as a test case of the British embargo.

Senator NELSON. That was meat supplies, was it not?

Mr. BIELASKI. Lard and wheat, etc.

Senator NELSON. Meat supplies, I say, from Chicago, was it not?

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes; partly Chicago, but I think it was largely wheat and lard and so on.

It was intended, also, to either get through or to make diplomatic difficulties between this country and Great Britain. It was sent forward under the guise of an American proposition absolutely; that it was American owned; that the cargo was American shipped; and that the boat was an American boat.

The whole enterprise was financed by Germany from the start.

Senator NELSON. That vessel did not get through, did it?

Mr. BIELASKI. The vessel was taken into the ports of Great Britain.

In connection with that there was a very interesting thing. One of the members of this firm of Hayes, Kaufman & Lindheim wrote a letter under date of January 22, 1915, to the Secretary of State in which he said:

"The vessel is American. The officers are American. The consignees are American. The cargo is of American manufacture. It is an American venture, pure and simple, and no one else has any interest in it whatsoever."

Mr. Kaufman at that time was the attorney for Mr. Albert. Mr. Albert financed the deal, with John Simon; and in point of fact there was no real financial interest on the part of any American concern at all.

The facts as to the real nature of the shipment came fully to the attention of the State Department at just about the time the representations concerning the Wilhelmina were being made, and, in that way, any possibility of serious friction with Great Britain over the Wilhelmina was avoided.

Senator KING. Do you recall whether Mr. Kaufman or anybody pretended to represent American consignors abroad at the prize court?

Mr. BIELASKI. Mr. Hayes went over there and, I think, took part in that litigation.

Mr. O'BRIAN. They engaged a lawyer over there.

Mr. BIELASKI. Mr. Hayes went over there also. I remember that. This particular letter appears to have been dictated by Mr. Lindheim.

In addition to the moneys spent in New York the German consuls around the country were furnished sums by Von Bernstorff for various purposes. Some of the money so furnished, we believe, was used by, for instance, the German consul at Chicago in the American embargo conference, though we can not prove that directly.

All we can prove is the payment of sums to him from Bernstorff, and we know what his interest in the American embargo conference was. He also did furnish funds, of course, in connection with the Hindu cases which Jacobsen was connected with.

Out in San Francisco a press bureau was maintained by the consulate, as indicated by the translation of a letter sent to us afterward:

by one of the men attached there, which I think he thought would go on the Deutschland. He said:

The Press Bureau of the Consulate is under my charge, and I have made it a rule to put into the papers every week a map drawn by me explaining to the reader, at a glance, the entire situation. I believe my maps are aiding extensively in familiarizing the public with the war situation.

Then he goes on and tells something more about them. Interestingly he says:

A correspondent of the International News Service, William Bayard Hale, the only one who really does something for us in the American press, should be instructed accordingly.

That refers to certain lines of propaganda work which he said the British were following and which they were avoiding. He says:

You must never forget that Americans are not Germans, and their food must be cooked and served to them to suit their taste.

Senator OVERMAN. Have you ever estimated, in your office, from these documents and from your own knowledge, the total amount of money expended by the Germans in this country, approximately?

Mr. BIELASKI. That would be rather difficult, Senator, to get exactly an accurate account, because we do not know the manner in which every dollar was spent, by any means.

Mr. Albert's office handled, so we understand, a complete turnover of $35,000,000. Much of that was used in the purchase of supplies and these ship ventures and things of that kind. I have some figures here, however, which will give you some idea on the subject.

In addition to the funds that Albert's office had he had certain funds of his own which were placed to his credit. The ambassador received some funds, entirely outside of Albert's—several million dollars; I do not know that we know just what use he made of all the money he had. They spent over here about $1,800,000 in the Bolo Pasha business; about $1,700,000 in the Evening Mail business; they spent, I think it was, some $400,000 or $500,000 paid to Strauss, who was handling the Jewish propaganda. They spent many thousands of dollars in the Irish business, and in getting out their books they spent many thousands of dollars.

This is a brief statement of the moneys they raised:

First, a loan, March 1, 1915, nine months, notes due January 1, 1916, $7,100,000.

Two years' treasury bonds, due September 1, 1918, sold mainly to German insurance companies doing business in the United States, about $1,800,000.

Third, one-year German treasury bills, sold June, 1916, due March 1, 1917, and partly renewed on that date, $3,600,000.

Total sales of treasury bonds and bills, $12,500,000.

They obtained bank credits and bank loans.

Naming the banks, they obtained from the Chase National Bank about $2,500,000.

From the Bankers' Trust Co., $250,000.

From the Guarantee Trust Co., $450,000.

From G. Anssinick & Co., $300,000.

From the Equitable Trust Co., $1,700,000.

From the Mechanics & Metals National Bank, $1,400,000.

From Kuhn, Loeb & Co., $400,000.

Total funds produced through bank loans and bank credits $7,050,000.

Remittances from Reichsbank, department of interior, war department, and Central Purchasing Agency, of Berlin, approximately $7,000,000.

Funds secured through loans with the German banks, proceeds of which were made available in New York, $1,300,000.

The total funds received as above outlined aggregate $27,850,000. In addition, Dr. Albert's office received, of embassy funds, through Mr. Hugo Schweitzer, about $150,000 to $200,000.

Under date of June 21, 1915, one account, which was given a code name in their books and had to do with press propaganda, shows the sum of $786,000 had been expended at that time, June 21, 1915.

Senator STERLING. What did Von Rintelen spend and where did he get his money?

Mr. BIELASKI. He had approximately, I think it was, $700,000 which was in addition to any of these moneys.

The money that came through Hugo Schmidt was all for commercial purposes, except that Bolo Pasha incident, and $15,000 which was paid to a man in New Jersey in connection with certain other activities.

Senator NELSON. Can you give us the ramifications of that Bolo Pasha affair in this country? He is dead now, and it would not do any harm.

Mr. BIELASKI. He is dead. The most interesting thing that we have seen in that connection—

Senator NELSON. We want the connection of our people with it—people that are living here, or newspapers in this country.

Mr. BIELASKI. There were no people living here connected with it who knew the real facts, so far as we can prove, except German citizens, with the possible exception—though we do not know whether Hearst knew about it or not. He was intimately associated with Bolo Pasha in meetings, and it was his representative that brought the man over to this country.

Senator NELSON. You mean the Hearst newspaper representative?

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes.

Senator OVERMAN. Did Dr. Hale know him?

Mr. BIELASKI. No; this was a man named Bertelli, from France.

Senator NELSON. Who brought Bolo Pasha over?

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes; they came over together.

Senator NELSON. Was he Hearst's representative over there in France?

Mr. BIELASKI. I think he was the representative of the International News Service, which, I think, is Hearst's organization.

Senator NELSON. Can you tell us anything about the connections of Bolo, and what he did after he got over here—after he was brought over here by this representative of Hearst?

Mr. BIELASKI. He came over here and got in touch with Javenstadt, who put him in touch with the German ambassador. The German ambassador cabled, as you will recall from the cablegrams made public by the State Department, and asked for the money.

Senator NELSON. Who was Pavenstadt, and what were his affiliations?

Mr. BIELASKI. He was a German, now interned; a man of great wealth, worth at least $1,000,000.

Senator NELSON. A resident of this country?

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes, senator; a resident of New York City; born in Germany in 1854, and came to the United States in 1876, and he was a close friend of Von Bernstorff's, and acted as intermediary in the transfer of the money.

Senator NELSON. Can you not tell us something about who Bolo Pasha affiliated with and associated with, and was in conference with in this country after he came over here?

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes; I can.

Senator NELSON. I would like to have that.

Mr. BIELASKI. Adolph Pavenstadt was the principal man he met; the man who took him down to Von Bernstorff; and in February Bertelli introduced him to Hearst.

Senator STERLING. In 1915 was that.

Mr. BIELASKI. No; 1916.

Senator NELSON. 1916; that is right.

Mr. BIELASKI. Hearst invited Bolo and Bertelli to lunch shortly afterwards, and I think Mr. Becker developed, and Mr. Hearst admitted, a number of meetings with him—I think at the theater, and at some dinner at which, of course, a large number of other people were present.

Senator NELSON. What was Bolo's special mission here?

Mr. BIELASKI. His mission here was to get the funds from the German Government to take over one of the most important newspapers of France for the purpose of conducting propaganda there.

Senator NELSON. His mission was to get the funds here to buy a newspaper over in France?

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes, sir.

Senator STERLING. Were others at that luncheon than Hearst and Bolo Pasha?

Mr. BIELASKI. I do not know just who were at that luncheon, Senator. I do not know that our files show.

The investigation in the Bolo Pasha matter was made by Deputy Attorney General Becker, and while he furnished us copies of all his reports and that sort of thing, he knows about the details more than we do; but we can give them to you from our records.

I did not pay any particular attention to that, because it had no particular reference to activities in this country, except the getting of the money. It was for use in France.

Senator NELSON. Yes; but we want to know who were active in helping him in getting that money.

Mr. BIELASKI. Pavenstadt was the only man, I think, in this country that we know could be said to have known what he was doing.

Of course he got the money through banks. The money passed through the Morgan concern; but they did not know anything about the purpose of it at all. It was a very carefully concealed affair, which only Bernstorff and Bolo Pasha and Pavenstadt, possibly, knew about. Whether Mr. Hearst knew about it or not we do not know. I think Mr. Hearst has denied that he had any idea what it was for.

Senator STERLING. But Bolo Pasha was brought over here by representative of Hearst?

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes; they landed together—Charles F. Bertelli.

Maj. HUMES. His ostensible purpose in being in this country was to secure print paper, was it not?

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes; something of that sort.

Senator KING. It is probably not quite accurate to say that he was brought here by Hearst's representative?

Mr. BIELASKI. No; they came together.

Senator KING. They came on the same boat, as did others?

Capt. LESTER. He was introduced to Hearst by Mr. Bertelli: but Bertelli was in Paris in charge of the International News Service and brought Bolo Pasha over here. We have a complete summary of the whole Pasha connection, which I have from the Military Intelligence files here, and we can put it in at some future time.

Mr. BIELASKI. The only interesting new thing I know about Bolo Pasha that has not been published is that in the book kept by Dr. Albert, under date of September 26, 1914, appeared an entry: "Prepared telegram to Bolo."

Which was, you see, some time back of his activities over in this country, and would indicate a much earlier connection with the German interests in this country and Bolo than we have ever otherwise developed.

Senator KING. There is nothing to indicate that the money which Bolo Pasha obtained was contributed by Americans?

Mr. BIELASKI. Oh, no.

Senator KING. It was German money?

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes; arranged for by wireless messages, which the State Department has made public. The concerns over here handling the money had no idea that they were handling German money.

Senator KING. The banks here simply had the transaction as they would any other transaction—not knowing the purposes for which the money was to be obtained, or, indeed, the original source from which the money came?

Mr. BIELASKI. No. Part of the money even went through one of the Canadian banks; and of course they had no idea what it was for.

Senator NELSON. Is that all the information you can give us about Bolo Pasha's operations in this country?

Mr. BIELASKI. I say we have a complete file, Senator, and we could give you a great deal more about it; but there was nothing to his operations in this country except his getting the money and getting away.

Senator OVERMAN. It is half past 1 now, and we will take a recess until 2.30 o'clock.

(Whereupon, at 1.30 o'clock p. m., a recess was taken until 2.30 p. m.)

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The subcommittee reconvened, pursuant to the taking of the recess at 2.30 o'clock p. m.

TESTIMONY OF MR. A. BRUCE BIELASKI—Resumed.

Mr. BIELASKI. I made reference a day or two ago to a Dr. Karl A. Bertling who was sent here right at the outbreak of the European war, by the German Government, and used particularly in propaganda work in South America, organized a cable service, and so on. I simply wanted to put in the record copies of a couple of his receipts to the German Embassy, at $150, a month.

The receipts referred to are here printed in the record as follows:

BIELASKI EXHIBIT No. 132.

$150.00. Einhundert Fünfzig Dollar — Cent habe ich für meinen Unterhalt in den Vereinigten Staaten während des Monats September 15, von der Kasse der Kaiserlichen Botschaft in Cedarhurst bezahlt erhalten.

New York, den 2. September 1915.

Dr. KARL O. BERTLING.

DUPLIKAT.

Von der Kaiserlich Deutschen Botschaft in Washington. $1,080.00 (Eintausend sechshundert-achtzig Dollar — Cent) für meinen Unterhalt in den Vereinigten Staaten von meiner Ankunft dasselbst (Sept. 1914) bis einschliessend August 1915. empfangen zu haben, bescheinigt hiermit.

New York, Washington, D. C., den 1. August, 1915.

Dr. KARL O. BERTLING.

Senator OVERMAN. Go ahead, Mr. Bielaski.

Mr. BIELASKI. Bertling was actively in touch with Dernburg and the embassy and Von Papen and the rest of these fellows in their propaganda work over here. He was connected also with the German University League, about which we talked some yesterday. He was not a particularly important character, except that he was a paid propagandist, paid by the Germany Embassy.

Senator OVERMAN. Have you got anything in connection with the activities down in Mexico, arousing sentiment against this country and in favor of the Germans.

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes; I think I did tell you yesterday about the purchase of the paper La Reforma. We have the proof showing the money paid and the contract. They took the paper over and the paper became, as they said, German, heart and soul, or something of the kind, and was a German organ.

Senator OVERMAN. That was in the City of Mexico?

Mr. BIELASKI. The paper La Reforma was at Tampico. They maintained in Mexico a service with offices.

Senator NELSON. Have you anything else with reference to the propaganda in Mexico, except the purchase of that paper?

Mr. BIELASKI. Nothing except the purchase of that newspaper, and the circulation from their central office in Mexico City each day of this pro-German and anti-American propaganda. It was directed, of course, by the German ambassador down there, Von Eckhardt.

Also we had some information as to the sending of films to be used down in Mexico as a pro-German propaganda.

Senator NELSON. Nothing about the connection with that Mexican that our Government arrested at the border as he was returning to Mexico?

Mr. BIELASKI. Huerta?

Senator NELSON. Yes; Huerta.

Mr. BIELASKI. I do not consider that propaganda exactly. There is in our files a suggestion, but we have no proof that Rintelen, when he was here, proposed to finance Huerta.

Senator NELSON. Yes.

Mr. BIELASKI. Placing him in control in Mexico; but there was no definite proof about that. One witness, I think, related what Rintelen told him, but so far as proving that Huerta was financed by Rintelen or other German agents is concerned we can not prove it.

Senator NELSON. Is there anything to indicate that they were financed by interests in this country?

Mr. BIELASKI. No; I do not think so. Not in the Huerta case.

Capt. LESTER. That is one of the activities of Frederico Stallforth.

Mr. BIELASKI. Frederico Stallforth's activities were quite numerous. He was a banker of German origin, who was in the banking business in Mexico, who came to this country shortly after the start of the European war on account of conditions in Mexico. He was an intimate associate of Rintelen, and knew about all of Rintelen's activities.

Senator NELSON. Anything in connection with Villa?

Mr. BIELASKI. No; nothing.

Senator STERLING. Have you any specimens of the literature sent out by the German propagandists in Mexico?

Mr. BIELASKI. I think we have in our files quite a bit, and I am sure that the State Department has an immense amount.

The work down there, of course, in Mexico City, was very largely under the direction of the State Department and the military attaché at Mexico City, and they are more fully informed as to affairs inside of Mexico than we are.

Maj. HUMES. Mr. Bielaski, this morning you were discussing labor's national peace council. What were the activities of Hannis Taylor in connection with that?

Mr. BIELASKI. Hannis Taylor was employed by Martin.

Senator NELSON. By this Martin, who was associated with the "Wolf of Wall Street"?

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes, sir. He was employed, I think, to write opinions to the general effect that moneys in the Federal reserve banks could not be lawfully used in the purchase of bonds of the allied Governments, and that was circulated very largely by these fellows. He did some other work for Martin.

Here is a copy of a telegram addressed to Martin at the Knickerbocker Hotel, dated October 11, 1915. It reads as follows:

BIELASKI EXHIBIT No. 133.

WASHINGTON, D. C., October 11, 11.22 a.

H. B. MARTIN

Knickerbocker Hotel.

Have you received my letter when will you be here

HANNIS TAYLOR

11.58 a

Here is a photographic copy of a letter addressed to Martin by Taylor in which he says as follows:

BIELASKI EXHIBIT No. 134.

[Hannis Taylor, counselor at law, Maryland Building.]

WASHINGTON, D. C., Oct. 20, 1915.

DEAR MR. MARTIN: I had hoped to receive by this time your ck. for at least $250. As you yourself contracted the obligation and made a very explicit promise, I should think that you would feel in honor bound to pay at least 1/2 of your obligation. Let me know in answer to this whether you propose to pay or not.

Yours very truly,

H. TAYLOR.

Mr. H. B. Martin,
N. Y. City.

I think that Mr. O'Brian told me that in his cross-examination of Taylor he admitted receiving about $750.

Senator NELSON. From Martin?

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes.

Mr. O'BRIAN. I am not quite sure about that amount. It happened that I tried that case. It was either $500 or $750 from Martin and Fowler.

Senator NELSON. In what connection?

Mr. O'BRIAN. Taylor was employed by these men to write a couple of legal opinions, so-called; one of the character just described by Mr. Bielaski. The other I can not just recall. Then these opinions of his were printed in a broad sheet that they got out and distributed at labor picnics and at various labor union meetings in the West, tending to show that the attitude of the administration on certain questions was erroneous, and that the attitude on the British blockade was illegal and unjustified.

Mr. BIELASKI. It seems to me that one of those had to do with the legality of carrying munitions of war on passenger ships.

Mr. O'BRIAN. Yes; I think so. We have all those opinions in our files. We did not expect that question to be raised, and did not bring them with us.

Maj. HUMES. Mr. Taylor also addressed one of the meetings when Labor's Peace Council was organized, July 31, did he not?

Senator OVERMAN. At the St. James Hotel?

Mr. O'BRIAN. No; the real convention of Labor's National Peace Council was held at the New Willard Hotel, July 31, 1915, at which these so-called labor delegates—a considerable number of delegates from the grange were present. The grange people withdrew early. They became suspicious of the tone of the meeting. But at that meeting Mr. Hannis Taylor, I think, made quite an address, at one of the first meetings.

Senator NELSON. Was there not a propaganda carried on to this effect, that it was a violation of neutrality for our people to loan money to the allied governments?

Mr. O'BRIAN. Yes.

Senator NELSON. A propaganda of that character was carried on?

Mr. O'BRIAN. Yes.

Senator NELSON. And the Federal Reserve Board once forbade it?

Mr. O'BRIAN. Yes; there was a propaganda of that kind carried on. Ex-Congressman Fowler was of that number.

Senator NELSON. What State is he from?

Mr. O'BRIAN. I think he is from southern Illinois. And the literature was circulated particularly in the Middle West, in the agrarian States; very widely circulated.

Senator NELSON. I recall that the Federal Reserve Board at one time issued a sort of a recommendation against investing in the various bonds—bonds of the allies—don't you?

Mr. O'BRIAN. I think I have a recollection of that sort.

Senator NELSON. Yes; as a matter of fact, that was the case.

Senator OVERMAN. Mr. O'Brien, who presided over that meeting when Taylor made that speech?

Mr. O'BRIAN. Was it Martin?

Mr. BIELASKI. No; Martin kept in the background all the time. Was it not the vice president?

Mr. O'BRIAN. Buchanan had resigned a couple of days before.

Senator OVERMAN. Was Lamar down there?

Mr. BIELASKI. Lamar was downstairs. He never appeared in any of these meetings. [After referring to memoranda:] Fowler presided on Saturday afternoon. Saturday evening Mr. Oliver Wilson presided. That was before the people from the grange smelled a rat. They withdrew in a body and would have nothing to do with it; and Fowler spoke that night on the embargo on the export of munitions. Hannis Taylor addressed the meeting on the theme that the export of munitions was a violation of international law. He advocated a request to President Wilson to use the influence of the United States for peace.

There was a memorial introduced, and that is what broke up the harmony of the meeting, which was distinctly critical of the attitude of the President. The farmers refused to stand for any such thing. They became suspicious and withdrew from the meeting.

The meeting continued on Sunday morning, but gradually petered out. That was on Sunday morning, and on Sunday afternoon the famous strike resolution appears to have been adopted, which was greatly in controversy on the trial. It was a resolution, in substance, that recommendations be made to unions to take care of men who might strike in behalf of preventing—with the purpose of preventing—the shipment of arms and ammunition.

Senator STERLING. How largely was this meeting attended?

Mr. O'BRIAN. There were about 200 delegates. Their expenses were all paid, as I recall it, or practically all paid, out of German money that came through Dr. Albert or Mr. Martin; and Martin was the paymaster.

The breakdown of that whole conspiracy, which was a very well organized conspiracy, was due to the fact, chiefly, of the integrity of the average wage earner. They became suspicious, after the first 30 days or so, because of the fact that money for expenses could not be had; and the movement ultimately failed, partly because of the distinct opposition of Gompers, who was outspoken in his opposition to it, but chiefly, I think, due to the intrinsic integrity of the average fellow in these various unions, who would have nothing to do with it and who became suspicious and thought something was wrong.

Senator STERLING. Was the attendance of the members of the grange financed also by German money?

Mr. O'BRIAN. I am not sure. I would not like to answer that without ascertaining the facts. I think the expenses were paid, but I would like to look at the record before answering definitely. It is two years since that happened.

Capt. LESTER. We know they had their expenses paid from the Middle West and Southwest on here and while they were here and the expense of returning there.

Mr. O'BRIAN. The excuse that was given whenever questions were asked about the source from which the money came always was that a group of pacifist philanthropists were honestly interested in preserving peace and were providing this money. This was the stock answer that was always made. But eventually that excuse failed to satisfy the average workingman, who backed out of it. It was a very well organized movement. They sent many lecturers through the Middle West, and they addressed the central labor councils in most of the large cities of the North, always in the interest of peace. That was the main theme. It was a very carefully disguised movement. It is rather surprising that it did not succeed better than it did.

Senator STERLING. Taking the position that the shipment of arms and munitions was a breach of neutrality?

Mr. O'BRIAN. Yes; and making, over and beyond that, what they called a Christian appeal to the individual workman not to take part in the production of arms and ammunition which would lead to the destruction of human life abroad in a quarrel in which we had no interest.

Maj. HUMES. Mr. Bielaski, Hannis Taylor also prepared an opinion to the effect that the draft act was unconstitutional, did he not?

Mr. O'BRIAN. Later on.

Mr. BIELASKI. That was long after we were at war. He conducted a case, I think, which went up to the Supreme Court, and he submitted briefs in that case involving the constitutionality of the draft act, in an effort to have the draft act declared void.

Maj. HUMES. Was he compensated for that service, and if so, by whom, if you know?

Mr. BIELASKI. I do not know how he was compensated. I know that the Supreme Court administered quite a rebuke to him, in its opinion.

Mr. O'BRIAN. Because of the tone of his brief?

Mr. BIELASKI. Because of the tone of his brief.

I have here information with respect to a number of small payments of two or three hundred dollars to little foreign-language newspapers, or intimations of it, that I do not know are worth inquiring into.

Senator NELSON. Have you a list of the newspapers?

Mr. BIELASKI. I can list them. I can get them up for you.

Senator NELSON. Will you prepare a list and put it in the record?

Mr. BIELASKI. Just very little amounts, and very little papers, which were given little subsidies.

Senator NELSON. Yes. I think that should be put in the record. It is a good plan to know who bit.

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes; I will put in a memorandum.

(The memorandum referred to, furnished by Mr. Bielaski, is here printed in the record as follows:)

(Photographic copies of letters in the possession of the department indicate the following as to certain foreign-language newspapers:)

BIELASKI EXHIBIT No. 135.

Desteaptate Romane—Roumanian Paper—New York City.

On September 16, 1915, E. Zwiedinek, of the Austro-Hungarian Embassy, wrote the Consulate General in New York City inclosing check for $400 to be paid this paper, and requested that a receipt be sent for the $200 which had been previously paid this paper.

Illustrovani List—New York City.

On January 10, 1916, E. Zwiedinek, of the Austro-Hungarian Embassy, wrote the Consulate General, New York City, and instructed him to pay $100 per month in February and March 1916, to this paper. Instructions were also given that $100 per month be paid this paper up to July 1916, if the subsidy was needed.

Krajan—Slavish Weekly, 319 East 71st Street, New York City.

The Austro-Hungarian Embassy on September 3, 1915, sent the Consulate General at New York City $250 to be paid this paper.

Telegram Codzienny—Polish Paper, New York City.

On November 5, 1915, the Vice Consul, New York City, wrote the Austro-Hungarian Embassy that the subsidy of $700 granted to the above paper had been paid in full.

Mr. BIELASKI. The general attitude of Mr. William Randolph Hearst's papers on the European war is a matter, I think, of public knowledge.

He was the most important newspaper man whose papers took a friendly attitude toward Germany from the outbreak of the war.

If this inquiry were limited to the question of paid German propaganda, I do not think it could properly include Mr. Hearst, so far as I know. We have no evidence, whatever, that Mr. Hearst in any way received any funds or any profit from the attitude of his papers, from the German Government, or anyone acting for it.

Senator NELSON. But he was very active in his papers in behalf of the German Government all the time, was he not?

Mr. BIELASKI. He was, from the beginning of the war, I think, very active.

Senator NELSON. Of all the leading English newspapers, he was the most pronounced in his activity in that direction, was he not?

Mr. BIELASKI. He was.

Senator OVERMAN. How about after we declared war?

Mr. BIELASKI. After the war was declared, his attitude continued to be very questionable. Many of the publications which he printed, or which were printed in his papers after we went into war, if printed later on, after the espionage act, especially as it was amended and became a law, would have subjected him to prosecution.

I have already read some of the communications between von Bernstorff and the Foreign Office which make reference to Mr. Hearst, the most pointed being the one in which he stated, with respect to the Washington Post, "that it will be lost to the cause unless, as is very desirable, it can be placed in the hands of Mr. Hearst."

Senator NELSON. Yes.

Senator STERLING. Who makes that statement? Von Bernstorff?

Mr. BIELASKI. There is von Bernstorff's communication to the German Foreign Office.

Senator NELSON. In other words, the plan was to get the Washington Post and put it in the editorial charge of Hearst, was it not?

Mr. BIELASKI. In the control of Hearst, so that he would control its policy in some way.

Senator NELSON. Yes. That was Bernstorff's scheme?

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes; that was the plan he suggested as desirable.

This is an extract, I believe, from one of Mr. Fuehr's reports to Germany [reading]:

BIELASKI EXHIBIT No. 136.

On the other hand, the attitude, friendly from the beginning, of the ten papers belonging to the Hearst syndicate, which reach more than three million readers daily in all parts of the country, has recently become still more markedly friendly as a result of the boycott imposed by England upon the International News Service and the exclusion of all Hearst publications from circulation in Canada. Mr. Hearst has replied to the inconceivably short-sighted action of the British authorities against his news service in a series of sharp full-page editorials directed against the British censorship, which editorials must have considerably shaken the already weakened confidence of the American press in the news emanating from England. In the articles in question, not only was the present English system of suppressing and distorting the truth subjected to annihilating criticism, but it was also shown that America has been for years systematically misled by London in its judgment of foreign people; as for instance, of the "degenerate Frenchmen."

Moreover, it was repeatedly demonstrated in detail by the Hearst papers that the situation of the Central Powers in the autumn of 1916 was an absolutely brilliant one, while that of England and her allies was entirely hopeless. It must be emphasized that the Hearst papers are nevertheless not to be classified as blind champions of the German cause, since they print many things which could scarcely be to our taste; for example, occasional articles about the "German danger," an idea which has received fresh impetus as a result of the exploits of the "U-Deutschland" and particularly of the "U 53" and which is being used as an argument for the expansion of the Army and Navy. The fact is that the papers referred to stand upon the ground of a sound American policy, but with their sharply anti-English tendency are much more effective in support of our cause than newspapers with pronounced pro-German orientation could possibly be. Furthermore, the greatest value of the Germanophile attitude of the organs of the Hearst syndicate is to be found in the fact that their influence extends not to a single city or to a small part of the land, but over the whole Union. An English critic, S. K. Ratcliffe, recently wrote in the "Manchester Guardian" concerning American newspapers; "Northern papers are of no account in the South; the most influential New York journals do not exist for the people of the Pacific Coast, and carry very little weight in the Middle States. Hence summaries of opinion . . ." confined to a small number of papers published East of the Mississippi are imperfectly representative of the republic."

It is this correctly discerned evil of the geographical limitation imposed upon the influence of the foremost American papers which is practically overcome in the case of the Hearst organization. For the editorials which appear today in the "New York American" are printed tomorrow in the affiliated papers of Boston, Chicago and Atlanta, and on the following day in San Francisco.

Senator NELSON. How do you account for the friendliness of the Hearst papers and of Hearst to the German cause?

Mr. BIELASKI. How do I account for it?

Senator NELSON. Yes.

Mr. BIELASKI. I think Hearst has always been violently anti-British.

Senator NELSON. Yes.

Mr. BIELASKI. He was also, I think, admittedly personally friendly with Ambassador Bernstorff, was acquainted with Albert, and that may have had something to do with it.

Senator NELSON. Was not a part of his agitation, too, the danger from Japan? Was he not always advocating that propaganda?

Mr. BIELASKI. He has always been violently anti-Japanese also.

Senator NELSON. Yes; and always preaching the danger that the country was subject to from Japan?

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes, sir.

Capt. LESTER. And Mexico also, Mr. Bielaski; was not that the fact? His publications were directed to the attempt to get intervention in Mexico, about the time we entered the war, on the side of the allies?

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes; I think he went so far, in 1917, as to urge that we keep our Army here for use on the Mexican border instead of sending it abroad. You will recall that his papers persistently opposed the sending of any troops to France. He wanted us to fight the German Government over here, but not in the allied countries.

Senator NELSON. Yes; to get the Germans over in Mexico, and then whip them.

Mr. BIELASKI. Mr. Fuehr, in a report about the end of May, 1916, said:

Only the following papers can be described as really neutral: The New York Evening Mail, The Milwaukee Free Press, The Washington Post, The Chicago Tribune, and the Hearst papers: New York American, New York Journal, Chicago Examiner, Evening American, Boston American, Atlanta Georgian, San Francisco Examiner and Call, Los Angeles Examiner, and the Evening Herald.

Of course the New York Evening Mail, I suppose, was owned by Germany. The Milwaukee Free Press is a German-American paper that has been in constant difficulty with the Government ever since the war started. The Washington Post for a time was pro-German, until it changed its policies.

Senator NELSON. It was very bad up to the time that McLean died.

Senator OVERMAN. You say the Chicago Tribune was included?

Mr. BIELASKI. The Chicago Tribune is mentioned.

Senator NELSON. I used to read the Post mornings, and sit down and swear over it. But after McLean died, he evidently went to a good place, because the paper changed its tone. For a couple of years we only had one fair paper here in reference to this German propaganda, and that was the Star.

Senator STERLING. Who were some of the editorial writers for Mr. Hearst during this time?

Mr. BIELASKI. I think Mr. Brisbane was one of his editorial writers. I really do not know enough about the Hearst organization inside to say, Senator. Mr. Merrill—I do not know whether he was an editorial writer or not. He was one of the men who made the arrangements with Hale about his trip abroad.

Senator STERLING. Do you know for what papers Brisbane wrote?

Mr. BIELASKI. I assume for the entire Hearst syndicate.

Senator NELSON. Did you say he was one of the men—Mr. Brisbane—that made arrangements for Hale to go abroad?

Mr. BIELASKI. No, sir; a man named Merrill, I think it was, if I am not mistaken.

Senator NELSON. For Merrill to go abroad?

Mr. BIELASKI. No, Senator; Merrill made the arrangements on behalf of Hearst with Hale.

Senator NELSON. And Merrill was the man who accompanied Bolo back here?

Mr. BIELASKI. No, sir; they are entirely different. Bertelli was the name of that man.

Senator OVERMAN. Was the Chicago Tribune engaged in any propaganda?

Mr. BIELASKI. I think the attitude ascribed to the Chicago Tribune resulted from the correspondent that they had abroad. I think his name was Bennett, if I am not mistaken, who only comparatively recently returned to this country, with his wife. He, admittedly, had an extremely pro-German attitude. I think the character of his dispatches back, and their reproduction in the Tribune, is what lead Mr. Fuehr to describe the Tribune as neutral.

Mr. Fuehr, in another report, says: "Only a few journals, among those the newspapers belonging to the Hearst syndicate, believe in 'A stalemate or a victory of the Teutonic allies.'"

Again: "The interview granted by your Excellency to the American journalist Hale was printed in a most impressive manner by the 11 Hearst papers, and also by all the other subscribers of the International News Service. It occupied the entire front page on the New York American on Thanksgiving day, and was adorned with your Excellency's portrait. Three days later this paper repeated the publication, stating that it had been repeatedly requested to do so."

Again: "The papers which are friendly to Germany, especially the Hearst papers, declare themselves emphatically in favor of a general embargo upon foodstuffs, hinting more or less openly that such a measure would compel England to make peace."

Our records show that Mr. Hearst went to the office of Dr. Albert, 45 Broadway, on June 24, 1915. What the purpose of the call was is not known.

One of the men convicted in the Sanders-Wunnenberg case told us, as I said the other day, that in the Hearst news reports from Hale back to the country were to be enclosed or concealed cipher messages for the German Government. But he indicated that that was not actually accomplished, because on our entrance into the war, that put an end to that plan.

This same man stated that William Randolph Hearst had Bernstorff at his house several times. But I understand Mr. Hearst admits that he and Bernstorff were friendly and that they were together a good many times. He also stated that Mr. Hearst was looked upon in Germany as the biggest man in America, and that the German Government had asked Hearst to send Hale to Germany.

Mr. Albert wrote to Mr. Hearst, under date of November 18, 1915, stating this:

Taking advantage of, I am sorry to say, only slight acquaintance, I here beg to send you copies of letters I have exchanged with the Embassy.

It was just regretting that Hearst would not or could not send a moving-picture man to Germany under the circumstances.

Hearst wrote Bernstorff, also, to send a moving-picture man to Berlin. This letter reads as follows:

BIELASKI EXHIBIT No. 137.

NEW YORK AMERICAN,
December 13, 1915.

MY DEAR COUNT VON BERNSTORFF: I am very glad to hear that the moving picture matter can be arranged, so that we can expect German pictures. Of course, you know that I am anxious to do this for every reason. I have a moving picture man in Holland, whom I can send promptly to Berlin, or if desirable, on account of letters of introduction, passport, etc., I can send one of our best men immediately from here.

Many thanks for your interest in this matter.

Mrs. Hearst is getting along very well indeed, and sends her kindest remembrances.

Very sincerely,

GEZ. W. R. HEARST.

Count J. VON BERNSTORFF, German Embassy, Washington, D. C.

Senator STERLING. That is from Hearst to Bernstorff?

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes.

Mr. Bernstorff's reply is as follows:

BIELASKI EXHIBIT No. 138.

[German Embassy, J. No. A8171.]

WASHINGTON, D. C., December 14, 1915

MY DEAR HEARST: With many thanks for your favor of the 13th inst. I beg to say that I can arrange the matter any way you like. If you wish me to do so, I can send a wireless message to my Government asking them to instruct our Minister at the Hague to give all the facilities possible to your moving picture man so that he can reach Germany. As I said, however, I can also arrange the matter the other way.

Very sincerely yours,

GEZ. J. BERNSTORFF.

WM. R. HEARST, Esq., Riverside Drive & 86th Street, New York City.

There was a considerable desire on the part of the men in the newspaper business to obtain the exclusive rights of wireless service from Germany, and there are some telegrams here which indicate that Mr. Hearst was very anxious to obtain the service. That is the only thing that we have in our files which in any way indicates something Mr. Hearst might expect to have received in the way of a favor from Germany.

This telegram from Berlin to Dr. Fuehr says:

BIELASKI EXHIBIT No. 139.

Dr. Wilhelm been several days urging arrangement like that proposed your telegram and working understanding already reached. Inform Hearst and suggest giving Wilhelm full authority.

It is our guess that "Dr. Wilhelm" was William Bayard Hale: but that is a guess.

October 26, 1916, the following was sent to William Bayard Hale Berlin:

BIELASKI EXHIBIT No. 140.

Mr. Hearst dictated following reply quote internews and international feature service supply twelve hundred and eighty important newspapers additions Hearst papers their clients in every important town city United States internews also covers Canada South America collect supplies better fairer report than any other news association this proved by regular expansion internews and rapid increase its clients while other news associations standing still backwarding internews can most certainly supply Germany with best most detailed news service available America or with condensed or complete news service as required associated with internews and international feature service are newspaper feature king feature Pacific news and international film service and Hearst pictorial a moving picture service appearing practically every important moving theatre in United States also associated with them are international library a book publishing concern and international magazine company publishing Cosmopolitan Hearst Good Housekeeping magazine Harpers Bazar numerous other periodicals circulation these magazines two millions monthly circulation Hearst newspapers clients internews international film and international feature service undoubtedly at least three quarters people of this country directly reached.

FRED WILSON.

I take it that was a telegram sent to present strongly the advantages that making an arrangement with his service would have.

Senator NELSON. Mr. Hearst was the main spoke in this service, was he not?

Mr. BIELASKI. Oh, yes; Mr. Hearst, I assume——

Senator NELSON. What do you call that special service?

Mr. BIELASKI. The International News Service, I think it is called.

Senator NELSON. He was the main spoke in it, was he not?

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes; I think so.

Maj. HUMES. Do you remember an incident in connection with, a man by the name of Lincoln, an Englishman, who was a fugitive from justice in this country and had connection with those papers?

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes; Lincoln was a man wanted in England who had been arrested and held for extradition. He was of German origin, and had been, I think, in the British Parliament, in some way, and got into difficulties over there in violating some laws with respect to property. He escaped from jail and came over here, and while he was out he continuously wrote the New York American, I think it was—Mr. Hearst's paper—letters about his whereabouts, and so on. It was with some difficulty that he was recaptured.

Maj. HUMES. What was the attitude of the papers toward the Department of Justice in assisting in the apprehension of this man?

Mr. BIELASKI. They did not assist.

Maj. HUMES. Were his articles printed in the papers during this period while he was a fugitive?

Mr. BIELASKI. His letters were printed in the papers. The general atmosphere of the thing was that the papers was rather belittling the efforts of the Department of Justice to capture this man. Nevertheless, he was captured.

Maj. HUMES. What year was that? Do you remember? 1916?

Mr. BIELASKI. 1916, I think. It was during the war time.

Maj. HUMES. Mr. Bielaski, have you the "Palm Beach" telegrams between Hearst and his papers?

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes; we have a photographic set of them which has been furnished to us by the Naval Intelligence Service some time ago. They called them to our attention and they furnished us a set.

Maj. HUMES. Will you submit those to the committee?

Mr. BIELASKI. As a lump?

Maj. HUMES. I suppose the committee wants them read in the usual way.

Senator STERLING. May they not be read?

Maj. HUMES. Yes; I say I suppose the committee wants them read in the usual way. Read them please, Mr. Bielaski.

Mr. BIELASKI. These are arranged chronologically, I think.

This is to Phillip Francis, New York American, in which he said, February 21, 1917:

There should be a vigorous attack on the espionage bill. Note that Senator Chambliss says the measure is the most stringent and drastic ever proposed to curb a free people in time of peace or war. The Government would have absolute power, in war time, to suppress newspapers, and prevent debate in Congress. It might even be held a criminal offense for two citizens to discuss with each other questions of military policy.

Senator KING. I am not quite sure, Mr. Chairman, that I see any relevancy in this testimony.

I was in favor of the espionage bill, and aided the chairman of this committee in preparing some features of it. I can readily appreciate, however, that men might differ as to the wisdom of that bill, and honestly differ. Indeed, there were many of our patriotic people in the United States that felt that such legislation as that was improper and harmful. Now, if this merely is to show that certain newspapers—I do not know, having just come in, to which newspaper this refers, if any. It is merely an effort, now, to show that certain newspapers, or certain individuals, opposed the passage of the espionage bill, it seems to me that that is not relevant or material to the investigation being conducted.

Senator OVERMAN. I do not know what is in it.

Mr. O'BRIAN. On behalf of the Attorney General, Mr. Chairman, I would like to say that these telegrams relate to the internal policy of Mr. Hearst and his papers. They are not connected with any German agent in any way, but consist of instructions given to his editors.

I would suggest that the committee look at the file and see whether the committee desires that they, or any part of them, be read, under the suggestion just made by Senator King.

They are not a part of German propaganda, in the sense that they originated with German agents. Do I make myself clear on that? They relate to the internal conduct of Mr. Hearst's papers under his own direction, and I would suggest that the committee look them over and see whether they desire them read into the record.

Senator NELSON. I differ entirely with Senator King. It was very important to pass such legislation as that, and if any leading newspaper opposed it and attacked it unreasonably, I think that was unpatriotic and disloyal, under the circumstances.

Mr. O'BRIAN. I am not expressing any opinion, myself, Senator, on my own behalf or on behalf of the Attorney General. I am merely making the suggestion that the committee look these papers over and determine for themselves what they wish to put into the record.

Senator OVERMAN. The newspaper men suggested an amendment of the bill, which we accepted verbatim et literatim, and then they began, after our accepting it, a propaganda against the bill.

Senator KING. In reply to the statement made by Senator Nelson I think that his position is untenable. I think that this is a free country in time of war and when we are in time of peace, and that men may honestly differ, without being branded as being disloyal or unpatriotic, as to the internal policies of our Government and as to policies which the Government may pursue.

It is not unpatriotic, in my opinion, for a Senator, a private citizen, or a newspaper, to oppose the enactment of legislation which may be deemed by that person, Senator, or newspaper to be unwise and inopportune.

After the legislation has been enacted, then it would be highly unpatriotic to oppose its enforcement.

I know of many patriotic people—some of them Senators and Congressmen—who did not think that the occasion called for this espionage bill. I did, and heartily supported it, and voted for it. Yet I would feel that it was highly unfair for me to brand everybody who differed from me as unpatriotic.

Maj. HUMES. By way of explanation, I will say that I suggested to Mr. Bielaski the production of these, not because of that telegram, but I classed them together as the "Palm Beach" telegrams, accepting the common expression that seems to have been adopted. Some of these telegrams include matters between Hearst and Hale while he was in Germany, instructions as to how to carry news matter in the papers, and there is only one telegram that related to the espionage bill.

There are a great many subjects covered, and for Senator King's information I want to call his attention to the fact that there is only one of these telegrams that refers to the espionage act. I have a copy of them, Senator, if you want to look at them and see the various subject matters covered.

Senator KING. I suggest, with respect to these matters as to which there may be some honest difference of opinion as to their relevancy or materiality, that the committee have a chance to examine them and determine that question before they go into the record.

Senator OVERMAN. We will take that course. Proceed. Mr. Bielaski.

Mr. BIELASKI. I think, unless the committee wants some further details about the course of the Hearst papers after we went into the war, that is all I have to say about it.

Senator NELSON. Have you any statement about the attitude of the Hearst papers after our country went into the war?

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes, in general; that I have explained. The first thing, I think, that they did was to oppose the sending of our troops abroad. I take it Mr. Hearst based his opposition—at least his attitude would be that this opposition was for the good of the country; that he thought that troops ought to be kept here. In numerous parts of his paper he makes statements commendatory of Germany, and he favored peace in his paper.

Senator STERLING. In view of his attitude before we got into the war, would you not rather think that his opposition to sending troops abroad was because of his friendly feeling toward Germany and his hatred of England?

Mr. BIELASKI. That would be an expression of opinion only, Senator. The best way I can characterize his articles is that they were the sort of things which would have resulted in favoring of Germany had they been adopted, in the light of things as we see them now.

Senator STERLING. Just referring to the arrival of Bala Pasha in this country, do you recall the date of his arrival, now? Do you remember when he arrived?

Mr. BIELASKI. I have it here.

Capt. LESTER. It is right in that summary.

Mr. BIELASKI. I think I testified about the arrival of Albert as having been the latter part of August or the 1st of September. I have found, on examining our files further this morning, that he arrived on the 28th of August, I think, at a quarter past 10.

Senator STERLING. That was 1915?

Mr. BIELASKI. In May, 1914, was the first time Bolo was in New York.

The last time he came here was February 22, 1916, when he landed in New York City.

Senator STERLING. Is there any evidence of his acquaintance with Hearst prior to his second coming to this country?

Mr. BIELASKI. Not that I know of.

Senator STERLING. In your statement made a while ago, you spoke about his having been invited by Mr. Hearst to luncheon.

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes.

Senator STERLING. Do you know when that was, after his arrival?

Mr. BIELASKI. That, of course, is in the files, Senator. It apparently was some time in February; between the 22d and the 25th. I do not know the exact date; soon after his arrival.

Senator STERLING. Do you know where this luncheon was had?

Mr. BIELASKI. I imagine that is in our files also, but I do not know, personally, without a further examination of the files.

Senator STERLING. Do you know whether anyone else was at that luncheon or not?

Mr. BIELASKI. No; I do not, offhand; no, sir.

Senator STERLING. Can you ascertain from the files?

Mr. BIELASKI. Oh, yes. We have a complete report as to all the information that was developed, furnished to us by Deputy Attorney General Becker, who, on behalf of the French Government, made that investigation.

Capt. LESTER. Here is the whole history, starting in February, of Bolo Pasha.

Mr. BIELASKI. There is a summary here, Senator, with respect to this matter of Hearst and Bolo, but I would prefer to testify from the original records of Mr. Becker. There are some matters here that do not agree with my recollection.

Senator STERLING. And those records will be here?

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes; they can be produced.

Senator STERLING. Very well. We can forego that for the present, then.

Mr. BIELASKI. Some of this does not agree with my recollection at all.

Senator, if it is agreeable to you, we will furnish the entire file in the Bolo Pasha matter to Maj. Humes.

Senator STERLING. All right.

Mr. BIELASKI. Shall I proceed, Mr. Chairman?

Senator OVERMAN. Yes. The committee will examine these papers which have been referred to as the "Palm Beach telegrams" and see what we will do with them.

Senator KING. Mr. Chairman, so that I may understand the attitude of the committee; I have received a number of communications inclosing clippings from various newspapers throughout the United States, some of the papers published in foreign languages, the clippings indicating a friendly bias in favor of Germany, and the writers wanted me to present some of those clippings to the committee.

I have not felt that that was the proper thing to do unless it could be shown that those newspapers were operating for and in behalf of Germany or unless some connection could be traced between them and Germany.

Senator OVERMAN. I think the question is whether they were trying to manufacture sentiment in favor of Germany and against the allies. If so, they should go in the record.

Senator KING. I wanted to know the attitude of the committee; whether or not the mere fact that newspapers published something in favor of Germany, without connecting it all, directly or indirectly, showing that they have been employed by or are in the interests of Germany, will make it proper that we should investigate them and put those publications into the record.

Senator OVERMAN. It is hard to tell, because it has been shown here that there have been a good many foreign papers that were financed in small sums by the German Embassy; and if those papers published these items for money, to create sentiment in favor of Germany, it seems to me they ought to be put into the record.

Senator KING. For instance, I have before me a document which was handed me, showing that a very prominent paper in the United States made statements that clearly indicate a hatred for England and high regard for Germany. I did not feel like that ought to go into the record. I could not say that that paper, because of those utterances, was receiving contributions from Germany or was interested in a material way in German propaganda.

I was not present at a meeting in executive session of the committee when the scope of this investigation was determined upon, and it seemed to me that, unless there can be traced some connection between newspapers and Germany, under the resolution there was some question as to whether their utterances, their editorials, and so on, were relevant testimony.

Senator NELSON. I do not know whether you were in here the day the evidence was offered showing about the advertising propaganda of Hammerling.

Senator KING. Yes, I was here; that is, during part of it.

Senator NELSON. Did you notice his circular that he issued to the newspapers?

Senator KING. No; I did not.

Senator NELSON. And, then, the replies of the newspapers? There was a bunch there that Capt. Lester had, and I picked out some relating to the papers of the Northwest. We did not put them all in. They were not all put in. They were written requests to Hammerling in favor of that propaganda, and in favor of the embargo on the shipment of arms abroad in 1915.

Senator KING. I think that would be material and relevant.

Senator NELSON. All of those letters produced by Capt. Lester were there on the table. They were not introduced. I picked out about half a dozen relating to papers out in my country, and got copies of them.

Senator OVERMAN. We have shown here that Dr. Albert and Dr. Fuehr, German agents, in the employ of the German Government, adopted a scheme to create a public sentiment in this country against war, against this country going into the war, and against England in this country; and a great many things in order to create a public sentiment in the interest of the German cause. How far that has gone, I do not know. We have shown, in many instances, that they have spent money—large sums of money; we have shown that they spent $35,000,000 or $50,000,000 on German propaganda. It has been shown that this sentiment was attempted to be created, either by means of money or otherwise, in this country in favor of Germany, and against our allies. I can not say whether the newspapers to which you have referred were affected, or not. Whether we shall go into that or not is a question for the committee.

Senator KING. I think there could be no question but what the committee, with great propriety, could show that any newspaper or any individual received a portion of that $35,000,000 or $50,000,000. or any money from Germany; but because some newspaper or some individual was opposed to war, without any connection being shown between that individual or that newspaper and Germany—it seems to me that there would be a good deal of doubt in respect to that matter.

Senator OVERMAN. We will reserve that question.

Senator KING. I know of numbers of religious newspapers that opposed the war, and it would be absurd to say that they were the recipients of any contributions or of any payments from Germany.

Now, to read into the record these editorials opposing war, it seems to me would be a work of supererogation, and would not be a proper procedure. I do not think it is a fair conclusion or deduction to say that every man who opposed war was influenced by Germany or German money.

Senator OVERMAN. I do not, either.

Senator KING. Lots of good people are opposed to war and hate Germany, and abhor military and autocratic systems. It is simply a question of relevancy and materiality.

Senator OVERMAN. I think we have kept out those, except those connected in some way, by conversation, or letter, or telegram, with the embassy or the agents representing Germany. I do not think we have gone into the matter as broadly as you suppose we have.

Senator KING. I do not say the committee have gone far.

Senator OVERMAN. I think you are wise in desiring to keep out anything that is extraneous; for example, some person just giving his opinion, without being influenced by German money or German influence. Every man is free to express his opinion in this country. As you say, there are a great many good people in this country who were honest in being opposed to war.

Senator KING. We do not want to make this proceeding a mere sewer or conduit into which may be dumped all the accusations and charges and libelous statements, or suspicions, of various persons throughout the United States. We adopted the rule, when we started, that this was to be an impersonal examination, and I think we have tried to keep it down to that. Of course, naturally, in reading something, a name will creep in. You can not help it.

Senator KING. For instance, I notice the name of Prof. Hart was mentioned. I know of Prof. Hart and have read his writings and know his attitude, and no more loyal man, in my opinion, can be found in the United States; and yet his name is brought into this record as being disloyal.

Senator OVERMAN. No.

Senator STERLING. No.

Senator OVERMAN. His name was just mentioned.

Senator KING. Or pro-German.

Senator OVERMAN. No. He was not charged with anything. His name was found on a list with other names, in Dr. Albert's office, and that goes for what it is worth. There is no charge against him.

Senator STERLING. There is not yet a statement as to an utterance made by Prof. Hart, Senator.

Senator KING. But the fact is that his name was mentioned.

Senator STERLING. You would not limit the inquiry to cases where it would be shown that money had been received by the newspapers publishing the alleged German propaganda? That is not charged with reference to the Hearst papers, for example. It is not proven, I think, that the Hearst papers received money, and yet Germany praises Hearst as being the greatest American, and being the most outspoken of anyone in favor of the German cause. This is the reason for the testimony in regard to the Hearst papers.

Senator KING. I have no person and no newspaper in mind, at all. I am merely trying to determine just how far this investigation shall go, and then to determine, if we can, what evidence would be fairly and legitimately admissible, in view of the limitations which may fairly and rightfully be placed upon the resolution.

Senator OVERMAN. I suggest that Mr. Bielaski go on, and if Senator King, or any other Senator, desires that any matter be passed over for future consideration, we will take it up later.

Mr. BIELASKI. I did not understand, when directed by the Attorney General in response to your letter to appear here, that you contemplated any inquiry into the violations of law which were fathered by the German Government, which resulted in prosecutions; but Senator Nelson asked that some résumé of those cases be given. I think I can do it very briefly from a few notes, without having to look at our records, although I can not give you the details as fully as if I had had an opportunity to inquire into them.

Senator NELSON. That is all I wanted. I wanted a general outline of their actual deeds in this country.

Mr. BIELASKI. The first case which resulted in a prosecution under our criminal statutes was what was known as the so-called passport fraud cases.

Under the direction of Capt. von Papen and Wolff von Igel, of his office, a German-American named Hans von Wedell went into the business of supplying to German reservists passports of other countries in order that they might be able to pass through the British lines and so get back to Germany and fight.

So long as he confined his activities to furnishing papers of other countries, we had no particular concern about it. But when he began to secure, fraudulently, American passports for the use of German reservists, this country, of course, was interested, and an investigation was made, which resulted in finding that Hans von Wedell maintained a regular office to which men were sent by Von Papen and the various German consuls in this country to have their passage and papers arranged for them.

Von Wedell filed an application for a passport, and the man who bore it was captured by the British off Gibraltar. It therefore became necessary for him to disappear, and he was furnished with funds for his get-a-way by Capt. von Papen, and Carl Ruroede took his place, a German-American, I think a naturalized citizen.

The day that von Wedell left, I think, Ruroede, his son, and a certain German reservist were arrested for this offense.

We believe that von Wedell has been drowned at sea, and that Ruroede, having served his term, is now at large in New York City. The other members of the conspiracy were fined.

Senator NELSON. Did this precede the attempt to blow up the bridge at Vanceboro, at the international boundary, by Horn?

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes; that was in the fall of 1914. One of the strange coincidences was that, among the lists of names that were seized at the time of the arrest of Ruroede as having been sent to him from Capt. von Papen's office so that he might be getting papers ready for them—one of the first names on one of these lists was that of Werner Horn.

Werner Horn was a German who had been 10 years in the German Army, and had reached the rank of ober-lieutenant—I suppose about the rank of first lieutenant in our service.

He was on the inactive list and had gone down, I think, to Guatemala, where he had worked on a coffee plantation and had become a manager of that plantation. Two hours after he got a call to return he had resigned his position, which was a good one for a man of his type, and was on his way back to this country to join the fighting forces.

He made several attempts to get across, by way of arrangements, never actually making an attempt.

Finally he went back to Mexico for a while, from whence he suggested to Ambassador Bernstorff that they try to take part of British Honduras, I think it was, with a force organized in Mexico.

Then he came back to New York and by Von Papen was furnished with money, and one of the checks taken from Von Papen by the British show that he was furnished $700 at one time, and he carried dynamite from New York City on a passenger train to Boston, and then from Boston to Vanceboro, Me., where he made an attempt to blow up the international bridge there, which was only partially successful. I could tell you a great many details about it, but that was the substance of it.

Senator NELSON. He was finally convicted?

Mr. BIELASKI. He was finally convicted of having transported explosives on a passenger train in violation of section 235 of the penal code, and sentenced to 18 months in the Atlanta Penitentiary, which term he has served, and is now interned.

Senator NELSON. He is now interned?

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes.

Another passport fraud case was that in which Capt. Boy Ed, the naval attaché of Germany, Richard Steggler, a German, and Richard Madden and Vincent Cook were involved.

Steggler was to secure an American passport to be used as a cover for spy work in Europe. Capt. Boy Ed financed and directed Steggler's operations. Steggler, Madden, and Cook were convicted.

There were some other passport frauds, which were not prosecuted for the reason that the principals had gotten away, or were diplomatic and could not be touched.

The man Hoist von der Soltz, who went to England as a spy, was furnished an American passport through the instrumentality of Karl M. Luderitz, then the German consul at Baltimore. Luderitz has been indicted. I do not think that case has been tried as yet.

Senator NELSON. But the other man, who got the paper?

Mr. BIELASKI. The other man, who got the paper, went to England and was captured by the British. There he made a confession of his activities in this country, which were that he was sent by Capt. von Papen, von Igel and others with a lot of dynamite to blow up the Welland Canal. He was unsuccessful, I think, because the men he had with him and he himself did not want to take any chances over on British territory. They found the canal pretty well guarded, and they confined their activities very largely to wiring back to von Papen for money. So that he finally recalled them, without their having accomplished anything. They were indicted, and Tauscher was acquitted. He was the only man indicted, in all of the so-called neutrality cases, that ever was acquitted.

One of his associates, Fritzen, was sentenced to 18 months in the Atlanta Penitentiary.

Von der Goltz was not proceeded against, because he was used as a Government witness.

Senator STERLING. You say some of these offenders were diplomatic and could not be attacked; do you mean that they were attached to the embassy here?

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes. I think we could have convicted Von Papen and Boy Ed at least, and possibly others, if it had not been for their diplomatic immunity.

Von Papen has been indicted, now, I think, in two jurisdictions, so that if he should return here he might be tried.

I do not think Capt. Boy Ed was ever indicted, although he participated in the so-called Hamburg-American case, this passport case, and the furnishing of supplies, through San Francisco, to the German fleet there.

Albert Saunders and Charles Wunnenberg I have mentioned before as being engaged, among other activities, in sending spies to England, equipped with American passports, for the purpose of securing military information.

Sanders and Wunnenberg plead guilty to indictments brought against them; and George Vaux Bacon, one of the Americans sent over, was convicted, as was another one of the spies whose name I do not recall.

In this connection I would like to say that I testified about a man named Reginald Rutherford having been sent abroad as a spy. It just so happened that there is a man of that name in Washington here, employed by one of the banks. I did not appreciate the fact, but he says that some people have confused him with this spy who was sent to Holland, and I wanted the committee to understand that he is not the man at all. The Rutherford who was sent abroad was a New York newspaper man, and I think he is still abroad; at least he has, until a short time ago, refused all opportunities to come back.

Max Zelinski was convicted in New York City for fraudulently obtaining papers—a passport—for an Austrian named Alfred Bondy.

It is interesting to note, in passing, that while not in violation of any law here, the Germans counterfeited our American passports.

They took the original passports from Americans traveling in Germany, under some rule whereby the police would take a passport and retain it for 24 hours and return it thereafter, and a man would show up with a passport of that kind, under that name, elsewhere, even in England.

Those things were rather badly done, because the description of the man who carried the passport did not agree with the description on file in the Department of State as to the man to whom it was issued, and the counterfeits were not hard to trace.

Certain officials of the Hamburg-American Line, who under the direction of Capt. Boy Ed endeavored to provide German warships at sea with coal and other supplies, in violation of the statutes of the United States, have been tried and convicted and sentenced to the penitentiary. Those were the so-called Hamburg-American cases. Some of the names of those involved were Buenz, Koeter, Hofmeister, sentenced to 18 months, and a man named Poppinghaus, to a year and a day; they were all Hamburg-American Line officials, who made false manifests in order to get these supplies out, or attempt to get them out, to the German fleet.

The German consul at San Francisco, under the direction of Capt. von Papen, and also participated in by Capt. Tauscher and Capt. Boy-Ed—I should have said under the direction of Boy-Ed, participated in by von Papen and Tauscher—endeavored to send out to the German fleet and in fact did send out to the German fleet, supplies on a boat known as the Sacramento. The Sacramento cleared for Valparaiso, I think it was, but went direct to the German fleet, where she delivered her supplies and then proceeded to her port.

Out of the same place the German consul, his assistants, two of them, von Shaick and von Brinken, and numerous others, were engaged in a conspiracy, together with men in New York and Chicago to set on foot a revolution in India. They prepared a schooner, the Annie Larsen, and the steamer Maverick. The Annie Larsen carried the arms and ammunition and the Maverick certain Hindus and men who were to take part in the expedition. They never met for some reason. They missed their connecting point, which was off some island off the coast of Mexico, and the Annie Larsen returned to this country, where her arms and ammunition were seized and later sold by the Government.

The expedition came to naught; but growing out of it the German consul, Bopp, his assistant, von Shaick, a very prominent Hindu named Ram Chandra, a member of the so-called committee appointed to handle Indian affairs, with whom the German Government dealt indirectly, and concerning whose organization Zimmerman communicated with Bernstorff over here and kept these people informed as to just what was going on, were all convicted. I think there were 30 men finally tried, and 29 convicted to 1 acquitted. It was a very sensational trial, which ended by one of the Hindu defendants killing another and the marshal killing the man who killed the Hindu.

Then at San Francisco was also the plot in which Bopp and others were involved—Crowley, a man named Smith, and a woman who was Crowley's secretary—to interfere with the shipment of munitions to Russia and elsewhere. Their plans involved an attempt to destroy the Grand Trunk tunnel, I think it is—

Senator NELSON. The Canadian Pacific tunnel, I think.

Mr. O'BRIAN. Up in British Columbia.

Mr. BIELASKI. The Grand Trunk, at Port Huron, just across the border.

Also an alleged plan to destroy steam railroad facilities up in British Columbia. But they were also trying to prevent the shipment of horses, or interfere with it, and matters of that kind; and they were convicted, likewise, and are serving their terms.

Albert Kaltschmidt, of Detroit, was furnished funds by von Papen, and entered into a plan to destroy certain munition factories, and railroad bridges of the Canadian Railway Co., and to send into Canada spies to obtain information. The defendants were indicted, and five of them were convicted and one was acquitted. That was at Detroit.

Senator NELSON. That was a plan to destroy munition factories and bridges over in Canada.

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes. They were indicted under section 13 of the Penal Code, which prohibits the setting on foot in this country of military enterprises directed against a nation with which we are at peace.

Senator NELSON. Yes.

Mr. BIELASKI. In connection with this Hindu plot, of which I have told you, there was an indictment or two returned in Chicago against this man Jacobsen, who was one of the leaders of the American Embargo Conference, and certain of his associates. I do not recall their names just now, but they were convicted there, and Jacobsen was also one of those convicted at Detroit in this other scheme.

Robert Fay, Walter Scholz, and Paul Dasche were convicted and sentenced to the penitentiary, and three others are under indictment for conspiracy to prepare bombs and attach them to allied ships leaving New York Harbor. Fay finally escaped and went to Spain, where he was induced by the Consular Service and the Naval Intelligence Service to return to this country, and is now in prison.

It is interesting to note that Rintelen was introduced to Fay by Capt. von Papen, showing that the diplomatic representative of Germany was in close touch with everything of that kind that went on here.

Senator NELSON. And a part of what entered into the composition of these bombs was manufactured on board these German interned ships, was it?

Mr. BIELASKI. No, sir; not these bombs. In the fire-bomb case, the containers were manufactured on the Vaterland. That was another story.

Senator OVERMAN. Have you evidence as to where these bombs were manufactured?

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes. They had not gotten to the absolute point of completion yet. They were testing out various experiments at the time they were arrested. These other bombs of which you make mention were under the direction of Capt. Von Papen and Von Igel. Dr. Walter T. Scheele, Capt. Von Kleist, Capt. Wolpert, and Capt. Bode, of the Hamburg-American Line, manufactured these incendiary bombs. The containers were made on the Vaterland, and taken ashore to an office maintained by Scheele under the name of the Agricultural Mechanical Co., I think. There, a substance of one kind was put in one part of the bomb, and an acid in the other; and

Dr. Scheele had so experimented that he could tell by the thickness of the partition put in exactly how long it would be before the acid would eat its way through the tin and cause a tremendously hot fire. Capt. von. Papen financed that proposition, and Rintelen directed it, and numbers of those men have been convicted. Rintelen was also convicted in that matter.

Another operation of Scheele's, of the same kind, was the preparation of what was called fertilizer for shipment intended for Germany. It was actually a form of oil, heavy oil, lubricating oil, which was very much needed in Germany. By some chemical means he made it up so that it looked like fertilizer, and he shipped it, intended to reach Germany, on the steamship Esrom particularly, and other ships, where by a treatment which he had outlined the oil could be brought forth. It is my recollection that the chemists said it was 80 per cent oil, or something like that. The largest shipment was captured by the British, and taken.

Labor's National Peace Council I have already told you about. That was in the nature of propaganda; though its purpose, of course, was to bring about strikes and prevent the shipment of arms and munitions. Rintelen and Lamar and Martin were convicted in that prosecution, which took the form of a conspiracy to violate the Sherman antitrust act, I think.

Senator NELSON. Was there not an attempt to get up a strike among the longshoremen?

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes, sir.

Senator NELSON. At Hoboken and New York Harbor?

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes, sir; there was, but the proof as to the direction and financing of that by the Germans was never absolutely clear, although we have no doubt that morally they were responsible for it. No prosecution resulted in that case.

Senator NELSON. The strike was a failure, was it not? It did not succeed?

Mr. BIELASKI. It did not come off.

Senator NELSON. I understood that Mr. Gompers had a good deal to do with preventing it. Do you know anything about that?

Mr. BIELASKI. I do not know about that particular case; no, sir. I think if it were not for the fact that the statute of limitations has run, we might now, possibly, with the information we have, have made a case out of that; but the statute has long since run.

Scheele and a man named Steinberg, and Von Igel, etc., are under indictment for having shipped this fertilizer, misbranded or mislabeled, falsely manifested; but they have not been tried.

Paul Koenig, who was the head of the Hamburg-American Line's secret investigators, entered the employ of the German Government very shortly after the war began, and served as head of their secret agency in New York City, working for Albert, Boy-Ed, Von Papen, and the German consul and the Austro-Hungarian consul, and maintaining quite a force of men. Among other things that he was sent to do was to look over the Welland Canal, and to procure plans of it, the Government maintaining it as a part of a military plan to destroy that canal. There were two distinct attempts at the Welland Canal, that one headed by Koenig, and the one headed by Von der Goltz and his associates. Koenig is interned, and has not yet been tried. It also sent into Canada spies for the Germans, to obtain military information; and for that he is also under indictment.

Senator STERLING. Mr. Bielaski, are these persons who are under indictment out on bail?

Mr. BIELASKI. Not if they are Germans. Those who were Germans were, of course, interned. There are two or three men, I think, still out on bail, who are American citizens. In the Fay bomb case, the court granted a severance, and only permitted us to try a few of them at one time. Of the others who were not tried, when war broke out or shortly thereafter two of them were interned; and one of them, an American citizen, I think, is still out, although I am not sure as to that; but wherever there was a German or an Austrian under indictment, he was interned.

Gustave Stahl was the man whom we familiarly termed the "Lusitania liar." He is the fellow that was led to make an affidavit that the Lusitania was armed, that he went on board and saw the guns, and lifted up the covers, and all that sort of thing. He was secreted for a while by the Germans in New York, the active work being done by Koenig and his men, but finally surrendered. He testified before the grand jury that he had seen all of these things on the Lusitania, then was indicted for perjury, and served 18 months in the Atlanta Penitentiary. He is also interned.

Max Jaeger and five others were convicted of endeavoring to ship, under false manifests, in violation of law, rubber to Germany.

Capt. Thierichens, of the interned ship Prince Eitel Friedrich, was indicted for a conspiracy to bring on shore 19 chronometers of considerable value. His boat captured a great many vessels, and they smuggled these chronometers on shore without regard to the customs duties of this country.

Senator NELSON. That was the Philadelphia case?

Mr. BIELASKI. That was at Philadelphia. The captain was also a very vile character morally, and he was indicted for violating the white-slave traffic act and for sending obscene letters through the mails. He was convicted on, I think, two out of three charges; I am not quite sure which ones.

Mr. O'Brian reminds me that he was acquitted on the smuggling charge, and convicted on the other two charges.

There were convicted and indicted in these fire-bomb cases a great many other than those people I have mentioned by name, but they were all parties to the same plan.

Mr. O'BRIAN. They were all convicted, were they not, Mr. Bielaski?

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes, sir.

Senator NELSON. Do you know anything about strike or bomb plots in factories and munition plants?

Mr. BIELASKI. No; very little, if anything. During the period of our neutrality I do not think there were any cases developed for criminal prosecution. That sort of thing would have been extremely difficult to have prosecuted under the Federal law at that time. Since that time, of course, the sabotage act makes it possible for us to reach isolated attempts. I suppose the only way that a prosecution could have been had of things of that sort before the war would have been for a conspiracy to interfere with interstate commerce under the Sherman Act, or something of that sort, which would have been very involved.

Senator NELSON. It was under that act that Martin was convicted. was it not?

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes. It was rather an involved theory, though, to adapt the antitrust act to things of that kind.

Three defendants, two named Olsen and one named Friedland, were convicted in New York City for having endeavored to ship nickel out of this country without properly manifesting it. Nickel was one of the things badly needed in Germany. Another crowd were also indicted and convicted for endeavoring to ship rubber to Germany. The case was headed "United States v. Joseph Newman and others."

Senator OVERMAN. Was there any evidence of any efforts to injure our airplanes in the process of manufacture?

Mr. BIELASKI. Of course, before the war I think our airplanes were rather scarce, Senator. There were some attempts to injure them after the war started, and there have been some indictments under the sabotage act; but it is not fair to charge those things up against the German Government, because there was no proof of anything of that kind, and it is much more likely they were the individual acts of either careless or of ill-disposed workmen.

Senator KING. Under the word "ill-disposed" you might embrace those who were hostile to our country and favorable to Germany?

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes, sir.

Mr. O'BRIAN. There have been only about 15 complaints presented for prosecution thus far under the sabotage act. The amount of damage done to airplanes apparently has been somewhat exaggerated in people's minds.

Senator NELSON. Have you any sabotage cases?

Mr. BIELASKI. Of course, only since the act was passed. We do not know just how much sabotage there was in the plants making stuff for the allied Governments, because it really was not a Federal offense in any way, and it was something with which we could hardly concern ourselves or spend any money without getting beyond the scope of the authority we had.

Senator NELSON. I see.

Mr. BIELASKI. Without naming them, the members of the crew of the German steamship Liebenfels were tried at Charleston, S. C., and convicted of sinking the steamship in the navigable channel. They were sentenced to serve a year in the penitentiary. When they thought that we possibly were going to take over the interned boats they sank this boat in the channel in such a way as to interfere with navigation. They were all convicted, as was the captain and a newspaper man named Wierse. They were convicted and sent to the Atlanta Penitentiary also.

Senator OVERMAN. That was a remarkably light sentence, when you consider how they punished our soldiers for violation of the act.

Mr. BIELASKI. The trouble with the sentences was the trouble with the law. I think they got the maximum that could be imposed. At that time two years was the maximum for a conspiracy to violate any law of the United States. That has been changed under the espionage act.

Rintelen and Andrew D. Meloy are under indictment in New York for conspiracy to obtain a passport for Rintelen—an American passport. That has not been tried yet, for good reasons.

There was another case for conspiracy to get rubber to Germany, entitled "United States v. Soloman," in which the defendants were convicted.

I think that is a brief summary of the important cases.

Senator OVERMAN. Most of them were inspired by Von Papen and Boy-Ed?

Mr. BIELASKI. Practically all of the principal and important cases, the larger attempts, were inspired and financed and directed by some official representative of Germany.

Capt. Lester suggests that some mention should be made of the Capt. Sternberg or Steinberg who came over here with Rintelen. He endeavored to bring, and brought for the purpose, germs—tetanus germs—intended to inoculate horses and that sort of thing. The germs died on his hands before he was ready to use them, and they could not be revived. He was under indictment in New York, but went back to Germany before he could be apprehended; in fact, before his indictment.

Senator NELSON. Was he sent over by the German authorities?

Mr. BIELASKI. Oh, unquestionably. He came at the time Rintelen did, and was recognized here as having been sent over by the German authorities.

Senator NELSON. He came over with germs to infect our horses?

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes, sir; that is, horses going from here, intended for the use of the allied Governments.

I think that completes all of the general cases of which I have any recollection.

Maj. HUMES. Mr. Bielaski, I do not remember that you have included in your statement the "Friends of Peace."

Mr. BIELASKI. No; I did not bring down that file.

Maj. HUMES. We have a file that possibly you can use to refresh your recollection.

Senator OVERMAN. Mr. Bielaski, suppose you bring that up in the morning. I think it will be time to adjourn in a few minutes.

Mr. BIELASKI. Senator, that is a relatively unimportant file, anyway. It was simply an organization cooperating with these fellows in propaganda.

Capt. LESTER (producing papers). There is all there is of it. That is their first mass meeting, and the names of the organizers.

Mr. BIELASKI. It was a sort of conglomeration of representatives from the pro-German and Irish societies gotten together. It was not of great consequence.

Mr. Chairman, this completes all the testimony I have to offer, unless you have specific matters or other things.

Senator OVERMAN. Have the committee any questions to ask?

Maj. HUMES. Gentlemen, there have been so many things brought up in connection with Mr. Bielaski's testimony that it is almost impossible to know just where to start without going over the testimony to some extent, and without ascertaining something from the committee as to which of the ramifications of these different enterprises the committee desires to go into. I was hopeful that at the conclusion of Mr. Bielaski's testimony there would be an executive session of the committee, so that a more definite understanding could be arrived at as to just what ramifications the committee might be interested in.

Senator OVERMAN. We will have an executive session right now.

(Thereupon, at 4.35 p. m., the subcommittee went into executive session, after which it adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, December 10, 1918, at 10 o'clock a. m.)

(The telegrams referred to in this day's proceedings as "the Palm Beach telegrams," pursuant to the order of the committee are here printed in full in the record as follows:)

[Telegram.]

2-21-17.

TO PHILIP FRANCIS,

N. Y. American, N. Y. City.

There should be a vigorous attack on the espionage bill. Note that Senator Cummins says "the measure is the most stringent and drastic ever proposed to curb a free people in time of peace or war. The Government would have absolute power in war-time to suppress newspapers and prevent debate in Congress. It might even be held a criminal offence for two citizens to discuss with each other questions of military policy. Under such a law the agitation would never have taken place in England which led to the assumption of the Premiership by Lloyd George"—unquote

In other words under such a law the defects in the management of public affairs could not be discussed, could not be presented to the public, and the people unaware of the facts, would be unable to correct them.

The Democratic party seems to forget that this is a republic in which the people govern, and in which full information is essential to intelligent government.

In fact this Democratic Congress seems to be about the most undemocratic institution in the United States. It has passed the literacy test immigration bill and is doing its best to suppress free speech and a free press. It would be a remarkable thing if the only hope of Democracy in this country should lie in the Republican Party.

W. R. HEARST.

84J R 29 7X

BERLIN VIA SAYVILLE NY FEB 22 1917
VIA J NEW YORK NY Feb 22 1917.

WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST

The Breakers Palm Beach

Since rupture relations Reuters misrepresentations more than ever uncontrollable kindly cable brief statement precise situation opinions leading American circles many thanks beforehand

VOSSISCHE ZEITUNG ULLSTEINHAU BERLIN
401 P.

92 JSB 51 Blue Bexa

J NEW YORK 1007 AM Feb 23 1917

Hon. WM. R. HEARST

Breakers PB FLO

Thank you for your noble work on behalf of peace people want no war against Germany England arch enemy of United States country not prepared for war let us prepare embargo on munitions and foodstuffs no additional powers to President disaster will follow war

UNIVERSAL LEAGUE OF PEACE
THEODORE PINTER PRESIDENT
C C WHONING Secty San Francisco
522 P.

[Telegram Rush.]

HOTEL BREAKERS, PALM BEACH FLA
February 24, 1917

SHIBER, New York American, New York City

Please cable following Hale in Berlin—WILLICOMBE.

I firmly believe that the vast majority of the people of the United States are entirely undesirous of war with Germany. I believe also that the people of Germany are equally undesirous of war with the United States.

Under such circumstances, I cannot see why the century-old friendship of the United States and Germany cannot be maintained and perpetuated by the high-minded and humanitarian rulers and political leaders of our respective countries.

We in America have just celebrated the anniversary of Washington's birthday and this should remind us that the friendship of Germany and the United States was inaugurated by Washington and Frederick the Great, two of the ablest, and wisest, and most far-seeing statesmen that any nations have possessed in the history of the world.

May the statesmen of our respective countries today heed the advice and follow the footsteps of those two great leaders of men and builders of nations.

The course of my newspapers has been fair to Germany not because I am pro-German any more than I am pro-ally. I am merely patriotically interested in the welfare of my own country and altruistically interested in the progress of the world.

I am sure the United States will value in the future the consistent friendship of Germany as it has valued it in the past and I think that most Americans realize that Germany, like France, represents in Europe a political, social and economic progress similar to our own.

Americans from childhood have been taught to regard both Germany and France as their proven friends. We therefore deeply deplore the war between these great nations which have contributed so much to the progress and civilization of the world, and we earnestly desire to employ the influence of our country not for the extension and protraction of the war but for the promotion of a just and lasting peace.

WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST

8 51 pm 2/24/17

CARVALHO AMERICAN New York

Dont you think we should print in New York the dispatch from Vossische Zeitung which query read as follows

I note since rupture relations Reuters misrepresentations more than ever uncontrollable. Kindly cable brief statement precise situation unquote My reply in New York

HEARST

[Telegram.]

402 JSB DH CO

WB PALMBEACH FLO Feb 24 1917

M. H. LUFF
PB

Ymd the special certainly is for publication both in New York and Berlin and Mr Hearst so desires it to go as press rate

R LANFORD LEE
822P

[Telegram.]

2/24/17

Mr. LEE
Breakers, Palm Beach, Fla.

We make check full rate and Signed Hearst press rate only applies to matter for publication Please see that only matter for publication is sent from there at press rates.

MHL

PB Please double for very large ———.

NY

[Day letter.]

FEBRUARY 25, 1917.

F. W. KELLOGG,
Washington Bureau of New York American, Post Bdg., Washington, D. C.
When I inscribed the watchword "An American Paper for the American People," over the titles of my newspapers, I meant just what that motto said.

I will not supplicate England for news or for print paper or for permission to issue. I will not allow my papers to be edited in the smallest degree by any foreign Power. I would shut down every publication I have first and I don't intend to shut them down.

In fact, the more foreign Powers endeavor to interfere in America's domestic matters, and the more these foreign Powers try to control our American institutions, particularly our free press, the more necessary it seems to me that American papers for the American people shall continue to be published.

I will just add the verses of the Star Spangled Banner to my editorial mottoes and like that free flag continue to wave.

HEARST.

[Telegram Rush.]

FEBRUARY 25, 1917.

S. S. CARVALHO, New York American, New York City

Please keep standing in American across top of the editorial page the verses of the Star Spangled Banner as originally written. Please keep standing in the evening papers the verses printed in American reproduced from Harper's Weekly during Civil War and referring to shipment of arms by England to the South.

HEARST.

[Telegram.]

FEB. 25, 1917.

To S. S. CARVALHO,
N. Y. American, N. Y. City.

Use Star Spangled Banner in all morning papers. Do not print Vossische Zeitung message.

HEARST.

[Day letter.]

FEBRUARY 25, 1917.

PHILIP FRANCIS,
New York American, New York City.

Please make editorial advocating embargo for American along your own lines. Also kindly make one for Evening Journal amplifying and improving following suggestions:

America is not only being starved for the benefit of warring Europe but it is being plundered of its wealth as well.

We are sending abroad genuine wealth, the wealth of our mines and our mills, the wealth of our farms and our factories, the natural resources which God has given us for our development. We are receiving in return counters, media of exchange, which may become comparatively worthless, and promises to pay which may never be redeemed. Of what use are the I. O. U.'s of a bankrupt?

Uncle Sam is being gold-bricked. He is being sold a satchel full of green goods in return for his genuine and hard-earned property.

We are revelling in mock prosperity and will all wake up some fine morning and find the sheriff at our doors.

And why are we wasting our wealth? If it were for some noble purpose, we could afford to go poor for a generation and find comfort and consolation in a worthy deed. But no—we are wasting our wealth to continue a carnival of murder, to prolong an era of overwhelming disaster, to encourage the destruction of the white race, to tear down the achievements of civilization which have taken ages to construct, to repudiate religion and violate all established standards of decency, morality and righteousness, to prostitute the progress of the world to the meanest and basest and vilest of purposes.

If we persist in doing this we will reserve the heavy penalty which will surely fall upon us. Let us end these shipments of food and ammunition and money to the warring nations of Europe for their sakes and for ours. Let us preserve our property and our self-respect. Let us end the war and the wastage of war, and the woe which the war is wreaking. Let us feed our own people, build up our own country, conserve our own resources. America first and forever.

HEARST

[Day letter.]

FEB 25 1917

S S CARVALHO N Y American N Y City

Dont you think the Francis editorial and declaration to Congress of the sentiment and will of the great majority of the people of the United States should be mailed to every Member of Congress?

Two—I believe it would be a very big thing for all our papers to conduct a referendum peace vote in an election district in each one of our cities and in another district in each one of our States. The New York American would take a district in the city and a district up State. The Boston American would do the same in Massachusetts, the Atlanta Georgian in Georgia the Chicago Examiner the same in Illinois.

In California the San Francisco Examiner could take one district and the Los Angeles Examiner another in this way we would get a Nationwide expression of opinion. The expression of every voter in the district ought to be secured even if he has to be visited personally and made to put his sentiments in writing on a card. I think we should start this at once.

HEARST

111J R 44 BLUE

J NEW YORK 326 P Feb 26 1917

J W WILLECOMBE

The Breakers Palmbeach Flo

Tuckerton wireless station advises that owing to congestion Mr Hearsts message of twenty fourth to Hale will be delayed three or four days as message was sent to wireless station Saturday it ought to reach Berlin Tuesday or Wednesday night delay via Sayville indefinite.

W N SHIBER 513-P

103J R 83

J NEW YORK 425P Feb 26 1917

W R HEARST

Palm Beach Flo

Earnestly urge immediate action to check or stop Hale dispatches They come by wireless and surely are picked up Despite your well known attitude of neutrality these dispatches are so worded as to permit the interpretation that Berlin is dictating our policy I fear we are drifting into a situation akin to the false McKinley one only accentuated many fold With profound respect I urge we check Hale and all agencies that tend to throw discredit upon our declared attitude of sturdy Americanism

VAN HAM
436 P

[Telegram.]

FEB. 26. 1917.

R. C. MITCHELL,

N. Y. American, N. Y. City.

Please make strenuous effort to kill the long cable to Hale sent by Chief on twenty-fourth, which Shiber says is held up by rush of wireless. See Shiber's telegram to me to-day and thank him. Wire me when it is killed.

J. WILLECOMBE.
8 35 p m

519JBC 58 NL

SAN FRANCISCO CALIF Feb 26 1917

WM RANDOLPH HEARST

Palm Beach Fla

The Irish people of San Francisco assembled in St Patricks Day convention of 1917 have instructed me as chairman of the convention resolutions committee to express to you their appreciation of the attitude of staunch Americanism you have shown in the present crisis and to thank you for your fairness in treating of Irelands rights of freedom.

LAUBENCE S OTOOLE
1252 A

1610, BREWING AND LIQUOR INTERESTS AND GERMAN PROPAGANDA.

97J R 106

J NEW YORK 434 P Feb 26 1917

W R HEARST

The Breakers Palmbeach Fla

Cannot find Harpers Weekly Poem in America found one reproduced in Fatherland from Harpers Weekly 1863 attacking England for sending arms etc therefore in consequence of sinking of Laconia today with Americans aboard and President Wilson's address before Congress urge that we not use this poem if it is the one you mean as under present conditions it is bound to hurt papers bulk of public believes country is on verge of war with Germany and this poem prominently displayed will be regarded as our taking Germanys side Star Spangled Banner is being run top of column morning Editorial Referendum canvass under way

CARVALHO 406 P

[Telegram.]

FEB 26 1917

S S CARVALHO N Y American N Y City

Why not run the red white and blue title that we had for last edition through all editions for a few days during these troublous times? I think it will meet popular sentiment. Also please run little American flags to right and left of date lines on inside pages like the Chicago Herald. Our editorials should be patriotic without slightest criticism direct or indirect of administration. I guess Germany is going to sink every ship that tries to run the submarine blockade and this means three things—first that we will get into the war; second that England will be starved into submission in less than six months third that Germany will then have time to devote to us and this country will soon be in a condition similar to warring European countries. We must prepare in every way. Can we say these things editorially

HEARST

[Telegram.]

NS 852p

FEB 27 1917

ARTHUR BRISBANE

Hotel Alcazar St Augustine Fla

Don't you think better advocate commandeering ammunition plants and cold storage food plants as steps preliminary to war? Say of course these plants will be taken over by Government as soon as war begins and better take them now and begin organizing them as part of Government service.

HEARST

B28J BC Paid NPR

J NEW YORK Feb 28 1917

W R HEARST

Palm Beach Fla

The following is a copy of the instructions as sent by Dr Alfred Zimmermann German foreign secretary to German Minister Voneckhrdt in Mexico through von Bernstorff now in possession of the United States Government quote Berlin January 19, 1917. On the first of Feby we intend to begin submarine warfare unrestricted; in spite of this, it is our intention to endeavor to keep neutral the U States of America. If this attempt is not successful we propose an alliance on the following basis with Mexico. That we shall make war together and together make peace. We shall give general financial support and it is understood that Mexico is to reconquer the lost territory in New Mexico, Texas and Arizona. The details are left to you for settlement. You are instructed to inform the President of Mexico of the above in the greatest confidence as soon as it is certain that there will be an outbreak of war with the United States and suggest that President of Mexico on his own initiative should communicate with Japan suggesting adherence at once to this plan. At the same time offer to mediate between Germany and Japan. Please call to the attention of the President of Mexico that the employment of ruthless submarine warfare now promises to compel England to make peace in a few months.

(Signed)

ZIMMERMANN end quote

VAN HAMM 1220 AM

116J XN 8 1

J NEW YORK NY 1155 AM March 1 1917.

W R HEARST

The Breakers Palm Beach Fla

Senator Swann of Virginia announced in Senate this morning that he was authorized by the President to state that the Zimmerman note to Mexico was textually correct. Lansing made same announcement from State Dep't. Japanese ambassador authoritatively announced that Japan would spurn such proposition. No official information from Mexico. Will you outline such editorial as you want printed. Francis is away sick. Will be gone week or ten days. Owing to lateness of news no paper made editorial comment this morning.

CARVALHO
1141 AM

63 J BC 249 count punctuations fourteen and 13 extra

v NEW YORK NY 115pm March 1, 1917..

Mr WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST

Palm Beach Fla

Another Meyer-Gerhard hoax. The alleged letter of Alfred Zimmerman published today is obviously faked; it is impossible to believe that the German foreign secretary would place his name under such a preposterous document. The letter is unquestionably a brazen forgery planted by British agents to stampede us into an alliance and to justify violations of the Monroe doctrine by Great Britain. This impudent hoax is made public simultaneously with frantic appeals of allied premiers enjoining the United States to enter the war. If Germany were plotting against us she would hardly adopt so clumsy a method. The real politician of the Wilhelmstrasse would never offer an alliance based on such ludicrous propositions as the conquest by Mexico of American territory. The creaking of the machinery of the British propaganda is clearly perceptible; the intention is of course to arouse the war spirit of the peace loving west and to overwhelm the pacifists in every part of the country. The entire story reads like a dime novel concocted by our guest Sir Gilbert Parker. Great Britain's chief propagandists in cooperation with R Phillips Oppenheim. Despite the insidious work of various imaginary artists in the pay of Great Britain we have still retained our common sense. We can still differentiate between fiction and fact. The American people are willing to be thrilled but refuse to be humbugged.

GEORGE SYLVESTER VIERECK
Editor of Vierecks Weekly formerly the Fatherland
1123 Broadway New York City
143 P. M

[Telegram.]

3-2-17

S. S. CARVALHO

N Y AM N Y City

Will take care of letter. Filing long message from chief.

WILLICOME.

[Telegram.]

MARCH 2, 1917.

S. S. CARVALHO.

New York American, New York City.

Agree with Francis Zimmermann note all probability absolute fake and forgery, prepared by a very unscrupulous Attorney General's very unscrupulous department. Everybody knows that the secret police are the most conscienceless manufacturers of forged evidence in the world. The ordinary police are bad enough with their trumped up evidence and railroading methods but the federal agents with the Government back of them and more or less immune from punishment are the most reckless concocters of evidence and framers of jobs in the world.

Gregory's whole career in office as Francis showed in recent editorial has been as a spy fancier and plot conceiver. He has not been bound by morals, facts or the Constitution. He has employed the secret service to enforce England's unlawful orders. He has attempted to put a bill through Congress to make any criticism of his acts or of the President's acts or of any political move or measure treasonable and punishable as such.

He is possibly violently pro-British. He is surely violently pro-corporation. He is located where he can do the corporations the most good and he has been unwilling to be removed or they have been unwilling to have him removed even for a position on the Supreme bench. He and Burleson are House's appointments and House has been a corporation lobbyist all his life.

Gregory and Burleson are so crooked that, as Alfred Henry Lewis used to say, one of them could lie in bed on top of the Woolworth Building and the other on the ground floor and look down and up forty-seven flights of winding stairs into each other's eyes and understand each other perfectly.

The object of the Zimmerman forgery was to frighten Congress into giving the President the powers that he demanded and perhaps also into passing the espionage bill. When Wilson wanted to give away the rights of the United States in the Panama Canal he pretended that he had private information of a dangerous international situation sufficient to justify his acts. He has never revealed his private information and no one now believes that he ever had any.

He could not repeat this false claim on this occasion so a complaisant Cabinet officer this time undertook to manufacture sufficient false evidence to enable Wilson to have his way. It is possible that the British secret service co-operated in those plans. The only serious consequence is that the whole people of this country, ninety per cent of whom do not want war, may be projected into war because of these misrepresentations and those forged documents, if they are forged.

I believe in war if the people want war. They have to do the fighting. They ought to do the deciding. I believe in first a referendum to the people and second, failing that, a decision by the people's representatives on Congress assembled.

We are getting very far away from democracy and very close to autocracy when we repose all the power of the people and all the power of the people's representatives in the hands of one man whom we thereby create a dictator.

It may be the right thing to do but Rome in so doing drifted from a republic into an empire.

I think the United States should remain a republic in fact as well as in name and that the people should neither be deceived by the machinations of a tricky Attorney General nor deprived of their rights to decide a question of war or any other momentous question. I do not believe that any other individual has an interest in such questions equal to the interest of the great mass of the public and I do not believe that the wisdom of any individual is equal to the collective wisdom of the people.

If we do not want to say all this editorially, we can say part of it editorially, and get someone to stand for interview as Hale used to do to bring all these points out, especially those about the probable forgery of the note. We should develop the forgery phase of the note for the Sunday paper if Francis and I seem to be right.

DOCTOR

[Telegram.]

SNY B C 14 Paid

J NEW YORK 601 PM Mar. 2, 1917.

MANAGER

Palm Beach Fla

Have you any more editorial matter in sight from Mr Hearst to Mr Carvalho

NY AMN

5:19 PM

3-2-17

Filed 5:40 PM.

NEW YORK AMERICAN

New York, N Y

Nothing more in sight from Mr. Hearst for Mr. Carvalho

W. U. TEL Co.

[Telegram.]

Filing Time 2:52 P

C E H
Jax Flo

Have approximately 2,000 words in telegrams for N. Y. American. Can you name us a New York Ckt please

PALM BEACH
Mar 2/17.

298 Jxn
PB

How one man

J A Jax 3/2 4:32 p.

5 NY BC
PB Fla

Undld yd Oreilly NY Sun NewYork SGD Hearst unknown GBA

To Desk 32 SVC NY Mar 2 512 PM

Sys ours date since Hearst is today Oreilly. N.Y. American New York.

PALM BEACH (Illegible)

[Telegram.]

12.20 P. M.
March 3, 1917.

S S CARVALHO NY American NY City

If situation quiets down please remove color flags from first page and little flags from inside pages, reserving these for special occasions of a warlike or patriotic kind. I think they have been good for this week, giving us a very American character and probably helping sell papers, but to continue effective they should be reserved for occasions.

HEARST.

1224 P

[Day Press Rates Collect.]

MARCH 3 1917

S S CARVALHO NY American NY City

I feel Congress should remain in continual session and protect the people's liberties. This making a dictator of President desperately dangerous precedent. It may do no immediate harm with a good President but it may do immense injury with some bad one. Augustus Rome's first Emperor was good man but Nero who acted under powers and precedents allowed Augustus was fearfully bad one. Eternal vigilance is price of liberty. Wilson is federalist as I wrote in first year of his term and as Francis showed in alien and sedition editorial. The federalists are autocratic in tendency. Hamilton was accused of trying to make monarchy of our Government. Quote Monarchies are destroyed by poverty, republics by wealth unquote. It is easier to establish a virtual monarchy in the rich America of today than in the poor America of a hundred years ago. We shy at the name of King but we accept the spirit of absolutism. The Romans would have no king but they accepted an imperator with more power than any king and so lost their liberties. President of this Republic today has more power than any king in any constitutional monarchy in the world. If he gets more he will be a dictator and possibly a despot. It is the duty of true democrats to be vigilant especially as all these encroachments on popular rights are being made in the name of democracy.

HEARST.

[Telegram.]

MARCH 3 1917

S S CARVALHO NY American NY City

Mc Cay could make strong eight column cartoon occupying in depth two thirds editorial page, showing smaller figures Uncle Sam and Germany shaking their fists at each other on left side page and on right side big head and shoulders of Japan with knife in hand leaning over into picture and evidently watching chance to strike Uncle Sam in back. Title of picture to be quote Watchful waiting unquote Subtitle quote Look out Uncle Sam your neighbor Japan is eagerly waiting an opportunity to strike you in the back unquote.

HEARST.

[Telegram.]

MARCH 4, 1917

S S CARVALHO N Y American N Y City

Think beneficial thing senate not to give President great powers demanded. If my telegram of yesterday explaining my opposition to such powers and advocacy of extra session was not printed in Sunday paper, please elaborate it somewhat and make it an editorial approving action of Senate. Speak very highly of Wilson, say he is good president and undoubtedly meant to use power for good purposes but the precedent is a dangerous one to establish and Senate did well to retain its powers and rights and protect the liberties of the people.

Say that the few Senators who voted to retain the rights and functions of that body constitute a roll of honor. They did not lack respect for President but they had a greater respect for the Institutions founded by the fathers. The day will come when their action will be commended by all the people. Print their names.

HEARST.

2 J BC Paid NPR and MSGR Charges paid

J NEW YORK NY Mar 4 1917

W R HEARST

Palmbeach Florida

Following editorial send by Mr Brisbane for use in Journal and Boston Chicago and Atlanta papers. It is wired to you for a release by orders of Mr Hastings.

Editor in charge Evening Journal St Augustine Fla March 4 following editorial is written under Mr Hearsts direction publish in all editions to-morrow send to Boston Chicago Atlanta by mail special delivery with a memorandum that Mr. Hearst requests its publication.

Editorial is to be doubled up across the editorial page set three column measure the box head to be put at top of the page. Centered across eight columns.

(Box head) If war comes this Government will (caps) commandeer ammunition plants and raw materials needed for war (end caps)

(Small type) An emergency that permits the Government to commandeer (caps) the lives (end caps) of citizens authorizes without question commandeering at cost ammunition plants and other material necessities. (End box)

(Set in type to fill not less than half the page) This country appears to be drifting against the will of an overwhelmingly majority of citizens into a state of war.

After nearly three years of neutrality, those who predicted "that we should get into the war sooner or later" believe that they see the fulfillment of their prophesy. War will mean spending thousands of millions—a great opportunity for those whose profession is to profit by the countrys misfortune

War will mean many things disagreeable and painful to contemplate many complications that the patriotic citizens would serve most earnestly to avoid

What the result will be, how far we shall go into war, to what extent we shall succeed in crippling ourselves financially as the European nations have done, nobody can say.

But one thing is certain.

The Government will take over and operate for itself, with no extortionate profit for anybody, all of the ammunition plants necessary for attack or defense.

And the nation will fix its own prices on raw materials needed in war, whether those raw materials be steel, copper, gunpowder, dynamite or alcohol

We shall learn from England and other European countries that a government which commandeers the lives of citizens in war time has also the right to commandeer the property of citizens.

As England has regulated the price of every dollars worth of raw material or manufactured material brought for the government, so the United States will regulate every price, and spend every government dollar at a rate of profit to the seller that the government and not the seller will fix.

In war the young man earning five, ten, two or three dollars a day is taken from his profitable work. He is put into the army without asking consent. The nation says to him, I will pay you fifty cents a day, and take your life in the process if it should happen to be necessary.

The custom has been in the past to enroll the ordinary citizen, deprive of his employment, pay him a nominal sum, take his life if it is needed.

And the custom has been to give to the prosperous who make their profit out of war, an extortionate profit fixed by the extortioners themselves.

There will be none of that extortion, none of that robbery of the government based on its necessities if this war comes. In the event of war, and it is that the government will fix prices, take over the manufacturing plants of the raw material at its own valuation, as it takes the citizen and his life at government valuation.

The people fortunately have had a chance to discuss and think over this war in advance. It has not been sprung upon them suddenly.

The President with great wisdom has fought against it, and is still fighting against it.

There are men in both Houses of Congress who realize the nature of the forces that are trying to bring war upon the country.

All of these that oppose war are prepared for it if it must come and will show in the prosecution of it an energy even greater than that with which they have opposed war and its dreadful consequences.

The people have had time to think over the war. They have had to study and understand the forces, the interests, the selfishness, the professional war movement.

Having had time to think in their homes, and in the Congress that represents them, the people are thoroughly determined upon one thing. They do not intend that war which will plunge the nation into debt, disorganize the lives of citizens, interfere with this nation's possibilities of usefulness hereafter—they don't intend that, that condition, damaging to ninety nine percent of all the people, shall enrich a selfish few. The people of the United States have seen extortion practiced upon the people of Europe, condemned to pay to the ammunition makers of the United States any price demanded.

They have seen the makers of powder and dynamite, the manufacturers of killing machinery of all kinds, piling up their hundreds of millions of profit.

What has been done with other nations is the business of other nations.

But what is done in case war comes to this country will be the business of this country

When the time comes for the United States to ask for war materials or for manufactured engines of murder, our government will not ask the manufacturer, the producer, or the banking middleman how much are you going to charge your government, how much profit do you mean to get out of this war.

The government will say and it will mean I know what you have for sale. I know or I shall find out what it costs you to produce. I shall take what I need, I will run your factory myself, operate your mine or your plant myself if it seems to me advisable, and I will allow you on the actual cost such a profit as seems to me advisable.

There will be in the United States and the expense of the United States one of that orgy of graft and murder profit that has gone on thus far in the war.

The company which proudly tells its stockholders that it produces copper for six cents a pound and sells it for thirty-six cents a pound will not sell it to the United States government for thirty six cents a pound—but for six cents a pound plus a fair profit. The steel company that tells its stockholders how it has earned dividends of a hundred percent on a thousand millions of watered stock will not get a hundred per cent of profit from the government of the United States—but will get what the product costs, plus the average, reasonable percent of profit.

And what is more, the government prosecuting the war in the interest of the people, and not of private individuals, will act toward inanimate property as justly and impartially as it acts toward the living citizen.

The government that says on the one hand to the mother, I will take your son and send him to be killed, will hesitate to say to the maker of steel and ammunition or copper, will take your property, and use it as I see fit, and pay you as I think wise and just—and not as you decide.

The United States has the right to regulate prices. Don't forget that.

Within a few days, to the writer of this editorial, three members of the United States Cabinet, the three most influential, those that would have most to say, under the President, if war should come have said the same thing, and here is the substance of it.

The United States will not pay extravagant prices for war supplies. We have been making up tables of figures based on years past, we have had statements prepared as to the average prices during past years of steel, oil, copper, powder etc. "And if we get into this war and begin buying with American money we'll pay the average price for years past not the extortionate war prices that unfortunate Europe has had to pay.

"We have not been studying Europe and its methods in vain. We observe that England has commandeered raw material, and has paid what these raw materials cost plus a small reasonable profit.

"We shall not pay for raw products like steel, copper, coal and oil, two, three, seven, hundred and thousand percent profit. We shall pay a fair profit, no more." The government will not ask what will you charge? The government will say you have so and so and we know it.

"We want it and this is what we will pay you for it."

If those interested doubt that this quotation is given accurately, if they question that the three most important members of the Cabinet speaking under the President, who, of course, can not be quoted, said exactly what is printed here let them go to Washington and inform themselves.

They will find in the President a careworn, overburdened, but determined man. He does not intend to have the gambling hopes of any industrial king forced war upon this Nation of which he is the head. The industrial "Patriot" who through newspaper control or ownership of Congressmen seeks to force the President's hand, will find that hand a heavy and a tight hand when it comes to paying out the money of the people.

If war comes almost everything will be uncertain, the total cost to the Government, the number of lives lost, the effect on shipping, the regulation of food prices, as in Europe, the extension to this country of the so-called socialist Government regulations prevailing in Europe—all of this at present uncertain.

But one thing fortunately is sure. The people are not in a mood to have any multimillionaires manufactured out of the country's misfortune, if war must come.

If the people's business must be disturbed, if the high prices of food must go still higher, if this Nation must be dragged into the war dance and pushed toward the verge of bankruptcy as other nations have been, the makers of ammunition, and sellers of raw materials of war shall not stand by and be the gainers while all others lose.

The People through their Government will see to it that everything is done fairly and justly, fair pay, as far as possible, for those that enlist and offer their lives, moderate pay with a fair moderate profit for those whose inanimate wealth in the shape of raw materials and manufactured ammunition may be necessary for carrying on the war. The Nation will take and operate ammunition plants if war comes, and fix their own price and moderate profit for all war materials purchased.

(BRISBANE) Sig JOURNAL
137 AM Mar 5

BREWING AND LIQUOR INTERESTS AND GERMAN PROPAGANDA.

TUESDAY, DECEMBER 10, 1918.

UNITED STATES SENATE,
SUBCOMMITTEE OF THE COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY,
Washington, D. C.

The subcommittee met at 10.45 o'clock a. m., in room No. 226, Senate Office Building, Senator Lee S. Overman presiding.

Present: Senators Overman (chairman), Nelson, and Sterling.

Senator OVERMAN. The committee will come to order. Prof. Hart, we will hear you.

TESTIMONY OF PROF. ALBERT BUSHNELL HART.

(The witness was sworn by the chairman.)

Senator OVERMAN. I have a number of telegrams here that will be put into the record before we begin the examination of this witness. There is one from ex-Senator Root, reading as follows:

"Hon LEE S. OVERMAN

US Senate Washington, D. C.

I think I ought to say that Professor Albert Bushnell Hart to my own knowledge was strong and outspoken in his public and private opposition to Germany and in favor of asserting and maintaining American rights against Germany long before the United States entered the great war.

ELIHU ROOT."

I also have a similar telegram vouching for the patriotism and loyalty to the United States of Prof. Hart, from Henry L. West, reading as follows:—

DEC. 9, 1918.

"LEE S. OVERMAN

United States Senate Washington, D. C.

In December nineteen sixteen Albert Bushnell Hart was selected as Chairman of Committee on Patriotism through education of National Security League. His attitude at that time was and had been so thoroughly American as to appeal to the President of the League and led to his selection to take charge of our patriotic educational work. When this work grew to such proportions that it was necessary to secure services of someone who could devote his entire attention to it Prof. Hart relinquished his chairmanship but has since been associated with committee and has steadfastly labored to promote an American morale to win the war. His address at annual meeting of National Security League in May nineteen seventeen was heartily commended by late Joseph H. Choate who was present.

HENRY L. WEST."

Also another from Robert Erskine, New York, reading as follows:—

NEW YORK, N. Y. December 10, 1918.

Hon. LEE S. OVERMAN,

Senator from South Carolina Washington, D. C.

Professor Albert Bushnell Hart of Harvard University has been for years highly valued and respected lecturer before League for Political Education.

February sixteenth last he lectured on "No Royal Road to Peace" before great audience in Carnegie Hall. His position was that prosecution of war with utmost energy at all costs until decisive victory secured was only way to genuine peace. He denounced Germany in unmeasured terms. Any question concerning his attitude throughout war seems to us absolutely preposterous as all of our four thousand members who heard him lecture can testify. Our league is in its twenty fifth year, has been addressed by President Wilson, Taft, Roosevelt, Goethals, Gerard Van Dyke and others. A Barton Hepburn is President Board of Trustees.

ROBERT EBSKINE
Director 17 West 44th St. New York City.

Here is another one from Educational Director R. M. McElroy, New York, reading as follows:

1913 DEC 9 PM 3 47

Honorable LEE S. OVERMAN
United States Senate Washington DC

Albert Bushnell Hart has worked with me intimately in anti German propaganda for over a year and has done as much as any one of my acquaintance to create the public opinion necessary to victory. I wish to express my unqualified faith in his intense loyalty and devotion to America and the cause for which she fought

R M McELROY
Educational Director.

Another telegram from Boston, signed by John L. Bates, reads as follows:

BOSTON MASS 1918 Dec 10 AM 12

Senator OVERMAN
Chairman Washington D. C.

Have known Professor A B Hart well for last two years as member of Massachusetts Constitutional Convention, Never heard his patriotism questioned and never discovered anything in his speech or attitude that indicated any leaning toward Germany Think all his associates in Convention would endorse this statement

JOHN L BATES.

Here is one from A. C. McLaughlin, Chicago, Ill., saying:

I have known Professor Hart for years and consider charge of proGermanism absurd.

Also one from Prof. Charles W. Elliott, reading as follows:

Professor Hart of Harvard University has always been intensely loyal American.

I have also received, in addition to those read, the following telegrams:

Senator LEE S. OVERMAN
Washington D. C.

Professor Albert Bushnell Hart has addressed economic clubs of Boston and elsewhere at various times both before and during the war. Reports of his speeches furnish convincing proof of his loyalty and unadulterated Americanism. Referring to speech before our club on November twenty third nineteen fourteen at which Heinrich Albert then Privy Councillor German Ministry of the Interior also spoke Boston Journal next morning said "Professor Hart besides condemning Germany rushed to the defense of Belgium and criticised the violation of her neutrality speaking of the violation of Belgium Professor Hart said 'I do not understand Germanys Treachery'"

J W BEATSON
Secretary National Economic League.

BOSTON MASS 1918 Dec 10 AM

Senator OVERMAN

Senate Building Washington D C

Have been intimately associated with Professor A. B. Hart for nearly year frequently hearing him speak in public and private and regard him thoroughly loyal intensely patriotic and splendid example of self sacrificing American citizenship.

WILLIAM T SEDGWICK,
Chairman Mass. Division National Security League
Member Advisory Board U. S. Public Health Service.

BOSTON MASS 1918 Dec 10 AM

United States Senator OVERMAN

Washington, D. C.

Professor Hart was a member of the Massachusetts Constitutional Convention with me in Nineteen seventeen and nineteen eighteen He has frequently spoken on the public platform at political meetings with me since that time. I have always considered him an enthusiastic American and cannot conceive of any substantial ground for doubting his loyalty.

DAVID I WALSH.

SAN DIEGO CALIF 1918 Dec 10 AM

Senator LEE OVERMAN

Senate Office Bldg Washington D C

Am shocked at charge against Dr. Albert Bushnell Hart. Often discussed war with him before our entry and worked with him in security league and similar patriotic organizations and heard him often on public platform He always impressed me with his absolute loyalty and anti-German sentiments I am convinced beyond any possible doubt that charge is wholly false.

EL. J. HENNING.

PHILADELPHIA, PENN. Dec 9 PM 2 49

Senator LEE OVERMAN

Chairman Committee Washington DC

Having just learned that Albert Bushnell Hart is to appear before your Committee Tuesday to refute charges of pro Germanism we desire to state that such charges are preposterous. Professor Hart has had much to do with shaping the patriotic activities of the Loyal Order of Moose. These activities are known to the several Government Departments. We know that we voice the sentiments of our half million members when we pronounce these charges ridiculous

CHARLES A C MCGEE
Supreme Dictator.

JOHN W. FORD,
Chairman Executive Committee.

Now, Maj. Humes, will you please read that part of the testimony where Prof. Hart's name was brought in?

Maj. HUMES. I read from page 1725 of the typewritten transcript [page 1399 of this printed record] of the testimony of Mr. Bielaski as follows:

In Dr. Fuehr's papers there appeared, in addition to his note-book, which contained a number of items of interest, a list which was headed "Important list of names," and which contains many names which are familiar to us as having been active in favor of Germany. I can read the list, if you would like to hear them.

Senator NELSON. Yes; let us hear them.

Mr. BIELASKI. No. 1 is Prof. Wm. R. Shepherd, Columbia University, New York City, about which we yill have something more to say, I think.

Next, Prof. Hugo Muensterberg, Harvard University, Cambridge, Mass.

Prof. Wm. M. Sloane. Columbia University, New York City.

Dr. Edmund von Mach, Cambridge, Mass., who was a very active propagandist, about whom we have got some information.

Dr. Arthur Von Briesen, 25 Broad St., New York City.

Prof. John W. Burgess, Newport, R. I.

Prof. Eugen Smith, Columbia University, New York City.

Prof. Herbert C. Sanborn, Vanderbilt University, Nashville, Tenn.

Prof. James G. McDonald, of the University of Indiana.

Prof. Ferdinand Scheville, University of Chicago.

Mr. E. C. Richardson, Princeton University.

Prof. Kuno Franke, Harvard University. Prof. Franke was Dr. Albert's uncle, and helped him quite a bit in the preparation of his articles for the press, but after our entrance into the war was likewise the author of some very patriotic articles.

Prof. Geo. B. McClellan, Princeton University.

Prof. A. B. Faust, Cornell University.

Prof. Morris Jastrow, Jr., University of Wisconsin.

Senator WOLCOTT. Do you know what Prof. Faust was professor of?

Mr. BIELASKI. I do not, no, sir; not offhand.

Dr. Walter M. S. McNeill, Richmond, Va.

Prof. David Starr Jordan, Berkeley, Calif.

Hon. Peter S. Grosscup, United States Judge, Chicago, Ill.

Hon. Richard Bartholdt, St. Louis, Mo.

Prof. Bushnell Hart, Harvard University.

Dr. C. J. Hexamer, Philadelphia, Pa., President of the German-American Alliance.

Prof. Wm. P. Trent.

Hon. Charles Nagel, St. Louis, Mo.

Mr. Oswald Garrison Villard, New York Evening Post.

Mr. William Randolph Hearst, New York American.

Mr. Bernard Ridder, New York Staats-Zeitung.

Mr. Edward A. Rumely, New York Evening Mail, and interested in many other forms of German propaganda.

Mr. Frederick F. Schrader, 1493 Broadway, New York City, one of the editors of Mr. Viereck's paper, and a man who served for a time as Washington correspondent for Mr. Viereck, and the author of a number of pro-German pamphlets published by the Press Bureau.

Mr. Frank Harris, New York City, the Pearson man.

Mr. Rob. I. Ford, The Freeman's Journal, New York City.

Rev. Father Thierney, Americ Catholic Weekly, New York City.

Mr. Max A. Hein, 230 Riverside Drive, New York City. Mr. Hein was a very active propagandist, and I think is Mr. Viereck's father-in-law, or some way related to him.

George Sylvester Viereck, 1123 Broadway, New York City.

Senator OVERMAN. Read a little farther, about the other list.

Maj. HUMES (reading):

There was a supplemental list, but I do not think any of those names are especially important. They are not marked on this important list.

Senator NELSON. Are there any from Minnesota there?

Mr. BIELASKI. Minnesota seems to have escaped, Senator, as far as I can see.

Senator NELSON. I feel relieved. Have you got that supplemental list to which you referred?

Mr. BIELASKI. Yes.

Senator NELSON. Suppose you give it to the reporter to be put into the record.

Mr. BIELASKI. I will furnish you with a copy.

Senator OVERMAN. Prof. Hart, you asked me about those names that were referred to in the record and yet that were not mentioned on any "important list." Your name appeared with those that have just been read, and I have also read, now, certain telegrams into the record testifying to your loyalty and patriotism. You have requested to be heard, and we shall be glad to hear you. Professor, what position do you now hold?

Mr. HART. I am professor of government in Harvard University.

Senator OVERMAN. You may say anything that you have to say, and we shall be glad to hear you.

Mr. HART. Mr. Chairman, I very much appreciate the courtesy of the committee in giving me so prompt an opportunity to meet it, and further, I very much appreciate the efforts of this committee in bringing to light the secret actions of the German agents who were moneycombing the whole country. It is a public service, and I am especially pleased at having the opportunity, while this whole matter is fresh, to discuss the question of my name getting into such bad company.

It would have been a dreadful misfortune if this had happened after my death, and there had been nobody who was able to bring together the evidence which I shall lay before you upon that subject.

It would have been a hard thing for me if my children had ever had to bear it, that their father had been included in a list of pro-Germans while their country was at war, and that nothing had been done about it.

You observe, Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, that the statement that has just been read includes two things: First, a list of names in which mine is one. That is a matter of fact, and I am the last one to find any fault with its production. It was proper that it should be read, and should be put upon the record.

The second part is a statement by Mr. Bielaski of his judgment as to the general character of that list. I observe that the statement does not necessarily include every name upon the list. Upon some of those persons he expressed opinions as he went over them. Others he left without. But his opinion was that that was a list of persons friendly to the Germans, or at least presumed to be friendly by the man who made it. Furthermore, that it was a list of persons who, before the war some of them, or all of them, and some of them since the outbreak of the American war, had been upon the German side.

Mr. Chairman, that my name should be among a list of that kind is by accident, or with a purpose. I think perhaps I may be able to show what the purpose was, and perhaps through whom it came; an effort, probably, to put me down as a person who was to be approached; because, as I shall show you, I was approached; and I will also tell you what came of that affair.

The accusation touches me very deeply, because I think no one who has followed the magazine literature, the periodical literature, with regard to the war, can doubt that ever since the United States declared war upon Germany I have been an absolutely loyal citizen. I do not think it worth while to put forward any evidence or suggestion upon that point. It is not controverted. There is nothing in the testimony here that touches that point.

Therefore the only suspicion that can be attached refers to the period before the war broke out; that is, between August, 1914, when Germany brought on the war, and April, 1917, when Germany brought on a war, that time with the United States of America.

The point is simply this: During that whole period my activity was decidedly anti-German. If, therefore, the Germans in their secret councils in any way included me, that means, if it were provable, not only that I was pro-German but that I was a hypocrite from top to bottom and that while posing before the country as an opponent of the Germans I was actually in connection with them.

Let me take this opportunity, then, Mr. Chairman, to absolutely repel any statement that I at any time had any connection with any agent of the German Government, public or secret. I never heard of this man Fuehr until I saw his name in the reports of your proceedings.

William Bayard Hale seems to have been connected on the day of this testimony. So far as I am aware, I never saw him or had any communication with him.

I never was aware that I was in correspondence with any person representing the German Government, and my record is absolutely clear. There are no private letters of mine anywhere in the world that disprove what I am now saying. My files are at the service of the committee. I have brought with me a file of my own publications on the war, which some time ago I got together. There are about 100 articles on the war, and they speak for themselves. I do not put them in evidence. There is too much of it.

I have brought also with me some files of my correspondence.

I have brought with me five books that during the war I have published, bearing on this general question, and I will leave copies of those books with the committee in order that you may see if this is in all my writings.

I am glad, therefore, Mr. Chairman, of this opportunity to clear my name. Of course it was not criminal for anybody to be pro-German after the war broke out, any more than to be pro-British. Of course our President admonished us to be neutral; a difficult thing, because everybody has his prejudices. That is, nobody can be put to the bar for believing that Germany would win the war, or hoping that Germany would win the war. I have known many honorable men, Mr. Chairman, American born, who thought so. I know an admiral in the Navy, one of the most patriotic men in the country, who predicted from the beginning that Germany would win the war by land and sea, and who evidently hoped that it would; and I trust that he is now agreeably disappointed.

But that was not the side I took, Mr. Chairman. However honorable and free from blame that may have been for other people, it could not have been free from blame for me if I had taken it, because I was on the other side. And that was in spite of certain prepossessions. I was a student in Germany 37 years ago; spent a year and a half in German universities, and also some time in an institution in Paris.

Senator NELSON. Did you ever do any dueling while you were a student in a German university?

Mr. HART. I witnessed dueling, and that was one of the things I did not like about Germany. I thought I might as well go and see a lot of steers slaughtered in a slaughterhouse as to see those fellows chopping each other's faces to pieces.

Senator NELSON. Then, if you will allow me to break in on your statement, can you see any reason for our youth going to round out their education in German universities rather than in our own country?

Mr. HART. I thought I got a good deal more out of the time I spent in Paris than out of what I spent in Germany. Germany was still strong then, however. It has lost its savor in that respect also, now. There are no eminent professors of history in Germany now.

Senator NELSON. Would you recommend our youth going to German universities to round off their education, now?

Mr. HART. I should not at present, because there are educational institutions in France and England where the results are very much superior in general effect.

Senator NELSON. Do you not think we have got it in this country?

Mr. HART. Well—got it? I did not catch it. I beg pardon.

Senator NELSON. Do you not think we have got as big educational advantages in this country as they have there?

Mr. HART. I might be thought as praising myself in answering that question. But, of course, we have. The best and most efficient universities in the world are American universities; but that does not mean that there are not students in American universities that can learn much in other countries, just as foreigners can learn much in American universities.

Senator NELSON. They can learn more here than anywhere else, can they not?

Mr. HART. I do not think it is capable of being estimated. I certainly learned more than I learned in any foreign country.

Senator NELSON. Yes.

Mr. HART. I beg that the members of the committee will ask me questions at any point.

Senator NELSON. Excuse me for interrupting you.

Mr. HART. No, sir—please interrupt.

Furthermore, I took my doctorate at the University of Freiburg in 1883, and it was no chromo degree. I worked with Prof. von Holst and in his last days he told me he wished it was possible for him to come and lay his bones in this land, because of his admiration for Americans. He felt that it was the country that was really his own. He was a man who had objections to certain things in his own country.

Senator NELSON. Did you give any attention to Treitschke on history?

Mr. HART. Curiously enough, I went to hear him in Berlin. I thought he was a good deal of a prig, and I pointed out 27 mistakes that I thought I had detected in his lectures on English history. and, do you know, the man never answered me? That was the extent of my connection with that man.

Furthermore, in 1914, before the war began, I was designated as Harvard exchange professor to go to Berlin in the year 1915. I have not been there. That was a service that had been performed like Prof. Hadley, of Yale, or Prof. Schofield, the Canadian, of Harvard College, and it indicated, of course, the appointment of a man that was interested in Germany, and at that time not hostile.

Senator NELSON. I want to say to you, as an excuse for interjecting this interruption—

Mr. HART. Yes, sir.

Senator NELSON (continuing). That I have discovered out in Minnesota that young men who have been to the German universities seemed to be affected with German ideas of government here, during the war. One of them, for instance, said that it was a horrible thing to deprive the German children of milk, and that we were a terribly cruel country. He had studied at a German university. And so I discovered in many instances that those who had studied in German universities were possessed with German ideas of government, and were not, from my standpoint, as loyal and patriotic as they ought to be.

Now, do you not think it is a dangerous thing for our students to go over there and imbibe that system of theirs; I mean, their political system?

Mr. HART. I do not think the ordinary student in a German university gets much politics. He may get some beer——

Senator NELSON. Yes; and pumpernickel.

Mr. HART (continuing). Yes; and see the duelling; but to my knowledge three or four of the men who are now on the steamer George Washington have been in German universities, and I suppose that the presumption is that they came to understand the 'critter.' They can be especially helpful because they have been in Germany and speak and read German and know something of the people, and I presume they do not like it.

Nevertheless, despite those prepossessions, I did not favor Germany. For one reason, I never could stand the Prussian lieutenants when I was in Germany. I hated the fit of their trousers. [Laughter.] Second, because I was satisfied from the start that Germany had brought on the war; that she was responsible for the great outbreak.

Furthermore, the invasion of Belgium went against the grain. I very early took an opportunity of writing a long article in the New York Times, pointing out how it was against law and humanity. And then their massacres in Serbia, and also especially in Armenia, because the Germans are responsible for the death of a million people in Armenia; and finally the sinking of the Lusitania and their refusal to make any atonement; and their general brutal way of carrying on the war; and it quite wrought on my mind. I could not stand it. No decent man could stand it, it seemed to me. But that was a very different thing from believing, and for a long time I did not believe that the United States would have to go in; and I did not believe until a year before we declared war, it was not until then that the conviction began to come over me, that we would have to take part.

Senator NELSON: Did it not dawn on you, Professor, from the beginning of the war, that if Germany was successful in swallowing Belgium and destroying France and hamstringing England and getting control of everything in Europe, we would be the next victim, and that therefore it was in a certain measure our war as well as theirs?

Mr. HART. Senator Nelson, if you had the time to turn over that set of my works, you would find that principle, exactly, set forth here.

Senator NELSON. I am glad to hear it.

Mr. HART. And during the war I published several books. Here is one called The War In Europe. I am going to leave it for the files of the committee.

Senator STERLING. What was the date of its publication?

Mr. HART. October 17, 1914. It appeared early in the year 1915. That book is a general review of the nations at war, and the causes of the war, and it was, I must say, I think now, a good deal too neutral. If we had known what we now know about the actual responsibility—if we had had the proofs of the responsibility—of Germany, if we had known what Germany would do in all the conquered lands, if we had had the Lusitania sinking to deal with, I would not have tried to be so impartial and neutral. That, however, is an impartial and neutral book in which there are some things on which Germany is criticized, but in general I must say it is a colorless book, and I wish now that there had been a little more paint in it.

Senator NELSON. May I interrupt you right there, Professor?

Mr. HART. Certainly.

Senator NELSON. You recall the fact of the great brutality and barbarism of the German Army in Belgium in 1914 during their invasion when they rushed through Belgium; and do you recall the fact that there were a lot of German professors who signed a circular letter of some kind.

Mr. HART. Yes.

Senator NELSON. I can not describe the details.

Mr. HART. Yes.

Senator NELSON. Exonerating the Army and denying all those barbarous acts to Belgium? Do you recall that fact?

Mr. HART. Yes.

Senator NELSON. What was your view of it?

Mr. HART. It was one of the things that most set me against Germany, because those were the men who ought to have protested; and, so far as I can see, Senator, no body of responsible people in Germany to-day has protested against those outrages.

Senator NELSON. And there is where their leading men, their leading professors and ministers of the gospel, have failed to meet their responsibility.

Mr. HART. All German professors in the last 30 years have been public officials.

Senator NELSON. Yes.

Mr. HART. They could not have held their jobs if they had not preached the doctrine prescribed by their government; and therefore, when the time came and they were called upon to sign a document, they just had to do it. I do not mean morally they had to. They might have resigned or they might have cut their throats before they signed such a thing as that.

Senator STERLING. I want to ask you whether any part of that book or any chapters of that book appeared as magazine articles before the book was published?

Mr. HART. I do not think any part of this did. I wrote other magazine articles on other phases, but I think none of them were incorporated here. The book is at your service.

The next book I wrote is entitled "Problems of Readjustment," which is a composite. I will send you a copy down. It is made up of essays by various people, the point being, What is going to happen to the United States after the war? There is not very much about the conduct of the war in that book.

Then comes this book which is entitled "The Monroe Doctrine; An Interpretation." I see the preface is dated November 4, 1915. I finished the book and sent it to the press then. In that book I took occasion to criticize the German policy in America with reference to the Monroe doctrine, and there is a chapter upon the German doctrine which treats of Germany in Venezuela and danger from Germany.

Senator NELSON. Will you excuse me for interrupting you?

Mr. HART. Yes.

Senator NELSON. Did you have anything in it about the Argentine—Germany's invasion of the Argentine?

Mr. HART. You mean the colonists coming in there?

Senator NELSON. Yes, in large numbers; and German propaganda.

Mr. HART. Yes; certainly. But the main point that I laid down was that there was not room for Germany in the United States or in the two Americas, and if the Germans did intend anything in that direction in America, the United States eventually would have to protect itself. (Reading:)

If the Empire, now or hereafter, should fancy a colony in North or South America it will not be held back by Monroe's declaration. * * *

Nor is the future of California or Texas secured simply by being geographically a part of the United States, but by the ultimate ability of the United States as a Nation to hold on to them. * * *

Germany is the one power that has enough physical force and a broad enough ambition to give any chance of success in Latin America. Against Germany, therefore, more than any other nation on earth, all the American powers are seeking some rallying cry which would enable them to make head if danger came upon them.

Those are the two books written in the early part of the war by me.

As soon as the war broke out I entered upon the preparation of these two books, the first a Handbook on the War for Public Speakers [indicating book], and the second entitled "America at War: a Handbook of Patriotic Education References." This is made up of extracts from various sources. If it could be more distinctly anti-German, if there could be a greater effort made to show what the Germans said about themselves and the character that they gave themselves, if there could have been a greater appeal for protecting the United States and civilization against the Germans then I was at fault, because that is what I meant to put in those books.

It is a curious fact—not a curious fact, but it is an obvious fact—that I have had personal relations with people mentioned in the lists, because many of them are men of national reputation; but there were five different pro-Germans, several of whom were the most intense pro-German agents, with whom I have had some relations. Now, of course, if I were pro-German in the period before the war these are the men with whom I should naturally form relations.

There is one of those men who has been an intimate friend of mine for 40 years, Prof. Kuno Francke. I knew him in Germany 40 years ago. He has long been naturalized and is identified with this country. He announced, long before the war, that if war broke out he was an American, and he stood by his country; and his son is to-day in the military service of the United States. I have always found him an upright man. His views and mine upon the responsibility and character of Germany, however, were widely different, and we simply had to agree that we should disagree upon the question.

Senator NELSON. What view did he take?

Mr. HART. Well, he was German born, and he had been very active in the effort to unite the Germans in this country.

Senator NELSON. Did he justify Germany going into the war?

Mr. HART. Yes; he did. But he could not stand Belgium. That always stuck in his throat. He always said that was absolutely unjustified. He could not stand for it.

Senator NELSON. Did he deny that Germany began the war?

Mr. HART. He thought the war was part of a general world movement. He thought Germany was put upon. Undoubtedly he did so think.

The others are Münsterberg, von Mach, Heinrich Albert, and another gentleman, whom I will mention presently.

Münsterberg was my colleague. He was the open agent of Germany for 18 years. I find it hard to think that he entered into any secret propaganda before the war, because his open propaganda was so clear and frank. He never was naturalized. He considered himself a German to the last moment of his life. He is dead. He died about a year ago; and this is not a place for criticism upon that man, except to say that we had a controversy in the columns of the New York Times. His point was that the German-Americans came over here for the sake of spreading Germanism, and mine was that they came over here to become American citizens; and he did not like that kind of controversy, and the result was that from that time on we never had any personal relations.

The next is Edmund von Mach, who was properly characterized as a German agent. Von Mach was a neighbor of mine in Cambridge, although I hardly knew him. In going over these papers I chanced upon a note that von Mach wrote me early in 1915, asking me if I could arrange a joint debate between him and President Eliot. I did not arrange it.

Early in the war there was a meeting of the Economic Club, of Providence.

Senator NELSON. You spoke about a certain debate. Was that about the war?

Mr. HART. Yes; in Providence. Von Mach took one side and I another. These are two men, von Mach and Münsterberg, that are acknowledged agents of the German Government, and somehow they and I did not agree.

These minutes are somewhat arid, and I think I may relate this. The last time I saw von Mach I met him on the street. I think it was in the spring of 1915. He said, "I feel very unhappy to-day. I am very gloomy." I said, "What for?" He said, "Oh, the destruction of London." I said, "London is not destroyed. You had better cheer up." He said, "Oh, no; but it is going to be." "When?" "The 15th of next month." "How is it going to be done?" "By Zeppelins. A fleet of 12 Zeppelins." I said, "That is very interesting. How are they going to do it?" He said, "They are going to come over London on a dark and foggy night when the wind is blowing hard." I said, "Well, I have been in London a great deal and I know something about the weather there, and while I have known fogs and also high winds in London, they never come together." "But it has got to be so." "Why?" "Because then the firemen can not put out the fires." [Laughter.] You see, the Germans needed a dark and stormy night when it blew hard and there was a fog, and therefore they were going to have it. I think we may dismiss von Mach.

Next is Heinrich Albert, and he is the Machiavelli of the whole thing, apparently. I met him in Cambridge once or twice. He was the finest gentleman you ever saw. He was such an exquisite gentleman that it lost its effect.

Senator NELSON. He was like the man that Byron describes when he says "He was the mildest-mannered man that ever scuttled ship or cut a throat." [Laughter.]

Mr. HART. Yes. Heinrich Albert came here November 13, 1914. That was pretty early in the war; five months after the war broke out. He spoke in defense of the German invasion of Belgium. I noticed one telegram from J. W. Beacham that called attention to it, and I expressed my opinion of a nation that would take possession of a country and then leave it to starve. I said that the Germans would have to feed the Belgians, or practically be read out of the category of civilized nations, and I never have seen Heinrich Albert since that day or had any communication from him.

Now, let me speak of the other German-American, because I believe it is the key to my name being upon this list.

Mr. Bielaski is an obliging man, I take it, but he did not know what a service he was rendering me by quoting from von Bernstorff a passage in which he says that they can not get along with the German-American Alliance on account of the management, and he says, "This new German University Alliance is doing us a lot of good." "German University Alliance," I said to myself. "Ah! I know what that is. That is Otto Merkel, of New York." Let me give you my history of this, and what is the reason for my being on that list.

A person named Otto Merkel wrote to me asking me to join a new society, to be made up of persons who had been students in German universities—a German university alliance—and it was going to be a good thing all around; but somehow I did not like it, and I did not join. Mr. Merkel came to Cambridge. I have a distinct picture of the way the man looked. That must have been it. It was a long time ago, and the details had quite gone out of my mind.

Senator STERLING. What was the date?

Mr. HART. Well, it must have been in 1914. The thing did not come home to me until after I had started away from home, so that I did not search for the correspondence. I am inclined to think that I have got his letters; and if so, when I get home I would like to send them down and put them before the committee. However, it was inconsequential to me, and I may have destroyed them. He came and specially urged me to join the league. The point of it was, I did not like the looks of that. It looked entirely too German to me. Let me explain how it came about. Edmund von Mach published a book of the correspondence of various parties before the war, with comments. That book was suppressed on the ground that it had been discovered that his notes were unfair, and that they gave a wrong color, and Merkel wrote to me offering me $200 if I would examine that book and send them, apparently for the University Alliance, and possibly for his superiors, a critique. He did not ask me to falsify; but if you take $200 for a purpose of that kind the presumption is that you will give something that your employers want. I did not take the $200 and did not write the critique. I said that if I had anything to say I would examine the book and send a note to Von Mach. I never did that, because I said I did not want to be mixed up with German-American clans.

Now, what became of Otto Merkel? I never saw him again, and it had quite gone out of my mind until about a year ago it was announced in the newspapers that Otto Merkel had been arrested in New York. He appeared to be an unusual person, inasmuch as he lived in three different flats. Whether he lived there all the time or lived alone did not appear in the newspaper story. The Government considered him a dangerous alien, and I believe he is now interned.

Now, Mr. Chairman, it looks to me as though the name of Albert Bushnell Hart appeared upon a list of people that were to be tried out, and it is a great satisfaction to me that if that was the case and that man was the agent of the try-out, it was absolutely unsuccessful from start to finish.

Mr. Chairman, let me say again how much I appreciate this opportunity of putting my activities upon record. I have prepared, and will ask to be inserted in the record, some extracts from my writings, beginning on August 2, the day after war broke out, in which I expressed the belief that the cause of the war was that the ruling elements in Austria-Hungary were so furious at the sudden growth of Slav power that they would run any risks to destroy the only independent Slavic kingdom west of Russia. I said:

The Germans intended to use Belgium as their highway into France, treaty or no treaty, international law or no international law.

On September 23, in the Outlook, I declared:

All of them (the Germans) stood ready at any time to accept the decisions of their war lord and his counsellors that the country was in danger. No one can doubt that the German nation is completely unified in its determination to push the present war with every means, usual and unusual, for the defense of Fatherland and the expansion of the German Empire.

The war on the part of Germany is a national war in which almost every thinking man, woman and child is involved. The only people that ever protested against the war were some of the Social Democrats and a few of the intellectuals and a few professors, some of whom, I believe, felt it better and safer to live in Switzerland than in the country that they had criticized.

Senator STERLING. May I call attention to one quotation here in your book, The War in Europe. Beginning on page 137, at the bottom of the page, you say:

So far as the published dispatches and our imperfect knowledge of the circumstances go, it is proved that Emperor William would have held his hand for a few days if Russian mobilization had not seemed to him a warlike act directed against Germany. Whether Austria would in those few days have come to an understanding which would practically have nullified her ultimatum against Serbia is a question to which no answer is written, even in the books of the Fates.

Now, what I wanted to ask in connection with that is whether, after the knowledge we have now, it is believed to have been proved that Emperor William would have held his hand a few days if Russian mobilization had not begun?

Mr. HART. Certainly not. That is dated October, 1914, two months after the war began. We now know that the war was set up, and for about that time. We know it is absolutely proved where the responsibility is. But I trust you will not go through that book and discover how many cases there are of judgments, made in October, 1914, that were not verified.

I will simply make a few more quotations from this list, because these quotations are brought together to show that from the beginning of the war my own influence was against the Germans.

Might I ask you to read the last passage in the preface of that book from which you have just quoted?

Senator STERLING (reading):

While sympathizing with all the peoples involved, there is one nation in favor of which I feel an unalterable partiality: it is the United States of America, which has her anxieties and interests also in the tremendous struggle.

Is that it?

Mr. HART. That is it, exactly. Until it became evident that the United States must be involved, my theory was, my belief was, that the interests of the United States came first; that they were the things to look after. I believed that those interests required a stiffer attitude in regard to the treatment of our neutral trade by Great Britain. I believed that our doctrine of the freedom of the seas would have justified us in protesting against action by the allies. You will find in various places in my books, however, and in my writings, a distinction made between the capture of ships of the allies without the loss of life, and the subsequent payment for ship and cargo, usually to the satisfaction of the owner, and the German practice of destroying innocent men, women, and children, and neutral products.

Senator NELSON. Coming to the doctrine of the freedom of the seas that we hear so much about, Professor, is it not a matter of fact that in time of peace, before any war, the sea was free and open, and that England made no obstructions to navigation in any respect?

Mr. HART. That is absolutely true, and that is one of the things—

Senator NELSON. Now, then, if that is true, when you come to the doctrine of the freedom of the seas, it must pertain to a state of war. Where a country is at war, has it not the right to engage in a blockade against its adversaries?

Mr. HART. Oh, certainly; the United States exercised that right in the Civil War.

Senator OVERMAN. What do you mean by "freedom of the seas"? I would like to have a definition of that.

Mr. HART. Mr. Chairman, the United States of America is waiting for an official definition of the term "freedom of the seas." It would be hardly safe for a layman to commit himself on that point in advance.

Senator NELSON. Do you not know that there have been less restrictions on navigation, on merchantmen, in Great Britain than in almost any other country on the face of the earth?

Mr. HART. Ten years ago I went around the world, and everywhere I found German ships in British harbors. The Germans claim that their commerce was abridged is absolutely without ground. The British admitted them to every colony on equal terms, and there was no discrimination against them. They were selling lots of goods.

Senator NELSON. So that this question of "freedom of the seas" that we have been talking about can only pertain to the conditions that exist during a state of war. Do you want freedom of the seas then? Do you want to cut off the right of blockade in time of war? That is the question, is it not?

Mr. HART. I submit that is not the question before this jurisdiction.

Senator NELSON. That may be, but I would like to hear your views. We hear so much about it, and we poor legislators who are sitting here like to get all the light we can from you intellectual men, you professors.

Mr. HART. Freedom of the seas in time of peace ought not to depend upon the good will of any one paramount sea power. It ought to be a matter of world agreement. Great Britain has, for a century, behaved handsomely in regard to freedom of the seas, but the United States is entitled to share in the definition and the application of freedom of the seas in time of peace.

Freedom of the seas in time of war means some freedom of neutral trade.

I was very much opposed to the British restrictions involving the stoppage of all vessels whose cargoes might ultimately and indirectly reach Germany, because I thought that was a principle that was useful for the United States in time of war.

Furthermore, I am perfectly free to say that I am one of those who have never believed in the abolition of the right of the capture of private property at sea, provided you save life. The capture of merchant vessels is one of the most merciful kinds of warfare—unless you are in Germany—to civilized powers.

Senator NELSON. Do you think, Professor, that one of the most important things they could do in this settlement would be to prohibit all submarine warfare upon merchant vessels, and limit it in that way?

Mr. HART. You mean on belligerents vessels?

Senator NELSON. I mean on all vessels. I mean that submarine warfare should stop as to all merchant vessels, and should be limited to war vessels. Do you not think that the system of warfare by submarine vessels is of that character that there never can be protection of the lives of the men who are navigating the ships, and therefore that it ought to be abolished in respect to merchantmen?

Mr. HART. That is the principle that was once put forward by the State Department in the discussions with Germany, but afterwards they forebore.

Senator NELSON. What are your views on that question?

Senator STERLING. I beg to differ with you there, Professor. Possibly I may be mistaken, but my thought was this, that the State Department was making inquiry of the other powers as to whether or not we had not better disarm merchantmen and not permit them to be armed for defensive purposes, according to the old rule, even.

The German Admiralty order of February, 1916, was to the effect that all belligerent merchantmen, whether armed for purely defensive purposes or not, should be sunk without notice or warning; and upon that order being made, our State Department then began making inquiry of the other powers as to whether or not we had not better accede to the German Admiralty order.

Mr. HART. I believe that we are dealing with two different subjects. There is a dispatch, presumably written by the President's hand, in which he calls the attention of the German Government to the fact that, as Senator Nelson has suggested, submarine warfare is incompatible with a civilized way of carrying on war—that is, against merchantmen; that you can not surround it with the necessary protection.

But the United States did not press that consideration afterward. That I believe to be true.

Senator STERLING. You are right in regard to that; they did not press that.

Mr. HART. Now, as to the submarine destruction of merchant ships. I can not see that that stands on a different footing, except that the submarines have no boats and no quarters in which they can take crews. If you have got to destroy a ship and set the people out 500 miles from land in open boats, and if you then shell and destroy the boats, of course the destruction is absolutely unallowable.

I should be very glad indeed if the nations would agree that submarines should not be used except as warships.

Senator NELSON. Would not that be one of the most important principles that could be inaugurated in that direction?

Mr. HART. It is a very important principle, Senator; only it does not touch the case of a very rich nation which builds 100 submarines secretly and then suddenly declares war, and out are your submarines, law or no law. We have to protect ourselves against outlaws among the nations.

Senator NELSON. That brings you back to the league of nations again?

Mr. HART. Possibly it leads in that way.

Senator NELSON. You are familiar with the Capt. Fryatt case, are you not?

Mr. HART. Yes; a case of murder; and I wish the murderer could be duly caught and hanged—not shot, but hanged.

Now, Mr. Chairman, that is all I have to say, except that I was going to read one or two more of these extracts before I turned the list in.

December 27, 1914, which can not be very far distant from the time when this list in the Fuehr papers was prepared, I wrote an article on Belgian neutrality in which I declared:

We are absolutely sure what the Germans would have done to Belgium, or any other nation that stood in their way, because it would be precisely what Germany has done to Belgium.

If Belgium is to be wiped off the map in order that the German Empire may feel safer, what is the protection of any power which in military and naval strength is inferior to Germany?

And from that time throughout 1915 and 1916 I continued to write in the same direction.

It is a great pleasure, Mr. Chairman, to have been able to place these remarks upon your record, in order that my family after me may have the satisfaction of knowing that when their father was called in question he was able—and I trust that you will agree with me that he was able—to show that the presence of his name upon a list drawn up by a spy, drawn up in secret, is no evidence in itself of relations with the Germans or sympathy with their cause; and that as against the continued protest by word, by documents, in various patriotic organizations, it is not worthy of consideration.

I have been and am now a member of the Massachusetts Constitutional Convention; was elected in 1917, just about the time that we declared war; and it is perfectly clear that the voters of Cambridge and the adjacent district had no suspicion that they were voting for a pro-German.

I have the confidence of my friends and my constituents, and I hope that upon the minds of the committee I have succeeded in establishing, not an alibi, but an absolute disproof, that the name in question had any connection with the Germans, the German Government, or the German propaganda, or that I have been at any time from the breaking out of the war anything but a true American; and, as the point came where it was possible to see what the responsibilities were, a consistent, permanent anti-German.

Senator STERLING. I would just like to ask you one question Professor, as to your opinion in regard to the influence of German thought, as German thought is known through the exchange of professors, and as it is known through the attendance of American students at German universities, as to the influence of that thought upon American thought and upon American institutions?

Mr. HART. The Germans were the first people to introduce into universities the idea of research. That is what made the German universities great. That is, you could take up anything in which you were interested, and push it, and publish your results, and add to the body of science. That is, their universities were academies. And their principle has been very fruitful in this country. It is unnecessary to follow it alone in Germany. It is a world-wide principle.

German thought, as illustrated by Goethe and the great poets and the great philosophers—Kant, and those men—has been of great service to the world.

The German thought that is hateful and harmful is the German belief which is indoctrinated in the idea that there is something called a "state" which is higher than the people, superior to them, and which is not subject to any laws of God or man; that the State can do what it likes. That is the most harmful doctrine that can be.

I have known a great many American students who have been in Germany in past years, but I do not know that I ever knew more than one or two who seemed to have been indoctrinated. I have in mind a professor of a university who lived in Germany in his youth, and was invited to luncheon by the President, and it turned his head. His name is in that list—and it ought to be there.

Have I sufficiently answered?

Senator STERLING. Well, it occurred to me, however, that some of these students abroad, and some who afterwards became professors in some of our schools and universities, had the wrong impression altogether of Germany, and of the real German mind; and whether they really believed it, or whether it was pedantry on their part, they were in their schools and in their work in the schools parading the virtues of Germany, industrially, economically, and so forth.

Mr. HART. I left Germany 35 years ago, and at that time the country was utterly different from what it was afterwards. It was rather a poor country, an intellectual country, and I never found, in my teachers—not having the advantage of Treitschke's lectures on politics—I never found anything that I thought could be objected to.

The whole nature of the country changed, however. They made a great deal of money; they built up their external trade; and then they developed the internal system of making the professors simply the outriders of the military cortege. That is the real difficulty with German thought.

Let me tell you a tale, if you will, Mr. Chairman, that was told me by one of my colleagues. He said he was working in the Botanical Museum in Bonn, and he had a copy of Punch in which there was a cartoon of the Emperor, and he happened to leave it around, and the director of the gymnasium found it, and he was almost in tears. He said, "How could you do such a thing as that? If they found that here the Government would take away our appropriation."

What are you going to do about a condition like that? Why, of course, you put people in fetters; you put all the students and the whole population in fetters by such a thing.

Thank God, the world is aroused at last to what that teaching and that influence is, and I do not think we need be afraid of any further German influence upon American thought.

Senator STERLING. I am glad to hear you say so.

Maj. HUMES. Doctor, I would like to ask you if you have any knowledge of an organized effort on the part of the Germans in this country, or the German sympathizers in this country, to dominate the school textbooks, to secure propaganda in those textbooks?

Mr. HART. About five years ago, before the war began, there were some evidences that might be construed in that way. The German-American Alliance began to pay attention to such matters, and schoolbook publishers spoke to me about the matter. They took the ground, however, not based on German doctrines, that they thought that the German immigrants ought to be better represented; that there had been German soldiers in the Revolution—Steuben, and so on—and that the textbooks did not pay sufficient attention to them.

Maj. HUMES. We have some information, Doctor, on that subject. Can you furnish us with any information as to the publishers to whom you have referred and as to the activities that you have in mind; not necessarily right at this moment, on the stand, but can you hand me some memoranda that may assist us in investigation along that line?

Mr. HART. I think I could do so.

Maj. HUMES. We would like to have that.

Mr. HART. Take my own textbook. I am of the impression that the American Book Co. sent me a letter that they had received from some German, and said, "What about this?" I have written three textbooks on American history, and anybody may examine them without discovering any pro-German influence.

Maj. HUMES. What do you know as to the activities in that line in connection with books published by Allen & Baker?

Mr. HART. I never heard anything about that at all. I have never published anything with them, so that I do not know.

Maj. HUMES. Has it occurred to you that possibly one of the reasons for the inclusion of your name in the list was some statements that were made in this first book of yours?

Mr. HART. That depends on the date of the list, of course. This book was put on the market early in 1915. I am unable to say when the list was made up.

Maj. HUMES. It was published in 1914. October 17, 1914, is the date given here.

Mr. HART. That was when the book went out of my hands; but after that it had to be printed; and the date set down is 1915; it did not reach the market until then.

Maj. HUMES. There are in this book a great many extracts that are favorable to German contentions, are there not?

Mr. HART. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. And after reading this book one is left with the impression that the author's notion is that the war was rather forced upon Germany than that Germany forced the war upon the allies, is he not?

Mr. HART. Well, that was not my impression. I must say frankly that a person might read the book and feel that it stood up so straight that it leaned over backwards.

Maj. HUMES. It is our understanding that the list in question was prepared early in the year 1915.

Mr. HART. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. Then may it not be a fact that the sentiments in this book were at least partially responsible for your having been included in this list?

Mr. HART. Well, I might think so, but on December 27, 1914, which must have been before the list was published, after the book was completed, I wrote an article in the New York Times, which appears to have been widely circulated, which was a slam upon the German occupation of Belgium—the violation of neutrality. That was the particular point I was considering. I think anybody reading that would not suppose that I was a friend of Germany.

Maj. HUMES. In your discussion in that book of the violation of Belgium you leave the matter somewhat in doubt as to just where the rights of the parties were, do you not? In other words, you raise the question, and leave it after raising it, in effect that the state of war had created a situation which made it impossible to determine the proprieties of German conduct until after the war was over? Is not that substantially your position in this book?

Mr. HART. Well, I do not think that is an unfair statement; but, of course, even two months after that book was written, we discovered that the Germans were in Belgium indefinitely. That is, when it came to that point, after they were pushed back from the Marne, it was the hope of most people in the United States, I think, that the Germans would be pushed out, would be defeated, and that that question would disappear. But, as time went on, it became evident that they were not only settled in Belgium, but that they were sucking its blood.

Maj. HUMES. And do you not, in this book, infer that while England protested against the violation of Belgian neutrality by Germany, there is a serious doubt as to whether she would have objected to the violation of Belgium's neutrality by France or by any other country, and do you not leave the reader under the impression that England's taking issue with Germany on the violation of Belgium was entirely due to her animosity toward Germany, rather than to her desire to maintain Belgium's neutrality?

Mr. HART. My point there was, and I think it is perfectly sound, that it was a mistake to suppose that it was the violation of Belgian neutrality that caused England to go in. England was already pledged, and must have gone in, anyhow.

What I am discussing there is that, so far as England's attitude was concerned, it was not dependent on Belgium.

Maj. HUMES. In this book you also make the flat assertion that the Emperor of Germany did not want war, and point out, as evidence of that fact, the fact that he was in Norway at the time of the Austrian ultimatum to Serbia?

Mr. HART. We now know that that was a camouflage; but we did not know it then.

Maj. HUMES. I understand that. I am only pointing out these matters, professor, with a view of suggesting that possibly the statements made in your first publication led, to some extent, to the inclusion of your name in this list of persons whom the German agents thought they could utilize for propaganda purposes in this country in connection with their writings.

Mr. HART. That may be; and if I had known what I knew six months after that book was written, it never would have been written in that tone.

I think you are right in saying that the book is too neutral, too impartial, and too colorless; but it was written at that time.

Capt. LESTER. May I ask you a question, professor? Do you recall a dinner in Boston which you attended, where Dr. Albert was present?

Mr. HART. Yes.

Capt. LESTER. Do you recall when that was?

Mr. HART. November 23.

Capt. LESTER. November 23, 1914?

Mr. HART. November 23, 1914; yes.

Capt. LESTER. Was there not some controversy at that dinner over the subject of the war, in which you took part with Dr. Albert in a discussion?

Mr. HART. Yes.

Capt. LESTER. What was the controversy?

Mr. HART. Over the occupation of Belgium, which he defended.

Capt. LESTER. What was the outcome of the controversy?

Mr. HART. Well, a good many of the gentlemen who were there, at the time and subsequently told me that they thought the outcome was that I had put him out of court.

Capt. LESTER. Was it an open debate?

Mr. HART. No, it was a succession of addresses; only I came after him.

Capt. LESTER. Was there any ill feeling brought about between you and Dr. Albert as a result of that controversy at the time?

Mr. HART. Why, we said goodnight, and passed the time of day, and I never saw him again.

Capt. LESTER. Could you possibly have left the impression with him that you were rather friendly disposed toward Germany?

Mr. HART. It may be; because he was a German. But certainly there was nothing in what I said to warrant that. That was not the impression of the audience. There is a telegram here from the secretary of that club on that occasion, and I have newspaper reports, if you would like to see them; I have one or two newspaper clippings.

Capt. LESTER. Yes; I have seen the newspaper reports.

Senator OVERMAN. Had you known Dr. Albert before?

Mr. HART. I had known him before that dinner. I had met him a few days before, in Cambridge.

Capt. LESTER. Did you have any correspondence with him afterwards?

Mr. HART. I do not remember any, at all. Of course I might have had.

Capt. LESTER. The reason I asked you is that it was a part of the system, of which, of course, Dr. Albert was the real head, where their agents came in contact with prominent people—or people in the literary field, especially—that a report would come back to the bureau, and his name would be placed on the list as a future recipient of literature, and possibly a candidate for their useful purposes at that time.

Do you recall whether anything was said at this dinner in which you could have given Dr. Albert the idea that you would like to hear more from him?

Mr. HART. I have no remembrance of it. The point in my mind was: Here is this man. He is defending the German occupation of Belgium. I want to make it clear that the point I made was the feeling of the people; that they had taken away their sustenance, and that if anything happened to the Belgians, the German Government would be held by the world responsible for their death; that they had to look after those people. And he said: "Of course they will do that."

Capt. LESTER. For your information, there is a list here, of which I have a photostat copy, where some hundreds of teachers and professors, and men in public life, were listed as regular subscribers to all of the German propaganda literature that was sent out; and that list was built up from occasions such as that which you have just described: that is, they solicited the literature sometimes, and at other times it was sent to them; and each time it was sent, there was a letter in which a controversy was invited, resulting in their connecting, in that way, many innocent people with the German propaganda, who received, periodically, all of their literature, and possibly never read it. But what I was trying to get at particularly was whether in your talk or your controversy with Dr. Albert, on that occasion, you gave him any reason to believe that you would welcome that kind of literature.

Mr. HART. I have no recollection whatever of it.

Senator OVERMAN. Did you receive any literature?

Mr. HART. Oh, yes. You used the term "subscriber," Captain?

Capt. LESTER. These are not subscribers. They are recipients. They never put their names down—not necessarily—on the list, but they received every publication that came through—some in German and some in English—and received, periodically, everything that was published relating to the German cause.

Do you recall how much you received, or how long it was sent to you?

Mr. HART. It kept coming, just as the English did, and the Belgian and the French, and I never knew where those things came from at all. They kept coming in the mail. Only it seemed to me, after a couple of years, that the Germans were not printing so much.

Capt. MORIARTY. I may say that I was present at that dinner which has been referred to, and that I sat two seats from Prof Hart. I was very anti-German from the beginning of the war, and it seemed to me, on that occasion, which was somewhat early in the winter of 1914, that Prof. Hart made a very strong defense of Belgium, in reply to Dr. Albert.

I remember the point, particularly, that Dr. Albert made in his discussion, that Germany had a right to invade a neutralized but not a neutral nation; in other words, that Germany would not have had a right to invade this country, being a neutral nation, but that Belgium had been neutralized, and Germany, as one of the parties who had neutralized that country, had a right to go in there; which was, as Prof. Hart pointed out on that occasion, a distinction without a difference.

Senator STERLING. In that connection, was not Germany a party to The Hague Convention of 1907?

Mr. HART. Whether they signed all the conventions or not, I can not say. There were a number of them, and my impression is that there were one or two that they did not sign.

Senator STERLING. Do you recall the convention in regard to the inviolability of the territory of any neutral nation by a belligerent?

Mr. HART. I believe that they did sign that convention, and that in an article on that subject I brought that out.

Senator OVERMAN. We are very much obliged to you for your statement, Doctor. Have you anything else that you would like to submit?

Mr. HART. Two or three of my friends are here, and I thought possibly they might express their opinion to the committee.

Senator OVERMAN. Do you desire to have anybody called?

Mr. HART. Yes; Col. Donges of the War Department is here, and Maj. Wambaugh of the War Department. Both of them have known me for years.

Senator OVERMAN. And they will testify to your patriotism?

Mr. HART. Yes; at that time. That is the issue.

Mr. STOWELL. Mr. Chairman, reference has been made to Mr. Merkel, and I would like to say a word or two referring to him, in connection with the matter which is before the committee.

STATEMENT OF MR. ELLERY C. STOWELL

Senator OVERMAN. Where are you from?

Mr. STOWELL. I am in Washington.

Senator OVERMAN. What is your connection in Washington?

Mr. STOWELL. I came here to do Government work, and was five days in the Government employ, and then an intimation came to me asking me to resign. That intimation came to me because I had criticized the Government before we went into the war. I did not intend to bring this matter in, but——

Senator OVERMAN. I want to find out who you are. That is all.

Mr. STOWELL. I thought we should go into the war earlier, when the allies were fighting Germany.

Senator OVERMAN. You have been in Washington ever since?

Mr. STOWELL. I criticized the administration for not going into the war earlier, and thereby became persona non grata, and the information came to me that they would like to have me get out. So I resigned. Therefore, at the present time, I am practicing law.

Senator OVERMAN. Where are you from?

Mr. STOWELL. I was formerly in Columbia. I was formerly associate professor of international law in Columbia.

Senator OVERMAN. What is your native State?

Mr. STOWELL. My native State is Massachusetts.

The only point I thought the committee might be interested to hear about was this matter of Otto Merkel; because I had some information in regard to this very matter, showing the subtle methods of that man, and I think that I hold the threads of some of those things that were done; and I telephoned the secret service in New York. One of their agents came to see me, and then telephoned me, afterwards, and told me that they had interned Merkel; and he told me, before it came out in the papers, about his having these different residences, and numberless suits of clothes and so forth in each, and that they thought he was a very dangerous man, and that they much appreciated the information that I had given them, by which they secured his internment.

May I go on and speak about this matter? Because it related to some of the things that Prof. Hart spoke about.

I had written a book on the war, which treated particularly of the fourteen days preceding the entrance into the war.

Senator STERLING. Our entrance into the war, or the beginning of the war?

Mr. STOWELL. The beginning of the war.

In consequence of that, I was applied to by Mr. Merkel, who was secretary of the German University League—if that is the correct name.

Mr. HART. "Alliance," was it not?

Capt. LESTER. "The German University League" is correct.

Mr. STOWELL. And he asked me if I would not study the book that Von Mach had put out—referred to by Prof. Hart—because they had elected Mr. von Mach as president of their organization, and he said, "If there is anything in this book that would indicate that Dr. von Mach is not such a man as we should want at the head of our organization, we feel that we ought to know it, and therefore I came to you, as an expert on this matter, and will ask you if you will not make the investigation."

I examined the names of this association, and felt that it was pro-German, naturally, and pro-German in an unfair way, among those men who were making a propaganda. However, there were many fine names among them.

I did not wish to get in any way involved in this German propaganda. At the same time, I had made it a principle always to give an opinion on international law matters, whenever I was requested to do so; and I did not like to turn down anybody who came to me and asked me, in a judicial capacity, more or less, to examine a book.

He said that they were willing to let me fix my compensation, if I would undertake this.

I thought the matter over, and talked it over with some of my colleagues, and felt that it was a very dangerous matter, one in which I might become involved, and have my name on some of these lists as a pro-German, which I did not want to do.

On the other hand, I felt that it was the courageous thing to do, and the right thing to do; and so I said I would do it, provided Mr. Merkel would meet the conditions which I laid down.

These conditions were that the payment to me should be so low that it would be evidently only a fair return for the time spent; secondly, that I should notify the other side—McMillan—of what I was doing, and ask them to make any observations that they might choose (you see, a suit was pending about this withdrawal) and, third, that the report that I found on this investigation might be published by me, whether the University League liked it or not. That seemed to me such a perfectly fair way of getting at it, and, more or less, would put this matter in a public way, that I told him if he wanted to take it on those conditions, that I would do it; and he said he would.

Senator OVERMAN. Who is that?

Mr. STOWELL. Otto Merkel.

Senator OVERMAN. How much compensation was paid to you?

Mr. STOWELL. The compensation to be fixed was $200—the same sum as that mentioned by Prof. Hart.

I would like to say that before this I had been offered a retainer by the German Embassy, or by lawyers representing the German Embassy, to take up the Appam case, and I had refused to enter into any of them, although I would have liked to have made that money, because I did not wish in any way to be involved in either side, but wanted to keep fair on these questions.

Senator NELSON. What was your opinion, that you finally gave, in this case?

Mr. STOWELL. Would you like to have me go through the whole thing? I will answer that—the matter comes out in that opinion—because several things which happened may be of particular interest to this committee.

I proceeded to read this book, which I had not looked at before, except to glance at it, and I found that it was a most atrocious piece of German propaganda. I say atrocious. That is a pretty strong word, but it was atrocious, because it was ably done, in certain respects, but it showed such a bias and twist that it showed the kind of mentality to which Prof. Hart referred as indicated by the fogs in London—it was befogged.

I was going along with this, and making a report which would have put the matter beyond any doubt, I think.

Just about when I was practically through with the work the rupture of our relations with Germany came, and when that rupture came I thought that the German University League would have no further use for this matter. I did not think it was proper at that time to go on with the relations, and so I wrote or telephoned Mr. Merkel—I forget which—suggesting that, as I had the report protically ready, I should turn it over to him, and that the League could give me half of the compensation for the work that I had done; and we closed the matter there.

Senator OVERMAN. Were you a member of the League?

Mr. STOWELL. No; I am not a member of the League. Mr. Merkel sent me a check for this $100. He sent me his personal check, as I remember. Then he came out to see me, and we discussed some matters, and I went into some of the questions of international law with him about the war.

I was told that Mr. Merkel was an American citizen. Then he told me, for the first time, that he was a German, although he had told me before that all the directors of this organization were Americans. He did not tell me that he was a German before. The impression I gathered was that the whole thing was American, although with German sympathies, of course.

Senator OVERMAN. I do not think we will hear you any further about this.

Senator NELSON. Just tell us what your opinion was—this opinion that you got the $100 for?

Mr. STOWELL. This was an opinion that this book——

Senator NELSON. The opinion about that book; yes?

Mr. STOWELL. That it was unfair, and that—I do not remember that I summarized the conclusion, but I put forth all this evidence of what these unfair instances were, so that it would be perfectly clear to anybody who read this that the book ought to be withdrawn by McMillan.

Senator STERLING. Did you characterize it as pro-German?

Mr. STOWELL. I put forth those instances. I do not remember that I characterized it as pro-German. But, Mr. Chairman, I got a communication from Mr. Merkel, that had been sent to a colleague of mine, that related to another point that Prof. Hart brought up, and I think it of very great importance; and then I telephoned, and on this Mr. Merkel was interned.

Senator OVERMAN. Well, I think that will do on that.

Now, Prof. Hart, who is it that you want called?

Mr. HART. Col. Donges and Maj. Wambaugh. Maj. Wambaugh has been an acquaintance and friend of mine for many years. I should just like to have him say what he thinks of my attitude toward the war.

TESTIMONY OF COL. EUGENE WAMBAUGH.

(The witness was sworn by the chairman.)

Senator NELSON. Are you in the Regular Army?

Col. WAMBAUGH. Commissioned in the National Army. They are said now to be one. There is said now to be but one Army. I am in the National Army, or was. I am assistant to the Judge Advocate General of the Army. I am Chief of the Division of Constitutional and International Law. In civil life I am a professor in the law school at Harvard University. I was in that service for 25 years until I was called into the Army.

Senator OVERMAN. How long have you been in the Army?

Col. WAMBAUGH. About 18 months ago. I was called in to Senator OVERMAN. Were you called or did you make application to the Judge Advocate General for a commission?

Col. WAMBAUGH. I applied for the commission when I saw that the war was going to break out. I was commissioned the day after the presidential election. My commission was held until that time because I was a presidential elector upon the Democratic ticket. If I had happened to be elected I should not have been able, I think, to serve in both capacities.

I was at the point of saying that I had been for 25 years in the Harvard Law School. That institution is in government largely separated from Harvard College, consequently I have not been a member of the same faculty with Prof. Hart. I think I will say that I have never been an intimate friend of his. I first saw him, I fancy, 42 years ago, when we were students, but not classmates. From that time until now I have hardly seen him, and for 25 years when I was actually in practice as a professor I saw him, of course, frequently. His subjects are much the same as mine. He teaches the history of government, whereas I teach constitutional law and international law. For that reason I have taken interest in his views. His views have never been mine on political matters. I am a Democrat. He is a Republican, who calls himself a Progressive; that is to say, he holds Democratic views, though he is unwilling to call himself a Democrat. I mention this to indicate that we differed in a friendly way for many years.

Senator NELSON. But the German propaganda was not involved, was it—

Col. WAMBAUGH. I shall come to that in an instant.

Senator NELSON (continuing). In this difference that you speak of between yourself and Prof. Hart?

Col. WAMBAUGH. No, indeed. Just after the war broke out in Europe I was employed by the Navy Department for two months as an adviser—I believe I was called special counsel to the State Department, on war problems. Consequently my attention was very actively called to the kind of questions in which this committee is interested. Of course I knew of the administration's position that we must all be neutral in expression and as far as possible in thought. But after I ceased to be in the public service—for I was with the State Department only two months, and then returned to the university, at the beginning of the university year—after I ceased to be in the public service I retained an acute interest in noticing the attitude of my neighbors, for this I conceded to be a matter of consequence. The neighborhood was distinctly anti-German, so much so that it did not sympathize with the neutral attitude of the administration.

Senator NELSON. What was your attitude, your mental attitude?

Col. WAMBAUGH. My mental attitude? There is but one mental attitude, Senator. It seems to me, and though I trust I did not mention it when I was in the public service, that mental attitude is hostility to any country which does what was done by the Germans in Belgium. There was but one side possible from the point of view of a lawyer, and I am simply a lawyer.

Now, I was leading up to this point, namely, that Prof. Hart, a most distinguished and learned and influential man, greatly respected in that community, was never for an instant classified as pro-German.

or anything of the sort. In that community a person with the slightest prejudice in favor of Germany would have been detected instantly. There was no such taint attaching to Prof. Hart's reputation, and as I had conversations with him myself from time to time, not often, perhaps half a dozen times, I am in a position to say that there was no such taint in his mind. Why, gentlemen, it is absurd that I or any other man should stand here to seem to defend the Americanism of a gentleman whose reputation in that regard is as good as that of any Member of either House of Congress, as good as that of any man who ever sat in any of our cabinets, and as good as the reputation of anyone who has been a President of the United States.

Senator OVERMAN. That will do. Who is the next man?

Mr. HART. Col. Donges.

TESTIMONY OF COL. RALPH W. E. DONGES.

(The witness was sworn by the chairman.)

Col. DONGES. I am now a lieutenant colonel in the United States Army, having been commissioned May 9, 1918, as lieutenant colonel in the National Army. Prior to that time, and for about four months, I was engaged in the office of Gen. Goethals in a civilian capacity.

Senator OVERMAN. You are in the Quartermaster Department?

Col. DONGES. No, sir; in the Division of Purchase, Storage, and Traffic of the General Staff, now attached to that division as a member of the War Department Board of Appraisers having to do with the appraisal of all property taken by compulsory process by the department.

Senator NELSON. Engaged in civilian work?

Col. DONGES. No; as a commissioned officer.

Senator NELSON. But you are doing civilian work?

Col. DONGES. Yes; in a sense, civilian work.

Senator NELSON. Clerical work?

Col. DONGES. Hardly; no, sir.

Senator NELSON. It is civilian work as distinguished from military work?

Col. DONGES. It is not field work, I am sorry to say. Prior to my commission in the Army I was a member of the bar in the State of New York. I resigned as president of the Public Utilities Commission of New Jersey to accept a commission in the Army, with a hope of more active service.

I have known Prof. Hart for some years back, and was associated with him as a governor or manager of an educational institution in the Middle West, and it was in connection with that work that I came in contact with him most, and for the last three or four years quite frequently.

Senator NELSON. What institution was that?

Col. DONGES. At Moosehart, Ill., a vocational educational institution where we are endeavoring to train about 500 or 600 boys and girls in useful occupations. Prof. Hart is one of the governors, and I am one of that board. We spent a great deal of time together; he and I were on many of the subcommittees of the board, meeting in New York quite frequently, as frequently as once a week, or once in two weeks, attending the monthly meeting of the entire board, as a rule; and during that time Dr. Hart and I frequently traveled from New York or Philadelphia—my home being in Camden, N. J.—we frequently traveled together out to Illinois, so that I had occasion to discuss in a very intimate and more or less confidential way questions relating to the war, both before the entrance of the United States into the war and after, and it was a shock to me to take up the paper the other day and see Dr. Hart's name mentioned as one of those who was identified in any way with any pro-German sentiment or propaganda. I instantly remarked to a friend that I believed Dr. Hart could and would defend himself here, because I was so thoroughly convinced from everything that he had said, privately and publicly, and to his friends discussing things together, when confidences are likely to be expressed, he had always taken a decidedly anti-German view.

Senator OVERMAN. Anybody else?

Mr. HART. I would like to call Mr. Charles A. McGee.

TESTIMONY OF MR. CHARLES A. MCGEE.

(The witness was sworn by the chairman.)

Senator OVERMAN. Where do you live?

Mr. MCGEE. San Diego, Cal. I am practicing law and have been for twenty odd years. I have known Prof. Hart, I would say, somewhat intimately for the last four years. I am at present the executive head of the Loyal Order of Moose, an institution with some 550,000 members, which is operating at Moosehart, about which Col. Donges has just addressed himself. On that board at one time were Hiram W. Johnson, of California, and Senator-elect Arthur Capper. I have known Prof. Hart in that work, in convention work, and in war work. I have talked with him, as has Col. Donges, confidentially. About this matter of being a real American, I have always classified him and thought of him as the ideally patriotic American citizen, his views sometimes tempered judicially as a historian. I never read what he characterizes as the neutral book, but have frequently used his handbook for speakers and have found much of real color and worthwhileness in that book.

Personally I would say that Prof. Hart is as close to the patriotic sense of the great membership in our order as any member in it, and we have been very active in war work, as the various departments know. The Fosdick committee, the Surgeon General, the State Department, and the secret-service department know of our work.

It was a year ago, I think, or thereabouts that we sent a commission abroad, and Prof. Hart was one of those who advocated the sending of that commission abroad, for the purpose of establishing a legion on the battle field, or home on the battle field, for the benefit of our boys. We have in the service about 50,000 from Canada and the United States.

Briefly summarizing the situation, in a rather broad acquaintance throughout this country, I can think of no man whom I consider and have reason to believe is more thoroughly in harmony with everything that America has stood for in this war, her aspirations, and her ideals, than has Prof. Hart.

Senator OVERMAN. Have you anybody else, Dr. Hart?

Mr. HART. No, sir. State's Attorney Broening is here from Baltimore, and I should be glad to call him, but I have known him a shorter time, and I think the committee has given me every facility, and I desire to express my thanks.

Senator OVERMAN. We are very glad to be able to do it.

Maj. HUMES. Here is one letter which I will read:

L. E. MILLER,
COUNSELLOR AT LAW,
192 Broadway, New York, Dec. 9th, 1918.

HON. LEE S. OVERMAN,
Chairman of Investigation Committee, of the United States Senate,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I notice in the papers that Chief Bielaski testifying about Mr. Untermeyer's purchase of the Warheit stock for the purpose of German propaganda, mentioned also my name as one of the parties interested in that purchase.

Again, Mr. Untermeyer replying to the charge of Chief Bielaski, and explaining the circumstances of his purchase of the Warheit stock, without naming me, tried to convey the impression that I have been fully aware of his motives, and that I, with full knowledge of the circumstances continued in the Warheit in my former capacity, as one of his co-owners.

As I am about to sail for Europe (for newspaper work) in a few days, and as I am now unable to foresee what further statements Mr. Untermeyer may make as to my part in the transaction, I beg to submit the following facts, easily to be verified and giving some light if not all the light on the transaction under your consideration.

After I was forced out of the Warheit, because of the pro-Ally attitude, from the first day of the war (August 1st 1914) I started a Jewish daily called "The Leader" in which I tried to continue my pro-Ally work among the Jews of America.

This happened in the spring of 1915 which, as the world knows, opened up as one of the most disastrous years for newspapers—new and old alike.

It so happened that Mr. Untermeyer's "friend" Judge Aaron J. Levy, was a "friend" of mine when he learned about my financial difficulties with the Leader suggested that his friend "Untermeyer" would be but too happy to help out a friend of his friend.

We went over to Mr. Untermeyer before whom I laid the whole truth of the situation which was then desperate to the extreme. When Mr. Untermeyer learned that the "Leader" had a circulation of over 40,000 daily and that less than $40,000 cash would place it on a paying basis, he declared his willingness to come forward with the cash upon the following conditions, viz: That I was to remain with fifty-five (55%) per cent of the capital stock of the "Leader," Mr. Untermeyer was to receive forty-five (45%) per cent of the capital stock of the concern, but that ten per cent of my fifty five per cent was to be deposited in trust with our mutual friend Judge Aaron J. Levy who in case of a disagreement upon the editorial policies of the paper could act as an umpire and determine its policies.

Next day after that conference which was August 19th 1915, I addressed to Mr. Untermeyer the following letter, an engraved fac-simile of which I hereto attach:

NEW YORK, August 19, 1915.

SAMUEL UNTERMEYER, Esq.,
47 Wall Street, New York City.

DEAR MR. UNTERMEYER: I have considered carefully your proposition.

While it may be fair and even liberal in a way from the viewpoint of business pure and simple, I do not see my way clear to it from an angle which I would call aesthetical if not exactly ethical.

Whatever standing, reputation and influence are ascribed to me—all come from the general conviction that no one can control my pen or collar my person.

You may deem extravagant the desire of a man, caught in a wheel of adversities, to fancy himself independent, but such I am, and I feel myself too old to reform.

Upon your receipt of this reply The Leader will be discontinued, which not only spells financial ruin, but also adds the burning stigma of failure and defeat. I fully realize it, but I cannot change my course.

Thanking you for all your courtesies, kindness and good will, I remain,
Sincerely yours,

L. E. MILLER.

Next day I did discontinue the Leader and did lose every cent invested which represented all my worldly belongings, but I saved by body and soul from the control of the interest represented by Mr. Untermeyer in his proposed transaction.

In the early part of 1917, the creditors of the Leader became very insistent and I began to look around for a purchaser of my stock in the Warheit. The Warheit at that time became a violent pro-German and Anti-Ally publication and regardless of my financial embarrassment I could not decently continue as a part owner of the publication, although the World knew that as a minority stockholder, I could not be held responsible for its tendencies or policies.

Again Mr. Untermeyer's friend Judge Aaron J. Levy came to the rescue. He informed me that his friend was willing to take over my stock in the Warheit. In the month of April, 1917, Mr. Herman, the Managing Clerk of Samuel Untermeyer together with Judge Aaron J. Levy met me at the office of Kuhn, Loeb & Co. with a certified check of $50,000 which was delivered for the 47% of the stock of the Warheit which were owned by myself and my wife and was pledged to secure a certain indebtedness to Kuhn, Loeb & Co.

That then and there I signed the usual transfer of stock, not to Judge Aaron J. Levy, as Mr. Untermeyer erroneously assumes, but to Mr. Untermeyer's own clerk Mr. Herman and said stock of the Warheit Publishing Co. passed not to Judge Aaron J. Levy but to Mr. Untermeyer's own Managing Clerk Mr. Herman.

On the way home from Kuhn, Loeb & Co. Judge Aaron J. Levy informed me that while they could not secure more than 47% of the stock of the Warheit Publishing Co. they have made arrangements with the rest of the stockholders which virtually places them in the absolute control of the editorial policies and management of the Warheit.

I remain,

Respectfully yours,

L. E. MILLER.

(Thereupon, at 12.40 o'clock p. m., the subcommittee adjourned, subject to the call of the chairman.)

BREWING AND LIQUOR INTERESTS AND GERMAN PROPAGANDA.

FRIDAY, DECEMBER 13, 1918.

UNITED STATES SENATE,
SUBCOMMITTEE OF THE COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY,
Washington, D. C.

The subcommittee met at 10.30 o'clock a. m., pursuant to the call of the chairman, in room No. 226, Senate Office Building, Senator Lee S. Overman presiding.

Present: Senators Overman (chairman), King, Wolcott, Nelson, and Sterling.

Senator NELSON. I want to make a correction in the record, Mr. Chairman, to this effect: The other-day I made the remark that the Evening Star was about the only loyal paper at the time preceding our entering into the war and after the war had begun in Europe. It was in connection with the Washington Post. I was mistaken in that. I ought to have included the Washington Herald in the same category as the Star.

I have here a letter, Mr. Chairman, from former Judge Grosscup, who used to be a Federal judge in Chicago, which I want to put in the record.

Senator OVERMAN. Do you want it read?

Senator NELSON. No, sir; I do not think it is necessary. It is a disavowal.

Senator OVERMAN. Very well. Let it be printed in the record.
(The letter referred to is here printed in full, as follows:)

THE WALDORF-ASTORIA,
New York, December 9, 1918.

Hon. KNUTE NELSON,

Judiciary Committee, United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: My name was included in a list furnished your committee by the secret service as having been pro-German. No specific act in proof of this was ascribed to me, but the juxtaposition of my name with that of those to whom specific acts were ascribed leaves a possible inference that I was concerned also in some such act. I think I am entitled under these circumstances to lay before the committee a bare recital of what I have done.

In the fall of 1914 I wrote an article, sent to the press without solicitation by or arrangement with anyone, in which I laid the blame for the political and industrial conditions out of which the war arose on Russia—on medieval Russia, gripping all the peoples to the east and south of the German and Austrian Empires in the iron bands of medieval race and religious influence. As I looked at it then (and I have not changed my view in that particular), Russia lay like a huge mastiff between modern industrial development, as it was taking place in Germany, France, England, and the United States, and the conditions of Mexico that still prevailed in the south and east of Europe. But I added in that article that it was still incumbent on the German Government to give some good reason why it did not accept the suggestion of Sir Edward Grey for an international conference before beginning hostilities. This was six months before the Lusitania was sunk; two years and six months before America was drawn into the war.

Following the sinking of the Lusitania, I advocated, along with the then Secretary of State, in an interview in the Washington Post, the separation of passengers crossing the ocean from ammunition-bearing ships, denouncing in the same interview the sinking of the Lusitania as a crime.

Save for this article and these interviews, I have published or spoken nothing that I know of that could have led to the inclusion of my name in the list submitted to the Senate. I have been in no one's employ in connection with the war. I received no compensation for anything I wrote or spoke. I belonged to no league or other organization and spoke for none except the National Security League. All that I did can become known by reading the article and the interviews to which I have referred. It is possible that in personal conversations I have said things that indicated I still believed in the German people; for, after long experience in observing that there are nearly always two sides to every controversy, I am loath to disbelieve where I once believed. Since America entered the war I have tried to do what service I could on the side of America as a patriotic citizen. Indeed, from the American Revolution down to this war, inclusive, except the Spanish War, every generation of the family to which I belong has been represented in the American Army—two of my great-grandfathers, one of whom was a captain in the War of the Revolution—the husband of my only child in the Aviation Service in this war.

If your committee were to ask me my present views I would answer (differentiating the German people from their deposed military leaders) that in the interval between 1 minute before 11 o'clock on the 11th of November last, when the armistice was signed, and 1 minute after 11 o'clock—short as the interval was—the world had turned its face from the most stupendous task of war it ever undertook, to confront the most stupendous task of peace with which the world has ever been confronted—the line that previously divided the world shifting in that brief moment from a line dividing the allies and the central powers to one almost at right angles with it, for the line now runs, not so much between armed belligerents as between a future founded on social order and a future founded upon chronic social upheaval and anarchy. And in the assessment of forces thus confronting each other, the German people, who, next to the French people, are industrially the most democratic of any people in Europe, are a factor to be utilized, not destroyed, by those who stand for social order. England, the mother of parliamentary government, was until within my own recollection, 50 years ago, a political oligarchy, and is still an industrial oligarchy. It is to the conservative side of the German people, therefore, as distinguished from the deposed German Government, that, along with the French and English and conservatives everywhere, we of America, who have proven our stability by 142 years of trial, must look for our allies in the struggle for social order that may not be confined to the east side of the Rhine if it once gets headway.

Very truly, yours,

PETER S. GROSSCUP.

Senator Hoke Smith, of Georgia, appeared before the subcommittee.

Senator OVERMAN. Senator, the committee will be very glad to hear you, and hear whatever statement you want to make to the committee.

STATEMENT OF SENATOR HOKE SMITH, OF GEORGIA.

Senator SMITH. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, on Sunday there appeared in several of the morning papers references to the mention of my name in a letter or report that was presented on Saturday before your committee.

These newspaper accounts were quite vague, but stated in substance that among the many documents introduced before your committee one addressed to William Bayard Hale and supposed to have been written by C. M. Jacobs, of Chicago, gave an account of the work of the American Embargo Conference and referred to me as either supporting the principles of the conference or giving moral support to it.

As I knew nothing about the American embargo conference or C. M. Jacobs, I applied to your secretary Monday for a copy of the paper which made reference to me. He did not furnish it to me until late yesterday afternoon, giving as his explanation of the delay the large number of documents put in evidence and the further fact that the one in which there were a few lines referring to me was very long and he did not succeed in finding it sooner.

I have now the paper before me. It is a typewritten communication addressed to Bayard Hale, signed "The American Embargo Conference." The paper is quite lengthy and refers to a great many different things connected with what seems to have been the work of this American embargo conference, which was described as seeking to build up public sentiment in favor of forbidding the shipment of war supplies to the allies.

The paper purports to have been written in July, 1915. The passage referring to me is in this language:

The visit of the press men gave us the opportunity to drive home the fact that ours was an American organization; that all of its members had to be voters; and when it was shown that the organization was receiving the moral support of such men as Senators Hitchcock, Works, and Hoke Smith, they departed satisfied that this was one organization that was not a "pro-German movement."

I only wish to say, Mr. Chairman, that I can not recall ever having heard of C. M. Jacobs before last Sunday. I knew nothing of the American embargo conference or its purposes. I never had relations, dealings, or communications of any character with it or its members. I never gave the organization support of any kind, and when the Hitchcock amendment, forbidding the exportation of war supplies to the allies, was before the Senate I voted to lay it on the table.

The subject of an embargo on war supplies was not before any committee upon which I served, and the only time—so far as I can recall—it was before the Senate I voted to lay it on the table.

Again let me say, I never had an connection with this association, and I never gave it any support at any time.

Senator OVERMAN. Do you not suppose, Senator, that this was a mere inference on account of the fight you made in the Senate in behalf of the shipment of cotton abroad?

Senator SMITH. Well, I was conscious of the fact that for a while in 1915, when I was seeking to enforce the right of American citizens to ship noncontraband goods through neutral ports into Germany and Austria, it was supposed and even charged by some that I was seeking to help the Germans. In point of fact, I was entirely indifferent to the Germans. I was moved solely by the fact that I believed rights of American citizens were being illegally disregarded, and especially by the fact that my own constituents who raised cotton had been cut off from a large market, many of them ruined in the fall of 1914 and the winter of 1914-15 by the low price of cotton caused in large part by the loss of their markets. I was conscious of the fact that the fight I was making in favor of my constituents was misjudged in some quarters, but I deemed it my duty to do what I could to secure for my constituents the right to sell their cotton in every market to which they were entitled.

Senator OVERMAN. And they at that time were almost ruined by the low price of cotton caused by the loss of markets.

Senator SMITH. In confirmation of your suggestion I may say I received letters during the winter of 1914 and 1915 every day—distressing letters—from men whose children were taken out of school, whose stock and farms were lost, who were just financially ruined by the unprecedented low price of cotton, due to the war and in part to the loss of one of their biggest markets, Germany and Austria. They had in prior years sold 3,000,000 bales a year into Germany and Austria, and the loss of that market, together with the big crop, put the price of cotton down below the cost of production. The suffering on the part of my immediate constituents was very great, and I agitated their right all through 1915 to get cotton into Germany and Austria. The hope that they might have a broader market and the threat to create a broader market helped somewhat the market price, and I believe it did induce British interests to come into the market in the fall of 1915 and take over a large quantity of cotton.

Senator KING. I suppose your position, in part, was this, Senator Smith, that a belligerent may not of its own volition determine that anything and everything is contraband and interdict the shipment to neutral nations of everything that they may denominate contraband.

Senator SMITH. That was one of my positions; but Great Britain stopped shipments six months before they undertook to make cotton contraband. Conceding that it was not contraband, they stopped it, and then they undertook to make it contraband. I cited England's own action in the Russian-Japanese War, in which Great Britain protested such treatment of her Indian cotton by Russia and forced Russia to permit that cotton to go free to Japan.

Senator STERLING. One claim was made, was it not, Senator Smith, that England found contraband concealed in bales of cotton shipped?

Senator SMITH. Yes; but I believe there was no truth in that claim. I challenged those making the claim to name a single instance and submit it to investigation. I do not see how cotton could be baled with copper inside of the bale. I never learned of an instance in which it was done. Cotton was seized on the ocean without regard to its being contraband or noncontraband. All shipments of cotton to enemy countries were stopped by Great Britain.

Senator OVERMAN. And afterwards there was a change of attitude, so that the people were saved from absolute ruin?

Senator SMITH. Yes; and, frankly, I believe that British agencies went into the market as large purchasers and helped to steady the price of cotton in the fall of 1915, making up, in a measure, for the markets cut off.

Senator OVERMAN. Then, for the crop of 1915 a reasonable price was paid?

Senator SMITH. By the fall of 1915 cotton went back to 12 cents.

Senator STERLING. What was the lowest price?

Senator SMITH. It had been as low as 5 cents. There really was no market at all for a while. It could not be sold always for 4 cents a pound.

Senator OVERMAN. You could not sell it at all.

Senator SMITH. The small farmer raised his crop on borrowed money and had to settle his debts in October and November. He had little market for his cotton in the fall of 1914. Where there was a market the price did not pay what he had borrowed to make the crop. His horses went; his partly paid for land went, in many instances. In other instances the children were stopped from school, and the situation was pathetic. The letters that I received from my constituents all over Georgia during the fall of 1914 were distressing.

Senator OVERMAN. The banks sent telegrams here saying that they were threatened with bankruptcy, because they could not collect their debts.

Senator SMITH. Yes.

Senator OVERMAN. This money having been advanced by them to make the crop, they were in bad shape.

Senator SMITH. Had not the price of cotton risen in the fall of 1915 bankruptcy would have swept over the whole of the cotton-growing States.

Senator STERLING. Subsequently you got an unprecedentedly high price?

Senator SMITH. Subsequently the cost of production rose very greatly and the price, like prices of other things, was high. The price has not been higher for cotton in proportion to the prewar prices than for other agricultural products, and the cost of producing the crops has been larger in proportion, because the greater part of the increase in the cost of producing crops has been in the increased cost of labor. No other agricultural crop requires the amount of labor that cotton does. Every boll of cotton must be picked by human fingers, and from the time you start the crop until the time you put your cotton in the gin human labor attaches to it.

Senator OVERMAN. Notwithstanding that, when the resolution came up, you voted to table it?

Senator SMITH. Oh, yes; that was an entirely different thing. That was sending munitions to Europe.

Senator NELSON. I remember the incident very well. I was curious to see what you would do on the Hitchcock resolution, and you voted, as you say, against it.

Senator SMITH. Yes. My object was to force our rights, if I could, to ship noncontraband to Germany through neutral ports; rights that the President had asserted in his letter of March 31; but whether or not I succeeded in doing that I sought to keep up an agitation in the hope that the market might be strengthened. I also wished to impress upon the British Government, as far as possible, the extent to which they were oppressing a portion of the people of the United States by disregarding their clearly established rights and to induce more liberal purchases from London so as to steady and protect the market. I know that a more liberal price was accorded the cotton crop in the fall of 1915 by British interests.

This is the only paper before you that refers to me, so far as I know.

Senator OVERMAN. That is the only one.

Senator NELSON. Yes; that is the only paper.

Senator OVERMAN. Are you through, Senator?

Senator SMITH. Yes.

Senator OVERMAN. There have been some names mentioned in these records that have been sent here. Of course, we can not tell what is in the records before they are read. The names of numerous gentlements have been mentioned and we have accorded a hearing to everybody who wanted to be heard in regard to it. Senator Hitchcock's name was mentioned, as well as yours, and he made a statement on the floor of the Senate, which is printed in the Congressional Record, and at his request I am very glad to have that statement put in the record of this committee. I hand it to the reporter for insertion.

Senator SMITH. I thought of presenting to the Senate the reference to myself, but I concluded the best course was to discuss it before your committee.

Senator KING. I think that this situation Senator Smith, illustrates the great danger that may result from a lax interpretation of the rules of evidence in the admission into records of hearsay, and oftentimes testimony that does not rise to the dignity of hearsay, and good men and innocent men are frequently misunderstood and misrepresented by that sort of testimony. We ought to be very careful in the admission of testimony that reflects upon people where the evidence is not valid or proper.

Senator OVERMAN. I want to say that this evidence having been furnished by the Intelligence Department of the Army and the Department of State, and most of it from the Department of Justice, was not voluntary. In pursuance of the resolution and under the instructions of the committee I requested, as chairman of this committee, that all the documents and evidence in regard to the brewers and in regard to German propaganda should be sent here by some agent of the department for investigation, and these names have come out in certain documents that were found in the Department of Justice, and it is not the intention of this committee to reflect upon anyone, and it accords to everyone whose name is mentioned here—and is glad to do it—a hearing. The mention of persons was not volunteered by any department of the Government, but comes about in response to letters that I wrote to these departments asking them to furnish evidence that they may have in regard to German propaganda, and, of course, documents are furnished and names are mentioned in the documents, as yours was, Senator, where there was just somebody who wrote a letter stating an opinion that different persons were in sympathy with them, as in your case. Of course, there is nothing to support such a suggestion in your case.

Senator SMITH. I understood that the Department of Justice did not put this letter in with any view of criticizing me, and the mention of my name was just incident to a long story about other things. Still, as it was in the letter, I wished the same record to contain my statement with reference to it.

Senator OVERMAN. We are very glad to put it in.

Senator SMITH. I am much obliged to you.

(The extract from the Congressional Record, presented by Senator Overman, is here printed in the record in full, as follows:)

[Congressional Record Dec. 10, 1918.]

PERSONAL EXPLANATION.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I rise to a question of personal privilege.

The Judiciary Committee by direction of the Senate, is investigating the subject of German propaganda work in this country during the war. On Saturday before that committee certain evidence was produced by Mr. Bielaski and my name was so referred to as to justify me in making a brief comment.

The evidence in question consisted of a letter dated July 22, 1915, signed "Reiswitz," and sent to some one whom he addressed as "Your Excellency." We are told that Reiswitz was then the German consul at Chicago. His letter appears to give the so-called "excellency" information concerning a German movement in this country to stop the export of arms and ammunition. This movement was known as the Embargo Conference. In this letter Reiswitz mentions my name in the following paragraph:

"Among others, the following have agreed to cooperate: Senator Hitchcock, Congressman Buchanan, William Bayard Hale, of New York, and the well-known pulpit orator, Dr. Aked (born an Englishman), from San Francisco.

"Hitchcock seems to be very strong for the plan. He told our representative at a conference in Omaha, 'If this matter is organized in the right way, you will sweep the United States.'"

If his alleged "excellency" or Reiswitz himself had any intelligence, either or both of them must have known that I was myself the author of the bill to prohibit the export of arms and ammunition and that I had introduced it in the Senate more than eight months before the Reiswitz letter was written. They must have known that I had made a Senate speech upon it and that it had been debated in the Senate and discussed in the newspapers. They must have known that on February 17, 1915, I had offered my bill as an amendment to the shipping bill then pending and that my amendment had been defeated by a vote of 36 to 51. My position, therefore, in favor of prohibiting the export of arms and ammunition had been independently and publicly taken and was widely known months before Reiswitz discovered it and revealed it to his chief as a secret.

The part I took during 1914 and 1915 in favor of prohibiting the export of arms and ammunition during our neutrality has never been a subject of concealment or apology on my part. It became a campaign issue in 1916 when I ran for reelection, and the fact that I was reelected by a comfortable majority indicates that my course and my motives were understood and approved by the people of Nebraska.

My stand was taken in 1914 as an American for neutrality. The Germans in America took theirs by forming the Embargo Conference in 1915 as partisans of Germany. They were supporting my bill, but I declined to go to their conferences, conventions, or meetings, though I was often invited to appear as a speaker. I made my only speeches here in the Senate or in defending my course later before my constituents.

In those days, Mr. President, the country was under a pledge of neutrality by virtue of the President's proclamation made when the war broke out. We should, no doubt, have remained neutral, at least nominally and officially, if Germany had not by a series of outrages made our attitude first difficult and then impossible.

My attitude naturally changed with changing conditions.

I stood, first, for a strict, peaceful, and impartial neutrality even to the extent of selling no arms and ammunition and lending no money to either side.

Next, when Germany began a systematic attack on our commerce, I was ready to fight to protect our neutrality.

I supported the President's request that we authorize him to assert and protect our neutrality by arming our merchant ships, and I had charge in the Senate of what was known as the armed neutrality resolution, which died so dramatically here in the Senate at noon on March 4, 1917.

A month later, when the issue changed from armed neutrality to war, I had charge of the declaration of war, which was briefly debated and passed by the Senate April 4, 1917.

And so, Mr. President, like other Americans, I have passed from one phase of the situation to another—peaceful neutrality, armed neutrality, war. German conduct forced these changes not only in the case of public men as individuals but in the case of the country as a whole. This conduct was not wholly confined to the outrages perpetrated upon the high seas and in the war areas in Europe, but it included the criminal folly of German agents, whom Mr. Bielaski has been investigating. The latter exasperated American patience at home while German atrocities abroad aroused American resentment.

I have no disposition to criticize Mr. Bielaski for revealing all the secret correspondence of these German agents and conspirators with each other. It is evident, however, that they in correspondence with each other have used the names of a number of public men recklessly if not falsely. They reached the climax of absurdity when they recorded Prof. Albert B. Hart, of Harvard, as one of the public men of America who would cooperate with them.

In my case they knew that I had refused to join their organization, refused to speak at their meetings, or even to attend them, though they were camouflaged as American.

I supported in the days of our neutrality the embargo idea as a Senator, as the publisher of a large newspaper, and as an American, but I declined to associate myself with those who became partisans of Germany.

Maj. HUMES. I have here a telegram from Hiram Moe Greene to the chairman, embracing a signed statement of Edward Lyell Fox, which, at the request of Mr. Greene, has been ordered to be made a part of the record.

(The telegram referred to is here printed in full, as follows:)

[Western Union Telegram.]

CHICAGO, ILL., Dec. 11, 1918.

Senator LEE OVERMAN,

Chairman, Investigating Committee, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I am sending a copy of a statement, unsolicited by me, from Edward Lyell Fox. This statement was sent me by Edwin Wildman, president of the Wildman Magazine and News Service, by which concern Mr. Fox was employed.

Mr. Fox states that the use of my name was not only without authority but that he never discussed anti-Japanese propaganda with me. This is the statement:

NEW YORK CITY, Sept. 8, 1918.

To whom it may concern:

I herewith state that the name of Hiram Moe Greene, involved in a document brought before the Overman Committee in the United States Senate on Dec. 6, 1918 by the Chief of the Department of Justice was not put in that document with the consent or knowledge of Mr. Greene. I further wish to state that at no time did Mr. Greene discuss Japanese propaganda with me, or so far as I know, with anyone else; and that a great injustice was done him by involving him in this manner. He is, so far as I know, completely innocent and the unknowing victim of an absurd scheme which was not original with me but in the preparation of which I assisted to the extent of copying and revising what another gave me, well knowing its absurdity and its purpose which was not to launch an intrigue against the Japanese but which was rather to enable a third person to swindle Captain von Papen out of a sum of money and then laugh at him, doing not one thing in the scheme proposed.

Mr. Greene was not a party to this and knew absolutely nothing about this and liberties were taken with his name, which it was not my idea to do and for which I am deeply sorry. The words pertaining to him were put into my mouth and only because I believed that nothing would ever come of a scheme so ridiculous, and only because I knew, I myself would never stand for it, should Papen be such a fool to sponsor it, did I stand for the use of Mr. Greens name.

(Signed) EDWARD LYELL FOX.

To this I wish to add that I never discussed Japanese propaganda with Edward Lyell Fox or anyone else, and to my knowledge never published propaganda of any character.

The Illustrated Sunday Magazine had a circulation of nearly two million copies, circulated by seventeen metropolitan newspapers and during my editorship for about three years none of these papers, their editors or publishers questioned my neutrality or Americanism, nor to my knowledge the partisanship or loyalty of the paper.

I never talked with a German agent, nor to my knowledge ever saw one. I have been an earnest, loyal, active participant in the loyal activities of the war and as such have received the finest commendations from department heads at Washington.

More than half of the money I have was put in allied (Russian) bonds early in the war, and I have been a contributor and active worker for all Liberty loan, Red Cross, Y. M. C. A., Knights of Columbus, and other Government plans.

Just in fairness and justice I ask you to incorporate this in your records

HIRAM MOE GREENE

BREWING AND LIQUOR INTERESTS AND GERMAN PROPAGANDA. 1655

[Western Union Telegram]

Boston Mass

Hon LEE S OVERMAN

US Senate Washn DC

I was United States Attorney until Oct nine seventeen afterwards Interstate Commerce Commissioner Have known professor Hart intimately many years His thorough going loyalty to the highest American ideals of speech and conduct are absolutely beyond question.

GEORGE W ANDERSON

Judge Circuit Court

[Western Union Telegram]

PHILADELPHIA PA Dec 10th, 1918.

Senator OVERMAN

The Capital Washington DC

Professor Albert N Hart is one of the public spirited men most in the public eye in our community and to my knowledge there has never been the slightest doubt of his loyalty and absolute Americanism

EDWARD A FILENE

[Western Union Telegram]

TOPEKA Ks 1918 Dec 10

Senator LEE OVERMAN

Washington DC

I wish to express my absolute and entire confidence in patriotism of Dr Albert Bushnell Hart There is not a more loyal American in all this country The recent mention of his name in a list of alleged progerman sympathizers does Dr Hart a cruel injustice

ARTHUR CAPPER Governor

A letter from Mr. E. C. Richardson to the chairman, ordered to be made a part of the record, is here printed in full, as follows:

E. C. RICHARDSON

PRINCETON, NEW JERSEY

December 7, 1918

The CHAIRMAN OF THE SUB-COMMITTEE OF THE SENATE JUDICIARY COMMITTEE DEALING WITH GERMAN PROPAGANDA.

SIR: In the matter of Fuehr's list of names, may I venture with all respect, to protest the record of my name in a context which suggests a share in German "propaganda." I am not an inconspicuous practitioner of historical criticism. As such, I have explored the documents on various live war topics and, on some of them, rather to my own dismay, have run across facts or reached conclusions contrary to the prevailing informations. Some of these facts and findings were in print, and it was doubtless these which Dr. Fuehr thought "important." They also brought certain requests for aid in propaganda which were declined as positively and promptly as courtesy allowed, although the purpose of the propaganda was patriotic. I explained that my role of critical research was one inconsistent with propaganda. I said that this permitted and required the fearless publication of findings however unpopular, but not the effort to influence action by emphasis of things favorable to one side. The refusal was received as courteously as it was intended. There was no hint whatever of compensation—indeed I believe financial aid was also invited and likewise declined. This was in 1915.

My ruling passion since the war began in 1914 has been, and is, concrete patriotic service, and I have not consciously neglected any opportunity to do my utmost. I think I could satisfy Mr. Bielaski that I have been pro patria with all my heart all the time and pro no other nation where interests conflict. I respect Washington's advice against excessive partiality or excessive dislike for any nation, but I believe that a strong partiality (without excess) for England has been owing her since Manila Bay, and by considerations of wise patriotism. Her brand of liberty seems to me the type nearest to the ideals of a moral universe, and it is our's. I returned in April 1914 from a winter in Europe, convinced that in the struggle which every one then regarded as inevitable, America should and would sympathize with, and perhaps aid Britain. I am now convinced that the chief hope for an orderly world lies in a firm mutual purpose of England and America to act in harmony. I believe, however, that the last way to work in harmony with an Englishman is to beat him when he is wrong or to be "excessive" in sentiment.

I add that so-called critical research is simply a fact finding operation or investigation such as your Committee is conducting. If your Committee could draw the distinction between fact publication and propaganda in such a way as to leave honest historical critics free to make their researches without regard to the consequences of the facts that they find, it would, from my point of view, be the greatest service to the United States Government in its three branches, which could be performed at the present moment. Ignorance of facts or mistaken information is a poor basis for action, and poorer for judgment at any time.

Respectfully yours,

EARNEST CUSHING RICHARDSON.

Senator OVERMAN. Maj. Humes, here are some letters from various persons, in explanation of charges made against them, and other volunteering information on the subjects concerning which testimony has been taken before this committee. I turn them all over to you for examination, and will ask you to look at them with a view to placing in the record such of them as you think ought to go in.

Maj. HUMES. A great mass of similar letters has come to me.

Senator OVERMAN. There are a great many letters from all over the country trying to give information which is not information, etc.

Maj. HUMES. I will examine the letters.

Senator OVERMAN. At our last meeting we put in a letter from Mr. Untermeyer and one from Judge Levy, I think. Judge Levy has sent a telegram which I think you had better read.

Senator STERLING. I have here a letter which was sent to Senator Wadsworth by Prof. David Eugene Smith, and by Senator Wadsworth handed to me for use in this record, in which he protests against the use of his name in connection with German propaganda. Suppose you take that letter, also, Maj. Humes.

Maj. HUMES. I suppose where there are two letters from the same source, addressed to different members of the committee, there is no necessity to include both letters where they are practically the same and where one explanation will cover the situation in the record.

Senator OVERMAN. Only one letter will be necessary. I had a letter similar to the one spoken of by Senator Sterling.

Maj. HUMES. As requested by the chairman, I will read the telegram from Mr. Levy. It is as follows:

NEW YORK, N. Y., Dec. 12, 1918.

HON. LEE S. OVERMAN,

Chairman Senate Judiciary Committee,

Senate Office Bldg., Washington, D. C.

I find to my amazement in this morning's papers that your committee without proof or opportunity for explanation has placed upon its records and that there has been published a letter from one L. E. Miller containing a mass of garbled and untruthful self-serving declarations concerning me and the circumstances under which the Miller interest in "The Warheit" was purchased and concerning another paper called "The Leader" said to have been attempted to be purchased stop This same story and the same Miller letter to Mr. Untermeyer were published during the last mayoralty campaign here and were then fully exploited and exploded in the public press stop As a judicial officer I have felt it undignified to reply to newspaper statements but as this matter has now gone into your records I feel that an immediate opportunity should be afforded me to reply and before Mr. Miller starts on his announced trip.

abroad and ask that you give me that opportunity at as early a date as possible stop Meantime permit me to say that the facts are briefly that upon Mr. Miller's urgent and repeated insistence I was finally induced by him to introduce him to Mr. Untermeyer from whom he sought in my presence and upon the strength of Mr. Untermeyer's friendship for me to secure loan which he required to avoid bankruptcy which would have involved the forced sale of his interest in the "Warheit" which was then pledged stop

Mr. Untermeyer finally very reluctantly consented to make the loan out of friendship for me but advised Miller against taking the loan as he considered it a hopeless proposition stop He knew nothing about the merits of the loan and made no inquiry stop He did not suggest control of "The Leader's" stock stop That suggestion was made to him by Miller and Mr. Untermeyer expressed his willingness to have the control of the Leader placed in a third party's hands to secure the repayment of the stock on Miller's suggestion stop Subsequently Miller being again in great financial distress and owing a minority interest in the Warheit which was pledged and as to which the loan has been called offered the stock to me stop He had broken with his partners solely because of his demands for increased salary to which they refused to accede and there was no question of policy stop All this was in 1915 and early in 1916 stop I joined with his partners who owned the majority stock in buying his minority interest in the Warheit for fifty thousand dollars and borrowed thirty five thousand of that money from Mr. Untermeyer stop The balance of fifteen thousand dollars was furnished by Miller's partners and myself and we divided the stock up between us stop Thirty-five thousand of the fifty thousand we paid was used to take Miller's stock out of pledge stop The transaction was closed whilst Mr. Untermeyer was in South America stop His secretary advanced the money on his written instructions given before he left stop I have since repaid him fifteen thousand of his money and shall soon repay the balance stop That loan was made purely out of personal friendship for me stop Mr. Untermeyer never saw the Warheit or had anything to do with it or knew of the character of the security and I doubt if he then knew that there was such a paper or knows now where it is located stop He was satisfied with my obligation stop I consider it but common justice to me as well as to him that these facts should be promptly known and hope your committee will afford me an immediate opportunity of stating them under oath stop Kindly wire reply to two sixty four Madison Street New York City

AARON J. LEVY

Senator OVERMAN. I wish you would wire Mr. Levy that his telegram has been put in the record, and that if he desires to come down here and appear before the committee we shall be glad to hear him.

STATEMENT OF MR. LOUIS GARTHE.

Senator OVERMAN. Mr. Garthe, do you desire to make a statement in regard to the mention of your name before this committee?

Mr. GARTHE. Yes. Senators, I would not have bothered you by appearing before this committee at all except for the fact that the statement was made by Mr. Bielaski, inadvertently, I think, that there was nothing in the Courier to show that I was in any way connected with it. The natural inference was that I was doing this work for the little Courier behind the back of my employer. In fact, the senior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. Nelson] said that he knew Gen. Agnus, and he knew the Baltimore American to be truly loyal. Clearly the inference was then that I was writing disloyal, anti-Wilson, anti-American editorials. Senators, that is all I want to clear up.

If you will permit me, I have here one editorial, and there are a lot of them. Capt. Lester has the entire set of them. If you will let me read just this one editorial, it will be a sample of the kind of editorials that I wrote for the Courier. I did not write them all.

Senator NELSON. Excuse me. Please repeat what you said.

Mr. GARTHE. I said that I would not have troubled the committee to appear before you at all, Senators, but for the fact that Mr. Bialski stated that there was nothing in the Courier to indicate that I was in any way connected with it, and therefore the impression was created on the minds of the committee, doubtless, because of what you said, that you knew Gen. Agnus and knew the Baltimore American and knew that Gen. Agnus and the Baltimore American were entirely loyal. Therefore, the impression evidently had been spread that behind Gen. Agnus's back I was writing sneaking anti-American editorials. Gentlemen, I have been with Gen. Agnus for 30 years; we are almost like brothers. Here, after 30 years, if a newspaper man has got anything on God's earth, it is his name for being honest, decent, clean, and square. In the way this thing appears made me appear that after being this man's loyal friend for 30 years at the end of that time, at the time this country was in a crisis, I was writing disloyal editorials behind his back. Therefore I want to ask you to let me read one or two of the editorials that appeared in that little Courier. The Courier was a little society paper. You know the kind of paper. It printed pictures of all the ambassadors. I remember on one occasion it had a picture of the German ambassador, on another occasion a picture of Sir Cecil Spring-Rice, the British ambassador, and it printed a picture of the Russian ambassador, and pictures of all of them. If you will allow me to read just this editorial, it is printed in what we call a box, on the first page of the Courier, in 6-point black-face type. It is as follows:

STAND BY THE PRESIDENT!

In the crisis that confronts this country, the gravest since half a century ago when the very life of our country was threatened, there is only one sentiment and one thought in the hearts of the American people:

Stand by the President!

Until to-day the American people have been divided. Some of us have been pro-German; many of us have been pro-British. To-day there is not a man in this country who is aught but pro-American. For more than two years the American people have favored one or the other of the two great warring groups in Europe. To-day all America, from Porto Rico to the Philippines, crowd out of its heart all former judgment of the right and the wrong of war in Europe and centers its devotion on America alone.

For two years President Wilson, with infinite patience and consummate tact, has kept this country out of war, and kept us out of war with our honor unimpaired. He can be trusted to uphold American dignity in the future as in the past. At this moment the duty of every American is clear:

Keep cool and stand by the President!

Senator NELSON. What is the date of that?

Mr. GARTHE. February 3, 1917.

I knew nothing of the proceedings before this committee until I received a long-distance telephone call from my home office. Gen. Agnus said to me, "What in the world have you been doing?" I said, "What do you mean?" He said, "Here comes a story from the International News Service that you have been writing editorials for a pro-German paper and that you have been acting as collector for them, and I don't know what all." I said, "General, I don't know what on earth you are talking about. Let me come over and talk the matter over." I went over, and he said, "Louis, my boy, what have you been doing?" I said, "General, I don't remember" single editorial. It is two years ago that I wrote them, but Mr. Lough is the managing editor. Let me make a statement to him." I made a little statement, which the New York Times and our paper were kind enough to print. Briefly, it was this, that I have written many editorials for the Courier, that they were 100 per cent American, that they were editorials such as an American would write for an American paper. Senators, I have read you a sample of them. I denied then and I deny now that I have ever been a collector for the Courier. I have never been. I went on to state then that because Mr. Lowe had hoped for the support of Germans in this country for his paper, but because the Germans turned down the paper, because they would not have it, because it did not contain the kind of talk they wanted, this paper failed.

Senator OVERMAN. Somebody wrote me a letter in which it was stated that Bernstorff had given you $500 to give to Mr. Lowe, but he would not take it.

Mr. GARTHE. No; let me explain that, gentlemen. In one of Mr. Lowe's letters read before you he pointed out that Dr. Adler would not let him get to see the ambassador, that he was writing to his excellency because Dr. Adler would not let him get to see the ambassador. That was because Adler had no use for him and had no use for the paper. He did not see where Bernstorff was getting anything out of the Courier with this kind of editorials.

Senator WOLCOTT. The kind you wrote?

Mr. GARTHE. The kind I wrote; yes. He said there was nothing in it, and therefore Adler kept Lowe away from Bernstorff.

The financial matters between Mr. Lowe and Bernstorff were in the hands of John Clifton, who acted as a lawyer in behalf of the German embassy. The arrangement between Mr. Clifton and Lowe on behalf of the ambassador was that so much money was to be given by the ambassador for buying paper—it is expensive paper—and for paying the printers, and all that sort of thing. One day a shipment of paper came from Philadelphia, and attached to the bill of lading was a draft, I think for $150 or $200, whichever it was. I don't know. Lowe called up Clifton and Clifton had been called to New York. There was this draft that had to be met before 3 o'clock, and no money, and Clifton was away, so Lowe asked me if I would go up and see the ambassador and try to get that money. I said, "Yes; I will go up because you are up against it." I knew Bernstorff. I think I was the first newspaper man that met Bernstorff when he came here, owing to a curious situation. I went up and saw him and I said to him, "Your Excellency, Mr. Clifton has gone and Lowe is up against it, because his bill of lading has got a draft attached, and he has got to get that money. He then called Adler, and I heard the conversation between them. It was in German. I can speak German, although I was born in this country. Bernstorff said to Adler, "Have we so much money in the house?" He said, "Yes." Bernstorff said, "Give it to Mr. Garthe." I said, "No: I will not touch a penny of it. Do not hand it to me. You can send for Lowe." The draft was over in a Georgetown bank. I said, "You can send for Lowe, and Lowe can get that money, but I do not want it and I will not have it," and I never did get a penny of it.

In this connection, if you will permit me, Senator, there was a letter introduced by Mr. Bielaski, written from that expensive hotel in North Carolina. You know the name of it.

Senator OVERMAN. The Grove Park Inn.

Mr. GARTHE. The Grove Park Inn. The letter was written on Christmas Day, 1916, and he wrote his secretary to go to the embassy and get money, and then in the letter he said "Write Mr. Garthe for editorials."

Following immediately after that was read a telegram from him stating, "Have made deposit as requested."

Now, gentlemen, that letter was written on Christmas Day, 1916. Bernstorff left here in February, 1917. Lowe tried to run his little paper for three or four weeks afterwards, and went broke. Then he went to Baltimore and did his very best to raise money. Meanwhile they were seizing his furniture here, and on April 12 he telegraphed me, "Please deposit $20 to my credit in the American Security & Trust Co.," and on April 12 or 13 I deposited $20 to his credit. Mr. Bernstorff had gone in February. I deposited $20 of my own good money in the American Security & Trust Co., and here is a letter from the American Security & Trust Co. which states the fact:

GARTHE EXHIBIT No. 1.

WASHINGTON, D. C., December 12th, 1918.

MR. LOUIS GARTH,
715 Riggs Building, City.

DEAR MR. GARTHE. In reply to your inquiry, we beg to advise a deposit of $20 in currency was deposited of April 12th, 1917, with the American Security and Trust Company, Washington, D. C., for credit of Theo. Lowe.

Yours very truly,

CHAS. E. HOWE, Treasurer.

Senator WOLCOTT. You did that for your friend and acquaintance, who was in hard luck?

Mr. GARTHE. He was in mighty hard luck. He had lost everything he had. I think every Senator has done the same thing as I did then, when I deposited $20 to his credit.

Senator STERLING. What was the date of your visit to Count von Bernstorff?

Mr. GARTHE. That I can not tell. Mr. Clifton can tell you that.

Senator STERLING. Can you fix the date approximately by referring to the date when Count von Bernstorff left?

Mr. GARTHE. It was before that.

Senator STERLING. How long before?

Mr. GARTHE. I should say it may have been in October or in November before he left.

Senator STERLING. You knew that Mr. Lowe was depending for aid upon the German Embassy?

Mr. GARTHE. Certainly; yes.

Senator STERLING. And that he was being partly financed by the German Embassy?

Mr. GARTHE. Partly financed by them; yes, I knew that.

Senator STERLING. You knew that while you were writing these editorials?

Mr. GARTHE. Yes; but as Bernstorff once said to me, and Adler also, "Wilson is getting it all."

Senator WOLCOTT. You did not have the control of the editorial columns?

Mr. GARTHE. No; he wrote some of them.

Senator WOLCOTT. All you were responsible for was what you wrote yourself?

Mr. GARTHE. What I wrote myself.

Senator WOLCOTT. And your position is that everything you wrote and put in that paper was pro-American, just as much so as this sample you have introduced in evidence?

Mr. GARTHE. Yes.

Senator STERLING. How frequently did you write?

Mr. GARTHE. I presume I wrote once a week.

Senator STERLING. Is it a daily paper?

Mr. GARTHE. No; it was a little weekly.

Senator STERLING. And you wrote once a week?

Mr. GARTHE. Yes; but frequently I did not write; because, as you can readily understand, sometimes I was busy. Sometimes the House was busy and the Senate was busy, and then we would have to go down and see the Secretary of State, the Secretary of Agriculture, the Secretary of the Navy; and there are many other things to do, and frequently I could not write anything for him, and he would have to write it himself; so, several of them are his, and not mine.

Senator STERLING. For the time that the paper ran, what proportion of the editorials were yours and what proportion were his?

Mr. GARTHE. I should say 75 per cent and 25 per cent, because sometimes late at night I would write him one and mail it to him.

Senator STERLING. You mean by that that 75 per cent of the editorials were written by you?

Mr. GARTHE. Yes. He would indicate if he wanted an article, for instance, on "Why Washington went dry," after it went dry. That, by the way, reminds me that there is a letter in which it is suggested that he was also being helped by the brewers. As a matter of fact, that editorial "Why Washington went dry," said it went dry because the feeling for prohibition in this country was due to the infamous dives and saloons which were the result of the greed and shamelessness of the distillers and brewers. If they were giving him any money, they were not getting much for their money. I should like to say right here that the paper had a number of editorials denouncing Mr. Viereck and Dr. Hexamer. Mr. Viereck, because of what his paper contained, and Dr. Hexamer, because he was president of the National German-American Alliance.

Senator OVERMAN. The Courier was rather a society paper, was it not?

Mr. GARTHE. Why, Senators—happily I have one here which has a very superior picture of Senator Overman, and a very splendid story [producing paper]. There was another one of Mr. Vance McCormick.

Senator WOLCOTT. I was not here when this matter came out at the last session, and I will ask you a question for information. Has anybody assumed to say that the Courier was a pro-German paper?

Maj. HUMES. Mr. Bielaski said it was financed by the German Embassy, and Mr. Garthe, I understand, agrees with that statement that it was financed by the German Embassy.

Senator WOLCOTT. But the material point is whether or not the paper, as disclosed by its contents, was pro-German or not. Has anybody scanned its issues to see whether it was?

Maj. HUMES. I never looked it up until yesterday, but I did examine it then, and we found considerable pro-German material in the paper. Whether Mr. Garthe wrote it or Mr. Lowe wrote it, there is considerable pro-German material in it. In that issue which Senator King has there is an editorial, following the Sussex incident, advising that Americans should stay off of boats.

Mr. GARTHE. Shall I read it?

Maj. HUMES. It begins about the middle of the second column, on page 3.

Senator KING. Is this what you refer to? [Reading:]

To this country at large the torpedoing of the Sussex again brings forward prominently the unpatriotic folly of those Americans who persist in entering recklessly into danger, regardless of all warning. In the present case, this country has been brought into imminent danger of war with Germany because of a score of Americans, some of whom have not even been in America for half a decade, and brought into that imminent danger at a time when the entire military resources of this country are already occupied in an enterprise which is straining our resources to the utmost. Every available soldier in the United States will be within the next fortnight either hundreds of miles in Mexico, or on the border ready to follow the men already there. Already nearly ten million dollars has been voted by Congress for the expenses of the punitive expedition and how many millions more must follow no one will venture to predict. Surely every American, with the least spark of love for this country, will subordinate at this time his personal plans, either of business or of pleasure, to the welfare of his country, and, for the time being, refuse to take passage on a ship which courts danger and whose destruction, by mine or by torpedo, may fan the present smoulders of resentment into the fierce flames of war.

Moreover, what will it benefit the relatives of some American whose death from a German torpedo throws the country into war? What satisfaction can be obtained from the knowledge that thousands of others may die on the battlefield? Will the sorrow of one heart be allayed by the knowledge that this death has brought equal sorrow into thousands of other hearts?

Mr. GARTHE. I wrote that.

Senator KING. That bears date of March 25, 1916.

Senator STERLING. You wrote that?

Mr. GARTHE. I wrote that.

Senator STERLING. You recall the fact that the sinking of the Sussex was the occasion of the President appearing before a joint assembly of the Congress in protest?

Mr. GARTHE. Subsequently; yes.

Senator STERLING. Setting forth how it was a violation of American rights?

Mr. GARTHE. Afterwards; yes.

Senator STERLING. That message followed very soon, a day or two, after the sinking of the Sussex.

Mr. GARTHE. It must be so.

Capt. LESTER. You commented favorably, editorially, on the exploit of the U boat Deutschland coming to this country?

Mr. GARTHE. Yes.

Capt. LESTER. And you praised Capt. Koenig and printed his picture?

Mr. GARTHE. Yes.

Capt. LESTER. Did you write that editorial?

Mr. GARTHE. Probably, the editorial; yes. So did hundreds of American newspapers praise the exploit. The Baltimore papers praised it. They made a great local story of it.

Senator OVERMAN. Is there anything else that you desire to say?

Mr. GARTHE. There is one other thing. In the statement Mr. Bielaski states:

In further looking up the record of Mr. Garthe I find that in 1912 Mr. Lowe met Mr. Viereck through Dr. Hugo Schweitzer.

Capt. LESTER. There is an obvious misprint of the name. It should be Lowe instead of Garthe.

Senator OVERMAN. That ought to be corrected.

Senator KING. You have brought into this record the name of Mr. Clifton.

Mr. GARTHE. Yes.

Senator KING. I do not know him; I never saw him so far as I know. We do not want to do an injustice to anyone.

Mr. GARTHE. No; I agree to that.

Senator KING. I do not think you ought to have brought his name in, but having done so you meant to state, as I understood you, that Mr. Clifton is a lawyer and was employed as a lawyer by the German embassy.

Mr. GARTHE. Yes.

Senator KING. You did not mean to give any other impression in respect to him?

Mr. GARTHE. Oh, no. In the record of last Saturday his name appears.

Senator KING. I did not know that.

Mr. GARTHE. Oh, no; I should not have brought in John Clifton's name, because I have suffered too much from this thing myself to want to drag in another man.

Senator KING. Because the embassy would have a right to have legal advice, the same as our embassy would be entitled to get legal advice in any nation where we have an embassy.

Mr. GARTHE. Certainly. I merely wanted to identify it, as his name appears in the record as being the counselor for the embassy.

Senator KING. The only reason I mention it is because so many people, if you say that A, B, or C was employed by the German Embassy, get the idea that necessarily that particular person would be pro-German, and I want the record to show that you did not mean that.

Mr. GARTHE. Not the slightest.

Senator KING. That is not the inference at all.

Mr. GARTHE. Not at all.

Senator KING. He merely acted in a legal capacity.

Mr. GARTHE. Purely.

Senator KING. As he had a right to do.

Mr. GARTHE. Purely.

Senator NELSON. That brings us to the other—moral—question, with which we have not anything to do in this case, whether an attorney is justified in defending a criminal under all circumstances.

Senator KING. Germany at that time was in amity with the United States; there had been no declaration of war. Their representative was here and our representative, Mr. Gerard, was in Germany.

Many distinguished men were stating that the relations between the nations were friendly. I can not see that there was anything immoral in the embassy hiring a lawyer to advise them, and I do not see anything immoral in a lawyer accepting employment at that time.

Senator STERLING. Unless the lawyer was a go-between between the embassy and Mr. Lowe, and Mr. Lowe was publishing a paper which was pro-German, receiving money from the embassy.

Mr. GARTHE. Yes; and because of Mr. Lowe's personal unpopularity with Dr. Adler the thing was being handled by John Clifton. I think that is hardly fair to put in the record, however.

Senator STERLING. I think that ought to go into the record.

Mr. GARTHE. That explains how it was.

TESTIMONY OF CAPT. GEORGE B. LESTER.

(The witness was sworn by the chairman.)

Senator OVERMAN. Capt. Lester, you were detailed by the Secretary of War to come here, at my request?

Capt. LESTER. Yes.

Senator OVERMAN. To furnish such testimony bearing on this German propaganda and the brewers as you had in your possession?

Capt. LESTER. Yes.

Senator OVERMAN. You are connected with the Intelligence Bureau?

Capt. LESTER. I am a captain in the United States Army, attached to the Military Intelligence Division of the General Staff.

Maj. HUMES. Capt. Lester, have you in your possession any telegrams sent from the German Embassy to the German Government relative to any newspaper in the United States?

Capt. LESTER. I have a copy of a telegram that was sent from the German Embassy on September 9, 1914, to the German foreign office in reference to the Chicago Tribune.

Maj. HUMES. Will you read that telegram?

Capt. LESTER. The telegram reads as follows:

Chicago Tribune friendly paper.

The original of that telegram is in the possession of the Government agencies and can be produced if necessary.

Maj. HUMES. You heard the testimony of Mr. Bielaski the other day in connection with the activities of one Edward Lyell Fox. I wish you would state whether or not you made an investigation personally of the activities of Mr. Fox, and secured a statement from him in connection with the investigation?

Capt. LESTER. I was ordered to take up the case of Edward Lyell Fox after he had been investigated by the Military Intelligence Division for some time. I accompanied him to New York by agreement with him that he would tell all the facts in connection with his work in Germany, and his work for the German Government, and turn over all papers and documents in his possession. He turned over a mass of papers and made what was considered nearly a full confession. We have never gotten the full facts from Mr. Fox, but we have gotten a great many connections that were not given in his previous confessions.

Mr. Fox was sent to Germany in 1915.

Senator NELSON. By whom?

Capt. LESTER. By the German Embassy, by an arrangement made through Count von Bernstorff, the German ambassador, Dr. Albert, and others representing the Germans in this country. He went ostensibly as an employee of the Wildman Newspaper Syndicate. Mr. Wildman believed that he was sending Mr. Fox as a writer. Mr. Wildman was innocent in the transaction, as far as we were able to find, but Mr. Fox was also employed by the Correspondents' Film Co., which was operated by Mathew B. Claussen as part of the German propaganda in this country, which film company was financed by the German Government. In addition an arrangement was made by the Hearst newspapers to employ Mr. Fox to write articles while in Germany, attaching himself to the headquarters of the Hearst service in Berlin, then managed by Mr. Schweppendick. He was to write articles and news for the Hearst publications. This arrangement is evidenced by a letter given to Mr. Fox by Mr. Bradford Merrill, who is the publisher of the New York American, on June 29, 1915. The letter is short. Shall I read it?

Senator NELSON. Yes.

Capt. LESTER. The letter is as follows:

LESTER EXHIBIT No. 1.

THE NEW YORK AMERICAN,
June 29, 1915.

Mr. E. NORGROVE COX,

"La Gazette de Hollande," Nobelstratt 20, The Hague.

DEAR SIR: This will serve to introduce to you Mr. Edward Lyell Fox, a special correspondent of the Wildman Newspaper and Magazine Service of the United States, who is also a valued special contributor of war articles to the New York American.

It is possible that Mr. Fox may have occasion to send news to you for forwarding by cable or mail, as the case may be, to our London Manager. Mr. W. Orton Tewson, 69 Fleet St., E. C., London. In such case, if you will be so kind as to communicate promptly with Mr. Tewson, we shall be greatly indebted to you and Mr. Tewson will make suitable recompense for any expenses incurred.

Very truly yours,

BRADFORD MERRILL, Publisher.

Mr. E. Norgrove Cox, in The Hague, Holland, was in charge of the European end of the Hearst news service—that is, the transmission end—what was known as the International News Service. Mr. Tewson, in London, had the English end of the International News Service. The western terminus of that was in New York. This is the news service which was operated by cable, which the English Government abolished in October, 1916. That is, the English Government refused to handle the Hearst news service or let it come into their country or have any of their representatives there from October, 1916, down to—well, I do not think the service has ever been resumed.

Senator WOLCOTT. A moment ago you said that this man Fox was sent over financed by the German propaganda organization; that the Wildman service was ignorant of that fact when it availed itself of the services of Mr. Fox, and you also said that the Hearst publications used Mr. Fox. You did not, however, in connection with the Hearst publications, say whether or not your information disclosed knowledge on the part of the Hearst publications of the fact that Mr. Fox was financed by the German propaganda organization. Have you any information on that?

Capt. LESTER. I am not in position to state whether Mr. Hearst or the Hearst papers knew that Mr. Fox was in the pay of the German Government at the time he went over there or at any other time.

Senator WOLCOTT. Your allusion, then, to the Hearst publications in connection with Mr. Fox and his German connections was of no significance? You have no knowledge of it and do not know anything about it?

Capt. LESTER. I have no knowledge, and there is nothing in our records to indicate a knowledge on the part of Mr. Hearst, that Mr. Fox was paid by the German Government. There is evidence, which I shall shortly produce, that Mr. Fox was a propagandist for the Hearst American papers, that he acted under the direction of Mr. Schweppendick, the Berlin manager of the Hearst newspapers, in the preparation of articles, and sent them to America for publication in the Hearst papers, and they were published. I shall refer to that very shortly.

Senator KING. Did other newspapers of the United States, and other nations for that matter, have correspondents or send representatives of their newspapers to Germany at a time when our country was not at war with Germany?

Capt. LESTER. Oh, yes. There was a large number. I think from 1914 up to our entrance into the war there were at least 150 prominent newspapers represented in Germany. That is, not all at the same time; they were changing, different men were being sent in. All of the prominent New York and Chicago papers had representatives who stayed there almost continuously during the war period.

Senator KING. So that there is nothing improper in newspapers having reporters or representatives in belligerent nations?

Capt. LESTER. No, sir.

Senator WOLCOTT. Have you made a study of these articles that came out of Germany to these papers in this country?

Capt. LESTER. I have read the William Bayard Hale news items and articles that came later on to the Hearst publications, of which there are about 1,500. I think the messages came to the Navy Department. I have read about 200 of the Hearst editorials in the New York American during the war period, from 1914 down to date. I am familiar up to that point. I can not say that I made a study of it, because that would be a matter of a great deal of research.

Senator WOLCOTT. Yes; a voluminous task. But the point I had in mind was this: I was curious to know whether or not the news articles that came out of Germany from Mr. Fox and Mr. Hale were different in their complexion from the articles that came out of Germany from any of these other 150 correspondents.

Capt. LESTER. As to the news articles that were sent by Mr. Fox. I can say that they were entirely different in their character and in their make-up and the source of information from any articles that were published by other newspapers that I know of.

Senator WOLCOTT. You apparently do not know all of the others.

Capt. LESTER. I am speaking of other newspapers. I did not know that you included other newspapers when you asked me if I had made an examination of articles coming out of Germany.

Senator WOLCOTT. I meant from all of these 150 papers.

Capt. LESTER. The other papers I have read a great deal. I have read a great deal of matter that has been published in the newspapers coming from Germany since the war started, principally the New York papers, and a great many Chicago papers, and reprints in other papers.

Senator STERLING. And you found articles coming from Mr. Fox different from those others?

Capt. LESTER. Articles coming from Mr. Fox were sheer propaganda. They are admitted to be propaganda, and they are published by him, and written by him, without any foundation in fact as to one article, under direction of the German Publicity Bureau in Berlin, who understood from his being over there that his purpose in being in Germany as a so-called war correspondent was to write anything that they told him to write. He stated that to me and told me the instance of writing this particular propaganda article.

Senator KING. Where is Mr. Fox?

Capt. LESTER. He is in New York City. That is, he was the last I knew of him. I have before me an article written by Edward Lyell Fox, published in the New York American on Sunday, April 18, 1918, entitled, "Hands and feet of boys cut off by the Cossacks, says Edward Lyell Fox. Mutilation of children by retreating soldiers charged in official records. Evidences of atrocious acts found everywhere. Eighteen lads found maimed and lying helpless in the snow." Then follows a two-column—nearly a three-column—article, with illustrations, in which Edward Lyell Fox undertakes to represent that in the advance of the Russians on the eastern front through the Carpathians the Cossack troops mutilated boys and committed atrocities of a shocking character. The facts in respect to that article are these. I obtained from Mr. Fox his original notes written in lead pencil, that formed the basis of this article. He never saw an atrocity, never saw any of the events that he described, and he stated to me that these events in his opinion never happened, but he was told to write an article to counteract the information that was being spread through the American press at this particular time in respect to atrocities in Belgium.

Senator WOLCOTT. Told by whom?

Capt. LESTER. Told by a representative of the German Government whose name I have forgotten. Mr. Fox was in touch with the chancellor, Mr. Zimmermann, and various of the higher officials of the German Government. He had courtesies extended to him that other newspaper men were unable to get in the way of entrance on the firing front. He spent six weeks with a squadron in the German flying corps on the western front, rode in battle planes over France and Belgium, was at one time on the eastern front, and I obtained from him photographs taken of himself and German officers—I think there were something like 40 or 50 of these photographs—which indicated, outside of his statement and admission, that he was taken in as a part of the officers' groups, as much as a German. That is to say, he was under no surveillance whatever. He could go anywhere he wanted to. He was armed with passes from staff officers and from the war office, which permitted him to go anywhere in Germany, on any battle front or any part of the firing line that he wanted to, without hindrance.

Maj. HUMES. In that connection, let me ask you, did he or did he not admit to you that he was not on the eastern front and had no knowledge of the occurrences which are related in the articles you have just called attention to?

Capt. LESTER. No; he did not state that he was not on the eastern front. He was on the eastern front after these events had happened, the second trip he was over there; but in April, 1915, when this article was written, he was not on the eastern front.

Senator STERLING. And had not been?

Capt. LESTER. Had not been, and had no knowledge whatever; and he explained to me the purpose of this article, as I have stated, that it was written to counteract the disclosures which were then beginning to filter out, of the atrocities of the Germany army in their entry into Belgium; and this was the story.

Senator STERLING. Was there any editorial comment in the Hearst papers?

Capt. LESTER. No, sir, not that I have been able to find. All of the editorial comments—I have never seen any editorial comments on atrocities as described in this article, or in any of the Hearst publications that I have examined; and you will note in this article the publisher of the New York American takes pains to state in large letters, in the headlines, "Hands and feet of boys cut off by the Cossacks, says Edward Lyell Fox." He published it with that reservation.

Senator KING. Was there anything in the dispatch which he sent, to indicate to the recipient that the information that he got was obtained from Germany or was written at the request of Germany, or upon its face did it bear the impress of a genuine newspaper statement by a writer who was reciting what he had seen, or as to matter with which he was acquainted?

Capt. LESTER. There is no evidence to indicate that the writer of that article had any knowledge or reason to believe that it was paid for by Germany.

Senator KING. In other words, on its face it seemed to be an authentic and truthful report by a newspaper reporter?

Capt. LESTER. Yes, sir. Shall we put that in evidence?

Senator OVERMAN. The whole record?

Capt. LESTER. Yes.

Senator OVERMAN. No; I do not think so.

Capt. LESTER. I could make a summary of it.

Senator OVERMAN. Yes; you might make a summary of it and put it in.

Maj. HUMES. Are there any other similar instances?

Capt. LESTER. On the 25th of April, 1915, there was published, in the New York American, an article entitled "Prof. Stein, greatest peace apostle, warns United States of Japanese peril." This article was written by Edward Lyell Fox in Germany. Mr. Fox stated to me that this article was a result of an interview which he had with Prof. Stein, upon general instructions received from the publication he was representing; that is, the New York American. He was to play up, as the newspapers say, "Japanese stuff."

Senator NELSON. Was Stein connected with the New York American?

Capt. LESTER. Stein was a German professor.

Senator NELSON. He was a German intellectual?

Capt. LESTER. Yes; a German intellectual—a gentleman who was a specialist in Japanese affairs.

Senator NELSON. Oh, yes.

Capt. LESTER. And I might state in this connection that Mr. Fox worked with Mr. Schweppendick upon matters of policy. That is, if he was told by Schweppendick that they wanted a story of Hindenberg, he was given credentials and would start off and find Hindenberg. If he was told by the American that they wanted a story of the western front, he would be sent to the western front. If they wanted a Japanese story, at that time he would arrange with the Government officials to see the Japanese expert, who in this case was Prof. Stein.

Senator STERLING. And he received those instructions from Schweppendick, who you say was the representative of the Hearst papers in Germany?

Capt. LESTER. Yes, sir.

Maj. HUMES. He was the representative of the International News Service?

Capt. LESTER. No; he was the representative of the Hearst service. The Hearst service in Berlin went under the name of "Hearstschen Zeitungs-Unternehmungen, Amerika. Generalvertreter: Gustav Schweppendick." This is the Hearst News Bureau. That was its name.

Senator NELSON. And this Hearst bureau at Berlin instructed this man Fox to get up an editorial on the Japanese matters?

Capt. LESTER. Yes; they would give Mr. Fox his instructions which they had received on topics to be written on; and in this particular case they wanted an article on Japan, which article would be made in Germany, to be published in this country. This article which I have referred to was the one.

Senator OVERMAN. What is that article about?

Capt. LESTER. Prof. Stein attempts here to prove conclusively that a combination of Japan and China is imminent; that as a combined power they will arm, and be a menace to the United States and rule the world; what is commonly referred to as the "Yellow peril."

Senator NELSON. Yes.

Senator WOLCOTT. The professor did not put Mexico into that combination, did he, in that article?

Capt. LESTER. No; I think he eliminated Mexico. He talked of Japan as a world menace.

Senator NELSON. Japan and China?

Capt. LESTER. Japan and China in combination as a world menace.

Here is a letter that I would like to get into the record, written by Gustav Schweppendick to Edward Lyell Fox on July 27.

Senator NELSON. What year?

Capt. LESTER. The year is not given, but from other data it was in 1916 when Fox was over there, when he first went over. This letter reads as follows:

LESTER EXHIBIT No. 2.

(Berliner Bureau der Hearstschen Zeitungs-Unternehmungen, Amerika. Generalvertreter: Gustav Schweppendick)

BERLIN W. July 27.

Mr. EDWARD LYELL FOX,

DEAR MR. FOX: Your note of yesterday is at hand. I see you have secured two interviews which you are forwarding to Mr. Merrill. I also see you expect to go to Warsaw. Well, I had made arrangements to have one of my men there, not knowing any of your plans at that time. So we may have two men at the spot.

Yours

GUSTAV SCHWEPPENDICK
Central Hotel.

Senator NELSON. Who was Mr. Merrill?

Capt. LESTER. Mr. Merrill's title at that time was publisher of the New York American. I think he is the manager of the Hearst publications. This was 1915 that this letter was written, by the way. It could not have been 1916. Mr. Fox's articles were also published in the Deutsches Journal, the German publication operated by Mr. Hearst, or the Hearst American papers.

Senator NELSON. In this country?

Capt. LESTER. In the United States; yes, sir.

Senator OVERMAN. Published whereabouts?

Capt. LESTER. Published in the city of New York.

Senator NELSON. A German journal; the Deutsches Journal?

Capt. LESTER. This article is devoted to a general discussion of the efficiency of the German Army. I have not had it translated. I do not know that you want it. I have had it read to me and there is nothing of particular value in it; it is simply the fact that these articles were being used in the Hearst publications. There is also another article in the Deutsches Journal of April 11, 1915, on atrocities in East Prussia, written by Fox.

There is another article written by Mr. Fox and published in the New York American on April 19, 1915, entitled: "A Night on the Firing Line Before Ypres; A Thrilling Narrative by Edward Lyell Fox."

This article is rather of a well written, fanciful account of his impressions while on the firing line at the western front, and is entirely a matter of creation. He was not there at the time the article was written, although he was on the western front on several occasions. He received general instructions that the reporting of scenes of this character would be acceptable, and he wrote them. This is simply a sample.

Senator OVERMAN. He admitted that he was writing from his imagination articles that he was told to—purely imaginative articles?

Capt. LESTER. Yes; most of them were imagination; that is, this was an article intended to be of that character. This is not a news article; it is simply experiences.

Senator OVERMAN. Written upon suggestion of the bureau?

Capt. LESTER. Yes. At one time, and in fact for considerable periods subsequently, he had been on the western front.

Senator NELSON. I suppose the gist of this article is extolling the powers of the German Army?

Capt. LESTER. All to the end of establishing conclusively the courtesy of the German officers, the wonderful discipline of and the care taken of the men, and the high state of assumed efficiency, and, of course, their invincible character.

Senator STERLING. You spoke about an article in the Deutsches Journal a while ago, and stated that that related to the efficiency of the German Army.

Capt. LESTER. Yes; that is a general article on the subject of the war, which might appear in any newspaper. I can have that translated and submitted if you like.

Senator STERLING. It is hardly worth while.

Senator OVERMAN. No; I do not think that is necessary.

Capt. LESTER. Here is another article published in the New York American on April 9, 1915, entitled "A Day and a Night on the Russian Front with Field Marshal von Hindenberg." This is an article describing some of the events on the Russian front. Mr. Fox claimed to me that he was on more or less intimate terms with Field Marshal von Hindenberg, had met him on several occasions, and had been accorded courtesies by him. The fact is that Mr. Fox was on the eastern front on two or three occasions, as indicated by the photographs we found among his papers or that were handed over by him. The articles are not of particular significance or value, except to illustrate the glories of the German Army and the wonderful character of Von Hindenberg. If you like, I can make a sort of summary of each of these articles and put it in. I can make it brief.

Senator OVERMAN. I think that would be better than to put in the whole article.

(The summary prepared by Capt. Lester is here printed, as follows:)

LESTER EXHIBIT No. 3.

Summary of Article Appearing in The New York American, Sunday, April 25, 1915.—Written by Edward Lyell Fox, Entitled "Prof. Stein, Greatest Peace Apostle, Warns U. S. of Japanese Peril."

This article is based upon an alleged interview by Edward Lyell Fox with Prof. Ludwig Stein, which interview took place in Berlin. Prof. Stein is described as being Germany's greatest peace advocate and a permanent member of the International Peace Bureau organized in Switzerland. Prof. Stein in the alleged interview deals with the subject of universal peace and his belief in it and then takes up the subject of a Chinese and Japanese menace.

The following quotation fairly summarizes the views of Prof. Stein on this subject as expressed in the article: "A nation must be prepared for war. If the rulers of a nation leave their country unprepared they are guilty of criminal neglect. In China its four hundred millions of people are unprepared and are therefore at the mercy of a few million Japanese who are prepared. That is because in this generation might is right and all that we workers for peace can do, without injuring our States, is to face the facts of this generation, be prepared for war, if war there is to be, and keep on working for our ideal."

Earlier in the article, Prof. Stein states: "Up to now America has been the student from Europe, but from now on America will be the teacher. Today doubly so with the Panama Canal you are the forepost of the white race against the yellow." "The geographical and moral position that your country holds imposes upon it a great duty. It is to hold back the East. Your country cannot step aside from the yellow races. You must be prepared to cope with them."

Summary of Article Appearing in The New York American, April 29, 1915.—Written by Edward Lyell Fox, Entitled "A Day and a Night on the Russian Front with Field Marshal von Hindenburg."—A thrilling narrative by Edward Lyell Fox, Author of Series of Notable Reports on Atrocities in East Prussia.

This article purports to be an account of an alleged trip by Fox with Rittmeister Tzschirner of the First Dragoon Regiment in a motor along the eastern battle front of the German Army. The article is written to indicate a dialogue between Fox and Tzschirner as they passed along a German battle front in which the latter is pointing out to Fox the position of the Army and the various matters of military interest. A vivid description of an alleged battle is given in which the writer of the article witnesses a Russian attack which is repulsed by the German troops. The general tone of the article is indicated by the following quotation: "Still there is a tension that seems to be tightening. Down in the trench I see the flash of an officer's lamp; it is like a firefly. Other fireflies glimmer toward the right of the line, flashing and going out. Somewhere in the darkness a young voice laughs nervously. 'Why don't you open fire?' 'It is too soon' whispers the Oberlieutenant. Why did he have to whisper? And then I see the Russians. I see them in the great blinding flash of dusty lights. I see them revealed as pausing, blinking things, to whom the searchlights point with fingers of pitiless white. I see them—while all about me becomes the clamor of guns—stumble and fall; they stagger and crawl, as if the long, dusty flashes were lightning, striking them down; and wherever the white fingers point there death comes, and their hoarse throaty shouts become the wails of death and that open belt between the pines becomes lumpy with men, while the night grows horrid with the rattle of rifles and the quick, croaking beat of the guns." This being all over the Oberlieutenant gives his opinion of it—"Very fine" he says, "There are many Russian dead." "And then as is after all this were the important thing, he adds: "Tomorrow. I think we can build our entanglements."

Summary of Article Appearing in The New York American, April 19, 1915 - Written by Edward Lyell Fox, Entitled "A night on the Firing Line Before Ypres, Where the Fighting is Usually the Fiercest on the Western Front." A Thrilling Narrative by Edward Lyell Fox, Author of the notable series of reports on Russian atrocities in East Prussia.

This is a description of an alleged trip along the Western Front and the German Firing Line before Ypres. It is in the form of a diary and is claimed to have been written by Fox at the time the incident described occurred. The article deals with the high state of efficiency of the German Army under fire and the wonderful discipline among the officers and men. He describes the kind of food provided for the private soldiers and dwells upon the particular interest that the officers have in their troops. Colonel Myers is said to state to Fox: "Tell them in America that we are not barbarians." The article gives a vivid description of the German bombardment of the French trenches. He describes Colonel Myers as being in tears over the receipt of a letter and refers to a good looking private entering and saluting the Colonel, announcing that the concert was ready. Fox then describes a concert which took place in the bomb proof underground. The whole article tends to show the human side of the German character in war times and the efficiency and discipline of the Army and the feeling of good fellowship between officers and men.

Article Appearing in "Deutsches Journal" on April 11, 1915.—"Generals of the Zor Take Part in Atrocities in East Prussia."—"Officers Commit Crimes which One could not Attribute to Civilized People."

The neutral correspondent Fox declares that the Governor of the Zor is responsible for these atrocities. The Staff of the Commander in Chief of the Tenth Russian Army established an official harem. Hundreds of unfortunate women and young girls were held prisoners in the Hotel Skandzun at Tillkallen. The civil governor held his orgies here at which innocent girls were forced to take part. A woman was hung up by her feet because she refused to give wine to the officers. It describes the Imperial Government of the Czar Nicholas as being responsible for the atrocities committed in East Prussia during the three months' occupation of the Russian troops in a part of this province. Germany furnishes incontestable evidence of this effect. Germany also has proof that at least three Russian Commanders of Regiments took part in the outrages against innocent and helpless women and intends to make use of this evidence at the end of the war. On my trip through the districts of East Prussia, I had no difficulty in securing evidence of the most terrible crimes which were committed under the very eyes of the officers. The Staff Officers of General Sievers were quartered on an estate in Tillkallen. Everyday women were dragged to this estate. The Hotel Skandzun was made the official harem of the officers of General Sievers. Troops were sent out to capture young and beautiful girls and bring them to this hotel. Although it was only intended for fifty guests four hundred women prisoners were kept within its walls. For many this fate was worse than death. When I reached Tillkallen after Hindenberg had defeated the Army of 240,000 Russians, I found it in a dreadful state. The houses were in ruins and everything of value had been removed. On a second trip to the front, accompanied by Major Zchirner, while waiting at Jucha, Fox comments on the rapidity with which trains passed carrying soldiers to the front, and claims that Hindenberg's success in defeating the Russians was due to the efficiency and speed with which he transported soldiers and executed surprise attacks. In an article to be published the following week, Fox promises to give details of the atrocities committed by the Russians on children of Germany.

Summary of Article Appearing in The New York American, Sunday, April 18, 1915.—Written by Edward Lyell Fox, Entitled "Hands and Feet of Boys Cut Off by the Cossacks," Says Edward Lyell Fox.—Mutilation of Children by Retreating Soldiers Charged in Official Records.—Evidences of Atrocious Acts Found Everywhere.—Eighteen Lads Found Maimed and Lying Helpless in the Snow.

Edward Lyell Fox, the neutral war correspondent with General von Hindenburg's army in East Prussia, today gives the third of his series of articles on Russian atrocities brought to light when the Germans drove the Czar's troops out of the occupied territory. Russian officers and soldiers are accused of mutilating children. The crimes are charged against Cossacks and not against soldiers of the Imperial guard.

Official records are given to substantiate further stories of attacks on women. The German Government plans to use these records when peace terms are considered.

BY EDWARD LYLEL FOX.

(Copyright 1915, by the New York American.)

The mutilation of German children by the Russians during their three months' occupation of East Prussia will be called to the attention of the other Powers at the end of the war as further proof that Russian barbarism must be prevented from further expansion.

I have already told of the profanation of thousands of German women by Russian officers and soldiers. Uncontrovertible evidence of these atrocities in affidavits and court records has been presented by me in two articles published in the New York American on April 4 and 11.

The crimes perpetrated upon the children are regarded by Germany as indicative of the same racial degeneracy exhibited in the wanton outrages upon the women.

In every instance it was the weak, the innocent and the unprotected that suffered.

When the nations lay down their arms and sit in judgment, Germany will point to all the horrors of Russian rule in East Prussia and demand that the rest of Europe be forever safeguarded against another bloody thrust of the claw of Slavic savagery.

EVIDENCES OF CRUELTY FOUND EVERYWHERE.

As I followed the troops of General Hindenburg in their triumphant drive against the crumbling Russian Tenth Army under General Russky last February, I found evidences everywhere of Tartar cruelty toward the children of an enemy's country.

The wild Cossack raiders were charged with most of these awful barbarities. They would pick up boys along the roads, wound and sometimes permanently maim them. They would tear babies from the breast of mothers and after violating the terror stricken women, cut off the fingers of the infants.

"We leave no one behind who will be a soldier," a Cossack prisoner told me. "We do not intend that Germany will raise up any more men to fight the Czar."

The article then goes into detail, showing specific cases of alleged atrocities by the Cossack soldiers, the evidence of which the article states was obtained by Fox, he being an eye-witness to many of the results of these atrocities and to have heard statements of Cossack prisoners in the hands of the German soldiers.

Capt. LESTER. In 1916 Mr. Fox was in Germany again. He went over in 1915 and spent about three months and returned in the fall of 1915, and immediately went back in November, 1915, and stayed practically through the year of 1916. In 1916 the newspaper correspondents of important newspapers of different countries were taken by the German Government throughout the empire in a private train. They left Berlin and went to Dresden, to Munich, from Munich to Hamburg and to Kiel, and from Kiel back to Berlin. The object of the trip was to show the newspaper men the physical conditions in Germany, so that articles could be written to counteract statements in the press of the allied and other neutral countries that Germany was on the verge of starvation. These men were very liberally entertained in some 8 or 10 cities, and Mr. Fox was down on the list, of which I have a copy—the official list—as the representative of the Hearst publications in New York and Boston. I would like to have this go in the record.

Senator OVERMAN. Have you the whole list?

Capt. LESTER. I have the whole list; yes, sir.

Senator OVERMAN. Let it go in.

(The list referred to is here printed in the record in full, as follows:)

LESTER EXHIBIT No. 4.

(List der Teilnehmer an der Reise nach mitteldeutschen und süddeutschen Städten.)

1. Leiter: Direktor Schumacher, z. Z. in der Zentralstelle für Auslandsdienst Berlin.
2. Frau Dr. Lehr de Waal (verschied. holländische u. indische Zeitungen).
3. Fraulein Ebba van Sillén (Swenska Dagblad, Svensk Volkviljan) Stockholm.
4. van Lissa (Algemeen Handelsblad) Amsterdam.
5. Harry Carr (Los Angeles Times) Kalifornien.
6. Mr. Fox (Hearst Blätter) New York, Boston usw.
7. Major Sa (Corcio da Manhã) Brasilien.
8. Rev. L. M. Powers (Boston Journal u. and. Zeitungen) Boston.
9. Abrecht (New Yorker Staatszeitung) New York.
10. Philip Powers (Associated Press) New York.
11. Dr. Lar Llescu (Rumanische Zeitungen) Bukarest.
12. Siosteen (Südschwedische Zeitungen) Goteborg.
13. Djelepy (Semala) Athen.
14. Saadi Bey (Ikdam) Konstantinopel.
15. Olaf Selmer-Anderssen (Dagblad, Tidens Tigh) Kristiania.
16. Moussault Illustrationsphotograph (Vereenigde Fotobureaux) Amsterdam.
17. John Everets, Kinophotograph der Zentralstelle für Auslandsdienst.
18. A. Grohs, Illustrationsphotograph, Berlin.

Capt. LESTER. In possible response to Senator King's question as to what newspapers were represented——

Senator OVERMAN. What newspapers were represented?

Capt. LESTER. The Los Angeles Times was represented by Mr. Harry Carr. The Boston Journal was represented by Rev. L. M. Powers. A man who is down here under the name of Abrecht represented the New Yorker Staats Zeitung. Philip Powers represented the Associated Press. All other papers are foreign papers—that is, of different other countries.

Mr. Fox, in his letter to Capt. von Papen, which was read in evidence by Mr. Bielaski, makes reference to a propaganda scheme in conjunction with the plan of violence in San Francisco—the propaganda scheme being the publication through moving pictures of a film play which would illustrate the bitterness toward Japan. Mr. Fox, in the telegram which he has sent to this committee, criticised this statement, as he did in his examination by the Military Intelligence, as a fanciful idea that never took shape in any form. He repudiates it, in other words. Now the facts are——

Senator WOLCOTT. Does he necessarily mean repudiation of the story? His criticism of it as fanciful may mean that it is his opinion that it is impractical, but that may not mean a repudiation of the statement of the fact that such a thing was contemplated.

Capt. LESTER. Well, in the telegram he repudiated the fact that such a thing was in contemplation. In the telegram to this committee he said that it was a scheme to extract money from the German agents. In fact, that is what he stated to me, that he and Dr. Karl Armand Graves, the man that wrote that famous spy story, had framed this up between them; that they had concocted this plan, and that they had done the writing and had sent it to von Papen with the idea that von Papen would take hold of it in a tangible way and compensate them for the plan, and then they were to drop out. In other words, he stated that he never had any idea of personally embarking in the enterprise, or Dr. Graves had no idea of personally embarking in it. But the fact is that Mr. Hearst, through the International Film Service Corporation, put out a film in 1916 called Patria, which exploited the very idea which was set forth generally in Fox's statement. I would like to make a brief statement as to the Patria film, as it was suppressed—that is, it was changed at the request of President Wilson, and was suppressed in Canada—as being German propaganda or having the earmarks of it and intended to stir up trouble between this country and Japan.

Senator STERLING. Was that the play shown in this country with Mrs. Castle in the title rôle?

Capt. LESTER. Yes; Mrs. Vernon Castle was the heroine.

Senator STERLING. The play was seen by the President, was it not?

Capt. LESTER. Yes; it was seen by him; and the report was—that is, our reports are—that in a personal interview he requested Mr. Hearst to eliminate features of the play, which was done.

"Patria" was a serial photoplay, released weekly in two-reel episodes, probably 10 weeks in all. It was made under the direction of the Whartons, in upper New York, for the International Film Service Corporation, a Hearst-owned company distributing film, later reincorporated as the International Film Service Co. (Inc.). It was made in 1916, and cost about $90,000, including payment for the services of Mrs. Vernon Castle as the star. This is a conservative estimate.

"Patria" had a story with three barrels. Its principal excuse was "preparedness." But by the time the first episodes were released the country was already committed to that. Therefore only the other two elements, anti-Mexican and anti-Japanese propaganda, remained active. These showed the attempt by Japan to conquer America with the aid of Mexico. A Japanese noble, at the head of the secret service of the Emperor in America, was the chief villain. Japanese troops invaded California, committing appropriate atrocities.

"Patria" was first shown in New York January 9, 1917, and about that time in other cities. The American and other Hearst papers carried the story in serial novel form week by week. And the story was run—as is the custom with all serials—in a large number of newspapers, one in each city.

"Patria" was shown in the smaller towns and cities, the first four or five months of the war, I think up until about September 7, 1917.

Senator STERLING. The whole film was not run in one evening? It was like a story "continued in our next"?

Capt. LESTER. Yes; it was "continued in our next." The whole thing was to hold the patronage of the people at that particular theater, Senator.

Senator STERLING. Meanwhile the story itself was being published in these newspapers?

Capt. LESTER. The story itself was being published, so that the people who missed an evening, for any reason, could keep up and know where they were when they saw the next one.

Senator STERLING. You spoke about the revision of the story of the film after it had been witnessed by the President, and possibly upon the suggestion of the President. Do you know how the story was considered and treated in Canada?

Capt. LESTER. Yes, sir. After "Patria" had been revamped for use in this country by the elimination of the anti-Japanese emphasis, the word "Japan" was removed, the Japanese characters were largely given Mexican names, and the Japanese end was dumped on Mexico. That is, Japan was eliminated from the scenery.

Senator NELSON. And the Mexicans were made the villains?

Capt. LESTER. The Mexicans were made the villains, and they changed the whole piece over to Mexico, so that the Japanese had Mexican names; but in the film they were still wearing Japanese uniforms. [Laughter.]

Senator STERLING. That is just what I was going to ask you.

Capt. LESTER. Now, the history of the Canadian end was this: The Canadian rights of the picture had been paid for and secured by a reputable Canadian concern which had no suspicion of the possibilities of the production. Col. Chambers, censor of Canada, was given a private view of the first few episodes, and at once recognized the design of the promoters of the play. He declared that anyone concerned in the showing of this play in Canada in its original shape would be liable to presecution under the censorship Orders in Council. Consequently, the whole film underwent a remodeling. Japanese villains became nondescripts with Latin names, and Japanese interior settings as shown in the play, and Japanese troops that in the original were shown in deadly conflict with patriotic American troops, were entirely eliminated. In fact, when the picture was shown in Canada it did not retain the slightest Japanese flavor, and when the United States entered the war the Canadian version, even as censored, was taken out of the theaters, because the Canadian censor would not permit it to be run at all. Those films were taken back.

Senator STERLING. Have you stated who wrote Patria?

Capt. LESTER. I can not recall the name. Some of these gentlemen here may know it.

Mr. FROST. Vance's name was on the film.

Capt. LESTER. Yes; I recall that. The play was put out over the name of Mr. Louis Joseph Vance as being the author of the senario.

Senator STERLING. Do you know whether Mr. Vance conceived the idea or not?

Capt. LESTER. There has been information that has come to us that Mr. Louis Vance had absolutely nothing to do with the writing of the play back of the scenario—and that he did not write it, and his name was used merely for its advertising value. That is merely information. I know nothing about it.

Senator STERLING. But, affirmatively, is there anything to show who did conceive it and who wrote it?

Capt. LESTER. No, sir; we have no evidence. I have none.

There are one or two other instances in Mr. Fox's connection with Germany that might be of interest to the committee. Mr. Fox was used by the German Government and by Dr. Albert and Count Von Bernstorff as a messenger, as a great many Americans were used, in the transmission of important communications to and from Berlin, between Berlin and New York. In 1916, upon his return with a bundle of very important documents which were given him by the foreign office to deliver here, he became possessed of certain of them, or copies of them, and took them to the British secret service in this country. That is, Mr. Fox's story is that another man had the papers, but he admitted to our officers that he took certain of these papers to the British. He gives rather a hazy account of why he took them to the British. He told me that on one occasion he had a thrill of patriotism, and thought that he ought to show up the Germans, but the British did not—

Senator NELSON. Warm up to him?

Capt. LESTER. Warm up to him very much, really. They strung him along for quite a while and got all the information they could out of him, and then when he started back in the fall of 1916 with a man by the name of O'Brian, to go back into Germany, something stopped Fox at Copenhagen. He did not get any farther. He was let by Kirkwall but was stopped at Copenhagen; but O'Brian got into Germany. I think O'Brian was connected with one of the moving-picture film concerns. O'Brian, as far as we know, is involved in no way. He was just going with Fox.

Senator NELSON. How did he come to be stopped at Copenhagen?

Capt. LESTER. Fox returned to the United States. Mr. Fox was known in the British Embassy as a messenger and trusted as a messenger by Von Bernstorff and also by the foreign office.

Senator STERLING. The papers he turned over to the British foreign office were papers from the German foreign office?

Capt. LESTER. Yes; and destined for Dr. Albert.

Senator OVERMAN. He kept copies of them?

Capt. LESTER. He told about four or five different stories on that. I think the fact was that he and another fellow thought they would perhaps get a little easy money by turning over these papers to the British, and I imagine, from what he also stated, that the British had already seen the papers and probably had copies of them before they arrived in this country. It looks that way, at least.

As bearing on the article written by Mr. Fox on Atrocities on the Eastern Front, I want to read a cable from the German Embassy in New York to the foreign office, dated April 29, 1915. [Reading:]

War correspondent Edward Lyell Fox asserts having filed with War Ministry Berlin by request report on Russian atrocities East Prussia and states Major Herwarth and Censor Roediger also informed. True?

If a reply came to the inquiry as to whether it was true that Fox had written this article and filed it, as was the custom, there is no record of it here; that is, there is no answer to that message.

In connection with the last trip of Fox and his stopping at Copenhagen, the Berlin foreign office apparently sent an inquiry concerning O'Brian, for this message goes back from the German Embassy to the Berlin foreign office:

Replying to wireless 422 (missing) have only known O'Brian as close friend of Fox and therefore consider him just as reliable as Fox.

Senator OVERMAN. You have no evidence of why Fox was stopped in Copenhagen?

Capt. LESTER. I have some evidence, but I never gave it any credence at all, because it came from Fox himself. He stated that he got to Copenhagen, after spending about a week on the ship at Kirkwall, and went to the American Embassy and told our ambassador that he was going into Germany; that is, he had known our ambassador on his previous trips; and he says for some reason that his visé was held up, that he could not get his passport viséed, to go into Germany, for days and days. He went to the German chargé there and could get very little satisfaction from them. Then he tried the British and got no satisfaction. According to his story, he waited around for two or three weeks and nobody made a move, so he returned. I never made any investigation through the British Intelligence Service as to why it was; of course, I know that Fox was on their list as a German agent—so considered. But, of course, our country was neutral at that time, he was an American citizen, born here, and he had a right to go from this country into Germany, and, as long as he was not on British soil, they had no jurisdiction over him. He could go and come as he liked.

There is one cable here which I can show the committee. I frankly can not explain what it means, but I will let you read it and see whether you want it in the record or not. [Showing telegram to the committee.]

Senator OVERMAN. Just read it, please.

Capt. LESTER. The following is a message from the German Embassy to the Foreign Office, dated December 27, 1915:

With reference to decree A. N. 56, promised Hearst and Chicago Tribune facilities Wiegly probably already Germany Hearst's photographer Nelsons left on Ford's peace ship Please instruct legation Hague facilities Edwards journey Germany.

Senator STERLING. To whom were these sent?

Capt. LESTER. Those were sent from the embassy to the German Foreign Office in Berlin. The Edwards referred to in this telegram is probably Louis Durant Edwards, private secretary of Dr. Hale, who left about this time.

Senator OVERMAN. Who is Mrs. Fairwell, mentioned in one of those telegrams I see there?

Senator WOLCOTT. That is in another telegram, not in the one just read.

Senator OVERMAN. Yes. It reads:

Chicago Tribune asks about Mrs. Walter Fairwell, correspondent (Mildred F.) in Monastir. (Answer safe)..

Capt. LESTER. Yes; that is another one. Well, that was an ordinary inquiry through the German Embassy, I suppose. I did not attach any particular significance to it. Do you want me to read it into the record?

Senator OVERMAN. No; you need not do that.

Capt. LESTER. I might, if the committee thinks proper, make a statement about Mr. Fox, about his conduct after the United States went into the war. I think possibly it is due to him to state exactly the facts.

Senator OVERMAN. If there is anything in his favor, let us have it.

Capt. LESTER. Mr. Fox turned over to me all the personal correspondence that passed between himself and his wife, and various other personal letters, during the period about March, 1917, down to August, 1918. Mr. Fox went to the Plattsburgh Training Camp and obtained a commission in the United States National Army, in an artillery regiment. I think he was commissioned as a first lieutenant, and afterward became a captain. We made a very complete investigation of his conduct while in the service, and as I stated, he turned over these letters and I examined them. There was nothing to show the slightest suspicion of any German connections, and Mr. Fox's statement made to me and to others, that he had burned his bridges behind him in the early part of 1917. I think, is true. He made a fatal blunder or mistake before the Military Intelligence Division. He lied consistently for five days, and swore to it, and it was not until his documentary evidence was discovered and found and placed before him, that he finally came through with a fairly full confession, and it was on that account, and of course the fact of his previous connections, that he was discharged from the Army. I think it is probably fair to him to state that there was nothing of any connections after March, 1917, with the German Government or any German agents, or anybody connected with Germany.

Senator WOLCOTT. He does not now wear the uniform, then?

Capt. LESTER. No, sir; he was discharged in either September or October, 1918, after a very complete hearing before the officials of the War Department. In fact, the case went to Secretary Baker.

Senator STERLING. How old a man is Mr. Fox?

Capt. LESTER. Either 33 or 34.

Senator STERLING. Was there any reference, in this correspondence turned over to you, of his past record and his activities as a German agent?

Capt. LESTER. No; he had no German connections, that I could discover, until the fall of 1914.

Senator OVERMAN. Do you know whether he had any reputation as a newspaper man prior to that?

Capt. LESTER. He had written quite a number of plays.

Senator WOLCOTT (after examining book). He is 31.

Capt. LESTER. Thirty-one?

Senator WOLCOTT. According to Who's Who.

Capt. LESTER. What is the date?

Senator WOLCOTT. Eighteen hundred and eighty-seven is the date of his birth.

Capt. LESTER. My impression was that he was 33.

Senator OVERMAN. It was a pretty close guess.

Capt. LESTER. He has written a good deal for the papers. He was employed on various newspapers in New York from time to time as a reporter, and he has written a number of scenarios for moving-picture plays.

Senator STERLING. You say he turned over to you the correspondence between himself and his wife after the beginning of the year 1917?

Capt. LESTER. Yes.

Senator STERLING. Was there any reference in that correspondence to his previous record or activities?

Capt. LESTER. No; none whatever. This correspondence shows that he was intensely interested in his military work; and he made reference in his correspondence in this sense, that he had made a terrible mistake in ever hooking up with the German group, and it contained statements that he expected to retrieve himself, and wanted to go to France, which he did. He was sent to France with his regiment, and returned from France upon the order of the Chief of Staff upon the discovery of his connection and the various ramifications.

Maj. HUMES. Does this complete the Fox matter?

Capt. LESTER. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. There was some testimony produced the other day by Mr. Bielaski with reference to the German information service, and the preliminary steps leading up to the organization of that service, the sending of German representatives to this country to man and manage it. Will you outline the preliminary steps that were taken as the result of your personal investigation and your familiarity with the records of the Military Intelligence, and outline these activities?

Capt. LESTER. There are a few things on the connection of the German information service as conducted by Albert and Fuehr and others associated with them that might be of value in this investigation which Mr. Bielaski did not touch upon because I do not think they had, perhaps, the information.

The Military Intelligence Division has obtained from one of Dr. Albert's assistants, who was selected by the German Government to come to the United States in August, 1914, with Albert, a great deal of information concerning the propaganda work of the Germans in the United States and elsewhere from 1914 on to the end of the war. This man, who was interned in 1917, was a German judge or jurist; that is, a man who was a judge in a court of record in Berlin in 1914, the year the war broke out. He was in the Government service. He came to this country, as I will explain a little later, and was interned. We obtained from him a very close insight into the formation of the German news bureau or information service, as it was called, from the time it started. The facts are these: The men who were in the German public service in civil positions, such as judges, members of the different municipal governments, members of the foreign office, members of other various departments, were required upon taking office to state whether or not they were available for foreign service. That was part of the system and has been, as I understand it, for a number of years. In June of 1914 there were about 200 or 300 of these men in civil positions, such as judges and men in municipalities, etc., who were occupying governmental civil positions, who were approached by agents from the foreign office and agents of the chancellor with an inquiry as to whether they were available for foreign service and certain formalities were gone through with.

inquiries were made as to their financial condition, etc., and their families, and there were selected about 130 men from Germany, from different German cities, who were to be sent on foreign service.

As early as the 10th of July, 1914, these men were taken to the foreign office, including our informant, and privately notified that they were to be sent abroad, with the point of destination. This man was told that he was to go to America. He and 31 others were destined for the United States.

Senator OVERMAN. That was before war was declared?

Capt. LESTER. Yes; that was before war was declared.

Senator WOLCOTT. Do you remember the date of the Sarajevo murder?

Capt. LESTER. It was in June, 1914; was it not?

Maj. HUMES. It was in June.

Capt. LESTER. Mr. Benham might look it up in the Times index.

Senator WOLCOTT. This particular piece of testimony that you are giving, that has some bearing upon the German prognostications of war, the immediate, proximate cause of the war being that murder. I would like to know whether that was——

Senator OVERMAN. That is very interesting testimony. Suppose we go along now.

Capt. LESTER. It is a little more definite than that, Senator, because this man and all his group that he was familiar with——

Senator NELSON. What was his name?

Capt. LESTER. I do not feel that I should disclose his name, Senator. The question of his deportation after peace or his remaining in this country is a matter, of course as to all these men, now under consideration, and if his connection was disclosed in a public record and it did get back to Berlin, it would be rather uncomfortable for him.

Senator OVERMAN. I think you had better not disclose it.

Senator NELSON. All right.

Capt. LESTER. Now these men were gathered together about the 10th of July and their instruction began. That is, these men were selected for their knowledge of English, Japanese, Chinese, Spanish, their adaptability along certain lines of writing, their legal experience, and particularly men were selected with reference to their literary attainments and their ability as writers and their historical knowledge. They were told, about the 10th of July—their group—that they were going to America; that there was to be a war in Europe very shortly; and their instruction began along the lines of the propaganda work that they were to conduct.

Senator STERLING. That was just a few days after the celebrated Potsdam meeting of high German officers.

Capt. LESTER. This date is definitely fixed by our informant as July 10, 1914.

Senator OVERMAN. Have you found the date of the Sarajevo assassination?

Capt. LESTER. It was June 29, 1914.

Senator OVERMAN. And this was when?

Capt. LESTER. This was the 10th of July, 1914.

Senator WOLCOTT. And this lot of men, over 130, got their instructions to mobilize at the foreign office some time early in June?

Capt. LESTER. Yes; they were approached early in June; during the month of June, before the incident——

Senator NELSON. Before the murder?

Capt. LESTER. Before the murder. They were all approached. This man was, and he tells me that every man was. As a matter of fact, he says it was common knowledge among men connected in Government circles, on the inside, that there was to be a general European war. It was absolutely known. On the 10th of July they were told that it was to come. Now, out of these 130 men, there was a large number sent to South America, a group was sent to Mexico, and a group was sent to China; but they all came by the same routes, and they—that is, the 31 men—all came in August, 1914, on the same boat that Dr. Albert arrived on. They arrived with him. The man arrived with him and 31 of his group; but the other were filtered along through by other lines to South America and these other countries.

Senator STERLING. How many were destined to this country?

Captain LESTER. Thirty-one.

Senator WOLCOTT. Did your informant communicate to you or not, whether the calling together of these 30-odd men on June 14 was a new event, or was that something that was in line with the permanent policy of the Imperial German Government?

Capt. LESTER. No; these men had never been called together before.

Senator WOLCOTT. Not this particular group; but do you know whether or not every year there was a systematized scheme to send out these officials over the world?

Capt. LESTER. No; there was not.

Senator WOLCOTT. This was the first time that this had been done!

Capt. LESTER. Yes, sir.

Maj. HUMES. May I interrupt there?

Capt. LESTER. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. It is my understanding from your former statement, Captain, that the general policy was to obligate certain persons in the Government service to accept foreign service at any time that the Government might demand it of them?

Capt. LESTER. No; not except in the military or naval service; and they indicated.

Maj. HUMES. They indicated, then?

Capt. LESTER. Yes: I stated that. Any man who went into the civil service was required to state whether or not he would accept foreign service in any capacity. In fact, the formality is rather elaborate that they go through with.

Maj. HUMES. In other words, when a man entered the Government service he was invited to volunteer for foreign service by signifying his willingness to accept that kind of service?

Capt. LESTER. Well, it is the same proposition, the same plan, that is adopted at the present time in the United States Army. A man indicates, when he enters the service, what his various qualifications are. If he understands foreign languages, if he would like to have foreign service, he is asked to indicate that. But in this particular case it is a civil formality. Of course, in the military and naval services they do not have to indicate. They are sent, and go wherever they are sent.

Senator OVERMAN. They have prepared a list of these officials that can be ordered away in foreign service?

Capt. LESTER. Yes, sir; they have a record or index system containing the name of every man in Germany that is in the civil service of the empire, wherever he is located, with his qualifications, his history, and everything connected with him, and on that record is his indication as to whether or not he would accept or desires foreign service—that is, outside of Germany proper. And those men are selected, for instance, for consular service, and men that are commercial attachés and have been in times of peace. But on this particular occasion, in response to your question, these men were rounded up—that is, the men who were skilled as writers and publicists were rounded up and these men selected from a large group, these men that came to this country, for the purpose of conducting the German propaganda along the lines of the propaganda that had been conducted in Germany for 20 years of the pan Germanism. These men had worked in this very type of propaganda, many of them for 15 or 20 years.

Senator OVERMAN. And they were preparing, even before war was declared, German propaganda in this country.

Capt. LESTER. Since 1894 the pan-Germanism propaganda has been systematically distributed from Germany over all the United States, South America, China, Japan, and every country.

Senator WOLCOTT. That prompts me again to ask whether or not this group of men that were summoned to go in June, 1914, were simply brought together to carry on a thing which had been proceeding for quite some time—you say it was since 1894—or whether it was to meet an emergency that was new, that was about to arise; whether it was to meet the special purpose?

Capt. LESTER. So far as is known, in the United States, outside of Prof. Münsterberg's type and Hugo Schweitzer, there was not any direct German propagandist work done in the country except through the German-American Alliance and the various State and local alliances that were affiliated with them.

Senator WOLCOTT. Did your informant enlighten you on this, or did he say anything to you that would give you information upon this, namely: Whether or not, prior to the year 1914, Germany had such agents as these 31 men in America, or in any other part of the world, carrying on German propaganda?

Capt. LESTER. Well, they had sent men into different countries systematically ever since 1894. That is, the exchange-professor idea was a propaganda idea.

Senator WOLCOTT. But that was not the sort of thing that was done here in June, 1914?

Capt. LESTER. No; quite different.

Senator OVERMAN. They had never selected a number like this?

Capt. LESTER. They had never selected a group for a definite purpose before.

Maj. HUMES. May I interrupt you a moment?

Senator WOLCOTT. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. Capt. Lester has already stated that they were instructed on the 10th of July that there was going to be a war in Europe.

Senator WOLCOTT. Yes; I know.

Maj. HUMES. So that entered as an element in the assemblage of these men.

Senator OVERMAN. We will stop here and take an adjournment until after lunch.

(At 1.10 o'clock p. m. the subcommittee took a recess until 2.30 o'clock p. m.)

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The subcommittee met, pursuant to the taking of the recess, at 2.30 o'clock p. m.

Senator OVERMAN. The committee will come to order. Proceed, Maj. Humes.

TESTIMONY OF CAPT. GEORGE B. LESTER—Resumed.

Maj. HUMES. Capt. Lester, when the committee adjourned you were discussing the preliminary stages out of which the propaganda activities in the United States developed. Will you proceed with the statement where you left off when we took the recess?

Capt. LESTER. I stated that these men had been gathered together, and about 31 of them had been sent over here to the United States.

There is one point that I think will be of interest, and that is the preliminary instruction that commenced on the 10th of July in Berlin, to this group that were assigned for duty in the United States.

This was outlining to them by representatives of the German foreign office and the various German governmental bodies the lines of propaganda work that were to be carried on. This was done through a series of lectures and continued daily for many hours at a time; that is, just giving them the methods that they should adopt and the plans that should be put into operation. In fact, the plan of propaganda was reduced to a form of very elaborate memoranda for the different departments or sections that were to handle the work.

For example, there was a certain group of this body that came over that were to handle strictly the commercial end. These men were to get into communication with the agents and representatives of the Hamburg-American Line and the North German Lloyd Line and their various ramifications.

Senator NELSON. And, I suppose, the German consuls in this country?

Capt. LESTER. Yes. There was another group that was to affiliate itself with the political side, and work through the embassy and the consular agents on purely political propaganda.

Another section was to handle the propaganda in connection with the propaganda agents in China and Japan, South America, and Mexico.

The men selected for this were men who understood the languages. One man I have in mind particularly was an expert in the Chinese language, and could read and write it fluently, and Japanese, also, and was familiar with conditions in these countries.

That was what went under the name of Pan-Islamitic propaganda.

Senator NELSON. Captain, have you the names of these 31 men: and if so, is there any objection to giving them?

Capt. LESTER. There is an objection, Senator, to giving certain of them. I can give you the names of several. I can give you now offhand two or three of them.

There was a Dr. Mecklenberg, a Dr. Kraske, and a Dr. Bonn.

Most of these men went back with the diplomatic party. I have a list of all of the men who came over with Dr. Albert, or were associated with him, and also a list of everyone who went back with the Von Bernstorff party.

Senator NELSON. File those lists with the evidence, leaving out such as you feel ought not to be filed. Would not that be a good idea, Mr. Chairman?

Senator OVERMAN. Yes. Withhold those that you think ought to be withheld.

Capt. LESTER. Very well, sir.

LESTER EXHIBIT No. 5.

List of certain of the German group of thirty-one men who came to the United States as assistants to Dr. Feuhr and the German propaganda agents.

Dr. H. Meumann, Duisburg, about 45 years old.

Dr. Jos. Stern (assumed name—Pascher), Goerlitz, about 36 years old.

Max Ritter, Berlin, about 32 years old.

Dr. Hans Mack, Koenigsberg, about 38 years old.

Dr. Karl Fernow, Unknown, about 40 years old.

Felix Schelbe, Dresden, about 35 years old.

Dr. Selbmann, Berlin, about 45 years old.

Fritz Hoff, Muenchen, about 40 years old.

Walter Kuehne, Berlin, about 40 years old.

Richard Liskow, Karlsruhe, about 35 years old.

A. Neuberger, Heidelberg, about 45 years old.

Hans Schmidt, Essen, about 30 years old.

Mr. Keppler, Posen, about 35 years old.

Mr. Homann, Hamburg, about 40 years old.

Mr. von Borkowski, Berlin, about 30 years old.

NOTE.—The names in italics indicate that these men, in 1914, or early in 1915, went to Mexico.

The approximate ages are given at the time when they entered the United States in August, 1914.

LESTER EXHIBIT No. 6.

Revised list of principal persons in the suite of Count von Bernstorff who sailed from New York on the Scandinavian-American Line steamship Frederick VIII on February 14, 1917.

(List furnished by the State Department.)

Count Johann von Bernstorff, Ambassador.

Mr. Heniel von Halmhausen, Minister Plenipotentiary.

Prince Hatzfeld-Trachenberg, Counselor of the Embassy.

Mr. Heinrich Albert, Imperial Privy Counselor.

Mr. Wilhelm von Bletenghoff, Secretary to the Embassy.

Dr. George Ahrens, Attache to the Embassy.

Mr. Wolff von Igel, Secretary to von Papen.

Mr. Richard Sachse, Chief of the Chancellory.

Dr. Frederich Edler, Chancellor.

Mr. Paul Kuhn, Assistant Chancellor.

Dr. Wilhelm Breittling, German Consul, St. Louis, Mo.

Ernest Elchorn, German Consul, Savannah, Ga.

Baron von Relswitz, German Consul, Chicago, Ill.

Eric Hasenfelder, Attache German Consulate, N. Y.

Oscar Mezger, German Consul, Cincinnati, O.

Dr. Ohrt, Attache Cincinnati Consulate.

Mr. Paul Roh, Consul, New Orleans.

Mr. Julius Umbach, German Consul, Ponce, Porto Rico.

Dr. Mecklenberg, Former Secretary to Consulate General, Yokohama, Japan

Assistant to Dr. Fuehr.

Heinrich Plage, Former Secretary to Consulate General, Yokohama, Japan

Assistant to Dr. Fuehr.

Dr. Fuehr, Formerly Secretary at German Embassy, Tokio.

Kurt Zeigler, German Consul General, Denver.

Prof. Moritz Bonn (writer), Assistant to Dr. Albert.

Eric Zoepfell, German Consul, Seattle, Wash.

Captain Hans Tauscher, Accredited representative of Krupps, Germany.

In addition to the above were certain other consuls, consular agents, secretaries, messengers, friends, servants, etc.

Upon the arrival of this party in the United States, their instructions were to get into immediate touch with the Hamburg-American Line through the publicity agent, Mr. Matthew B. Claussen.

Mr. Claussen undertook with Dr. Albert the inauguration of the bureau known as the German Information Service, generally referred to as the German Press Bureau, at 1123 Broadway.

Arrangements had previously been made with Mr. George Sylvester Viereck to take charge of the party and see that they were looked after in New York and brought in contact with prominent German-American people; that is, I am not referring to all of them, but such as were to be detailed for specific duty in New York. Mr. Viereck arranged all the details, and hired the offices at 1123 Broadway, New York. They consisted of almost an entire floor for their general offices; and then above, on the next floor, which was the sixth floor, a suite of offices for Dr. Albert which was the general meeting place for conferences of Dr. Albert, and Boy-ed, and von Papen, and Dr. Dernburg when he came into the conferences, and other German agents. It was at this place, 1123 Broadway, that most of the conferences took place, although Dr. Albert's official office was at the Hamburg-American Line, 45 Broadway.

Senator OVERMAN. Was it hard to get into his office?

Capt. LESTER. If you are interested in that phase of it, I will explain about that, Senator. There was a man by the name of Bourgmeister who was attached to the Hamburg-American Line, and the information gathered was this, which I think is a fact:

Dr. Albert's office was accessible through the third-class passenger ticket office, by an elevator used by the employees of the Hamburg-American Line; and the password was "Bourgmeister." That is men who wanted to see Dr. Albert by appointment had to know the password, or they could not get in, and they had to come in in that way. Otherwise he was always out, because his movements were very much guarded.

He had not only the two offices, but he frequented an office at 60 Wall Street, New York, where Von Igel maintained his headquarters; and there were various other meeting places throughout the city.

In that connection I intended to state that this party left Copenhagen on the 4th of August, 1914, and arrived in this country on. I think it was, the 15th of August. It was the same steamer that Dr. Albert and Mr. Hammerling came over on, as was testified here.

These men were filtered into the different grades of passengers. They were not all in the first class. They put some in the second class, and some in the steerage, and some in the so-called third class, and a few of them in the first class. The idea was not that they were not all entitled to come in the first class, but they did not want such a large body in one part of the ship; so that they scattered them around. That was prearranged, and a part of the plan of getting them here.

When they arrived they established telegraphic communication by direct wireless to Berlin through the Nauen wireless station in Germany, by way of Sayville, and direct to the headquarters at 1123 Broadway. That was a government wire—that is, a German Government wire—the Sayville service being part of the so-called wireless "trust" that is operated by Germany, or was operated by Germany throughout the war. These stations are all over in every continent and are numerous. Mr. Becker, I believe, will have some interesting information on that angle of it which I think the committee would be glad to have in the record.

The scheme of propaganda, so far as the visible end of it was concerned, was to write up each day a series of articles strongly pro-German in their character, which articles were compiled from German newspapers, German magazines, German books, American newspapers, and American books, and were built up together in what the Germans called a scientific propaganda article, meaning an article that insidiously presented the subject without slamming it too hard as a real advertising proposition. That is the reason that these 31 men were selected. It was on account of their skill in weaving a thought into an article from various sources.

For that purpose they had transported to them from Germany enormous quantities of German literature. It came in packages by express; the American Express handled many of them; they came by parcel post and by mail, and they covered the current German publications, the illustrated magazines, the humorous magazines containing cartoons and various so-called humorous articles, scientific publications, war books, and war articles in enormous quantities. These were brought to the country and specimens selected for use in the building up of these articles that I speak of. Others were shipped to different points in the United States for actual use by the consular service and those affiliated and associated with it who were working for Germany. Others were sent on to the coast, and we have evidence that enormous quantities of these publications were shipped from Berlin to Mexico and used in Mexico by the propagandist section that was working there under the minister, Von Eckhardt, who had a sort of a subbureau, in precisely the same way that they were used in New York. In fact, La Pansa, one of the violently pro-German Mexican publications, as an examination of its files will show, practically reproduced numerous articles that appeared in the German magazines.

In addition to those there were enormous quantities of postal cards sent over. I am speaking now not in the early stages, but all through. It continued during the whole time that the bureau was in operation. These were sold in stores and distributed gratis. I have seen a great many specimens of these postals. All that were sent here that I have seen depicted the German Army and German officers and various battle scenes. They are all highly colored and very vivid. This was apparently a part of the scientific propaganda—that is, the picture part—that was used not only in this country but was used in Germany and through Italy, and quantities of it were introduced into France wherever possible and also into the neutral countries.

They seemed to attach a great deal of importance to the pictorial feature of the militant side, always bringing to the attention of the people who saw it the wonderful appearance of the German troops, and appealing to the eye.

It is now a matter of record, and can be told without hesitation, that the prisoners taken by the allies in practically every case had their pockets filled with postal cards and pictures of various kinds. There is no writing on them. It is a singular thing that in the large number of investigations that have been made by our division, in a number of which I have participated, many Germans, alien enemies, in almost every case we have found have enormous quantities of pictures and photographs and picture postals. It seems to be a sort of a mania to send these things, and they are all directed to the militant idea. I have gone through their rooms—in one case especially—where the four walls were literally plastered with these war pictures of soldiers in uniform, so that they will never forget the idea.

This news service, which was the visible part of the German propaganda, was prepared in manuscript form—typewritten, of course—in the office of Dr. Albert, and sent over to the American Press Association, which was run by a young man by the name of Courtlandt Smith, who Mr. Brisbane testified was his brother-in-law.

This press association did the actual press work. These sheets are a specimen. I can show you some of them to show the way they were gotten out.

Maj. HUMES. Who was represented as the producer and publisher of these bulletins?

Capt. LESTER. Matthew B. Claussen, the publicity agent of the Hamburg-American Line, was the ostensible publisher. His name is used, as you will note, at the head; and the address given is 33 East Forty-second Street.

Maj. HUMES. Approximately when did this service commence?

Capt. LESTER. It commenced practically immediately after their arrival, about the 1st of September. That is, not in this identical form. This came along in, I think, September or October. It was under way. They were about three months in organizing.

These sheets were sent to every newspaper in the country that it was thought would print them or use the copy. They were sent gratis. It was a gratis news service, and they could publish all or a part of it; and through the Hamburg-American Line agencies, which were scattered all over the United States, and the consular service of the German Government, and the innumeral volunteer assistants, a very close record was kept of the personnel of newspaper management.

They went, as we have found, to the lengths of getting complete records of not only the editors but press men; reporters were especially the mark of their attentions; news gatherers, the stenographers, telephone operators, and office help.

I have in mind one case where a complete history of an organization of about 30 people came to my attention. They knew more about the personal history of that particular newspaper organization than the editor of the paper himself.

Of course the idea was obvious, that they could get information through this source; and the connecting links in the different communities were volunteers who worked for the German consular service. For example, in Cincinnati, Ohio, they had a man by the name of Mezger there, and he had a fairly good-sized force that were a part of the consulate; and investigation disclosed the fact that he had over 300 people working for him through Ohio and elsewhere as volunteers in getting information of every nature and description; that is, people who were favorable to the cause of Germany and who wanted Germany to win, and had come to the consulate and had volunteered their services to assist in any way, and were ready for call. This, of course, was outside the Germans who had registered at the consulate in August, 1914, for military service.

One German consulate list that I happened to see in Boston showed that there were something like a thousand or twelve hundred who had registered in the city of Boston for service in New England. Their names were recorded and the record of their life history was taken down, their connection with business houses, and publicity concerns especially, the particular lines that they were skilled in—whether in languages or anything of that sort—and at the end of this record, which was on a large sheet, was the particular class of work that they were qualified to do.

These classes not only included propaganda work but men who had volunteered to stay in this country and work in munition plants, to stay in this country and get information of a military character, and form part of the silent army that Germany had over here up to the time war started, of which there were two or three hundred thousand working right with them all the time.

Senator NELSON. Would it not be a good plan, Senator, to put in one of these sheets as a specimen?

Senator OVERMAN. To put in the whole sheet?

Senator NELSON. Or to put in part of it.

Senator OVERMAN. Suppose we let Capt. Lester select one.

Senator NELSON. Yes, Senator, let him select one and put in the record one of these sheets.

Capt. LESTER. Very well, Senator. I will do that.

(The paper referred to was marked "Lester Exhibit No. 7." and is here printed in the record, as follows:)

LESTER EXHIBIT No. 7.

There is submitted herewith memorandum prepared from the files of the Department of Justice showing the number of German male alien enemies who registered in the United States on February 4, 1918, pursuant to the President's proclamation of November 16, 1917.

STATISTICS CONCERNING THE REGISTRATION OF MALE GERMANS IN THE UNITED STATES (EXCEPT IN ALASKA, HAWAII AND PORTO RICO).

The table below shows the total number of German male registrants in the United States, in the several states (arranged alphabetically), with corresponding percentages. In addition, it also shows the German-born male population of the United States in 1910 (arranged by states alphabetically) with corresponding percentages.

1690 BREWING AND LIQUOR INTERESTS AND GERMAN PROPAGANDA.

No figures for the German-born male population are given for Alaska, Hawaii and Porto Rico because the Census did not give the data. The German registration figures were obtained from the Department of Justice and are complete except for Alaska.

States.	Military department.	German male registrants.	German-born male population in 1910.	Per cent German male registrants.	Per cent German-born male population in 1910.
United States.....		254,058	1,337,775	100.0	100.0
Alabama.....	S. E.	447	2,183	0.2
Alaska (incomplete).....	W.	294		0.1
Arizona.....	S.	459	1,343	0.2
Arkansas.....	S. E.	932	3,491	0.3
California.....	W.	12,205	46,136	4.9
Colorado.....	C.	1,277	10,071	0.5
Connecticut.....	N. E.	3,178	15,994	1.2
Delaware.....	E.	256	1,369	0.1
District of Columbia.....	E.	89	2,743	0.04
Florida.....	S. E.	648	1,553	0.2
Georgia.....	S. E.	355	1,948	0.1
Hawaii.....	H.	207		0.08
Idaho.....	W.	594	3,271	0.2
Illinois.....	C.	20,811	167,083	8.3
Indiana.....	C.	10,849	33,264	4.3
Iowa.....	C.	5,964	54,693	2.4
Kansas.....	C.	3,225	19,662	1.3
Kentucky.....	C.	1,029	9,984	0.4
Louisiana.....	S. E.	1,021	4,697	0.4
Maine.....	N. E.	324	751	0.1
Maryland.....	E.	3,325	18,119	1.4
Massachusetts.....	N. E.	3,836	15,714	1.5
Michigan.....	C.	16,875	68,399	6.7
Minnesota.....	C.	7,859	60,009	3.2
Mississippi.....	S. E.	160	1,051	0.07
Missouri.....	C.	5,890	48,282	2.3
Montana.....	W.	1,493	5,736	0.6
Nebraska.....	C.	7,167	32,239	2.8
Nevada.....	W.	326	1,322	0.1
New Hampshire.....	N. E.	238	1,103	0.09
New Jersey.....	E.	16,226	63,969	6.4
New Mexico.....	S.	233	1,134	0.09
New York.....	E.	50,467	225,175	19.8
North Carolina.....	S. E.	139	664	0.06
North Dakota.....	C.	1,141	9,880	0.4
Ohio.....	C.	9,259	50,730	3.6
Oklahoma.....	S.	778	6,180	0.3
Oregon.....	W.	2,227	11,258	0.9
Pennsylvania.....	E.	14,620	101,206	5.7
Porto Rico.....	E.	75		0.03
Rhode Island.....	N. E.	412	2,289	0.2
South Carolina.....	S. E.	221	972	0.09
South Dakota.....	C.	1,814	12,621	0.7
Tennessee.....	S. E.	385	2,322	0.1
Texas.....	S.	6,290	24,964	2.5
Utah.....	W.	725	2,198	0.3
Vermont.....	N. E.	122	444	0.05
Virginia.....	S. E.	473	2,586	0.2
Washington.....	W.	3,441	18,599	1.4
West Virginia.....	C.	386	3,594	0.1
Wisconsin.....	C.	32,899	122,927	12.9
Wyoming.....	W.	392	1,553	0.1

Capt. LESTER. I have here a number of original copies of the new sheet prepared by the German information service conducted by Dr. Fuehr and suggest that these be examined by the committee as they will show the character of the prepared propaganda articles put out by Dr. Fuehr and his group to the newspapers and other publications during the period from the latter part of 1914 to 1916.

LESTER EXHIBIT No. 8.

GERMAN INFORMATION SERVICE, M. B. CLAUSSEN.

[30 East 42nd Street, New York City. 256—August 23.]

TO THE MANAGING EDITOR:

The material sent herewith is offered for publication without charge and is released for use upon receipt.

This bulletin is issued daily, except Sundays. Its contents come only from reliable sources, chiefly the press of the European capitals. The authority for every story is clearly indicated. In view of the British censorship of war news, it is believed that this sheet will be found an invaluable supplement to the regular news reports enabling papers to give a more comprehensive picture of events.

We shall be glad to supply photographs, maps or cuts of any illustrations appearing on the sheet, upon request, by mail or telegraph.

We shall appreciate the courtesy of a place on your exchange list.

"BELGIAN GUARANTEE DOES NOT EXIST"—LATE WILLIAM T. STEAD, ENGLISH EDITOR AND PUBLICIST, POINTED OUT TREATY OMISSIONS.—"BRITAIN NOT BOUND TO ACT."—NO OBLIGATION EXISTED; HE DECLARED, FOR ENGLAND TO UNDERTAKE DEFENSE OF BELGIUM.

London, Aug. —.—The British pretext for taking part in the great war, her alleged determination to protect the neutrality of Belgium, is in striking contrast with previous British policy, says the London Labor Leader, the great trades union organ in England, which recently reprinted the editorial from the London Standard, the organ of Lord Salisbury, then Tory prime minister, which pointed out that the German invasion of Belgium was a military necessity and called for no action by England. The Labor Leader now republishes an editorial on this subject from the Pall Mall Gazette, then edited by the late William T. Stead, whose aggressive Liberalism on the subject of small nationalities and sacredness of treaties is well known. Mr. Stead wrote as follows:

ARE WE BOUND TO INTERVENE?

"The gist of the utterances on the neutrality of Belgium may be summed up in two propositions:

"First.—England is under a treaty of obligation to defend the neutrality of Belgium.

"Second.—But circumstances have altered since the contraction of the said obligation, and as against Germany, at any rate, England must pocket its pledges and allow France to be invaded through Belgium without protesting or interfering.

"Considerable importance is likely to be attached to these conclusions. Each of the propositions laid down is, it will be seen, likely to be taken hold of. Germany might read the second as an invitation to invade France through Belgium; France might read the first as an admission of our obligation to prevent or, rather to punish, such an infringement of neutral territory if we dared.

"It becomes important, therefore, to point out that argument rests on a false assumption. We do not for the present argue whether in the contingencies contemplated it would be England's interest to intervene by declaring war against whichever belligerent might violate the neutrality of Belgium. We confine ourselves to the preliminary statement—essential for clearing up the case—that it is not England's obligation to do so.

CONFUSION OF TREATIES.

"The origin of the mistaken views prevailing on the question is undoubtedly a confusion between the special treaty of 1870 and the preceding general treaties of 1831 and 1839, which it temporarily superseded. By the treaty of 1870 the obligation of England was, of course, clear and specific. Here is a pledge which was given in the identical treaties concluded with both France and Prussia:

"Her majesty the queen of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland declares that if during the said hostilities the armies of France (or Prussia) should violate the neutrality of Belgium she will be prepared to co-operate with Prussian majesty (or the emperor of the French) for the defense of the same in such a manner as may be mutually agreed upon, employing for that purpose her naval and military forces to insure its observance.

"There could be no doubt about that pledge, but then it expired twelve months after the conclusion of peace. At the expiration of that period, so the treaty continued:

"The independence and neutrality of Belgium will, so far as the high contracting parties are respectively concerned, continue to rest, as heretofore, on the first article of the quintuple treaty of April 19, 1839."

ENGLAND NOT OBLIGED TO ACT.

"Now, what some people do is to read this treaty of 1839 by the light of the more specific treaty of 1870 and to deduce from the former the same obligation on the part of England to intervene against any infringement of Belgium's neutrality as was contained in the 1870 treaty.

"This, however, is a completely untenable proceeding. The treaty of 1839 must stand on its own legs, and these, it will be seen, are by no means very strong. The following are the terms of its second article:

"His majesty the emperor of Austria, king of Hungary and Bohemia; his majesty the king of the French, her majesty the queen of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, his majesty the king of Prussia and his majesty the emperor of all the Russians declare that the articles hereby annexed to the treaty concluded this day between his majesty the king of the Belgians and his majesty the king of the Netherlands, Grand Duke of Luxemburg, are considered as having the same force and value as if they were textually inserted in the present act and that they are thus placed under the guarantee of their majesties.

BELGIAN NEUTRALITY DEFINED.

"Here, then, we are sent off from the treaty between the great powers to the treaty between Belgium and the Netherlands. The seventh article of this treaty (which is identical with the same article of the 1831 treaty) runs:

"Belgium will form, within the limits indicated in 1, 2 and 4, an independent and perpetually neutral state. She will be bound to observe this same neutrality toward all other states.

"In this treaty it will be seen there is nothing about any guarantee. All that can be elicited from it and from the one cited as referring to it is this—that this clause is placed under the guarantee of 'their said majesties'—that is England, Austria, France, Germany and Russia.

"But that is not all. This constructive guarantee must be considered in relation to the party to whom it was given—namely, to the Netherlands—for the treaty of 1839 was one between the five powers on the one hand and the Netherlands on the other, and what the five powers did was to guarantee to the Netherlands the treaty contracted between it and Belgium, one clause of which treaty said that Belgium should form 'an independent and perpetually neutral state' and should 'be bound to observe such neutrality toward all other states

NO BRITISH GUARANTEE EXISTS.

"In the treaty of 1831, it is true, there was a further article guaranteeing the execution of all preceding articles, including, therefore, the one just cited in similar terms from the 1839 treaty, to the king of the Belgians, but in the 1839 treaty, on which the independence of Belgium is now said to rest, Lord Palmerston omitted any such guarantee.

"There is therefore no English guarantee to Belgium. It is possible perhaps to 'construct' such a guarantee, but the case may be summed up as follows:

"First.—England is under no guarantee whatever except such as is common to Austria, France, Russia and Germany.

"Second.—That guarantee is not specifically of the neutrality of Belgium at all.

"Third.—That guarantee is given not to Belgium, but to the Netherlands."

WOUNDED BRITISH SOLDIER PRAISES GERMAN RED CROSS.

Frankfort, Aug. —.—The following extracts from the diary of an English prisoner of war who in his civil calling is a bank clerk, addressed to his London bank president, are published in the Frankfort Gazette:

"I enlisted in the first line of the Seventh battallion with some 100 friends and acquaintances to form a company of 'pals.' Among them were lawyers bank clerks, teachers, office clerks, etc. We enlisted with about 200 more men with the intention of taking the place of 200 other soldiers who during the mobilization refused to enlist for 'foreign' service. We remained at home until the end of September and were drilled during this time. We were to have the money spent on our equipment refunded, amounting from $25 to $50, but we have not received it thus far. We then were transferred to the drilling grounds three miles from Gateshead, where we remained until April.

"During April we came to a certain harbor on this side of the channel and were suddenly called to the front. A few miles before us a battle had been raging for three days. While we were on the way we met French troops, Turkoos, Belgians, cavalry, bicyclists and fugitives. In the evening we were quartered in a big cement building all the windows of which were smashed. We were covered with dust and hungry since we had not received anything to eat throughout the whole day.

"The next morning we suffered the first casualties from artillery fire. The day after that we were ordered to advance for the purpose of drawing the enemy's fire upon us while another wing was attacking. In the evening we advanced farther and approached the German lines to within a distance of 200 yards.

"Many criticisms were made because we were employed in the fighting right after our arrival, but Sir John French excused himself more or less in an address to us. Then we were given a rest for a day. We did service as pioneers and carried provisions and food to the first line trenches.

"We returned to the firing line, where we intrenched ourselves. The Germans attacked and took a few trenches not very far from us. We had to withdraw, suffering terribly from the crossfire of the enemy.

"I was wounded and taken prisoner by the Germans. The Germans gave me drink and sweets, and I gave them thirty cigarettes, which they seemed to like. I was brought to a dressing station and then was removed in an ambulance wagon.

"No praise is too high for the German Red Cross service. I could not have fared any better. We Englishmen are not treated here at all like prisoners. In the hospital we are attended to and nursed just like the Germans. I have come to the conclusion that the British press can lie.

"Starvation in Germany? It does not look like it. We get six meals a day and very good treatment by German physicians. A friend of mine died and was buried with all military honors. Our people at home cannot imagine how everything looks here. They cannot get the right impression from reading the newspapers."

MOHAMMEDAN MOSQUE GIFT OF THE KAISER.

Berlin, Aug. —.—A mosque, where religious service is held for the Mohammedan prisoners in the prison camp at Zossen, was recently dedicated in the presence of the Turkish ambassador, Mahmud Mukhtar, and other members of the Ottoman embassy staff. The commander of the prison camp, Colonel von Oestfeld, addressed the war prisoners, stating that the mosque was a gift of the German Kaiser. The Turkish ambassador spoke next. The Mohammedan clergyman thanked the commander for the mosque and the mild treatment of his co-religionists. The muezzin then consecrated the mosque with suitable ceremonies and prayers.

GERMAN INFORMATION NEWS IS BEING WIDELY USED.

New York, Aug. —.—The following appreciation of the value of the daily bulletin of the German Information Bureau appeared in the New York Evening Post of Aug. 20:

"Dr. Albert's reply to the disclosures in the World and the inferences drawn therefrom by that and other newspapers is as able a document as one could expect under the circumstances. With some of his contentions we agree. We agree with the general assertion that Germany's efforts to put its case before the American people should not be so ipso facto stigmatized as 'propaganda,' making that word synonymous with illegitimate propaganda. Dr. Albert's contentions with respect to the work of the German Information Service, the official name for the Claussen News Bureau, are entirely justified. The Evening Post has been regularly receiving the Claussen news sheet and has occasionally made use of its contents in accordance with its own judgment and in full knowledge of the pro-German sources of the information supplied, precisely as the World has been printing dispatches from pro-German correspondents in Berlin. In the matter of German endeavors to buy up munitions for the purpose of keeping them out of the hands of the allies, we believe that there can be no question either of the legal or moral right of such procedure, and we imagine that this feature of the World's disclosures has been neither new nor startling to the intelligent American reader."

BREWING INDUSTRY FACES DIFFICULTIES CAUSED BY WAR.

Berlin, Aug. —During the first quarter of 1914, the months before the war brewers did a very good business, and the outlook for the barley crop was promising. The outbreak of the war and ensuing conditions affected the brewing industry to the very core, and owing to the mobilization of the troops the sale of beer was considerably decreased, says the weekly report of the American Association of Commerce and Trade. These conditions, harmful to the brewers, continued, and prices of barley and malt reached top prices, never before experienced.

At the end of last winter the government issued orders limiting the beer production in order to save the raw material for food purposes, which restriction limited the use of malt for brewing purposes to 60 per cent of the average volume used in 1912 to 1913.

This new regulation as well as increased prices of barley and increased cost of production forced the brewers to increase the price of beer.

The supply of beer for the troops in the field presented further difficulty, particularly in face of the above restrictions, and only by taking precautionary measures was it possible to comply with the demand, thus, on the other hand, limiting the supply to the civilian population.

The breweries have surmounted so far these difficulties, because the brewing interests did their utmost in keeping things going and because large supplies from last year's stocks of raw material were available. It will be necessary to put at the disposal of the brewers sufficient quantities of barley and fodder for work horses for the coming crop, which supplies shall safeguard the beer supply.

Furthermore, it will be necessary to establish maximum prices for barley in order to prevent further disorganization in the trade.

FEWER BUSINESS FAILURES THAN BEFORE IN GERMANY.

Berlin Aug. —The number of business failures for the first six months of 1915, amounting to 2,826, indicates the lowest record in comparison with former years and, compared with the last six months of 1914, shows a decrease of 423 and a decrease of 1,664 as compared with the first six months in 1914.

Attention should be called, however, to the supervision service, inaugurated by the government at the outbreak of the war, for the purpose of assisting and adjusting such business firms whose difficulties are directly due to the war. Therefore figures given in the table below, referring to the war data, may be colored to a certain extent, and many a firm now under supervision will not escape the bankruptcy court after the war. On the other hand, it should be recognized that official supervision has led many an undertaking to a healthy development:

German business failures.

Period.	1906	1907	1908	1909	1910	1911	1912	1913	1914	1915
First quarter.....	2,300	2,063	2,635	2,603	2,269	2,411	2,341	2,721	2,428	1,773
Second quarter.....	1,896	2,185	2,374	2,153	2,147	2,188	2,312	2,558	2,062	1,232
Third quarter.....	1,661	1,806	1,955	1,808	1,907	2,015	2,141	2,222	1,616
Fourth quarter.....	1,899	2,072	2,417	2,055	2,077	2,128	2,424	2,222	1,633
Entire year.....	7,756	8,126	9,381	8,619	8,300	8,742	9,218	9,725	7,739
First 6 months.....	4,196	4,248	5,009	4,756	4,316	4,599	4,653	5,279	4,490	2,826

Baron von Oppenheim, one of the leading German sportsmen, has contributed the sum of $1,250 to the aid of families of soldiers employed in sport and racing activities. He was moved to contribute this sum owing to the victory of his stallion Masher in the recent horse race in Hamburg.

SPANISH REPORTS INDICATE FRENCH ARE TIRED OF WAR—DEPRESSION PREVAILS AMONG PEOPLE, WHO HAVE CEASED TO HOPE MUCH FROM BRITISH.

Madrid, Aug. —.—The marked depression shown by the French people is reported in a long dispatch to the Madrid A B C from Paris, of which the following is an excerpt:

Public opinion in France, which usually reacts so quickly to impressions, is at a loss. It realizes that something has broken down somewhere, even though it does not fully acknowledge it, but it feels undeniably uncomfortable and knows that affairs are not progressing favorably.

All four hopes that were cherished in the spring have vanished—the hope in the new English armies, in Joffre's offensive, in the Russian invasion into Hungary and in the intervention of Italy. As though there were a silent understanding, little is said of the disappointment with England and Italy. Although the time set for its occurrence has passed, the expectation of Joffre's great offensive is being saved up as an illusion for the future. The greatest disappointment came from Russia.

In the private conversations of people of all classes great dissatisfaction is expressed; the official war reports are read with indifference. In the intimate family circle of rich and poor families one often hears the words "too long" applied to the war. A fact of greater significance is that some politicians are already manifesting real regret that France agreed to England's proposal of a common peace.

The ruin of industry is general. The greatest part, if not all, of the capital invested in it is yielding no interest, only the laborers and smaller property holders suffer less from the economic crisis brought about by the war.

Peace is becoming very popular in France because it is recognized how little hope can be placed in foreign aid. If August does not bring about a great change in the present state of affairs the peace movement, which is already making itself felt, will probably assume the character of a categorical imperative to which the ruling classes must yield.

An especially striking symptom of the public sentiment is the complete lack of hymns of praise to Joffre. His name, which formerly appeared in the newspapers hundreds of times daily, is only mentioned now in the columns of the big papers at long intervals.

RUSSIAN DEPUTIES PROTEST AGAINST RIGID CENSORSHIP—DECLARE OPERATIONS HAVE AROUSED SUSPICIONS OF PEOPLE THROUGHOUT ALL CZAR'S EMPIRE.

Berlin, Aug. —.—Members of the duma of all parties are at present collecting evidence against the Russian censorship, says a dispatch to the Voerwarts. This evidence, which is to include especially all those cases in which the censorship, in consequence of its pettiness, arbitrariness and short-sightedness, has been proved to be directly or indirectly to the detriment of the country, will be handed over to the newly appointed minister of the interior, Scherbatow.

The object is to prove that the present Russian censors are not equal to their tasks and that the present sentiment in the country is demanding another, more farsighted censorship. The veil which is being spread by the censorship over various occurrences in the interior of the empire must be torn; otherwise the consequence of this practice of hushing up the truth might be serious.

The Government should not cover the facts with a chaos of promises, phrases about inner conditions and the like, but should give the general public full information about conditions in Russia; then the majority of the Russian people will work gladly for the welfare of the empire. The people know very well that this war is costing Russia enormous sacrifices in life and property. The public was forced by the secretive policy of the Russian censorship to hold back and to distrust the official reports and the reports of the Russian press.

The minister of the interior informed the deputies that he would comply with their wishes "as far as possible."

SWEDISH PROFESSOR PRAISES GERMAN ECONOMIC STRENGTH.

Stockholm, Aug. —.—Dr. Heckscher, professor of political economy at the trade high school in Stockholm, returned from a trip to Germany, Holland, France, England and Switzerland, where he studied the economic effects of the war recently, and discussed the relative economic strength of the belligerents in the Stockholm Dagblad, as follows:

"Germany will undoubtedly hold out the best. Serenity and confidence prevail there to a surprising degree. The economic preparation for the war was not as perfect in Germany as is generally believed, but the adaptability of the Germans is admirable.

"The economic strength of the country gives the leading men a right to be optimistic. Although the war costs huge sums, no peace will ever be concluded, because the war cannot be continued from a lack of the necessary funds."

The city of Gardelegen has announced that it will reduce its taxes 20 per cent. This unprecedented measure, especially in times of war, has been made possible because the city is drawing an income from the feeding of war prisoners.

RUSSIA ANTICIPATED WAR LAST SUMMER—SWEDISH VISITOR AT ARISTOCRATIC RESORT IN BALTIC DESCRIBES EVENTS IN JULY, 1914—CRUISERS PATROLLED COASTS—RUSSIANS WHO USUALLY SPENT SUMMER AT MARIEHAMN CONTENTED THEMSELVES NEARER HOME.

Stockholm, Aug. .—Mariehamn, on the island of Aland, in the Baltic, has been for years a favorite summer resort for the Russian aristocracy. Last year, however, according to a Swedish visitor, the resort was not popular with the Russians, and many signs showing active Russian preparation for hostilities, not obvious at the time, became striking in the light of subsequent developments. The Swedish visitor describes conditions at Aland in the early part of the summer of 1914 in a letter to the Dagbladet as follows:

"On my arrival in Mariehamn in the middle of June of last year I gained the impression that there was something unusual in the air. Mariehamn has always been a private bath and summer resort of the Russians. But this summer the exclusive Russian circles were very poorly represented, and the few who were there left in the first half of the month of July—in the middle of the season. This was not an accident, for the numerous members of the influential circles of Petrograd who visit Mariehamn every year would not have refrained just this summer, when it was so warm, from enjoying the beautiful scenery and the refreshing bathing at Aland.

RESORT TOO FAR FROM PETROGRAD.

"The highest circles of Petrograd were looking forward to war in the summer with a presentiment which bordered on certainty. They simply did not dare to expose themselves to the danger of being cut off from the mainland on out of the way Aland by a declaration of war and preferred to visit bathing resorts on the mainland which they could leave quickly at the first sign of disturbance and return to their own country by rail.

"But for the attentive observer another sign also indicated that as early as June of that summer war was in the air. A few days after midsummer a stately fleet of not less than fourteen warships of the cruiser and destroyer type entered the western harbor of Mariehamn. Old inhabitants of Mariehamn with whom I spoke said that they had never seen such a large fleet assembled at one time in these waters and shook their heads doubtfully at the sight of it.

NO SHORE LEAVE FOR OFFICERS.

"The young people among the guests at the resort had expected to spend a pleasant evening on land with the officers and crew, as was the custom when the fleet visited Mariehamn. But this time the stay of the ships was limited to a few hours, after which they went out to sea again. Evidently the men on board had more serious matters to think about than flirtation.

"As in former years, I sailed extensively that summer among the chain of reefs of Abo and Aland, but where as formerly only one or two warships strayed into these waters I now saw large or small groups of them daily, either under steam or anchored.

"Then one day in July a secret circular from the governor in Abo was sent to the police authorities of Aland, the contents of which, thanks to the indiscretion of a police official, became fairly well known to the public. In it the police were given strict orders to keep an eye on all foreigners, especially on those of German nationality.

" I also recall another episode which, although insignificant in itself, deserves to be mentioned in this connection. The Russian hydrographical expedition, with quarters on Aland, worked that summer—the seventh in succession—at top speed and with a doubled force. In July I had as a neighbor a topographical officer of high rank who drew the charts of the expedition. My daily contact with him soon led to intimate intercourse.

STRATEGIC MAPS IN EVIDENCE.

" With amiable courtesy—a trait which is characteristic of the cultured Russian—he often invited me to visit him, and I noticed that the tables and chairs of his room were always covered with more or less finished charts, which evidently contained drawings of secret water routes of naval importance.

" On one occasion I jokingly asked him whether he did not fear that I, as a foreigner, would abuse his confidence and in an unguarded moment would copy the easily accessible drawings. Thereupon I received the strange answer:

" 'If you were a German I would take sufficient precautions.'

" It was only after the outbreak of the war that I really understood the meaning of this answer."

BAPTISM OF THE KAISER'S YOUNGEST GRANDCHILD.

Berlin, Aug.—The youngest grandchild of the Kaiser, son of Prince Oscar, was baptized recently. The Duchess Victoria Louise, daughter of the Kaiser, came from Brunswick to attend the ceremony. The German empress was also present. The prince received the name Oscar Wilhelm Carl Hans Kuno. General von Einem and the King Grenadier regiment No. 7 were the godfathers.

Senator NELSON. I notice the headings there are printed on them.

Capt. LESTER. Yes.

Of course, the important proposition that the German Government was confronted with in this country was to get a working connection between their propaganda headquarters and the public; that is, a distribution of their literature.

This sheet was accepted by thousands of papers in the United States. Some printed part of it and some printed all of it. There were some strongly pro-German papers, so called, that used it all the time.

There were a great many newspapers that were wanted—I am now speaking of those outside of the ones that have come in the record here—where subventions were employed. That was a word the Germans brought over. I never heard it before. That means a payment or subsidy——

Senator NELSON. Or a bribe?

Capt. LESTER. Or a bribe that they would pay them. These bribes went to various people.

In addition to the newspaper field, which has been very well covered in this hearing, there was another system of distribution that I think will be of interest to the committee.

Mr. Viereck, in connection with his paper, ran what was known as Viereck's Library. That library was a collection of books which were strongly in favor of the German cause. Most of them would have been classified as seditious after the espionage act was passed; in fact, the place was closed up and all the books were suppressed. But this was the system that Viereck operated under: He had 18 or 20 traveling men, so called, whose ostensible purpose was to sell books. They had a history of England, for example, on their list, and they had numerous standard works, Shakespeare among them, and they had a list of the other books. Their ostensible purpose was to go and sell books, like a regular book salesman, but their actual purpose was to distribute German literature that was sent over here in enormous quantities, talk propaganda, feel out the newspaper people throughout the country and get in touch with men connected with newspapers and publications, and to get in touch with German societies and with pastors of the German Lutheran churches that they thought could be approached, and make reports on conditions.

The book-selling part was "camouflage," as the saying is. That was not self-supporting. These men were paid on a salary and commission basis, and out of the 18 I think every one was a alien enemy when the show-down came, except 2; and they were taken out.

Senator OVERMAN. Were all these 31 men operating under Viereck?

Capt. LESTER. No, sir; Viereck was a side line. He did not count in the big affair, except in a very small degree.

Senator OVERMAN. These booksellers were under him?

Capt. LESTER. These booksellers were under him. He ran the Fatherland and the Library and was the go-between with the German-American wealthy class in the city of New York and throughout the country; the man who could bring about introductions to these German agents to people prominent in public life.

Senator STERLING. Did Mr. Viereck originate the bookselling game?

Capt. LESTER. No. That was originated by the bureau the German Information Service. The publication of the book game was started by the Fatherland in August, 1914, concurrently.

I would like to add to the record a little further information from my own personal knowledge; for I made some investigation of Mr. Viereck's activities.

Mr. Viereck, after the country had gotten into war, established what was known as the Agricultural Labor Relief Bureau for Alien Enemies.

In anticipation of the country getting into the war, he dropped the name of Fatherland. I think in January, 1917, and changed it to Viereck's Weekly; and told our investigators—in fact I got the information from him also—that he had burned his bridges behind him, and destroyed all his papers, and was a good American.

On the 7th of April he sent a very flowing letter to President Wilson announcing his great loyalty to the United States. I think there were about four pages of it. He said he was through with the Germans; the fact being that no more money was forthcoming after the Albert party had left; and he became a loyal American on the surface when they did leave; but this is what was done with the Agricultural Labor Relief Bureau:

Mr. Viereck came to Washington, and through certain introductions that he obtained. he got letters from a great many people. who did not know what they were vouching for, approving the plan to establish a labor relief bureau for Germans who could not get back to Germany.

The plan was started in May, 1917, and was perfected in June of that year. The idea was to take these alien enemies and place them in harmless employment, like agriculture. Hence the name. The fact was, as established by an investigation of the records, that this scheme of Viereck's was nothing more or less than the Liebeau

Bureau over again, about which Mr. Bielaski testified; that these men, of whom he placed about 6,000 or 7,000, were scattered around in various industries throughout the country; and the matter was pretty thoroughly gone into, and that was abolished; but out of that it was found that Mr. Viereck had established, through another connection, what was known as the Alien Women's Relief Bureau.

Senator STERLING. By the way, did he get the indorsement of any Government officials for the Agricultural Labor Bureau?

Capt. LESTER. Yes, sir. He had the indorsement of at least 150 men in public life in the city of Washington.

Senator STERLING. Did he get the indorsement of the Department of Labor, do you know?

Capt. LESTER. Yes; he got the indorsement of the Department of Justice on the plan, also.

Senator NELSON. They did not know what he was up to?

Capt. LESTER. They did not know what he was up to. Of course, it was through no lack of diligence; because these exposures that I am explaining came after we had been in the war for some time, and the Government had the means to obtain access to this information.

Senator WOLCOTT. Of course, it being manifest, Captain, that these Government officials, when they gave indorsement to the scheme, thought they were indorsing a thing that was proper?

Capt. LESTER. Oh, yes; there is no question about that at all.

Senator KING. I suppose, with respect to the activities of the German propagandists, or rather the schemes on foot, where the ulterior ends were not known, they enlisted the aid of a great many patriotic American citizens.

Capt. LESTER. Yes. I stated that, Senator, to show the rather clever form a propaganda that was adopted, and in this particular case it appealed to the sympathy. Any agricultural alien relief scheme would naturally appeal to anybody. They would say, "These poor aliens are over here and they can not get home, and we will put them on the farms. We need farm labor. Of course it is a good movement."

Senator KING. You spoke about a new branch here, the Women's Relief Bureau?

Capt. LESTER. Yes. That turned out to be an abortive attempt, however; the women's alliance. However that got organized I do not know, but the plan was to place women aliens. My personal conclusion, as the result of that investigation, was simply that it was a method of continuing the German information gathering service in this country through this distribution.

Now, on the subject of Mr. Viereck, there was a matter that was not brought out in the previous testimony that I think would be of value. Mr. Viereck maintained an agent in Washington who was a man who was sent here in 1914 for the purpose of getting information of Government activities. This man's name was Frederick F. Schrader. His name appears here in the books frequently as a writer. He continued up until February, 1916, when he was supplanted by a much better man, as was thought, a man by the name of J. J. Dickinson, a former newspaper writer. Mr. Dickinson, who was known as Dickinson and afterwards became a captain in the American Army, was brought to New York for a conference between Dr. Albert and Dr. Fuehr and Mr. Viereck, who represented that Mr. Dickinson had the entry to, or had the confidence of certain very high public officials, including cabinet officers; that he had been in the public service of the United States, being the commissioner of the Pan American Exposition, and went to Europe, as our information is from Mr. Viereck and others, to take charge of the arrangement of exhibits for that exposition. Mr. Dickinson's proposition—

Senator NELSON. When was he put in?

Capt. LESTER. He was put in in February, 1916. His representations were, to these Governments, that he was a member of two very prominent clubs in Washington, the Army and Navy Club and the National Press Club; that he knew not only these cabinet officers but that he had an intimate personal acquaintance with the President; that he could get in, as he expressed it, into the back door of the White House, and that he could know everything that was going on. So Mr. Dickinson was taken on at $40 a week to start in with [Laughter]. What he got on the side I never knew, but I found the check book of the payments to him, and the facts are as stated.

Senator WOLCOTT. You think he got only this $40 a week for the service that he could render there?

Capt. LESTER. Yes.

Senator WOLCOTT. He could have made more than that as a newspaper writer.

Capt. LESTER. The way it was worked was this: There were supposed to be only four people in the world that knew of the connection, Dr. Albert, Fuehr, Viereck, and Dickinson; so that Dickinson assumed the name that he carried until the time he gave up, and that was Josiah Wingate. He was known as Josiah Wingate. All of his letters, of which there are a great number in the record, were sent to Viereck, over the name of Josiah Wingate, in a very much crumpled and disguised handwriting. He never communicated over the telephone and seldom visited New York, and he was the secret agent of Viereck and the Germans in Washington, or posed as such.

Senator OVERMAN. What has become of him?

Capt. LESTER. The last I heard, he was in Washington.

Senator OVERMAN. Was he still in the Army?

Capt. LESTER. No, sir; he got out of the Army. How, I do not know, but he is out.

Senator OVERMAN. Is he still a member of the Press Club?

Capt. LESTER. I do not know that.

Senator NELSON. He is a pretty valuable man. I should not think he would be at large.

Capt. LESTER. The curious thing about the Josiah Wingate letters is this: They give accurate information of happenings in cabinet and governmental circles. Where this information came from, whether Josiah Wingate made good or not, I do not know, but the letters have all been checked against subsequent events, and it is quite obvious that in certain cases information was obtained from some source or other, whether Mr. Wingate got it himself or not.

Senator NELSON. It seemed to be accurate information?

Capt. LESTER. It was accurate in certain respects.

Senator OVERMAN. He seemed to have had a back door entrance somewhere?

Capt. LESTER. He had a backdoor entrance somewhere; but the important part of this connection was this, that the Germans who were in charge of this bureau took Wingate literally and seriously, and these reports of his were sent to the foreign office, and by wireless to Berlin, immediately upon their receipt, as indicating the established policy of the United States Government and of the Executive, and from these reports was built up the policy of the Fatherland, editorials for the Fatherland, which continued to be published over the name of Frederick F. Schrader. Among the papers that were obtained, once the property of Mr. Viereck, that were turned over by certain people representing him, were letters showing that Mr. Dickinson had certain of the connections that he represented that he had. That was corroborated.

Senator KING. Would it not be better to put it this way, Captain, that he had such a connection, or that he surreptitiously, and perhaps fraudulently or clandestinely, obtained information?

Capt. LESTER. I think there is no question about his fraudulently obtaining information. It was an abuse on his part of confidence of a long-time friendship, in practically every case. For example, without quoting the letters which make references which really would be of no particular value, although I will be glad to show the committee the letters, Wingate reports on a visit he made to Shadow Lawn in the summer of 1916, and goes into minute details of conversations had with President Wilson. Now, that, to my mind, was a pure fabrication. I do not think he ever was at Shadow Lawn. I do not think he ever had a conversation with President Wilson at that time at Shadow Lawn.

Other matters indicate that he had abused the confidence reposed in him by people who had known him for 15 or 20 years, and bits of information dropped had been pieced together into a story which turned out afterwards to have a foundation in fact. That is, it forestalled certain governmental positions or war matters.

Senator WOLCOTT. It forestalled them, or forecast?

Capt. LESTER. Forecast, I should have said.

Senator OVERMAN. What position did he have in the military service?

Capt. LESTER. He was a captain, I do not know in what branch of the service, but he was detailed for duty on the border at San Antonio, Tex., and this information was gotten and he was recalled; but I do not know how he got out of the service.

Maj. Humes calls my attention to one letter here written by Dickinson, in which he boasts to Dr. Albert and the others that he was responsible for the leak of the peace note. That, of course, is sent up to them to show what a wonderful man he is; that he is close enough, and all that.

In the examination of men connected with Viereck they stated that they had information about that peace note 10 days before it became public.

Senator WOLCOTT. Do you know whether this man Dickinson was in the employ of any of the civil departments of the Government at any time?

Capt. LESTER. He was a major in the United States Army in 1898.

Senator WOLCOTT. I mean since the European war started?

Capt. LESTER. No, sir; he was not in any civil department. There is no evidence of any activities of Mr. Dickinson after February, 1917, that I know of. I had nothing to do with the military end; I had only to do with the civil.

Senator OVERMAN. Do you know whether he was a regular correspondent that was admitted with other correspondents to the different departments here?

Capt. LESTER. Do you mean whether he had the entrée to various governmental departments?

Senator OVERMAN. Yes; as a newspaper man, as all newspaper men go to the departments to get news.

Capt. LESTER. Yes; I think he had. I think that was a part of his system.

Senator OVERMAN. I want to say for the newspaper men that when cabinet officers tell them not to publish anything they never publish it, and he might have gotten news in that way and violated his trust.

Capt. LESTER. He was not a newspaper correspondent in the sense that he was an accredited man from a reputable newspaper, at that time. He was at one time connected with the Philadelphia papers, and I do not know what others. I would have to refresh my recollection by going over the records.

Senator OVERMAN. You say he got certain information. Could he have gotten the information in that way, do you believe, by going in with certain newspaper men and hearing things, as they do frequently? Once a week, I think, they go around to the departments.

Capt. LESTER. I think he got his news on the strength of the fact that he had been a newspaper man in years past, a writer, and was known to a great many people in Washington; that is, to men in public life and in military life. He had a great many personal acquaintances among the men in the departments. I think he could have gotten the information without a great deal of difficulty.

Senator WOLCOTT. He played this rôle after he got into the military service?

Capt. LESTER. No, sir; he stopped on February 9, 1917; that is, so far as we know, the last payment was made to Dickinson in February, 1917.

Senator NELSON. By whom was he paid?

Capt. LESTER. He was paid by Viereck; by Viereck's check.

Senator OVERMAN. Viereck would take these communications, these facts or letters from him, and turn that information over to the German Government, would he?

Capt. LESTER. It would be sent by wireless the day that it was received, to Berlin. It was sometimes revised. Portions of it were made the subject of special messages.

Senator NELSON. To Berlin?

Capt. LESTER. To Berlin. These letters, some of them, were two to three pages, nearly as large as that [indicating paper]. They covered a variety of subjects, principally on the governmental policy—executive policy. That was his specialty.

Senator OVERMAN. Do you know of anything very important that he communicated, from your examination?

Capt. LESTER. It is hard to tell from our viewpoint whether it was of great importance or not. From the viewpoint of the Berlin foreign office, that were gathering together every bit of information, it might have been of the utmost importance. As I stated before, there is no evidence that we have obtained, outside of the payment of $40 a week. He might have gotten a great deal more. He might have had other connections.

Senator OVERMAN. You did not find any Albert checks?

Capt. LESTER. No; but Dickinson admitted that he received the money from Viereck and knew what it was for.

Senator OVERMAN. You know where he is now, you say?

Capt. LESTER. I heard that he was in Washington inside of the last month.

Senator STERLING. What time did he get into the Army, Capt. Lester?

Capt. LESTER. I think he was commissioned very early.

Senator WOLCOTT. I might say, Mr. Chairman, some of these newspaper men who are present say that the gentleman was in here this morning with them.

Senator OVERMAN. He was in the room, was he? He is following up this investigation? [Laughter.]

Senator KING. Is there anything, Captain, to show what his attitude has been toward Germany since our entrance into the war?

Capt. LESTER. There was nothing in the investigation that was made by the section of military intelligence that I was connected with, to show any German connections or German activities of any nature or description, after February, 1917. I can only say from hearsay, and I can say that as far as I know there was nothing in the military investigation that showed any connection with Germany, although that I can not state positively. If there had been, of course, another disposition would have been made of the case.

Senator NELSON. When did you say he got a commission in the Army?

Capt. LESTER. My recollection is that he got it early in the war, in May or June.

Senator NELSON. Then he was an officer in the Army while he was operating for Viereck in this country, was he not? He was an officer in our Army, and had a commission in our Army, while he was getting this information and transmitting it to Viereck?

Capt. LESTER. No; he severed his connection in February, 1917, with Viereck.

Senator NELSON. Yes; but you say he became a commissioned officer at the beginning of the war?

Capt. LESTER. No; that was in May.

Senator NELSON. Oh, you mean our war?

Capt. LESTER. Yes; our war; May, 1918.

Senator NELSON. I thought you meant the European war.

Capt. LESTER. No, sir. It was in either May or June, or somewhere along there. It was the summer of 1917, as I understand it.

Senator OVERMAN. You have no evidence that after he was commissioned in our Army he furnished any information to the Germans?

Capt. LESTER. No, sir; I have not.

Senator WOLCOTT. He is not in the service now, anyhow.

Capt. LESTER. No, sir. I think I can safely say that if there had been anything disclosed, another disposition would have been made of the case, because that would have been a matter that subjected court-martial. He was not court-martialed.

Maj. HUMES. I will supply those dates for you a little later. Senator. We have a record of them in the files.

Senator NELSON. Very well.

Capt. LESTER. There is one matter that Senator Overman brought up the other day, of the propaganda work among the negroes. I have some information on that which may be of value.

Maj. HUMES. Just a minute, before we get to that, Captain. Will you discuss this bulletin, this information service, purporting to come from Matthew Claussen as manager? Who really had charge of that and who supervised the material that went into it.

Capt. LESTER. I think I had better add a little more as to this bureau system; a few words.

Maj. HUMES. I think you have not fully covered that.

Capt. LESTER. Dr. Fuehr was the commercial attaché at the embassy in Japan at the outbreak of the European war. When the diplomatic relations were severed between Japan and Germany the ambassador and all of the diplomatic agents went from Japan to Germany by way of the United States. Dr. Fuehr came to New York and was detailed by the foreign office for work in the United States, and with him were two or three other attachés of the Japanese embassy—that is, the Germany Embassy in Japan.

I might state in that connection a matter that has not been discussed as yet, but the reason that Dr. Fuehr was left here with the other men was to carry on the Chinese propaganda and cooperate with the Germans in the Japanese-American propaganda, which was recognized as a very valuable form—that is, the fomenting of trouble, if possible, between Japan and the United States—and to cooperate with Von Eckhardt in Mexico in fomenting trouble between the United States and Mexico, with Japan as a side line.

Maj. Humes has asked me about the preparation of the information sheet. That was prepared in collaboration, as I have stated, by Claussen and others of the English section, up to about December, 1914.

Senator OVERMAN. Not the English section?

Capt. LESTER. They had an English section; I mean an English-speaking section. Claussen first had charge of that, but his work, it appears, was unsatisfactory, because he did not have sufficient grasp of the situation, so that they looked about for a man to take his place, and Dr. William Bayard Hale was the man selected. Mr. Hale has been examined before Mr. Becker in New York, but not under oath. It is a little obscure as to how Dr. Hale became connected with Dr. Albert and Dr. Fuehr. His version is this—

Senator KING. Do you mean Dr. Hale's version?

Capt. LESTER. Yes; Dr. Hale's version is this—

Senator KING. That is based on what?

Capt. LESTER. Upon his own statement to Mr. Becker.

Senator KING. Is it in writing?

Capt. LESTER. Yes; I have it before me, here.

Senator WOLCOTT. There is no question of the authenticity of it?

Capt. LESTER. Oh, no, sir. This is rather a long statement, and I do not think the committee wants it in full. Dr. William Bayard Hale states that on a certain night in December, 1914, a strange man came to his house in Riverside Drive, New York. Dr. Hale stated that this stranger came to his house one night in December and announced that he was Dr. Dernberg. Dr. Dernberg explained that the German Government was conducting a propaganda system in the United States, explained the purpose of it, and invited him to become the head of it, and he agreed to do it, in a subsequent interview. His statement is perfectly frank on that point. He says, in substance, "It is a well-known fact that I was working for the German Government from December, 1914, down to the time when I was engaged by Mr. Hearst, which I think was in May, 1916." That is his own statement. But there is evidence after that, after he had been employed by Hearst, that he was on the German pay roll. There is evidence in this record that Dr. Hale was under a contract with the German Government, which expired on the 25th or 28th of June, 1918.

Senator NELSON. 1918?

Capt. LESTER. Yes.

Senator NELSON. At how much a year?

Capt. LESTER. Fifteen thousand dollars a year was what he received from Fuehr and Dr. Albert. I do not recall that the value of his services is stipulated as communicated in this contract, as it stopped in June of this year.

Maj. HUMES. Fuehr's statement of the contract does not disclose the compensation.

Senator NELSON. The fact is, then, that although he was employed by the Hearst Bureau, and continued until the time you mention, yet during all that time he was on the German pay roll, was he not?

Capt. LESTER. There is an irreconcilable difference between his statement and the testimony.

Senator KING. That is, he denies it?

Capt. LESTER. He states in his statement to Mr. Becker that he was only employed by the German Government from December, 1914, up to the time he was employed by Mr. Hearst and went to Europe, which was in May, 1916. I am quite sure it was May.

Senator KING. So that the records found in the office of Dr. Albert, his memoranda and other statements, would indicate an employment; would indicate that Hale was receiving money from Germany up to May of this year?

Senator WOLCOTT. Is that exactly correct?

Capt. LESTER. No; that he was employed; that he had a contract. That record indicates a contractual relation of some sort. The terms of the contract are not set forth in the memorandum.

Senator WOLCOTT. What is the date of the memorandum? That must have preceded the departure from this country of the German ambassador and Dr. Fuehr.

Maj. HUMES. It was not in the Albert papers that that was disclosed, but that was in a cablegram sent by Albert to his home Government, that he mentioned that contract with Hale which would expire in June, 1918. It was from the embassy and not from Albert's office that that information came.

Senator KING. He might have entered into this contract before our country entered into the war—a contract extending over 1918—and yet it may have been terminated when our country went to war.

Capt. LESTER. That is possible.

Senator KING. In that way it would be "reconcilable," then, to use the language already used?

Capt. LESTER. Yes.

Senator WOLCOTT. Is there any evidence that Hale continued to operate under that contract after we entered the war?

Capt. LESTER. No, sir; not that we have.

Senator KING. What evidence have you as to the last payment made to Mr. Hale; I mean by the German Government?

Capt. LESTER. We have no evidence except that telegram, as I understand.

Maj. HUMES. I think that I can refresh your recollection, Captain. Is it not a fact that the last payment of money to Dr. Hale was shortly prior to his going to Germany in the spring of 1916?

Capt. LESTER (examining papers). I do not recall that there is anything to show the last payment made to Dr. Hale.

Maj. HUMES. It shows no evidence of any payment made directly, or any payments made of money, after his going to Europe in 1916?

Capt. LESTER. From Dr. Albert?

Maj. HUMES. From Dr. Albert.

Capt. LESTER. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. The only evidence of pecuniary returns after that time is in connection with the expenses of the trip to Roumania, which was made at the expense of the German Government?

Capt. LESTER. I do not recall that we have any evidence that the expenses of that trip were paid by the German Government.

Maj. HUMES. I think Mr. Bielaski referred to the statement of Hale's secretary, Mr. Edwards, who said that the expense of that trip was paid, and you will remember that the passports indicated that they were on official business when they went into Roumania: and you will remember the statement of Mr. Edwards was that that trip was financed by the German Government.

Capt. LESTER. I have before me no evidence of that character, if that was the fact.

Senator OVERMAN. You can supply that later. Now, you say he aided in the preparation of these bulletins we are talking about?

Capt. LESTER. Yes. I might state here the stipulations that Dr. Hale states he made as a condition to his employment. He says:

One thing I will say to you. When I went back I made several stipulations, among which were these:

In the first place, that no advantage should be taken of any presumption that I knew Mr. Wilson.

In the second place, that no attack should be made upon the Wilson administration. I said that if ever anything catches my eye in the light of an attack upon the Wilson administration, I will not only kill it, but I will inform Washington.

In the third place, and I want you to take it all down, in the third place I said "I absolutely decline to have any part or lot in the Japanese propaganda." I thought they might use that, and I said, "Well, if there is anything of that kind turns up, I will absolutely oppose it. You must never invoke the Japanese matter."

Senator WOLCOTT. That is Dr. Hale's statement as to the stipulation he made with the German authorities when he got there?

Capt. LESTER. Yes.

Senator STERLING. This much is apparent, is it not, Capt. Lester, that his trip to Roumania on a German mission was after his employment by Mr. Hearst?

Capt. LESTER. Yes, sir; Dr. Hale continued in the employ of the German news service up to May, 1916. During that time his work was the preparation of this sheet, and I think that the ones you have seen are specimens of the sheets prepared under his direction.

Maj. HUMES. Captain, in the statement of Dr. Hale, he says that his employment was generally known, and indicates that there was no effort to keep it secret. Will you state how these sheets were handled, and how the proof was handled, and whether there was an effort made to conceal his connection with them?

Capt. LESTER. If Dr. Hale made that statement, it is in conflict with the information secured from numerous sources, this information being that an additional stipulation—if these I have referred to were actually made—was that Dr. Hale's connection should be kept secret. He had a private office, with a stenographer and a clerk that were separated from the rest of the establishment—that is, away from it, that was known as Dr. Hale's office. He was a writer, had done a great deal of writing, and to all outward appearance the room that he occupied and his small group of clerks was his office force. This copy that made up these sheets was sent by a messenger to the press association that printed it, and a man was sent from the German bureau, a man by the name of Keating, who has been examined in this proceeding, to read the proof. The minute that the typewritten copy left Dr. Hale's hands, that ended the transaction so far as he was concerned; so that all his apparent connection, to the casual observer, was that he was writing, as he always had done for many years—that he had a comfortable office in an office building, and that ended the transaction; the fact being that he was right connected with this whole German bureau, and it never became generally known that Dr. Hale had any connection with it until he began to send articles for the Hearst publications, and it was not until these various investigations started that Dr. Hale's name was brought in.

Senator OVERMAN. Now, these bulletins are composed of information sent by Dickinson to Viereck, and by Viereck turned over to Hale, and Hale edited it; is that it?

Capt. LESTER. No; the information sent by Dickinson to Viereck was used largely as the basis of articles published in the Fatherland; but those, in turn, were revamped and used as a part of this information service. In other words, if an idea came in in the form of a written article, no matter from whom it came, whether from Dickinson or any other source, it was formulated into a propaganda article of some sort and used in all of the publications—I mean not only the Fatherland, but Viereck's International—and the wording was changed, and it was put in as different articles; that is, the Dickinson stuff is entirely distinctive from this general news service in the general sense.

Senator NELSON. It was in the first instance simply a feeder to Viereck's Weekly?

Capt. LESTER. And a feeder to the German information service.

Senator NELSON. Yes.

Capt. LESTER. In May, 1916, Dr. Hale went to Europe and took up the newspaper work for the Hearst publications in Berlin, being their special correspondent. The news gathered by Dr. Hale in Berlin was of a purely political character. His associations were with the Government officials, and while he states in his stipulations that he would not work for the German Government in New York City against the Wilson administration, and various other things, as soon as he became identified with the Hearst news service at Berlin he capitalized, as the innumerable cables and wireless messages we have in our possession show conclusively, his former connection with the United States Government as the special representative to Mexico, and his friendship and association with President Wilson and innumerable Government officials. In fact, Dr. Hale was looked upon, not only from this source but other sources, as one of the strongest representatives that America could have in Germany, and as a man who had the entrée into governmental circles in this country, and whose words as published had the greatest possible weight.

Senator STERLING. And yet whose individual sympathies were entirely German?

Capt. LESTER. Mr. Hale's sympathies were pro-German, anti-British, and anti-American while he was in Berlin. I have read every message that the Navy Department supplied us, of which there are about 1,500, containing Dr. Hale's personal, private messages, his news messages, his editorial articles, and I have failed to find an expression in favor of the allies in a single one of them, and I have never failed to find an expression in favor of Germany tucked in somewhere. Most of them are flagrantly pro-German.

Senator STERLING. And of course those sentiments and sympathies were known to his employer, Mr. Hearst?

Capt. LESTER. Oh, yes; there is no question about that.

Senator WOLCOTT. Let me just ask you a question there, Captain. Do you mean to testify that Mr. Hale's anti-American German sympathies were known to Mr. Hearst?

Senator NELSON. Why, a man must be known by the garb he is dressed in.

Senator WOLCOTT. I am asking the captain if he wants to testify now to that. To say that a man is pro-German is one thing, and to say that he is anti-American is another thing. The answer that you just gave to Senator Sterling, there, indicates that you are testifying that Dr. Hale's anti-American sympathies were known to his employer, Mr. Hearst.

Capt. LESTER. He must have known them if he had read his cables.

Senator WOLCOTT. Were those cables to him?

Capt. LESTER. Yes; in the Hearst publications.

Senator WOLCOTT. And those cables contained anti-American expressions?

Capt. LESTER. That is my construction of many of them.

Senator WOLCOTT. Let us have one of them, because that is very material.

Senator NELSON. I looked at some of them. There was a bundle of them on the table this morning, and I looked at them, and I do not see how any proprietor of a newspaper getting such messages as that could feel any doubt as to the attitude of the sender.

Capt. LESTER. Mr. Senator Wolcott, there are here about 1,500 cables, more or less. I have read these over twice, not once. I read them over about six weeks ago, and have read them again in the last two weeks, and I can select from this large number, I think, a great many cables that denounce President Wilson's action, denounce the Government's attitude, belittle certain efforts that this Government is making, and contain, in innumerable telegrams, expressions contrary to and in opposition to governmental policies—established governmental policies. I can not do that at this moment.

Senator WOLCOTT. What I am getting at is this—because I hold no brief for Mr. Hearst; never saw the man in my life and know nothing about him. I do not get his newspapers, either. But there is a very clear distinction in my mind between pro-Germanism before we got into this war and anti-Americanism; I mean in sentiment. There are many people who entertain the view that if one criticized the Americans in the country before we entered into this war they were anti-American. Other people entertain the view that they were pro-German. Therefore there is a very material distinction between pro-Germanism—that is, real, genuine sympathy for Germany—and a feeling of antagonism to this country. Hence it is, I am trying to clear up this statement.

Senator NELSON. Even if you preserve that distinction, Senator, I saw a great many telegrams there this morning that will show just as strong pro-Germanism as anti-Americanism, so that they will fill the bill from either point of view.

Senator WOLCOTT. That is what I am asking. We do not want opinions; we want facts.

Senator NELSON. They are in these messages.

Senator WOLCOTT. I am asking the captain to pick them out and let us see them. You need not do it right now, Captain.

Capt. LESTER. I will do that with great pleasure.

As to the question of anti-Americanism, if I may inject this into the record, I can define my idea of anti-Americanism in relation to this war situation.

I think any man who has been in the pay of the German Government at any time after August 2, 1914, is anti-American and pro-German.

Senator WOLCOTT. Many people entertain that view, too; and some of the people do not, and they are thoroughgoing Americans. I know of my own personal acquaintance—no; I do not know any men who were in the pay of the German Government, but—

Capt. LESTER. I mean men in the pay of the German Government. I do not mean men in sympathy with the German cause only, but I mean in the pay of the German Government and working for the German Government.

Senator WOLCOTT. I know plenty of people in this country and in my State who were taking the German side back in the early days, and I dare say if it had been in their line they would have been employed working in consonance with their sympathies at that time. They were talking that way, and I would not for a moment say that they were anti-American, because I know they were not anti-American.

Senator STERLING. It would hardly be contended, Senator Wolcott, that a man of Dr. Hale's intelligence, with what he presumably knew about the origin and causes of the war, could be receiving pay from the German Government at that time and be pro-American in sympathy and interest.

Senator WOLCOTT. Perhaps not; I am not arguing for Dr. Hale at all. You must not get that in your mind, that I am holding any brief for Dr. Hale.

Senator STERLING. I think I understand your position, Senator.

Senator WOLCOTT. I want to say that if there was any man in this country that has been in league with Germany and against this country, I want to know who he is and what his name is, just as much so as any other Senator.

Senator NELSON. I suggest that we go on now, and you can hunt these messages up, Captain.

Capt. LESTER. Yes; I will do that, Senator.

Senator NELSON. You can hunt up these messages that the Senator calls for.

Senator OVERMAN. And when produced they will be placed in the record at this point.

Capt. LESTER. I would like to ask at this juncture about how many of these the committee would like to have as specimens? They run over a very wide field of suggestive propaganda. There are messages on the Irish question and there are messages on the Japanese question and messages on the question of submarine warfare. Would it meet with your approval to pick out one or two covering each of those large subjects that were under consideration?

Senator WOLCOTT. Yes. You need not encumber the record with a great deal of them.

Senator OVERMAN. We will leave that to your judgment, Captain. You say there are telegrams showing his anti-Americanism?

Senator NELSON. Pick out one or two of each as typical. That would be a good idea, would it not, Mr. Chairman?

Senator OVERMAN. Yes.

Capt. LESTER. All right. I will make such a selection.

(The messages just referred to were later submitted by Capt. Lester, and are here printed in the record, as follows:)

R cd 6.02 p m 9/9/14. W—WS.

MSG Leipzig de Newyork 6 41 ninth sixteen

Salomonstrasse [16] Leipzig.

cissl

Mail tausend simpli/mus flugblaetter two hundred each woche Berliner illustrierte Berliner Tageblatt weekly hundred each lustige Blaetter echo

cissl

fliegende fifty each jugend simpli/mus kriegs geschichten heftweise twenty leipziger illustrierte answer.

INTERNATIONAL NEWS Co.
eighty three

[88] Duane Street New York

Sent 9/10/14 1:15 am. Opr TG

Approved F. X. Gygax

Mail weekly hundred each lustige Blaetter echo fliegende; tausend simpli-cissimus flug blaetter two hundred each Berliner illustrierte Berliner Tageblatt woche; fifty each simplicissimus jugend Kriegs gischichten helftwaise twenty Leipzig illustrierte answer.

BREWING AND LIQUOR INTERESTS AND GERMAN PROPAGANDA. 1711

23 P NY WS 43 Pa 5 ex 540

CA New York NY 9/9

Tuckerton Radio Station, Tuckerton.

Please transmit following message Werner Salomonstrasse 16 Leipzig Mail tausend simplimus flugblaetter two hundred each woche Berliner illustrierte berliner tageblatt weekly hundred each lustige blaetter echo fliegende fifty each jugend simplimus Kriegsgeschichten heftweise twenty leipziger illustrierte answer

INTERNATIONAL NEWS Co.

83 Duane St. NY

Atlantic Communication Co. Serial No. 115

Station: Sayville

Character: TS Recd No. 113 Check: 15. Date recd: 2/1. Time recd: 127
pm Recd by: JO

Recd. from SS Berlin Via: Nauen. Date: 2/1/16

To: International News 83 Duane Street New York

Welche sachen brachten dampfer Noordam und Rotterdam

INTERNATIONAL NEWS

Others ahead CRC

Sent No. 92 NY Date Sent: 2/5 pm Sent by: J Recd by: PE

Atlantic Communication Co. Serial No. 175

Station: Sayville

Character: TS Recd: No. 37 Check: 11 Date Recd: Mar 3 Time Recd
8:20 am Recd. By: JO

Recd. from SS Berlin p Via: Nauen Date: Mar 3/16

To International News 83 Duane St. NYK

Sent 1377 parcels.

INTERNATIONAL NEWS.

Others ahead CCW

Sent No. 2 Say Date Sent: Mar 3 Time Sent: 836 am Sent By: X Recd.
By: PE

Atlantic Communication Co. Serial No. 1070

Station:

Character: Recd. No. 948 Check: 11. Date recd: Time Recd: 342p Recd.
by: fh

Recd. from SS Berlin. Via poz Date: 1/9/16

To: International News 83 Duane Street, New York

Sent 1045 parchs

INTERNATIONAL NEWS

Sent No. Date Sent: Time Sent: Sent by: Recd. by:

Atlantic Communication Co. Serial No. 2219

Station: Sayville

Character: TS. Recd. No. 1861. Check: 14. Date Recd: Mar. 22nd Time
Recd: 9:15 pm Recd. By: JO

Recd. from S. S. Berlin Via Nauen Date: Mar 22nd/16

To: International News 83 Duane Street New York

Wehlendes wahrscheinlich dampfer Rotterdam vielleicht beschlangnahmt

INTERNATIONAL NEWS

Others Ahead CRC

Sent No. 8 N.Y. Date Sent: Mar 22nd. Time Sent: 10:28 am Sent by: B.
Recd. by: PE

1712 BREWING AND LIQUOR INTERESTS AND GERMAN PROPAGANDA.

Atlantic Communication Co. Serial No. 2218

Station: Sayville

Character: TS. Recd. No. 1860. Check: 13. Date Recd: Mar 22 Time Recd:
913 am. Recd. By: JO.

Recd. from S. S. Berlin. Via: Nauen. Date: Mar 22-16

To: International News 83 Duan Street NYK.

Sent 537 and 567 parcels.

INTERNATIONAL NEWS.

Others ahead CCRC

Sent No. 2 Say. Date Sent: Mar 22. Time Sent: 952 am Sent by: B Recd
by: PE

Atlantic Communication Co. Serial No. 2028

Station: Sayville.

Character: TS. Recd. No. 1958 Check: 11. Date Recd. Apr 18 Time Recd:
1227 pm Recd. By: JO

Recd. from S. S. Berlin Via: Nauen. Date: Apr 18—

To: Internatl News 83 Duane St NYK

Sent 1045 parcels.

INTERNATL NEWS.

Others ahead JCL.

Sent No. B 11 Say Date Sent: Apr 18 Time Sent: 207 pm Sent by: A
Recd. By: FO

Atlantic Communication Co. Serial No. 2189

Station: Sayville

Character: TS. Recd. No. 2180. Check: 17. Date Recd. Apr Time Recd:
818 am Recd. By JO

Recd. from S. S. Berlin. Via: Nauen Date: Apr 22/16

To: Internatl News 83 Duane St. NYK

Es fahlen bestellungen 3803 bis 3805 3737 bis 3739.

INTERNATL NEWS.

Others ahead JCL.

Sent No. [9] 61 Say. Date Sent: Apr. 22. Time Sent: 107 pm Sent by: X
Recd. by: PE

Atlantic Communication No. Serial No. 481

Character: TS. Recd. No. 357. Check: 16 paid. Date recd. 1/5/16

Time Recd: 450 p Recd. By: FH

Recd. from S. S. Berlin. Via: Nauen. Date: 1/5/16

To International News, 83 Duane Street New York

303 parcels 22 december 246 parcels 31 december.

INTERNATIONAL NEWS.

Others ahead JCL

Sent No. B 93 ny. Date Sent 1/5/16. Time sent: 605 p Sent by: Q. Recd
by: PE

Atlantic Communication Co. . Serial No. 555

Station:

Character: Recd. No. 410. Check: 17 Date Recd: Time Recd: 1040
Recd. by: jo

Recd. from S. S. Berlin. Via poz. Date 1/6-16

To International News 83 Duane St. New York

Sent 935 parchs 24 December 1535 parchs 31 December

INTERNATIONAL NEWS.

(Held by Censor.) (Pencil notation)

BREWING AND LIQUOR INTERESTS AND GERMAN PROPAGANDA. 1713

Atlantic Communication Co. Serial No. 541

Station: Sayville.

Character: TS. Recd. No. 456. Check: 11. Date Recd: Apr 5 Time Recd: 744 am Recd. by: OJ

Recd. from S. S. Berlin. Via Nauen. Date: Apr 5-16.

To: Intl News. 83 Duane St. NYK.

Sent 1264 parcels.

INTERNATIONAL NEWS.

Others ahead CCW.

Sent No. 29 Say. Date Sent: Apr. 5. Time sent: 848 am. Sent by: X.
Recd. by: PE.

Atlantic Communication Co. Serial No. 1181

Station: Sayville.

Character: TS. Recd. No. 1101. Check: 11. Date Recd: Apr 11. Time Recd: 714 am. Recd. By: OJ.

Recd. from S. S. Berlin. via: Nauen. Date Apr 11/16.

To: Internatl News 83 Duane St. NY

Sent 1346 parcels.

INTERNATL NEWS.

Others ahead JCL.

Sent No. 15 Say. Date sent: Apr. 11. Time Sent: 856 am Sent by: A.
Recd. by: PE.

Atlantic Communication Co. Serial No. 1283.

Station: Sayville.

Character: TS. Recd. No. 1106. Check: 16. Date recd: Time Recd: 1023 am. Recd. by: FH.

Recd. from S. S. Berlin. Via: Nauen. Date: 6/26-16.

To International News 83 Duane Str NYK.

Sollen Schweizer und ausland zietungen auch abbestellt werden.

INTERNATIONAL NEWS.

LEL.

Sent No. 47 NY. Date Sent: 6/26. Time Sent: 11/29 am Sent by: B.
Recd. by: PE.

Atlantic Communication Co. Serial No. 936

Station:

Character: Recd. No. 51NY. Check: 30/29. Time Recd: 623 pm Recd. by: X.

From: Ca Newyork 17

To: Werner Salomonstrasse 16 Leipzig.

Letters oneeightytwo to oneeightyeight missing ship steinbrener if war or insurance covers capture or loss on land/see answer date of shipment

INTERNATIONAL NEWS.

Sent No. 936. Time Sent: 250 a Date sent: Aug 18 1915. Sent via: Sent by: Auto. Confirmed by: date: Time:

Atlantic Communication Co. Serial No. 2023

Station:

Character: Recd. No. 84 NY. Check: 35. Time recd. 628 pm Recd. by: x.

From: Ca Newyork 15 Date: Nov. 15

To: Werner Salomonstrasse 16 Leipzig.

Hundredfifty daheimkalender fifteen sonntagszeitung hundred gartenlaube wochenheft twohundredfifty wahre jakob twentyfive simplicissimus sixteen following two hundred buch fuer alls twentyone to twenty eight ten wisner
Illustrierte current fliegende blaetter zweites semester.

INTERNATIONAL NEWS. (Postal)

Sent No. 2023. Time Sent: 4:36 a. Date Sent: Nov 16 1915. Sent via:
Sent by: Auto. Confirmed by: Date: Time: Nov 16 19.

1714 BREWING AND LIQUOR INTERESTS AND GERMAN PROPAGANDA

Atlantic Communication Co. Serial No. 350

Station:

Character: Recd. No. B57NY. Check: 47. Time Recd: 638 pm Recd. by: X

From: NY Newyork 10 Date: Sept 10

To: Werner Salomonstrasse 16 Leipzig.

Parcelpost more fivethousand Kaiserkalender lahrer hinkender bote thousand fliegende blaetter kal # # # ender kreuzband twohundred woche picture hindeburg one mark ullstein hundred flemming kriegskarte twelve generalkarte five velhagens russland franzossisch belgisch crient ullsteins kriegsbeucher five breitner kriegsbilder bound sixty dahelm seventy velhagens monatscheffe

INTERNATIONAL NEWS.

Sent No. Time Sent: 402a. Date Sent: Sept 17 1915. Sent via: Sent by OJ. Confirmed by: Date: Time:

Atlantic Communication Co. Serial No. A 350

Station:

From: Sayville Sept 10 Date:

To: NY NewYork

Yrs date werner Leipzig sined international News held by censor rewritten showing meaning.

SAYVILLE 10

Sent No. INY. Time Sent: [402-a-] Date Sent: Sept 11-15. Sent Via: Sent by: OJ Confirmed by: Date: 31. Time:

Station: Atlantic Communication Co. Serial No. 436.

Character: Recd. No. 412. Check: 938/924. press. call. Date Recd: Time

Recd: 758 a. Recd. By CF.

date 3/15/17

Recd. fro S. S.

To: International News Service Newyork.

Four section on frederick stop to all who passed through kirkwall falmouth dover where search very businesslike but with little show force this imposing army revaluation severed somewhat comic opera gently sarcastic comment germans stop armed rifles bayonets everywhere crowded decks corridors halls stop passengers different decks separated guarded by bayoneteers stop furniture removed musicroom curtained off into number quote black cabinets endquote third degree chambers inquisition began upper promenade deck with countess bernstorff much her surprise stop not knowing wife was be compelled undergo humiliation bodily search ambassador no chance protest stop countess taken into cabin other side ship where inspectress awaiting her officer standing guard before search took including ripping insoles out her shoes ten minutes afterwards countess taken own cabin where compelled remain three hours with sentry rifle bayonet front door stop aroused intense indignation among germans even proally neutrals characterized it quote bad taste endquote on part british stop prince hatzfeld both stripped for some reason princess searched particular rightness relating experience told how inspectress pulled big toes see if genuine and if anything concealed between toes stop even infant baby princess huberta no excaped stripping schieved fame being youngest historic frederick searched all while protesting vociferously could be heard three decks stop baby princess being like common babies something happened was hurry call for dry clothes stop mother baby being searched in some mans cabin whose wardrobe didnt include necessary article stop bayoneteer sentry at door wouldnt let anyone but finally commander called decide momentous question whether much needed dry article could be sent for stop he was equal emergency ordered be sent for to princess own cabin armed sentry escorted messenger and fourcornered cloth back stop in end inspectress forgot search babys bed outside which could had hundred documents concealed stop downstairs another comedy transpiring blue jackets guard dining room door being called out to consul baron ungelter quote here hold my gun moment endquote even storm indignation over search gave way merriment when germans saw consul standing guard rifle bayonet stop upon return to post said or asked how feltgive run enemy quote guess we alike in sight god germans no worse nor worse we endquote stop my turn soon came four sailors rifles bayonets two officers came cabin with officer one guard in front three and officer behind marched through corridor lined armed bluejackets to deck above there ten with rifles five each sideguarded door to inquisition chambers stop couldnt been more guarded if taken to marching countermarching long files up down stairs reminded strongly pinafore and pirates pensanze quote coat vest off please endquote commanded assistant paymaster sheerin quote now pants shoes endquote there I rebelled declared even meek americans considered pants strictly private property by assurances nothing dangerous british lion in mine was no avail sheerin threatened send for reenforcements not having yet found my trunk considered wise not submit only chair british american tug war protested indignantly to which sheerin politely replied quote somehow our people dont seem pay much attention american howls end quote held undershirt to light for writing looking between folds collar tie sounded soles shoes tried under rubber heels stop my experience that many others stop soles lgels shoes bored through for secret documents other rubber heels offpriedstop after two days much armed forces disappeared stop increasing friction between navy officers customs inspectors became evident especially after two customs searchers taken off ship had attacked resulting order close ships bar this evoked loud protest many passengers who declared penned like sheet ship bad enough but on dry ship would result mutiny stop that two customs searchers became intoxicated on duty exceedingly painful to navy officers stop next all women outburst indignation to adair hall that customs inspectors going through cabins quote robbed end quote them hot water bags stop as rubber on list contraband canadian inspectors out carried to letter even trying take away two dozen nipples from doctor fuehr for use his infant only threat faehr I had quote would tell newspapermen endquote and result two navy officers who gruffly ordered inspector put back saved nipples stop gallant irish commander came assistance ladies endeavored get waterbottles back from customs whom several navy officers characterized as quote band bags had this disappeared where failed get them adairhall went down own pockets bought new ones presented ladies stop search lacked centralized direction authority split between navy supposedly in charge customs inspectors postoffice censor stop insisted search cabins only in charge customs inspectors postoffice censor stop insisted search cabins only in absence occupants by customs led considerable unnecessary losses unnecessary exposing customs to suspicion stop kirkwall talmouth my experience officers only will search in presence occupant here insisted removal occupants regardless protest consequence discovery made to last day voyage articles missing stop while british naval officers gentlemanly generous courteous freely characterized as quote dirty job only for detectives police shouldnt be required of navy endquote adair hyphen hall apparently exerting insult must take edge severity of orders customs and female inspectresses other hand much complained of seemed disposed be petty annoying bernstorff albert others complained even baskets fruits sent by friends taken stop view this other things presence newspapermen seemed embarrassing to navy officers who asked correspondent bring attention justified complaints or any acts injustice on part either their men or customs stop when during search cabin bernstorff fuehrs bottle cognac disappeared from each and sampling private stock other cabins to determine contraband began manifesting itself in irish songs and jigs on deck by two three customs adairhall much distressed stop more.

WIEGAND.

Sent No. 5. Date Sent 3/15. Time Sent: 948a. Sent by: X. Recd. by: PE.

Received at Tuckerton Station. Via Western Union. Destination Leipzig.
Origin: New York. Date filed 12th.

sixteen

To Werner Salomonstrasse [16] Leipzig.

Mall fifty each Kriegersgeschichten heftweise simplimus Jugend twenty leipziger illustrierte Kladderadatsch Zukunft three hundred Kriegskarten Sortiert.

INTERNATIONAL NEWS.

(Approved Keyzger)

(No Ack. Cancelled via W. U.)

9-22 No. 11. Opr. sending TG. Check 21. Date and hour 9-14-14 748p

1716 BREWING AND LIQUOR INTERESTS AND GERMAN PROPAGANDA.

Western Union

Receivers No. 15. Time filed 3 pm 12/14 Check 21. Atlantic City

Send New York.

Werner, Salomonstrasse 16 Leipzig.

Mail three hundred Kriegskarten Sortiert 50 each Kriegsgeschichten Heft-weise simplimus Jugend 20 leipziger illustrierte Kladderadatsch Zukunft.

INTERNATIONAL NEWS. (copy)

U. S. Naval Radio Service

Received at Tuckerton Station. via Western Union.

Destination: Leipzig. Origin: Atlantic City. Date filed 12th.
sixteen

To Werner Salomonstrasse [16] Leipzig.

Mail Tausend Simplimus Flugblaetter two hundred each woche berliner illustrier berliner tageblatt weekly hundred each lustigeblaetter Echo Fliegende.
Reply.

INTER NATIONAL NEWS.

(Approved

(No ack. Cancelled via W. U. 9/22.)

Forwarded to Leipzig by Radio.

No. 9. Opr. sending TG. Check 25. Date and hour sent 9-14-14 727 p. m

O. K. Wa. Western Union F. MR.

Receivers No. 16. Time filed 3:06 pm 9/12/14 Check 25 Atlantic City.

Send Werner Salomonstrasse 16 Leipzig.

Mail Tausend Simplimus Slugblaetter 200 each woche berliner illustrier berliner tageblatt weekly hundred each lustige blaetter echo Fliegende—answer—Reply.

INTER NATIONAL NEWS (copy)

Commercial Traffic

U. S. Naval Radio Service. S. R. S. No. 22800

Received: Station Tuckerton. N. J. Date Dec 27 1915.

Office of origin J New York. No. 1. Operator recd. MA Check 28 paid. Filing date: 27th.

Received from W. U. (Call letters) MH Via Atlantic City.

To Foreign Minister, Vonjaglow Wilhelmstrasse Berlin.

European correspondents sending out alarming reports as to health of Emperor William stop. We would appreciate official statement from you.

INTERNATIONAL NEWS SERVICE.

10:35 a. m.

Acknowledged Dec 28, 1915.

(Approved A. E. Lichtenstein Censor.

Forwarded to radio station Ellvase, via radio.

Office of origin New York. No. 204. Operator In. Check 28 paid. Date filing Dec 27 1915 Forwarding 9:40 p.

Atlantic Communication Co. Serial No. 3.

Station:

Character: Recd. No. 3wn. Check: m 10. Date recd. Time recd. 357 p

Recd. by: X.

From: New York 1 Date 5/1/15

To Pressphoto Sundikat Alexandrinenstrasse 110 Berlin

Proposition Accepted.

INTERNATIONAL NEWS SERVICE.

Sent No. 3. Time send: 12:35. Date sent: 5/5. Sent via: Sent by: aut.
Confirmed by: date: 5/12.

Commercial Traffic

U. S. Naval Radio Service.

Received: Station Tuckerton, N. J. Date: Jul 15 1916.

Office of origin: Berlin. No. 399. Operator Send SZ Recd. LE Check 57.

Filing time 1038A.

Received from Ellvase, Germany. Call Letters "OUI". Via Direct.

To International News 88 Duane Street NYK

Nur oestermesse bezahlt kassabestand mit market 33710 lagende pakete und fakturen 2103 packmaterial 1776 gesamtwert genannter sendungen bis 15 April bar 14725 rechnung 7054 versicherung 815 560 712 676 gesamtwert der avise 1015 bis 1017 bar 2689 rechnung 70 ports in maerz 15874 April 5498 mai 245 Juni 200

INTERNATIONAL NEWS.

(E. A. Lichtenstein)

Via Western Union, Atlantic City. Office of origin Berlin No. 43 Operator and JO Check 57. Filing date Jul 15, 1916. Time 2pm.

Atlantic Communication Co. Serial No. 379.

Station:

Character: TS. Recd. No. 31 NY. Check 11. Date recd: Time Recd: 328pm

Recd by: FO

From CB Newyork Date: July 21/15.

To. Messer Film, Blucherstrasse 32 Berlin, Germany.

Third shipment arrived.

INTERNATIONAL NEWS.

Sent No. 379.

U. S. Naval Radio Service.

Received at Tuckertown By W. Rec. Opr. Feb 18 1915

Destination Leipzig. Origin New York. No. 97. Opr. sign FO Check 25.

Date filed 2/17/15.

To Werner 16 Salomonstrasse Leipzig.

250 Kriegsalbum woche 1000 universum one 100 following each on following Wohlbefindungsheft 100 jugend 50 achtgegen 100 scherzzeitung.

INTERNATIONAL NEWS. 456 P

Approved G Joerns Censor.

Forwarded to Leipzig via Ellvase by radio. No. 460.

Opr. sending W. Check 25. Date and hour sent Feb 19 1915 1032P

(Acknowledged Feb 19 1915.)

Atlantic Communication Co. Serial No. [1310] 1326

Station: 1176

Character: TS. Recd. No. Check: 26 Coll. Time recd. 915 am Recd. by: letter

From: New York. Date: Oct. 16/15.

To: Warner Salomonstrasse 16 Leipzig.

Paketpost: tenthousand Kaiserkalendar five thousand lehrer linkender bote three hundred gartenlaube doppelhummer twentyfive daheim universum hundred gartenlaube wochenheft seventy bibliothek des wissens.

INTERNATIONAL NEWS.

Sent No. 1310. Time Sent: 426 a. Date sent: Oct 18 1915. Sent via: Sent a JO Confirmed by: date: Time:

U. S. Naval Radio Service. S R S No.

Received at Tuckerton NH by W Rec. Opr. Dec 28 1914.

No. 26. Opr. sign FO. Check 32.

en only 50 Kriegskurier 350 Echo 1500
igkrieg 100 each Levykrieg Daserkrieg rieg.

INTERNATIONAL NEWS.

No. 861. Opr. sending N. Check 32.

1718 BREWING AND LIQUOR INTERESTS AND GERMAN PROPAGANDA.

Atlantic Communication Co. Serial No. 1553

Station:

Recd No. 502 NY WU Check: 25. Time recd, 7p. Recd by: magr

From S New York 23 Date 9 25

To Werner Salmonstrasse 16 Liepzig

Fifty ueberland universum fortythree following hundred doppellaube cut thirty liepziger parcelpost english dictionaries twelve james Grieb fifty Koehler large

INTERNATIONAL NEWS

(CCW) (MJ) (SRS Cy)

Atlantic Communication Co. Serial No. 417.

Station:

Recd. No. WU. Check: 25. Time Recd. 744. Recd. by Magr.

From S. Newyork Sept 1 Date Sept 11/15

To Werner Salmonstrasse 16 Liepzig

Each hundred vaterland bilderatlas Velklasing russland fransoseisch Belgisch fifty meyer brockjaus ulletin kriegsatlas kriegsalbum flemming number three nine twentyone

INTERNATIONAL NEWS

(M J) (JCL)

Sent No. 417 Time Sent 333a. Date Sent: Sep 18 1915. Sent Via: Sent by: OJ.

Atlantic Communication Co. Serial No. 1096.

Station:

Check: 38. Time Recd. 7p. Recd. by: magr.

From: J New York Date 9/22/15.

To: Grand Admiral Vontirpitz, Admiralty, Berlin.

Germany submarine blockade is effect seven months we would appreciate statement from you as to its results and aims also statement as to admiralty views on concessions granted to america

INTERNATIONAL NEWS SERVICE.

(CCW) (MJ)

Time sent: 345 a. Date sent: Sep 24 1915. Sent by Auto.

Commercial Traffic S R S No 14655

U. S. Naval Radio Service.

Received: Station Tuckerton, N. J. Date Oct. 13, 1915.

Office of origin J Newyork. No. 63. Operator recg. DL Check 15. Filing
date 12.

Received from W. U. Call letters MH Via Atlantic City.

To: Messter Film Blueherstrasse Thirtytwo Berlin.

Using five hundred feet shipment August second.

INTERNATIONAL NEWS SERVICE 555 pm

(Acknowledged Oct 17 1915.

(Approved E. A. Lichlenstein Censor)

To station Ellvese via Radio. Office of origin New York No. 307. Operator
Send W. Check 15. Filing date Oct 15 1915 8:25 p

Atlantic Communication Co. Serial No. 2963.

Station:

Recd. No. 9 ny. Check 29 paid. Time recd. 1052 am Recd by X.

From Jx Newyork 27 Date: Dec. 27 1915

To: Foreign Minister Vonjagow. Wilhelmstrasse Berlin.

European correspondents sending out alarming reports as to health of Em peror William. We would appreciate official statement from you.

INTERNATIONAL NEWS SERVICE.

(Postal) (MJ) (CRS)

Time Sent 925 p. Date sent: Dec. 27, 1915. Sent by Auto. Confirmed Date
Dec. 28, 1915.

BREWING AND LIQUOR INTERESTS AND GERMAN PROPAGANDA. 1719

U. S. Naval Radio Service.

R S No. 786.

Received at Tuckerton via W.

Dec 2, 1914.

Destination Leipzig. Origin New York. Date filed 2nd.

To Werner Salomon Strasse 16 Leipzig.

Sixthousand assorted war postals continuation thousand Wezel Naumann more two hundred Universum hundred Berliner Illustrierte seventy-five Kladderadatsch.

INTERNATIONAL NEWS.

Approved

LAWRENCE TOWNSEND

Censor.

(MJ)

Forwarded to Leipzig via Ellvese by Radio. No. 739. Opr. sending XA

Check 23. Date and hour sent Dec 2 1914 950 p.

ST Dec 4 1914 822 p-849 p

Dec 7 1914 718 p

U. S. Naval Radio Service.

S R S No. 836

Received at Tuckerton Via W

Rec. Opr Dec 3, 1914

Destination Leipzig. Origin New York. Date filed 3rd.

To Werner Salomon Strasse 16 Leipzig.

Hurry twothousand each postcards 8886 to 8890 Beger Roeckel more three hundred timpliassimus.

INTERNATIONAL NEWS.

Approved

LAWRENCE TOWNSEND,

Censor.

(MI)

Forwarded to Leipzig via Ellvese by Radio.

No. 791 Opr. Sending W. Check 19. Date and hour sent Dec. 3, 1914 1914 p

Sup. instructions 1233 a Dec 4.

U. S. Naval Radio Service.

S R S 602.

Received at Tuckerton via W

Nov. 24, 1914.

Destination Leipzig. Origin New York. Date filed 24th.

To Herner Solomon Strasse 16, Leipzig.

Thousand Ullstein Krieg eins fivethousand continuation.

INTERNATIONAL NEWS.

(Confirmed)

Approved

C. B. PLITT,

Censor.

Forwarded to Leipzig via Ellvese by Radio. No. 542. Opr. sending IX Check 13. Date and hour sent 11-24-14 1003 p

11-25-14 739 p

11-26-14 1229 a.

U. S. Naval Radio Service

S R S No. 5307

Received at Tuckerton, N. J. 15 W. U.

Feb 21 1915.

Destination Leipzig. Origin Newyork. No. 27 Opr. sign FO

Check 19. Date filed 2/19/15.

To Werner 16 Walomonstrasse Leipzig.

110 Lustige three following 500 unionkrieg one following 500 ullsteinkrieg one 250 following.

INTERNATIONAL NEWS.

1020A

(MI)

Approved

G JOEMS

Censor.

Forwarded via Ellvese by Radio No. 66

(Acknowledged Feb 23 1915.)

Opr. sending XO. Check 19. Date and hour sent Feb. 23 1915 744p

1720 BREWING AND LIQUOR INTERESTS AND GERMAN PROPAGANDA.

U. S. Naval Radio Service.

S R S 392

Received at Tuckerton via W.

1/28/15 1:16 pm

Destination Leipzig. Origin New York. No. 11. Opr. sign H.

Check 22. Date filed 27th/15.

To Werner Salomonstrasse 16 Leipzig.

5000 Unionkrieg one Gratis Mitt following continuation 2500 Hartkrieg continuation 150 only 240 Diesblat 250 Echo.

INTERNATIONAL NEWS.
(MI)

Approved

J. ALLISON,
Censor.

Forwarded to Leipzig via Ellvese by Radio. No. 589.

Apr. sending W. Check 22. Date and hour sent Jan 28 1915 950p

'Acknowledged Jan 28 1915.

U. S. Naval Radio Service

S R S No. 425.

Received at Tuckerton via W.

1/30/15 1:35 pm.

Destination Leipzig Origin New York. No. 8 Opr. sign H.

Check 25. Date filed 29.

To Werner Salomonstr 16 Leipzig.

Bongkreig 2500 one 500 following ullsteinkrieg 500 one 150 following Klad-deradatsch 40 Quartal 200 einzeln lustige quartal only 440.

INTERNATIONAL NEWS.
(MI)

Approved

G. FOEMS,
Censor.

Forwarded to Leipzig via Ellvese by Radio. No. 774. Opr Sending ST

Check 25. Date and hour sent Feb 1 1915 1258 A.

(Acknowledged Feb 1 1915.)

U. S. Naval Radio Service.

S R S No. 4967.

Received at Tuckerton N J By W.

Feb. 18 1915.

Destination Leipzig. Origin New York. No. 22. Opr. sign FO

Check 19. Date filed 16th.

To Werner Salomonstrasse 16 Leipzig.

1000 woche one following 1000 hillgerkrieg one following only 750 flotteskalender 20 verlustliste.

INTERNATIONAL NEWS.

Approved
1022 A.

JOHNS
Censor
(MI)

Forwarded to Lliepzig via Ellvese. by Radio. No. 884. Opr. sending XC

Check 19. Date and hour sent Feb. 18 1915 539 p

(Acknowledged Feb 18 1915.)

Atlantic Communication Co.

Serial No. 396.

Station:

Recd. No. 294. Check: 10. Time recd: 359 P. Recd. by fh.

Recd. from Berlin. Via POX. Date Dec 2-15.

To International News 83 Duane Street Newyork

Want means

INTERNATIONAL NEWS.

(Held by Censor.)

(MI)

BREWING AND LIQUOR INTERESTS AND GERMAN PROPAGANDA. 1721

Atlantic Communication No. 14066

Serial No. 2953

Station: Sayville.

Character: TS. Recd. No. 2940. Check 10 Collec. Date Recd. Oct 26

Time recd. 1151 AM Recd by: fhoj.

Recd. from Berlin via. Nauen. Date Oct. 26-15.

To International News 82 Duane St NY.

Want Means

INTERNATIONAL NEWS.

Others ahead

CCW.
(MI)

Sent No. b 25 NY Date sent: Oct 26. Time sent: 202 pm. Sent by: F.
Recd. by: FO.

U. S. Naval Communication Service. Commercial Traffic.

Office of origin Sayville L.I. N.Y.

Date Apr 11/17

To Berlin 100 46 Via Nauen.

International News Service New York

Seventeen Tuesday our press wireless continued being received and passed do you want wireless service continued will other routh soon be arranged is family well am owing to my assurance given upon entering held till June answer wireless and Copenhagen.

WIEGAND
Berlin
(MI)

(Undelivered)

Atlantic Communication Co. 7526

Serial No. 1309

Station: Sayville; L. I.

Recd. No. PR 253. Check: 10. Date recd: Sept. 24. Time recd: 7 24 am

Recd. from Leipzig Via: Nauen. Date: Sept. 24.

To: International News, 83 Duane Street, Newyork

2948 Amsterdam.

INTERNATIONAL NEWS.
(MI)

(Held by Secretary of the Navy.)

Atlantic Communication Co. 8350.

Serial No. 1708

Station: Sayville, L. I.

Recd. No. PR 649. Check: 10. Date Recd: Sept. 27.

Time Recd: 4.39 am. Recd. By:

Recd. from: Leipzig. Via: Nauen. Date: Sept. 27.

To: International News, 83 Duane Str., New York.

1831 Nordam.

INTERNATIONAL NEWS.
(MI)

(Held by Secretary of the Navy)

Atlantic Communication Co.

Serial No. 3650.

Station: Sayville.

Character TS. Recd. No. 3543. Check 90 paid. Date recd: Dec. 30.

Time recd: 11.37 am. Recd. by: jo.

Recd. from S. S. Berlin. Via: Nauen. Date: Dec. 30/16.

To International News Service NYK.

With reference to your wireless to German Foreign Minister Von Jagow I learn from an authoritative source that all alarming reports concerning German Emperor's health are unfounded his Majesty is suffering from a harmless carbuncle the Emperor is not confined to his bed but has been advised to remain indoors owing to the treacherous weather His Majestys daily work is in no way affected the Emperor receiving the regular reports of the Secretaries of State Ministers and of Military and Naval personages as usual.

AUGUSTUS BEACH.

Others ahead.

CRC
(MI)

Sent No. 60 NY. Date Sent: Dec. 30. Time sent 12 p. Sent by X. Recd. by: PE.

1722 BREWING AND LIQUOR INTERESTS AND GERMAN PROPAGANDA.

Atlantic Communication Co.

Serial No. 555

Station:

Recd. No. 410. Check: 17. Time recd. 1040. Recd. by: jo.

Recd. from S. S. Berlin. Via poz. Date 1/6/15.

To International News 83 Duane St Newyork.

Sent 935 parchs 24 December 1535 parchs 31 December.

INTERNATIONAL NEWS.

U. S. Naval Radio Service.

S R S No. 2441

Received at Tuckerton by WU 632p 1/5/15 Destination Leipzig.

Origin New York. No. 44. Opr. sign FO. Check 15. Date filed 5.

To Werner Salomonstrasse 16 Leipzig.

150 helmwep bound only 4000 jakob 1000 fugblaetter simplicissimus.

INTERNATIONAL NEWS.

Approved.

L. TOWNSEND, Jr., Censor.

Forwarded to Leipzig via Ellvese by Rdo. No. 287. Opr. sending N. Check 15. Date and hour sent Jan 5 1915 835 p. m. (Jan 5 1915 ack.)

U. S. Naval Radio Service.

S R S No. 1407.

Received at Tuckerton via W. 12/18/14.

Destination Leipzig. Origin New York. No. 53. Opr. sign FO.

Check 15. Date filed 18th.

To Werner, Salomon, Strasse 16 Leipzig.

Cin inuation sixhundred daheimkrieg hundred each Kalenders flottenverlin flegende.

INTERNATIONAL NEWS.

Approved

F. X. GYGAX,
Censor.

Acknowledged

Forwarded to Leipzig via Ellvese by Radio. No. 351

Opr. sending N. Check 15. Date and hour sent Dec 19 1914 228 a. m.

Dec 20 1914 1211 a

U. S. Naval Radio Service.

S R S No. 1500

Received at Tuckerton by WU 447 pm 12/21/14.

Destination Leipzig. Origin New York. No. 15. Opr. sign H.

Check 20. Date filed 21st.

To Werner Salomonstrasse 16 Leipzig.

Only 1800 Berliner Tageblatt 6000 woche cancel order 9376 where reu reichels kalender answer.

INTERNATIONAL NEWS.

Approved

G. JOERNS,
Censor.

(Ack).

Forwarded to Leipzig via Ellvese by Rdo. No. 435. Opr. sending N

Check 20. Date and hour sent Dec 21 1914 513 pm

Dec 22 1914 854 p

U. S. Naval Radio Service

S R S No. 1105

Received at Tuckerton via W. 12/11/14.

Destination Leipzig. Origin New York. No. 34. Opr. sign H.

Check 22. Date filed 11th.

To Werner Solomon Strasse 16 Leipzig.

Also arrange war risk insurance steamer cabels and all details with America Express Company Rotterdam.

INTERNATIONAL NEWS.

Approved

LAWRENCE TOWNSEND, Jr.,
Censor.

Forwarded to Leipzig via Ellvese by Radio. No. 77.

Opr. sending XQ. Check 22. Date and hour sent Dec. 11 1914 1147 pm

(Acknowledged)

BREWING AND LIQUOR INTERESTS AND GERMAN PROPAGANDA. 1723

U. S. Naval Radio Service

SRS No 1101

Received at Tuckertown via W. 12/11/14

Destination Leipzig Origin New York No. 20 Opr. Sign H Check 21 Date filed 11th

To Werner Salomon Strasse 16 Leipzig

Ship hereafter through American Express Company Rotterdam which guarantees prompt shipment with fast steamers.

Sig. INTERNATIONAL NEWS.

Approved

LAWRENCE TOWNSEND Jr., Censor.

Forwarded to Leipzig via Ellvese By radio

No. 73 Opr. sending XQ Check 21 Date and hour sent Dec 11 1914 1131 PM.

Acknowledged

[Western Union telegram.]

Received at Radio Station Tuckerton, N. J.

12/11/14

Number 30 Sent by MH Received by H Check 21

Dated S-New York, N. Y. 12/11/14

To Werner Salomon Strasse 16 Leipzig

Ship hereafter through American Express Company Rotterdam which guarantees prompt shipment with fast steamers

INTERNATIONAL NEWS.

604 pm

U. S. Naval Radio Service

SRS No 796

Received at Tuckerton via W.

Dec. 2, 1914.

Destination Leipzig Origin New York Date filed 2nd

To Werner Salomon, Strasse 16 Leipzig.

Mail hundred December daily Berliner lokal anzieger.

Sig. INTERNATIONAL NEWS.

Approved

LAWRENCE TOWNSEND Jr., Censor.

Forwarded to Leipzig via Ellvese By radio No. 750 Opr. Sending XQ Check 14 Date and Hour Sent Dec 3, 1914, 1211 am

[Western Union telegram.]

Received at

Dec 2, 1914

Number 23 Sent by MH Received by FO Check 14

Dated New York

Dec. 2, 1914

To Werner Salomon Strasse 16 Leipzig

Mail hundred december daily berliner lokal anzieger

INTERNATIONAL NEWS.

642 p

U. S. Naval Radio Service.

S R S No. 178

Received at Tuckerton via P. Date filed 28th.

October 28, 1914.

To Werner Salomonstrasse 16 Leipzig

Kriegsgeschichton reichlich ersto hefte eventuell billigst continuation hundert heller hartleben salzer sweihundert levy volz daser vierhundert bong weber. velhagen.

Sig. INTERNATIONAL NEWS.

Approved

F. X. GYGAX.

Forwarded to Leipzig via Ellvese By Radio

No. 75 Opr. sending C Check 25 Date and hour sent 10/29/14-10:15 P. M.

1724 BREWING AND LIQUOR INTERESTS AND GERMAN PROPAGANDA.

[Postal Telegraph—Commercial cables telegram.]

Ca New York 28th

Tuckerton Radio Station, N. J.

Please transmit following message

Werner Salomonstrasse 16 Leipzig

Kriegsgeschichton reichlich erste heste eventuell gilliget continuation hundert heller hartleben salzer zweihundert levy volz daser vierhundert bong weber velhagen.

INTERNATIONAL NEWS.

440 P. M.

U. S. Naval Radio Service

Received at Tuckerton via W

Destination Leipzig. Origin New York. Date filed 28th.

To Werner Salomon Strasse 16, Leipzig.

All merakpapers received continuation 4500 Wakre Jakob 2500 Berliner Tageblatt more 100 Lustige Blaetter 200 woske forty following.

Sig. INTERNATIONAL NEWS

Approved

F. X. GYGAX,
Censor.

Forwarded to Leipzig via Ellvese By Radio

No. 639. Opr. Sending N Check 25 Date and Hour sent 28 826 P. M.
1129 P

17 MH FO 25

"S" New York 11-28

Werner, Salomon Strasse 16, Leipzig.

All merakpapers received continuation 4500 wakre jakob 2500 Berliner Tageblatt more 100 Lustige Blaetter 200 wocke forty following.

INTERNATIONAL NEWS.

151 pm

U. S. Naval Radio Service

SRS No 139

Received at Tuckerton via P.

OCTOBER 27, 1914.

Destination Leipzig. Origin New York. Date filed 27th.

To Werner Salomon Strasse 16 Leipzig

Confirmation sechstausend woche fuenfh undert kriegszeitung dreihundert leipziger illustricite vierhundert echo eventuell ballendepeschen drahtlos.

Sig. INTL NEWS.

Approved

C. B. PLATT

Forwarded to Leipzig via Ellvese By Radio

No. 34 Opr. sending W Check 20 Date and hour sent 10/28/14 10:53 P. M.

[Postal Telegraph—Commercial cables telegram.]

Received at 6:19 p. m. XQ

Delivery No. 10-27-14

No. 12 -19 pd. in Ca N. Y. Oct. 27.

Tuckerton Radio Station Tuckerton, N. J.

Werner Salomon Strasse 16 Leipzig

Continuation Cechstausend Woche suenfhunzert Kriegszeitung dreihundert leipziger illustuerte zierhundert echo ezentuell vallendepeschen drahtlos

INTL NEWS.

BREWING AND LIQUOR INTERESTS AND GERMAN PROPAGANDA: 1725

U. S. Naval Radio Service

SRS No 635

Received at Tuckerton Via W No. 25, 1914.

Destination Leipzig Origin New York Date Filed 25th

To Werner Salomon, Strasse 16 Leipzig.

Missing avie fakturen and consular invoice steamer Kerak send duplicates.
Sig. INTERNATIONAL NEWS.

Approved

LAWRENCE TOWNSEND, Jr.
Censor

Confirmed

Forwarded to Leipzig Via Ellvese By Radio

No. 576 Opr. sending St Check 17 Date and Hour Sent 11-25-14 1022 P. M.

[Western Union telegram.]

Receiver's No. 25-MH-H Time Filed 713 P. M. Check 17

Send the following Telegram, subject to the terms on back hereof, which are hereby agreed to

S New York 11-25-14.

Werner Salomon Strasse 16 Leipzig

Missing avis fakturen and consular invoice steamer Kerak send duplicates.
INTERNATIONAL NEWS

U. S. Naval Radio Service

S R S No. 11574.

Received at Tuckerton, N. J.

July 9, 1915.

Destination Leipzig Origin New York No. 36 Check 24 Date Filed 9

Relayed via Western Union

To Weiner Salomonstrasse 16 Leipzig

Continuation Mail hundred bazar zukunft twohundredfifty dahelm twelve-hundred gartenlaube fifty bilderatlas bruckmann

INTERNATIONAL NEWS

518P

Approved

E. A. LICHTENSTEIN
Censor

Forwarded to Ellvese by radio

No. 522 Opr. Sending B Check 24 Date and hour sent Jul 10 1915 9.08 P. M. Acknowledged

U. S. Naval Radio Service

S R S No. 11752

Received at Tuckerton, N. J. By H

July 15 1915

Destination Leipzig Origin S-New York No. 18 Opr. Sign Check 22

Date Filed 14

Relayed via Western Union

To Werner Salomonstrasse 16 Leipzig

Continuation Mail Hundredfifty bazar ninety interessante blatt eighthundred buchallo eighty modenwell fourhundred gartenlaube doublenumber fourteen-hundred weekly

INTERNATIONAL NEWS.

1139A

Acknowledged July 17 1915

Approved

E. A. LICHTENSTEIN
Censor

Forwarded to Ellvese By Radio

No. 705 Opr. Sending XF Check 22 Date and Hour Sent Jul 15 1915 10.59 P. M.

1726 BREWING AND LIQUOR INTERESTS AND GERMAN PROPAGANDA.

Atlantic Communication Co.

Serial No. 217

Recd. No. 53 NY Check 24/22 Time Rec'd. 11.57 P. Rec'd By: D

From CA New York

Date July 16th/15

To Werner Salmonstrasse 16 Leipzig.

Continuation mail three hundred Leipziger sevenhundred Jugend sixhundred simplicissimus landmoer twohundredeighty velhagen twothousandsevenhundred woche hundred bilderatlas.

INTERNATIONAL NEWS.

U. S. Naval Radio Service

S R S No. 12005.

Received at Tuckerton, N. J. By H.

Jul 23 1915.

Destination Leipzig Origin New York No. 26 Check 20 Date Filed 23

Relayed via Western Union

To Werner Salomonstrasse 16 Leipzig

Tenthousand each lahrer reichel shipping instructions Follow only la.
dredsixty echo fourhundred universum threehundred stilkeieg

INTERNATIONAL NEWS

245P

Approved

E. A. LICHTENSTEIN

Censor

Forwarded to Ellvase By Radio

No. 963 Opr. Sending W Check 20 Date and Hour sent Jul 24 1915 5.37
A.M. Acknowledged Jul 25 1915.

U. S. Naval Radio Service

S R S No. 12106

Received at Tuckerton, N. J., by H.

Jul 27 1915

Destination Leipzig Origin S-New York No. 17 Check 14 Filed 26

Relayed via W. U.

To Werner Salomonstrasse 16 Leipzig

Continuation mail sevenhundred unionkrieg fivehundred Bongkrieg three-hundred Ullsteinkrieg.

INTERNATIONAL NEWS

1159A

Approved

J. A. NELSON

Censor.

Forwarded to Ellvase By Radio

No. 70 Opr. Sending G Check 14 Date and Hour sent Jul 28, 1915 3.44
A.M. Jul 28 1915 11.05 p. Acknowledged Jul 29 1915

U. S. Naval Radio Service

S R S No. 12123

Received at Tuckerton, N. J. By H

Jul 27, 1915

Destination Leipzig Origin New York No. 33 Check 23 Date filed 27.

Relayed Via W.U.

To Werner Salomonstrasse 16 Leipzig

Mail more hundred bilderatlas part one twohundred prospectus twentyfive weberkrieg two to ten continuation hundred vaterland montanus

INTERNATIONAL NEWS

415PM

Approved

J. A. NELSON

Censor.

Forwarded to Ellvase By Radio

No. 81 Opr. Sending G Check 23 Date and Hour Sent Jul 28 1915 5.13 AM
Jul 28 1915 11.20 p. Jul 29 1915 1.07 a. Acknowledged Jul 30 1915.

BREWING AND LIQUOR INTERESTS AND GERMAN PROPAGANDA. 1727

U. S. Naval Radio Service s r s No. 12105
Destination Leipzig Origin S-New York No. 16 Check 28 Date filed 26
Received at Tuckerton, N. J. By H Jul 27, 1915.
Relayed Via W. U.
To Werner Salomonstrasse 16 Leipzig

Mail fivehundred each unionkrieg three to fourteen bogkrieg one threehundred part two onehundred part three seven eight

INTERNATIONAL NEWS

1158A
Approved

J. A. NELSON
Censor.

Forwarded to Ellvase By Radio
No. 69 Opr. Sending G Check 28 Date and Hour sent Jul 28 1915 8.40 A.M.
Jul 28 1915 11.01 p. Acknowledged Jul 29 1915

Commercial traffic S. R. S. No. 12874.
U. S. Naval Radio Service
Received Tuckerton, N. J. Date Aug. 21st/15
Office of origin S-New York No. 26 Operator Send J Recg DL Check 21
Filing Date 20
Received from W. U. MH (call letters) via Atlantic City
To Werner Salomonstrasse 16 Leipzig

Threethousand woche twelvehundred buchalle sixhundred doppelaupe bongkrieg fourhundred daheimkrieg undredtwenty hausfrau ninety modenwelt fourty Fraukrieg.

INTERNATIONAL NEWS

215 PM
Approved
Acknowledged Aug 27 1014

J. A. NELSON,
Censor

Forwarded Via B Aug. 26 1915 9.46 p.
Office of Origin New York No. 816 Operator send H Check 21 Filing date Aug. 26 1915 1.14 a

Commercial traffic S. R. S. No. 12624.
U. S. Naval Radio Service
Received Tuckerton, N. J. Date Aug 14, 1915.
Office of Origin S-New York No. 20 Operator Recg. C Check 24 Date
Filed 13th
Received from W. U. Atlantic City
To Werner Salomonstrasse 16 Leipzig.

Hundred hansfrau Novellen sixteenhundred gartenlaube Jakob elevenhundred buahelle fivehundred doppellaube fourhundredfifty universum ninety zeit hun-dredfourty wissen sevenhundred fliegende.

INTERNATIONAL NEWS

Approved

J. A. NELSON—Censor

Forwarded to Ellvase Aug 18, 1915 9.40 P.
Office of Origin New York No. 581 Check 24 Filing Date Aug. 15, 1915
11.47 p Aug. 17, 1915 11.03 p

Commercial traffic S. R. S. No. 11419.
U. S. Naval Radio Service Aug. 7, 1915.
Received Tuckerton, N. J.
Office of Origin S-New York No. 9 Operator Recg. H Check 22 Filing
Date 6
Received from W. U.
To Werner Salomonstrasse 16 Leipzig

Thousand fremdenblatt current threehundred fifty ueberland hundred fifty uebermeer hundredsixty daheim answer if Steinbrener can ship fully insured

INTERNATIONAL NEWS

Approved
1043A

E. A. LICHTENSTEIN
Censor

Forwarded to Ellvase No. 378 Check 22 Operator send W Filing Date
Aug 8 1915 3.23 A. Aug 8 1915 10.28 p. Acknowledged Aug 9, 1915

1728 BREWING AND LIQUOR INTERESTS AND GERMAN PROPAGANDA

Commercial traffic

U. S. Naval Radio Service

S. R. S. No. 12371

Received Tuckerton, N. J. 24

Aug. 6, 1915.

Office of Origin S-New York No. 2 Operator Recg. H Filing Date 5

Received from W. U.

To Werner Salmonstrasse 16 Leipzig

Nine hundred buchalle two thousand eight hundred woche hundred eighty berliner illustrierte threehundredfifty daheimkrieg seven hundred fligende current only two hundred ullsteinkrieg

INTERNATIONAL NEWS

1012 A

Approved

E. A. LICHTENSTEIN

Censor

Forwarded Ellvese Filing Date Aug. 6, 1915 9.36 P. Aug. 7, 1915 9.31 p
Acknowledged Aug. 9, 1915 No. 330 Operator send. G. Check 28/21

U. S. Naval Radio Service

S. R. S. No. 12330

Received at Tuckerton, N. J. By H

Aug 4, 1915.

Destination Berlin Origin New York No. 32 Check 17/16 Date Filed 4

Relayed via W. U.

To. Pressphoto Alexandrinestrasse 110 Berlin

Draft for hundred and fourteen dollars mailed June ninth

INTERNATIONAL NEWS SERVICE

349P

Approved

E. A. LICHTENSTEIN

Censor

Forwarded to Ellvese by Radio

No. 290 Opr. Sending XQ Check 17/16 Date and hour sent Aug 5, 1915-12
18A Acknowledged Aug. 5 1915

U. S. Naval Radio Service

S.R.S. No. 12306

Received at Tuckerton, N. J. By H

Aug 4, 1915

Destination Leipzig Origin S-New York No. 9 Check 13 Date Filed 3

Relayed via W. U.

To Werner Salomonstrasse 16 Leipzig

Mail five hundred Unionkrieg two three hundred gottberg kreuzerfahrten

INTERNATIONAL NEWS

1124A

Approved

E. A. LICHTENSTEIN

Censor

Forwarded to Ellvese BY Radio

No. 268 Opr. Sending XQ Check 13 Date and Hour Sent Aug. 4, 1915-
10:24 P. M. Acknowledged Aug 5 1915

U. S. Naval Radio Service

S R S No. 12283

Received at Tuckerton, N. J.

By H. Aug 3, 1915.

Destination Leipzig Origin S-New York No. 6 Check 24 Date Filed 2

Relayed via W. U.

To Werner Salomonstrasse 16 Leipzig

More tenthousand reichel shipping instructions follow mail hundred kriegs-struvowel fifty each unser krieg dachau twenty liller kriegseitung bound

INTERNATIONAL NEWS

1017A

Approved

E. A. LICHTENSTEIN

Censor

Forwarded via Ellvese by radio

No. 245 Opr. Sending G Check 24 Date and Hour Sent Aug 4, 1915-12.02
A. M. Acknowledged Aug 4 1915

BREWING AND LIQUOR INTERESTS AND GERMAN PROPAGANDA. 1729

Atlantic Communication Co.

Serial No. 1988

Station: Sayville LI 13102

Character TS Check 20 Time Rec'd 9am Rec'd by: Letter

From: New York

Date: Oct 22 1915

To: Werner Salomonstrasse 16 Leipzig

Other firms received kaserkalender where copies for us and our customers answer send always unionkrieg beginning with part thirtysix send missing copies at once.

INTERNATIONAL NEWS

Time sent: 319a Date sent: Oct 24 1915 Sent by: T Confirmed Date: Oct 24 1915

Atlantic Communication Co.

Serial No. 1680

Station: Sayville NY 8488

Character Ts Check 14coll Time Rec'd 3pm Rec'd by: letter

From: New York Date: Sept—29/15

To: Werner Salomonstrasse 16 Leipzig

Consultas fakturen fuer packet post anfertigen und packete fortlaufend nummerieren

INTERNATIONAL NEWS.

Sent No. 1680 Time Sent: 1027 P Date Sent Oct 3, 1915 Sent by auto

Atlantic Communication Co.

Serial No. B 1553

Rec'd No. WU 8 NY Check SVC Time Rec'd: 280 PM Rec'd by: Msgr.

From: Date: Sept 29/15

To: Sayville

NY 23 weiner leipzig mag is ordering various german newspapers by international news co ny plain msg

Cable Dept NY Sep 29/15

Atlantic Communication Co.

Serial No. B 1554

From: Radio Sayville

Oct 8, 15

To: S New York "WU"

SOS 27th re your ok 23 dated 23rd routed via Tuckerton rerouted via Sayville to Werner Salomstrasse 16 Leipzig sgd International News still held Rewrite showing full meaning or cancel

Radio Sayville 3rd

Time sent: a.m. Date Sent: 10-4 Sent via W. U. Sent by: Msgr.

Atlantic Communication Co. Serial No. C 1554

Rec'd No. 26 NY Time Rec'd: 4 00 PM Rec'd by: CRC

From: Cable NYK Date: Oct 4, 15/15

To: Radio Sayville NY WU

SYS 3 re NY 23rd Werner Salomonstrasse 16 Leipzig Pls cancel

CABLE DEPT

NY Oct 4th 1915. 1:46 pm.

Atlantic Communication Co. Serial No. 1739

Station: Sayville LI 11668

Character Ts Rec'd No. 1712 Check 10Coll Date Recd: 10 16/15 Time

Recd: 1015 a Recd by: ojjo

Recd. from Berlin Via: Nauen Date: 10/16/15

To: International News 83 Duane St Newyork

Want means

INTERNATIONAL NEWS

Others ahead JCL

Sent by No. 66 NY Date Sent 10/16/15 Time Sent: 1152 a Sent by: FO

Recd by: XW.

1730 BREWING AND LIQUOR INTERESTS AND GERMAN PROPAGANDA

Commercial traffic

U. S. Naval Radio Service S. R. S. No. 14135

Received Tuckerton, N. J. Date Oct 4, 1915.

Office of Origin New York No. 98 Recg. MA Check 20 Filing Date 1st

Received from W. U. Via: Atlantic City

To Werner Salomonstrasse 16 Leipzig

Parcel post fifty bound copies Liller Kreigseitung Herzog Heimweh two-hundred unionkrieg bongkreig hundred gartenlaube doubenumber.

INTERNATIONAL NEWS
430 PM

Approved

J. A. NELSON
Censor

Forwarded to Ellvase via Radio Oct 9, 1915 5.28A.

Office of Origin New York No. 910 Operator Send. G Check 20 Filing Date—Time Oct 8, 1915 12.26AM

Acknowledged Oct 4 1915

Atlantic Communication Co. Serial No. 1489. 8017.

Recd. No. 240 NY WU. Check: 18 Time Rec'd: 7:00 PM Rec'd by: Mstgr.

From NY New York Sept. 23. Date: Sept. 23/15.

To: Werner Salomonstrasse 16 Leipzig.

Send all Gratishefte buecher Lieferangswerke kalender by parcel post insured or not insured.

INTERNATIONAL NEWS

Sent No. 1489 Time Sent: 343 A Date Sent: Oct 2, 1915 Sent by: OJ
Confirmed Date Oct. 2, 1915.

Atlantic Communication Co. Serial No. A1553

From: Radio Sayville Sept. 27th, 15.

To: S New York per Cable Dept. "WU"

Your 502 NY 23rd routed Tuckerton rerouted Sayville to Werner Salomonstrasse 16 Leipzig sined International News held by Censor Must be rewritten showing full meaning in text.

RADIO SAYVILLE 27th.

Sent WU via Msgr 9 am 28th. C

Atlantic Communication Co. Serial No. 1554A

From: Sayville 9/27/15 Date: 9/27/15.

To: S New York "WU"

Your 254 NY 23rd ck 23 to Werner Leipzig sined International News held by censor rewrite showing full meaning in text.

SAYVILLE 27TH.

Sent to WU via Msgr at 9 am 28th C.

U. S. Naval Radio Service S R S No. 11245

Received at Tuckerton, N. J. By H. Jun 30, 1915

Prefix Radio Destination Leipzig Origin S-New York No 6 Check 24 Date Filed 29

Relayed Via Western Union

To Werner Salomonstrasse 16 Leipzig

Continuation mail eight hundred Gartenlaube weekly five hundred Fliegende Blatter six hundred Jugend two hundred fifty Klasig und Ichazens Velhagen Landmeer folio Wekerering Daheimkrieg fifteen hundred Jacob

INTERNATIONAL NEWS.

Forwarded to Ellvase by radio No. 206 Check 24 Date and hour sent Jul 2 1915. 11.24 p. m. Acknowledged Jul 8 1915 Opr sending C

1107 A Approved E. A. Lichtenstein; Censor

BREWING AND LIQUOR INTERESTS AND GERMAN PROPAGANDA. 1731

U. S. Naval Radio Service S R S No. 11389
Received at Tuckerton, N. J. By FO Jul 8, 1915
Prefix Radio Destination Leipzig Origin New York No. 15 Check 24 Date
Filed 2/15
Relayed Western Union Via
To Werner Lalornonstrasse 16 Leipzig.

Gartenlaube

Continuation mail 2500 Woche one thousand ~~{Gartenlaube}~~ A six hundred Fliegende Buchalle two hundred Allewelt Five hundred Fremdenblatt English thirteen following seventyfive Interessante.

INTERNATIONAL NEWS.

1012A

Approved E. A. Lichtenstein Censor
Forwarded Via Ellvese By Radio Acknowledged. Jul 6-1915.
Prefix Radio No. 341 Opr. Sending N Check 24 Date and Hour Sent Jul 5-1915 11:51 pm.

U S Naval Radio Service SRS No L0746
Received at Tuckerton, N. J. By H June 14, 1915
Prefix Radio Destination Leipzig Origin MS-New York No 14 Check 25
Date filed 14
Relayed via Western Union.
To Werner Salomonstrasse 16 Leipzig

Mail thousand American Simplicissimus Hundred Daheimkrieg Weberkrieg
Ullsteinkrieg Hartkrieg three hundred Bongkrieg five hundred Union Krieg
Stilkrieg hundred Bongkrieg three to seven

INTERNATIONAL NEWS

Approved E. A. Lichtenstein Censor Acknowledged Jun 18, 1915
Titles of Books on the war 413P
Forwarded via Ellvese By Radio
Prefix Radio No. 696 Opr. sending W Check 25 Date and hour sent Jun
18, 1915, 12:45 A

U S Naval Radio Service SRS No. 8910
Received at Tuckerton, N. J. By H Apr. 28 1915
Prefix Radio Destination Leipzig Origin New York No 6 Check 18 Date
filed 27
Relayed via W. U.
To Werner Salomonstrasse 16 Leipzig

Continuetion only three thousand Jacob six hundredfifty Velhagen twelfhundred Simplicissimus elevenhundred Tageblatt hundred Brummer

INTERNATIONAL NEWS 11A

Approved J. A. Nelson Censor
Forwarded via Ellvese By Radio Date and hour sent Apr. 28, 1915 10:48 pm May 3 1915 1.34 a
Acknowledged May 3, 1915
May 10, 1915 5.17 a

U. S. Naval Radio Service SRS No L0049
Received at Tuckerton, N. J. By H May 22 1915
Prefix Radio Destination Leipzig Origin S-New York No 420 Check 14
Date Filed 22
Relayed via Western Union
To Werner Salomonstrasse 16 Leipzig

Hundred Weberkrieg threehundred Bongkrieg each one to eight

INTERNATIONAL NEWS

13SP Approved E. A. Lichtenstein Censor
Forwarded via Ellvese By RDO May 23, 1915
Prefix radio No 982 Opr sending FO Check 14 Date and hour sent May 23, 1915 1:28 Am
Acknowledged May 24, 1915 May 24 1915 9:47 p

1732 BREWING AND LIQUOR INTERESTS AND GERMAN PROPAGANDA.

U S Naval Radio Service SRS No 8793

Received at Tuckerton, N. J. By H Apr 24 1915

Prefix Radio Destination Leipzig Origin New York No 70 Check 26 Date
filed 24

To Werner Salomonstrasse 16 Leipzig

English Simplicissimus only five hundred freight or three hundred Kreuzband only thousand Woche Kreuzband cancel Quartalsweise and charge singly Jugend Lustige Zukunft

INTERNATIONAL NEWS

452P Approved E. A. Lichtenstein Censor

Forwarded Via Ellvase By Radio

Prefix Radio No. 711 Opr. sending SX Check 26 Date and hour sent Apr
27 1915 12:15 am

Acknowledged Apr 30 1915

U. S. Naval Radio Service

Received at Tuckerton, N. J. By H Apr 7 1915 SRS No 7907

Prefix Radio Destination Leipzig Origin New York No 61 Check 14 Date
filed 6

Relayed via W. U.

To WERNER Salomonstrasse 16 Leipzig

Cash wireless today insure again all freight shipments

INTERNATIONAL NEWS
739P

Approved

J. A. NELSON,
Censor.

Forwarded via Ellvase by radio

Prefix Radio No 810 Opr sending N Check 14 Date and hour sent Apr 11,
1915, 11:36 PM Apr 13, 1915 9:54 PM Apr 14, 1915 7:52 PM Acknowledged
Apr 15, 1915

Atlantic Communication Co

Station: Sayville Serial No. 1418

Character TS Recd. No. p1082 Check: 27 Date recd: Mar 15 Time recd.
948 am Recd. by: JO

From Berlin Via Nauen Date Mar 15

To INTERNATIONAL NEWS 83 Duane St NYK

Inhalt der listen 014 015 am 5 and 12 Feb. Kreuzband abgesandt weg noch unbeantwortet wenn kreuzbaender eingetroffen.

INTERNATIONAL NEWS.

Others ahead ORO

Wires down by mess 2 pm mar 15

Atlantic Communication Co. Serial No. 285

Station: Sayville, L. I. 8922

Character: TS Recd. No. 228 Check 25/24 Col CC Date recd: Oct. 3-15

Time recd: 10:15 A Recd. by: OJ-JO

Recd. from Leipzig via Poz Date Oct. 3-15

To INTERNATIONAL NEWS 83 Duane St NY

Versicherung 6 % Weiterversicherung immer kirzezeit und ungewiss Jet.
senden nur buscher bei Kressbaendern bedingund eingeschrieben.

INTERNATIONAL NEWS

Sent No, 18-NY Date sent: Oct. 3rd, 1915 Time sent: 11:17 A Sent by: X
Recd. by: PE

Atlantic Communication Co. Serial No. 861

Station: Sayville, L. I. 10008

Character: TS Recd. No 820 Check: 12 colec Date recd: Oct 8 Time recd
1145 am Recd. by: jo fh

Recd. from Leipzig Via Poz Date Oct 8-15

To INTERNATIONAL NEWS 88 Duane Str Newyork

2244 percels 5 October

INTERNATIONAL NEWS

BREWING AND LIQUOR INTERESTS AND GERMAN PROPAGANDA. 1733

Others ahead CCW

Sent No: 94 NY Date sent: Oct. 8 Time sent: 221 PM Sent by: f Recd.
by: xw

Atlantic Communication Co. Serial No. 2952.

Station: Sayville. 14065.

Character: TS. Recd. No. 2939. Check: 19 collec. Date recd.: Oct. 26.

Time recd.: 1150 am. Recd. by fhoj.

Recd. from Berlin Via Nauen. Date Oct. 26—15.

To INTERNATIONAL NEWS, 83 Duane St. NY.

Werden orders fuer lincoln clinton heirsanch schmidt maisel unter kreuzband gewünscht.

INTERNATIONAL NEWS.

Others ahead. DMC.

Sent No. b 47 NY. Date sent: Oct. 26. Time sent: 840 pm. Sent by: F.
Recd. by: PE.

Atlantic Communication Co. Serial No. 3094.

Station: 14217.

Character: TS. Recd. No. 3095. Check: 12 collec. Date recd.: Oct. 27.

Time recd.: 1210 pm. Recd. by fhoj.

Recd. from Berlin via Nauen. Date Oct. 27—15.

To INTERNATIONAL NEWS, 83 Duane Street, NY.

1283 parcels 23 October.

INTERNATIONAL NEWS.

Other ahead. JCL.

Sent No. b 30 NY. Date sent: Oct. 27. Time sent: 146 pm. Sent by: F.
Recd by: LA.

Atlantic Communication Co. Serial No. 3096.

Station: Sayville. 14219.

Character: TS. Recd. No. 3097. Check: 17/16 collec. Date recd.: Oct. 27.

Time recd.: 1234 pm. Recd. by fhoj.

Recd. from Berlin Via Nauen. Date Oct. 27—15.

To INTERNATIONAL NEWS, 83 Duane St., NY.

Shipment now kreuzbank German mail insurance seven percent.

INTERNATIONAL NEWS.

Others ahead JCL.

Sent No. b 28 NY. Date sent: Oct. 27. Time sent: 148 pm. Sent by: F.
Recd. by: SJ.

Atlantic Communication Co. Serial No. 3095.

Station: Sayville. 14218.

Character: TS. Recd. No. 3096. Check: 16 collec. Date recd.: Oct. 27.

Time recd.: 1233 pm. Recd. by fhoj.

Recd. from Berlin Via Nauen. Date Oct. 27—15.

To INTERNATIONAL NEWS, 83 Duane Street, NY.

Shipments of Daiserkalender 19 October and 23 October.

INTERNATIONAL NEWS.

Others ahead JCL.

Sent No. 27 NY. Date sent: Oct. 27. Time sent: 141 pm. Sent by: F.
Recd. by: SJ.

Atlantic Communication Co 15760

Station Sayville Serial No. 420

Character TS Recd No 379 Check 11 paid Date recd Nov 3 Time recd 327 pm Recd by fhoj

Recd from Berlin via Nauen Date Nov 3—15

To International News 83 Duane Street NYK

Sent 1056 Parcels

INTERNATIONAL NEWS

Others ahead CRC

Sent No 82 NY Date sent Nov 3 Time sent 601 pm Sent by F Recd by LH

1734 BREWING AND LIQUOR INTERESTS AND GERMAN PROPAGANDA.

Atlantic Communication Co 14347

Station: Serial No. 2571

Character Recd No 81 NY Check 12 Time recd 731p Recd by FO

From CA Newyork Oct 27

To Werner Salomonstrasse 16 Leipzig

Kreuzband direkte deutsche post versichert einverstanden

INTERNATIONAL NEWS

JOL

Time sent 811p Date sent Oct 30—15 Sent by Auto

Atlantic Communication Co 15759

Station: Sayville Serial No. 419

Character TS Recd No 378 Check 17 paid Date recd Nov 3 Time recd 324 pm Recd by fhoj

Recd from Berlin Via Nauen Nov 3—15

To International News 83 Duane Street NYK

Weiteres geld anweisen express company 15000 scherl und uns

INTERNATIONAL NEWS

Others ahead CRC

Sent No. 81 NY Date sent Nov 3 Time sent 6 pm Sent by F Recd LH

Atlantic Communication Co 15761

Station Sayville Serial No. 421

Character TS Recd No. 380 Check 13 paid Date recd Nov 3 Time recd 320 pm Recd by fhoj

Recd from Berlin Via Nauen Date Nov 3—15

International News 83 Duane Street NYK

Wieviel gartenlaube unter kreuzband gewuenscht

INTERNATIONAL NEWS

Others ahead CRC

Sent No 83 NY Date sent Nov 3 Time sent 602 pm Sent by F Recd by LH

Atlantic Communication Co 16240

Station Serial No. 576

Recd No. 100NY Check 16 Time recd. 742p Recd By FO

From CA Newyork Date 11/4

To Werner Salomonstrasse 16 Leipzig

Wuenschen Ganze continuation gartenlaube unter kreuzband 1800 wochenbeft 1200 doppelnummer

INTERNATIONAL NEWS
POSTAL

JCC

Sent No 576 Time sent 144a Date sent Nov7-1915 Sent by AUTO

Atlantic Communication Co. 17449

Station: Sayville, L. I. N. Y. Serial No. 1196

Recd No. 1155 Check: 13 Date Recd: Nov. 9 Time Aecd: 1037am Recd by: ojjo

Recd from Berlin via Nauen Nov. 9-15

To: International News 83 Duane St., New york

Sent 798 and 908 parchs.

INTERNATIONAL NEWS

Atlantic Communication Co. 18174

Station: Sayville Serial No 1577

Character: TS Recd No. 1533 Check: 13 paid Date Recd Nov 11 Time Recd: 1221pm Recd by fhoj

Recd. from Berlin via Nauen Nov. 11-15

To: International News 83 Duane Stree NYK

Shipment Steinbremen carlender 11 November

INTERNATIONAL NEWS

others ahead JCL

Sent No. b 46 NY Date Sent: Nov 11 Time Sent: 148pm Sent by: F
Recd by: PE

BREWING AND LIQUOR INTERESTS AND GERMAN PROPAGANDA. 1735

Atlantic Communication Co.

Station: Sayville Serial No. 1910

Character: TS Recd No: 1773 Check: 12 paid Date Recd: Dec 14 Time
Recd: 314 pm Recd by: fh

Recd from Berlin via Nauen Dec 14-16

To International News 83 Duane Street NYK

596 parcels 8 December

INTERNATIONAL NEWS.

others ahead JCL

Sent No: 96 NY Date Sent: Dec 14 Time Sent: 482 pm Sent by: FO
Recd by: PE

Atlantic Communication Co.

Sayville Serial No. 1909

Character: TS Recd No. 1772 Check: 11 paid Date Recd: Dec. 14 Time
Recd: 313 pm Recd by: fh

Recd from Berlin via Nauen Dec. 14-16

To: International News 83 Duane Street NYK

Sent 1016 parcels

INTERNATIONAL NEWS.

others ahead JCL

Sent No. 95 NY Date Sent: Dec 14 Time Sent: 490 pm Sent by: FO
Recd by: PE

Atlantic Communication Co. 19310

Serial No. 2023

Recd No: 84NY Check: 35 Time Recd: 628 pm Recd by: X

From: Ca NewYork 15 Nov 15

to Werner Salomonstrasse 16 Leipzig

Hundred fifth daheimkalender fifteen sonntagszeitung hundred gartenlau be wochenheft twohundredfifty wahre jakob twentyfive simplicissimus sixteen following twohundred buch fuer alle twentyone to twentyeight ten wiener
Illustrierte current fliegende blaetter zweites semester

INTERNATIONAL NEWS.

POSTAL

Sent No: 2023 Time Sent: 436A Date Sent: Nov 16 1915 Sent by: Auto
Confirmed date Nov 16 1915

Atlantic Communication Co. 19759

Sayville, L. I. Serial No. 2439

Recd. No. 2400 Check: 13 Date Recd: Nov. 17 Time Recd: 8 04 pm. Recd
by: fh

Recd from Berlin via Nauen Nov. 17, 15

To: International News, 83 Duane Street, Newyork

Sent 418 and 1449 parchs.

INTERNATIONAL NEWS.

Held by censor.

Atlantic Communication Co. 19758

Sayville Serial No. 2438

Character: TS Recd. No. 2299 Check: 12 paid Date Recd: Nov. 17 Time
Recd: 303pm Recd by: fhvj

Recd from Berlin via Nauen Nov 17-15

To International News 83 Duane Street NYK

1136 parcels 10 November

INTERNATIONAL NEWS

others ahead JCL

Sent No. 84 NY Date Send: Nov 17 Time Sent: 317 pm Sent by: F recd
by: XW

1736 BREWING AND LIQUOR INTERESTS AND GERMAN PROPAGANDA.

Atlantic Communication Co.

Serial No. 395

Recd No. 248 Check: 11 Time Recd: 358p Recd By: fh

Recd from Berlin via POZ Date: /12/2/15

To International News 83 Duane Street Newyork

Sent 1037 parchs

News Co.

Held by Censor

Atlantic Communication Co.

Serial No. 2699

Recd No. 50NY Check: 18 Time recd 508pm Recd by: X

From: Ca Newyork 28 Dec 28

To: Werner Salomonstrasse 16 Leipzig

Sechzig land meer heft 17 bis 26 nur 120 hausfrau 8100 woche

INTERNATIONAL NEWS
POSTAL

Time Sent: 225p Date Sent: Dec. 24 1915 Sent by: Auto Confirmed date
Dec. 24, 1915

Atlantic Communication Co.

Sayville L I 13101 Serial No. 1967

Character: TS Check: 54 Time Recd 9am Recd by letter Oct 22-15

From New York

to Werner Salomonstrasse 16 Leipzig

Hundred woche number twenty to twentysix thirty thirtyone two hundred number twentyseven to twentynine hundred Velhagens kriegskarten italien orient twohundred russland flemmings kriegskarte number nine muecke ayesha strantz russen fifty krauss drei kriegskarten threehundred hedln ein volk four hundred paynes kalender hundred eulitz baltische laender twohundred eulitz balkan reimers balkankarte

INTERNATIONAL NEWS

Time Sent: 316a Date Sent: Oct 24 1915 Sent by: OJ Confirmed date
Oct 24-1915

U. S. Naval Radio Service

Received at Radio Station Tuckerton NJ by WU S R S No. 5092 Feb 19
1915

Prefix Radio Destination Leipzig Origin New York No. Opr. 27 Sign: ii
Check: 17 Date Filed 19-15

To Werner 16 Salomonstrasse Leipzig

100 Bongkrieg one 500 following continuation 200 Wochenschau 200 Wiener
Illustrierte

INTERNATIONAL NEWS.

1029 A

Approved

Forwarded to Leipzig via Ellvess By RDO

G. JOERNS Censor

Prefix Radio No. 493 Opr, Sending: C Check: 17 Date & Hour Sent:
Feb 20-15 551P Feb 20-1915

U. S. Naval Radio Service S R S No 3313

Tuckerton NJ By W 650pm Jan 19, 1915.

Prefix Radio Destination Leipzig Origin Newyork No. 37 Opr. Sign.

FO Check: 28 Date filed 19th

To Werner Salomonstrasse 16 Leipzig.

Renew current quarter journals 2095 to 2100 2970 also current quarter as 1913 numbers 4049 to 4077.

INTERNATIONAL NEWS.

Approved

L. TOWNSEND, JR. Censor.

Forwarded to Leipzig via Ellvess By Radio

Prefix Radio No. 36 Opr. Sending: W Check: 23 Date & Hour Sent
Jan 20-1915 925p Acknowledged Jan 20 1915

BREWING AND LIQUOR INTERESTS AND GERMAN PROPAGANDA. 1737

U. S. Naval Radio Service S R S No. 4833

Received at Tuckerton Via W 2/16/15 11:50 am

Prefix Radio Destination Leipzig Origin: Newyork No. 31 Opr. Sign: FO

Check: 13 Date filed 15th

To Werner Salomonstrasse 16 Leipzig

50 breitner kriegsbilder bound 100 kriegsalbum woche

INTERNATIONAL NEWS.

Approved

G. JOERNS Censor

Forwarded to Leipzig via Ellvese By Radio

Prefix Radio No. 289 Opr. Sending: ST Check: 13 Date & Hour Sent:

Feb 17 1915 215a Acknowledged Feb 17 1915

U. S. Naval Radio Service S R S No. 4659

Tuckerton By WU 1043a 2/14/15

Prefix Radio Destination: Leipzig Origin: Newyork No. 11 Opr. Sign:

FO Check: 25 Date Filed 13

To Werner Salomonstrasse 16 Leipzig

25 leipziger illustrierte 125 landmeer folio one following 100 universum one following 100 daheimkrieg four following only 330 baser

INTERNATIONAL NEWS.

Approved

G. JOERNS Censor

Forwarded to Leipzig via Ellvese By Rao

Prefix Radio No. 167 Opr. Sending: C Check: 25 Date & Hour Sent:

Feb 15 1915 110a Acknowledged Feb 15 1915

U. S. Naval Radio Service S R S No. 2823

Received at Tuckerton By WU 955a 1/13/15

Prefix Radio Destination: Leipzig Origin: New York No: 2 Opr. Sign: H

Check: 10 Date Filed: 12

To Werner Salmonstrasse 16 Leipzig

Cancel orders 9390 9417

INTERNATIONAL NEWS

Approved

L. TOWNSEND JR., Censor.

Forwarded to Leipzig via Ellvese By Rdo

No. 632 Opr. Sending: N Check: 10 Date and Hour Sent: Jan 13 1915

557P Jan 14 1915 1242a Jan 14 1915 acknowledged

U. S. Naval Radio Service S R S No. 3018

Received at Tuckerton Via W 8:00 pm 1/14/15

Prefix Radio Destination: Leipzig Origin: New York No: 61 Opr. Sign:

FO Check: 30 Date Filed 14th Jan

To Werner Salomonstrasse 16 Leipzig

2500 unionkrieg one 300 two to sixteen 500 weberkrieg one 100 following only 3500 Jakob cancel 0342 and similar publications order no more novitaeten.

INTERNATIONAL NEWS.

Approved

L. TOWNSEND JR., Censor.

Forwarded to Leipzig via Ellvese by Radio

No. 778 Opr. Sending: W Check: 30 Date & Hour Sent: Jan 16 1915

446PM Acknowledged Jan 16 1915

1738 BREWING AND LIQUOR INTERESTS AND GERMAN PROPAGANDA.

U. S. Naval Radio Service S R S No. 544

Received at Tuckerton Via W November 21, 1914.

Prefix Radio Destination: Leipzig Origin: No.: New York Date Filed 21st
To Werner Solomon Strasse 16 Leipzig

Tausend fuer alle welt eins 600 fortsetzung continuation 500 brummer 370
Leipziger illustrierte 75 Hamburger woche.

INTERNATIONAL
83 Duane Strasse

Approved

C. B. PLATT Censor

Confirmed

Forwarded to Leipzig via Ellvese By Radio

No. 477 Opr. Sending: ST Check: 25 Date & Hour Sent: 11-21-14 1040
PM. 11-22-14 117a

Western Union Telegram

Receiver's No. #8 MH-H Time Filed 11:50 AM Check 25 S-NewYork
11-21-14

Werner Solomon Strasse 16 Leipzig

Tausend fuer alle welt eins 600 fortsetzung continuation 500 brummer 370
Leipziger illustrierte 75 Hamburger soche

INTERNATIONAL
83 Duane Street

U. S. Naval Radio Service

Received at Tuckerton Via W November 21, 1914. S R S No. 547

Prefix Radio Destination: Leipzig Origin: New York Date Filed 21st
To Werner Salomon Strasse 16 Leipzig

Continuation 100 interessante blatt answer wireless why shipment October 24th delayed where are reichels steinbreners kalenders.

INTERNATIONAL 83 Duane Street

Approved

C. B. PLATT Censor

Forwarded to Leipzig via Ellvese By Radio

No. Opr. 480 Sending: ST Check: 25 Date & Hour Sent: 11-21-14
11-22-14 11 PM 124a Confirmed

Western Union telegram

Receiver's No. 12-MH/H Time Filed 1:05 pm Check 25

S-NEW YORK 11/21/14

WERNER Salmon Strasse 16 Leipzig

Continuation 100 interessante blatt answer wireless why shipment October
24th delayed where are reichels steinbreners kalenders

INTERNATIONAL
83 Duane Street.

U. S. Naval Radio Service S R S No. 2751

Tuckerton By WU 640 p 1/11/15

Prefix Radio Destination: Leipzig Origin: New York No. 41 Opr. Sign: 1
Check: 29 Date Filed: 11th

To Werner Salomonstrasse 16 Leipzig

500 unionkrieg one and following continuation 1500 order only important novitaeten and small quantities only 50 levykeyeg 30 verlustliste return privilege order 9556

INTERNATIONAL NEWS
F. TOWNSEND Jr Censor

Approved

Forwarded to Leipzig via Ellvese By Radio

No. Opr. 575 Sending: N Check: 29 Date and Hour Sent: Jan 11 1915
747 PM Ack. Jan 11 1915

BREWING AND LIQUOR INTERESTS AND GERMAN PROPAGANDA. 1739

U. S. Naval Radio Service S R S No. 3144

Received at Tuckerton N J By W Station Rec. Opr. 407 pm Jan 16 1915

Prefix Radio Destination: Leipzig Origin: New York No: 72 Opr. F

Sign: O Check: 33 Date Filed: 16th

To WERNER Salomonstrasse 16 Leipzig.

25 Leipziger illustrierte 1000 ullsteinkrieg one gratis 100 following cancel
10450 only 1192 jugend 3200 jakob 700 flugblaetter 1900 fliegende 800 lustige
370 Berliner illustrierte 1200 simplicissimus.

INTERNATIONAL NEWS.

G. JOERUS Censor

Approved

Forwarded to Leipzig via Ellvese By Radio

No: Opr. 890 Sending: ST Check: 33 Date & Hour Sent: Jan 17 1915
955 PM Acknowledged Jan 17 1915

Atlantic Communication Co.

Station: Sayville L I 3748 Serial No. 985

Character: TS Recd No: 406 Check: 10colce Date Recd: Aug 22 Time

Recd: 927 am Recd by: oj fh

Recd from Leipzig via POZ Aug 22

To: INTERNATIONAL NEWS 83 Duane Street New York

Wants means

INTERNATIONAL NEWS

Others ahead CCW

Sent No. 10 NY Date Sent: Aug 22 Time Sent: 927 AM Sent By: fo
Recd by: mo

Commercial traffic

U. S. Naval Radio Service S. R. S. No.

Received: Tuckerton N. J. 3/29/16

Prefix Radio Office of Origin: Berlin No. 2176 Operator Send. HN Recd.

LE Check: 11 Filing Date: Time 1027am

Received from Ellvese, Germany, "Oui" (call letters), via Direct

To INTERNATIONAL NEWS 83 Duane Street Newyork

Sent 1079 parcels

INTERNATIONAL NEWS

E. A. LICHTENSTEIN

Forwarded via (wire) Western Union, Atlantic City, N. J.

Office of Origin: Berlin No: 32 Operator Send. FN Recg. Z. Check. 11
Filing Date 29 Time 237pm

Commercial traffic

U. S. Naval Radio Service S. R. S. No.

Received: Tuckerton, N. J. 3/12/16

Prefix Radio Office of Origin: Berlin No: 979 Operator Send. HD Recg. W.

Check. 11 Filing Date Time 1130AM

Received from Ellvese, Germany "Oui" (call letters) Via Direct

To INTERNATIONAL NEWS 83 Duane Street Newyork

Sent 1157 parcels.

INTERNATIONAL NEWS

J A NELSON

Forwarded via wire Western Union, Atlantic City, N. J.

Office of Origin Berlin No. 39 Operator Send. MA Recg. VD Check: 11
Filing Date 12 Time 835PM

U. S. Naval Radio Service S R S No. 7020

Recived at Tuckerton N. J. By FO Mar 23 1915

Prefix Radio Destination: Leipzig Origin: New York No: 24 Check: 18

Date Filed 16

Relayed via W. U.

To WERNER Salomonstrasse 16 Leipzig

Do not ship by Bremen America steamer answer our telegram March eleventh

INTERNATIONAL NEWS. 111P.

Approved

J. A. NELSON Censor

Forwarded via Ellvese by Radio

No. 975 Opr. Sending: N Check: 18 Date & Hour Sent: Mar 25 1915
247am Acknowledged Mar 25 1915

1740 BREWING AND LIQUOR INTERESTS AND GERMAN PROPAGANDA.

U. S. Naval Radio Service S R S No. 6619

Received at Tuckerton N. J. By H Mar 15 1915

Prefix Radio Destination Leipzig Origin: New York No. 53 Check: 22

Date filed 11

Relayed via W. U.

To WERNER 16 Salomonstrasse Leipzig

Do Not accept larger continuations answer if Kreuzbank possible and safe or which publishers take risk

INTERNATIONAL NEWS 207P

J. A. NELSON Censor

Approved

Forwarded via Ellvese by Rdo.

No. 636 Opr. Sending: W ST XQ Check: 22 Date & Hour Sent: Mar 18 1240am Mar 18 1915 1159p Mar 19 1915 937p Acknowledged Mar 19 1915

U. S. Naval Radio Service S R S No. 6171

Received at Tuckerton N. J. By H Mar 7 1915

Prefix Radio Destination: Leipzig Origin: New York No: 86 Check: 25

Date Filed: Feb 26

Relayed via W. U.

To WERNER Salomonstrasse 11 Leipzig

500 Unionkryeg three to twenty 100 daheimkrieg one following only 6500 woche 1500 Tageblatt 3000 Gartenlaube pay Scherl sixthousand

INTERNATIONAL NEWS 1246 P

H. H. NORTON Censor

Aproved

Forwarded via Ellvese By Radio

No. 300 Opr. Sending: N TG Check: 25 Date & Hour Sent: Mar 9 1915 737 PM Mar 10 1915 1023 P Acknowledged Mar 10 1915

ATLANTIC COMMUNICATION Co. Serial No. 460

Recd No. 414. Check: 1110/1103 press coll Time Recd: 3/16 9.00 am Recd by: NS Date: 3/16/17.

To International News Service, Newyork

Section five on frederick captain handel and norwegian ship captain was ordered stripped second time because intoxicated inspector found with him his cabin handel and insisted inspector came asked for match refused offtake clothes second time but was stripped again left standing with quote we ha undress you but dress yourself or stay naked end quote olaf johnsen noregian merchant arrested suspicion prying inspectors liquor commander apoligized to both next day stop of 25 books mine censor kept vonmacks volume official documents relating outbreak war commander informing me wassent positive but believe proscribed which interesting view suppression by macmillan-publlishers stop in response vigorous protest that books not contraband violation american rights take from american adilhall promised would get back and succeeded stop of large bundle newspapers only socalled british friendly newyork papers returned in place hearst papers was slip quote 24 papers blacklisted enquote wrote commander quote against seizure confiscation 24 copies newyork america other hearst papers my cabin neutral steamer frederick am compelled protest you informed me they proscribed or blacklisted canada britian not questioning right governments canada britian say what newspapers may be read british people or enter those countries do question right british governments dictate americans what newspapers read or carry travelling neutral steamers am not taking these newspapers into canada britian content my right read carry with me on neutral steamer not bound for canda britian any american newspapers not forbidden over government stop that british navy be used blockade american newspaper strikes me almost humorous end quote commander sent for me declared didnt like my reference to navy quote am not responsible navy nothing do with its censor endquote commander admitted didnt see by what right newspapers could be taken from me since not giving canada britian consulted viceconsul doolittle enroute tiflis gave personal opinion illegally taken from me stop adair had said would try to get back but unsuccessful stop announcement germans relieved all money except hundred dollars first class fifty second twentyf third class passengers this being british orders as interpretation quote reasonable amount endquote mentioned in safeconduct brought real pathos to Germans stop announcement came dinnertime spoiled appetite many stop new task most repugnant to commander who didn't like role believing passengers money stop tauscher suggested taking note numbers burning all above amount allowed stop two three said have done that but amount not large stop days adair hall apparently endeavoring goet modification order germans gained courage elung though perhaps not enforced then came disillusionment but much germans money mysteriously disappeared some had quote lost at poker end quote commander told me had given orders be generous liberal with germans stop various amounts taken from forty dollars from servants to twenty-five thousand from countess natuschka detroit girl stop servant girl consul metzger cincinnati relieved several hundred dollars life savings became almost hysterical stop many gruber elderly hungary budapest not member bernstorffs party became ill loss 300 her small possessions appeared bernstorff ambassador offered protest for her also but suggested present case commander more likely success came me I acted as interpreter commander said had asked in money consul metzgers servant could be returned would also try get mary grubers back stop kept word both cases stop mrs katherine kraus american colorado springs wife german civil official brussels relieved by customs small gold chataline watch and opera glasses when asked for eight hundred dollars carried told adair hall quote you will never get it you know american governmena redeems notes if merely produce offtorn numbers end quote adair hall admired spunk american girl seemed be relieved didnt have take it remarking quote you get it back end quote tauscher among those quote lost at poker end quote only sixty dollars taken him stop after all fuss indignation denunciation dejection despair much protesting all money returned germans except matuschka doctor waetzoldt tauscher stop difficult understand what purpose all was stop correspondents made successful fight for return gold taken from them in counting which much blundering stop eight-hundred seventy taken from one was turned into eighteen hundred seventy dollars error made counting second time subsequently found be thirty short receipt given which made good by purse upmade by officers and immediately returned by me in order young paymaster responsible should be deducted months wages stop mrs jacob strader american says she holds claim against british government form receipt for 225 dollars money however never taken from her stop letter from american consul halifax signed amerikan passenger requesting come aboard for consultation refused delivery by order captain sommerville cruiser devonshire commander adair hall superior stop telegram bernstorff swiss consul montreal inform lansing through ritter still held halifax also refused stop last day when telegrams transmitted dispatch I wrote reluctantly approved by adair hall declared quote its true end quote returned by censor ashore with mention personal search countess bernstorff princess hatzfeld adair hall told me quote but they are impartial facts arnt they endquote quote yes must admit that endquote I refused send dispatch as censored stop climas everything came night twentyseventh great joy passengers frederick dropped pilot was making for sea when suddenly much signalling from warships forts searchlights flashing consternation frederick turned started back halifax stop great excitement immediately rumors orders received take off certain people countess bernstorff much agitated pleaded if any newspaperman could ascertain what all meant stop pilot uppicked few minutes later launch navy officers made fast several germans certain they be offtaken stop heavy sack pulled in from launch stop devised crowning final achievement halifax decidedly was frederich leaving port with 900 souls without wireless apparatus stop on day sailing sack containing apparatus placed second cabin diningroom wireless operator said was ordered not touch till outside which went look for disappeared stop at last british bluejackets left frederick one them picked up sack took aboard devonshire when discovery made containing frederick wireless there much signalling on cruiser fast launch immediately put after frederich seven miles out stop bernstorff referred to in halifax paper as quote that disagreeable person endquote much bantering ambassador when same paper carried display advertisement quote reverent roe preach sunday night subject bernstorff in halifax and what bearing has this on our housing problem endquote stop bernstorff advent seems have started realestate boom stop all in war historic halifax search frederick was mildly speaking badly messed up redeemed however by gallantly courtesy naval officers who lived up to the highest tradition british navy that respect stop through american I as one passengers received roughest dealing noless concert verdict for german passengers from bernstorff down quote they were gentlemen endquote immigration officers inspecting passports on the last worked quickly politely.

1742 BREWING AND LIQUOR INTERESTS AND GERMAN PROPAGANDA.

WIEGAND

Sent No. 5: Date Sent 3/16: Time sent 1140a Sent by X: Recd by PE

U. S. Naval Radio Service S R S No. 2600
Received at Tuckerton N. J. By W. Station
Rec. Opr. 718pm Jan 8 1915
Prefix: Radio Destination: Leipzig Origin: Newyork No. 55 Opr. Sign. FO
Check: 14 Date filed 8th
To Werner Salomonstrasse 16 Leipzig
300 buchalle three and following only 300 echo.

INTERNATIONAL NEWS.

Approved L. Townsend Jr. Censor
Forwarded to Leipzig via Ellvese by Radio
No. 435 Opr. Sending: W Check: 14 Date & Hour Sent: Jan 9 1915
1213am Jan 9 1915 Ack.

U. S. Naval Radio Service S R S No. 2676
Received at Tuckerton N. J. By W. 1016 am Jan 10 1915
Prefix Radio Destination: Leipzig Origin: Newyork No. 2 Opr. Sign: FO
Check: 11 Date Filed 9th
To Werner Solomonstrasse 16 Leipzig
Reduce journal 4231 only 75

INTERNATIONAL NEWS

Approved L. Townsend, Jr. Censor
Forwarded to Leipzig via Ellvese By Radio
No. 500 Opr. Sending: W Check: 11 Date & Hour Sent: Jan 10 1915
419PM Jan 10-1915 Ack.

Atlantic Communication Co. 13695 Serial No. 2857
Recd No. 2846 Check: 13 Time Recd: 158p Recd by: fh
Recd from Berlin via POZ 10/25
To: International News 83 Duane Str Newyork
Paketverkehr elgestellt versand wie frueher

INTERNATIONAL NEWS

Sent: No. b59ny Date Sent: 10/25 Time Sent: 445p Sent by: f Recd
by fo

Atlantic Communication Co. Serial No. 2856
Station: Sayville L I 13694
Character: TS Recd No: 2845 Check: 18 colcc Date Recd: Oct 25 Time
Recd: 157 PM Recd by: jo fh
Recd from Berlin via POZ Date: Oct 25
To. International News 83 Duane Street Newyork
Werden zuletzt telegraphisch bestellte gartenlaubde und kalender unter kruezband gewuenscht

INTERNATIONAL NEWS.

Others ahead CRC
Sent No: 61 NY Date Sent: Oct 25 Time Sent: 455 PM Sent by: f Recd
by: fo

Atlantic Communication Co. 6685 Serial No. 715
Character: TS Check: 35 Time Recd: 8pm Recd by: letter Date 9/20
From New York
To Werner Salomonstrasse 16 Leipzig
Twenty bazar uebermeer velhagen thirty hausfrau fourty wissen bloom verlorene fifty universon fourteen to eighteen hundred gartenlaube doppelaube wache kriegswoche scherlbilder hindenburg Mackensen Wilhelm one mark twohundred buchalle unionkrieg.

INTERNATIONAL NEWS

CCW Time Sent: 336a Sent by: Auto

BREWING AND LIQUOR INTERESTS AND GERMAN PROPAGANDA. 1743

Atlantic Communication Co. 6383 Serial No. 823
Recd No. pr. 720 Check: 13collect Date Recd: sep 17 15 Time Recd: 1027 am Recd by oj jo
Recd from Leipzig via Nauen Date: Sep 17 15
To International News 83 Duane Street New York
Delayed but on next steamer

INTERNATIONAL NEWS.

Sent No. 45NY Date Sent: sep 17 Time Sent: 1137am Sent by: X Recd
by: SS

Atlantic Communication Co. 6345 Serial No. 785
Character: TS Recd No: PR 689 Check: 10 collect Date Recd: Sept. 17
Time Recd: 8:32 am Recd by: OJ JO
Recd from Leipzig via Nauen Date: Sept. 17
To: International News 83 Duane Street, New York
2949 parcels

INTERNATIONAL NEWS

Sent No. 26NY Date Sent: Sept. 17 Time Sent: 10:38 am Sent By: X

Atlantic Communication Co. 6993 Serial No. 940
Recd No. letter Check: 35 Recd by: mail
From New York Date: Sep 22
To: Werner Salomonstrasse 16 Leipzig

Wenn Allgemeine Versicherungs Gesellschaft fuer See Fluss und land Transport Dresden Postpakete gegen Seeverlust Kriegsgefahr und Kapergun zu ungefahr fuenf Prozent versichert senden Sie alles packetpost oder Kreuzband Rueckantwort

INTERNATIONAL NEWS

Charge Int News

Sent No. 940 Time Sent: 1242A Date Sent: Sept 23 1915 Sent by: D

Atlantic Communication Co.
Station: Sayville L I 8538 Serial No. 1904
Character: TS Recd No: 843 Check: 16 Colcc Date Recd: Sept 30
Time Recd: 1235 PM Recd by: jo fh
Recd from Leipzig Via POz Date: Sept 20/Oct 1
To: International News 83 Duane Street Newyork
2948 parcels 18 September 1831 parcels 25 September

INTERNATION NEWS.

Held by censor

Sent No. 121 NY Date Sent: Oct 1 Time Sent: 359 PM Sent by: FO
Recd by: XW

Atlantic Communication Co. 8082 Serial No. 1545
Recd No. 254ny WU Check: 23 Time Recd 7p Recd by msgr.
From S New York 23
To Werner Salomonstrasse 16 Leipzig

Parcelpost hundred weltkreig chronik bongkrieg three to twentyone fifty hong welchchronik steinzeit fivehundred union kreig seven twentyone twentytwo

INTERNATIONAL NEWS

Cancelled 10/4/15 SVS-C MC

Atlantic Communication Co.
Sayville Serial No. 1366
Character: TS Recd No: 1240 Check: 12 paid Date recd jan 13 Time Recd:
822am Recd by JO Recd from Berlin via Nauen Date Jan 13
To: International News 83 Duane Street Newyork
629 parcels 11 January

INTERNATIONAL NEWS

Others ahead CRC

Sent No. 46 NY Date Sent: Jan 13 Time Sent: 1004 am Sent by: FO
Recd by: PE

1744 BREWING AND LIQUOR INTERESTS AND GERMAN PROPAGANDA.

Atlantic Communication Co.

Sayville

Serial No. 1496

Character: TS Recd No. Pr 1361 Check: 19 pd Time Recd: 714am Recd by: JO

Recd from S. S. Berlin via Nauen

Date Jan 14

To: International News 83 Duane Street Newyork

Deutsche post befoerdert weiter drucksachen koennen wir versichert wovelter senden

INTERNATIONAL NEWS

Others ahead JCL

Sent No: B47NY Date Sent: Jan 14 Time Sent: 121pm Sent by: Q Recd by: MX

Atlantic Communication Co.

Sayville

Serial No. 2380

Character: TS Recd No. 2260 Check: 24paid Date Recd: Jan 21 Time Recd: 810am Recd by: JO

Recd from S. S. Berlin via Nauen

To: Internatiunal News 83 Duane Street Newyork

Meldung aus holland bei zwei letzten dampfern saemtliche post von bord genommen was sollen wir tun

INTL NEWS

Others ahead CRC

Sent No. 83Ny Date Sent: Jan 21 Time Sent: 1025am Sent By: B Recd by: PE

Atlantic Communication Co.

Sayville 12990

Serial No. 2416

Character: TS Recd No: 2397 Check: 12 col. Date Recd: Oct. 22 Time Recd: 838 am Recd by: Ojjo

Recd from Berlin via Nauen Oct 22

To: International News 83 Duane St Newyork

3692 parcels 19 October

INTERNATIONAL NEWS

Others ahead JCL

Sent No. 2 NY Date Sent: Oct 22 Time Sent: 906 am Sent by: FO Recd by: XW

Atlantic Communication Co. 18840

Serial No. 2319

Recd No. 91NY Check: 11 Time Recd: 812p Recd By: FO

From CA Newyork

Oct. 25, 1915

To: Werner Salmonstrasse 16 Leipzig

Alles Kreuzband senden wie vorher.

INTERNATIONAL NEWS

Time Sent: 433a Date Sent: Oct 28 1915 Sent by: aj Confirmed Date October 28 1915

Atlantic Communication Co.

Sayville 25630

Serial No. 1332

Character: TS Recd No. 1185 Check: 11 paid Date Recd: 12/10/15 Time Recd: 545p Recd by: Fh

Recd from S. S. Berlin via Nauen

12/10/15

To: International News 83 Duane Street Newyork

Sent 1343 Parchs

INTERNATIONAL NEWS

Others ahead CCW

Sent No: B90ny Date Sent: 12/10/15 Time Sent: 644 p Sent by: F Recd by: PE

BREWING AND LIQUOR INTERESTS AND GERMAN PROPAGANDA. 1745

Atlantic Communication Co. Serial No. 1551
Character: Recd No. 77NY Check: 32 Time Recd: 504pm Recd by: X
From: Ca Newyork 13 Dec 18/15
To: Werner salomonstrasse 16 Leipzig

Wo inhalt der pakete 447 bis 1088 und rest von 1089 bis 1599 wo schweizer galender und rest von steinbrener und reichel rueckantwort gartenlaub doppel-number

INTERNATIONAL NEWS.

Time Sent: 220a Date Sent: Dec 15 1915 Sent by: A Confirmed Date: Dec 15 1915

Atlantic Communication Co. Serial No. 2471
Recd No. 76NY Check: 59 Time Recd 550 PM Recd by: X
From Ca Newyork 21 Dec 21/15
To: Werner Salomonstrasse 16 Leipzig

Zwanzig frankkrieg hemberger heft 28 und folge hundert daheimchronik heft 2 fuenfzig heft 3 5 11 12 13 20 und folge grosse zeit heft 21 und folge hundert bongkrieg heft 1 bis 20 27 bis 49 unionkrieg heft 15 17 21 28 29 zweihundert heft 2 36 bis 57 im ganzen tausend flottenkalender

INTERNATIONAL NEWS
Postal

Sent No: 2471 Time Sent 222A Date Sent: Dec 22 1915 Sent by: Auto
Confirmed Date Dec. 22 1915

Atlantic Communication Co. Serial No. 3074
Sayville
Character; TS Recd. No: 2882 Check: 11 paid Date Recd: 12/23/15 Time
Recd: 345p Recd by: FH
Recd from Berlin via Nauen 12/23/15
To: International News 83 Duane St Newyork
Sent 1211 parcels

INTERNATIONAL NEWS

Others ahead CCW
Sent No. 18ny Date Sent: 12/24/15 Time Sent: 952a Sent bY: X Recd
by PE

Commercial traffic
U. S. Naval Radio Service S R S No. 12933
Received: Tuckerton N J Aug 24 1915
Prefix Radio Office of Origin S NewYork No. 21 Operator Send. J Recg.
DL Check 25 Filing Date 23
To Werner Salomonstrasse 16 Leipzig

Sevenhundred bongkrieg hundred part eleven to sixteen five hundred schneider two hundred brockhaus weltkerleg fifty rosenthal english twenty schaffstein one following

INTERNATIONAL NEWS

1228 pm

Office of Origin New York No. 878 Operator Send W Recg. Check 25 Filing Date Time Aug 27-1915 423a Aug 27-1915 1034p Aug 29 1915 1.52 a Ac-knowledgeed Aug 30 1915

Atlantic Communication Co. 5088 Serial No. 76
Recd No. 51NY Check 15 Time Recd 827pm Recd by F0
From CA Newyork Sep 1/15
To: Werner Salomonstrasse 16 Leipzig

Received no parcels on steamer neordam why not answer.

INTERNATIONAL NEWS

Sent No. 76 Time Sent: 253a Date Sent: Sept 10 1915 Sent via Auto

1746 BREWING AND LIQUOR INTERESTS AND GERMAN PROPAGANDA.

Commercial traffic
U. S. Naval Radio Service
Radio Station Tuckerton NJ
Berlin 1431 R/UP 10
International News 83 Duane Street NYK
Sendungen eigestellt

S R O No.

Oct 27 1916

/S/ E A Lichtenstein
85 MA/FA 243PM

INTERNATIONAL NEWS

Atlantic Communication Co.
Sayville

Serial No. 954

Character: TS Recd. No: 718 Check: 12 Date Recd: Time Recd: 1007am

Recd by: FH

Recd From S. S. Berlin via Nauen

Date 6/19

To International News 83 Duane Str Nyk.

Verschreibungen his 3812 erhalten

CCW/

INTERNATIONAL NEWS

Sent No. 70NY Date Sent: 6/19 Time Sent: 1219pm; Sent by B Recd by FO

Atlantic Communication Co.
Sayville

Serial No. 794

Character: TS Recd No: 449 Check: 11 paid Date Recd: 3/9/16 Time

Recd: 825a Recd by: JO

Recd from S. S. Berlin via Nauen

3/9

To: International News 83 Duane St Newyork

Sent 1052 parcels

INTERNATIONAL NEWS.

Others ahead JCL

Sent No. 32ny Date Sent: 3/9/16 Time Sent: 945a Sent by: FO Recd by: E

Atlantic Communication Co.
Sayville

Serial No. 1412

Character: TS Recd No. 1081 Check: 14 Date Recd: Mar 15 Time Recd:

946 am Recd by: JO

Recd from S. S. Berlin via Nauen

Mar 15

To: International News 83 Duane St NYK

146 Parcels Kells wuenschen telegraphisch kasse

INTERNATIONAL NEWS.

Held and passed by Censor CRC

Date Sent Mar 23; Time Sent 1022 am; Sent by FO; Recd by FO:

Atlantic Communication Co.
Sayville

Serial No. 3028

Character: TS Recd No: 2880 Check: 12 paid Date Recd: Dec. 23 Time

Recd: 1201 am Recd. by: fh

Recd from Berlin via Nauen

Dec 23

To International News 83 Duane St NyK.

269 parcels 11 December

INTERNATIONAL NEWS.

Others ahead CRC

Sent No. 63 NY Date Sent: Dec 23 Time Sent: 1251 pm Sent by: K Recd By: FO

Atlantic Communication Co.
Sayville NY 2252

Serial No. 332

Character: TS Recd No. PR 729 Check: 11 Coll CC Date Recd: Aug. 9th

Time Recd: 951 Am Recd by FH OJ

Recd from S. S. Berlin via Nauen

Date Aug 9th

To International News 85 Duane St New York

Want Means

INTERNATIONAL NEWS COMPANY.

CCw

Sent No. 388 NY Date: Aug. 9th Time Sent. 1111 a m Sent by: FO
Recd by: WB

BREWING AND LIQUOR INTERESTS AND GERMAN PROPAGANDA. 1747

Atlantic Communication Co.

Sayville

Serial No. 3043

Character: TS Recd No: 2881 Check: 15 paid Date Recd: Dec. 23 Time

Recd: 106 pm Recd by: jo

Recd from Berlin via Nauen

Dec 23

To International News 83 Duane St NYK

Alle pakete auruckerhalten neu versandt 2135 kreuzbande

INTERNATIONAL NEWS.

Others ahead CCW

Sent NO. b 25 NY Date Sent: Dec. 23 Time Sent: 315 pm Sent by: SA
Recd by: FO

Atlantic Communication Co.

Sayville

Serial No. 2676

Character: TS Recd No: 2686 Check: 17 Date Recd: Feb 22 Time Recd:

1046 am Recd by: JO

Recd from S. S. Berlin via Nauen

Feb 22

To: International News 83 Duane St NyK

Kisten lagern noch in Rotterdam verschreiburg 3794 fehlt noch.

INTERNATIONAL NEWS.

Others ahead CRC

Sent No. 60 NY Date sent: Feb 22-16 Time Sent: 1109 am Sent by: B
Recd by: PE

Atlantic Communication Co.

Sayville L. I. N. Y.,

Serial No. 1532

Recd No. 1529 Check. 11 Date Recd. Feb 12 Time Recd. 822 am Recd by: JO

Recd from S. S. Berlin via Nauen

Feb 12

To: International News, 83 Duane Street, New York

Erste Zahlung erhalten

INTERNATIONAL NEWS.

Sent No. b30 Date sent. Feb 12-16 Time Sent: 1055 am Sent by: J Recd
by: FO

Serial No. 464

Atlantic Communication Co. 709

Recd No. 78NY Check: 24/20 Time Recd 630 P M Recd by FH.

From CA New York 22/15

July 22

To Werner Salomon strasse 16 Leipzig

Ten thousand each lahrer reichel shipping instructions follow only hundred sixty echo four hundred universum three hundred stilkrieg

INTERNATIONAL NEWS.

Cancelled.

Hold. Sent No. 464.

Atlantic Communication Co.

Sayville

Serial No. 2549

Character TS Recd No: 2214 Check: 20 paid Date Recd: Dec 20 Time

Recd: 1252 pm Recd by: jo

Recd from Berlin via Nauen

Dec 20/16

To: International News 83 Duane St NyK

Pakete Kommon furueck heutz 150 Neuversendung sofart kalender unterwegs reichel naechste woche

INTERNATIONAL NEWS.

Others aheadCRC

Sent No. 50 NY Date Sent: Dec 20 Time Sent: 955 am Sent by: X Recd
by: PE

1748 BREWING AND LIQUOR INTERESTS AND GERMAN PROPAGANDA.

Atlantic Communication Co.

Sayville

Serial No. 2677

Character: TS Recd No: 2687 Check: 21 Date Recd: Feb 22 Time Recd: 1048 am Recd by: JO

Recd from S. S. Berlin via Nauen

Feb 22

To: International News 83 Duane Street NYK.

Sandten 5 Februar 1631 parcels 13 Februar 1268 parcels 19 Februar 1129 parcels

INTERNATIONAL NEWS.

Others ahead CRC

Sent No. 58 NY Date sent: Feb 22-16 Time sent: 1106 a m Sent by: B Recd by: PE

Commercial Traffic S. R. S. No.

U. S. Naval Radio Service

Radio Station Tuckerton N. J. Feb 21 1917

Berlin 1429 He/Le 20

International News Co 83 Duane Street NY

Office open daily three thousand marks on hand further remittance urgently needed

INTERNATIONAL NEWS

/S. J A Nelson

17 QN/FA 1115AM

Atlantic Communication Co. Serial No. 310

Sayville

Character: TS. Recd. No. 306. Check: 14. Date Recd: 2/3. Time Recd: 11.56 am. Recd. by: JO.

Recd from S. S. Berlin via Nauen Date 2/3

To: International News 83 Duane Street Newyork

Geld anweisen weltersendung durch deutsche post

INTERNATIONAL NEWS

Others ahead CRC

Sent No. Date Sent: Time Sent: Sent by: Recd by: 81 NY 2/3 1243 pm B PE

Atlantic Communication Co. Serial No. 3450

Sayville

Character: Recd No.: Check: Date Recd: Time Recd: Recd by: TS 3327 19 1/29 180pm JO

Recd from S. S. Berlin via Nauen 1/29/16

To International News 83 Duane Street NewYork

Diese woche senden versichert mit Deutscher post naechste woche noch unbestimmt

INTERNATIONAL NEWS

Others ahead and Held by Censor CRC Passed

Sent No. Date Sent: Time Sent: Sent By: Recd by: 58 NY 2/2/16 1258pm B PE

Commercial Traffic

U. S. Naval Radio Service S. R. S. No.

Radio Station Tuckerton, NJ. March 5, 1917

Berlin 260 He&LE 208 (Press Collect) 850AM

Hearst American NY

Despatch hundred seventyfive berlin fourth while hints contents zimmermann letter circulating berlin yesterday only today alleged text published stop publication arousing amazement all circles stop vorwaerts says that having doubted long as doubt possible establishment proof accuracy letter dumbfounding vorwaerts continues the mexican adventure is a piece of that section german foreign politics for which social democrats disavow responsibility paragraph count reventlow in tageszeitung sharply criticises action characterizing it inconceivable especially that german government could have offered texas new mexico arizona on slender basis reventlow says quote those who set hopes on divided sentiment ustates deeply regret turn events deeming it unwise that in this moment there was invented a german foreign policy which might be described as touching match powder barrel end quote whole subject undoubtedly ventilated reichstag chief committee which will listen zimmermann tomorrow paragraph statement made me by zimmermann and wireless yesterday gave best possible explanations his action but secretary failed on touch approached japan or offer of free hand mexico to recover last territory stop to anyone familiar america the absurdity any effectual aid from mexico the improbability any response jap together with certainty of absolutely solidifying american opinion and rendering impossible further efforts those disposed friendly germany so apparent that action incredible

BAYARD HALE

/S[4] E A Lichtenstein B3 March 5 1917 933AM

Atlantic Communication Co. Serial No. 2144

Station: Sy

Character: TS Recd No. 2129 Check: 4[1]5/414 Press col Date Recd Jan
29th Time recd. 220 PM Recd by: JO

Recd. from S. S. Berlin via Nauen Date. Jan. 29th, 1917

To: New York American.

Despatch seventy Berlin twentyeight today enjoyed opportunity conversing Doctor Solf imperial colonial secretary stop important as were excellency's remarks regarding the reasonable colonial aims germany comma these less interesting to Americans than were certain declarations in which secretary indulged expressive of sympathies imperial german Government with Ireland paragraph excellency said quote historic senate address president Wilson january twentytwo sets forth among other great principles following subquote no peace can last or ought last which doesnt recognize principle government's derive their just powers from consent government dash that the inviolable security of life worship industrial social development should be guaranteed to all peoples who have lived hitherto under power governments devoted to faith and purpose hostile their own unsubquote if this noble sentiment applies anywhere it applies to case ireland which during many years been subjugated under English ideas and desires paragraph I remember well occasion when that unfortunate patriot Sir Roger Casement who had just come from ustates told me of fact that british Government widely publishing in Ireland declarations to effect german victory would influence severe damage Irish people that their land be devastated homes churches desecrated priests surrendered to mercies of army invaders bent plunder paragraph These allegations reiterated and re-enforced interviews prominent public men with dubitable Irish connections hand so Casement told me comma caused some concern Ireland as to possible effect German victory stop The misrepresentation of German intentions was so complete and palpable that at behest Imperial Chancellor acting Secretary State Foreign Affairs made the statement that Imperial Government emphatically objected as unwarranted the intentions imputed to it and availed itself opportunity give categorical assurance Germany entertained only best will and good wishes for welfare Irish people their country their institutions stop Imperial Government always actuated utmost sympathy oppressed country and its people for whom wished only national existence national liberty end quote Secretary
State for Colonies continued impressively quote These sentiments still represent feelings German Government sto Far from regarding Ireland as country which should be laid open to foreign conquest we look upon it as oppressed land which Germany most sincerely desires see liberated and endowed Civil social political religious independence stop No half hearted concessions wrung from reluctant oppressor because of their foreign embarrassments ought satisfy natural and manly aspirations Irish peoples but only a complete independence in happy atmosphere of which Irish genius could bring beautiful Ireland to state prosperity and well being which is enjoyed before twas brought under English yoke end quote.

HALE.

Sent No. 65 Time Sent: 433PM Sent By B Recd. by Fo

Atlantic Communication Co. Serial No. 222

Rec. 46-47

Recd No. 206 Check 217 press collect Date Recd: Time Recd: 9 PM Recd by oj Bd

Recd. from S. S. Via. Dpr Date Dec. 4

To Hearsts Amn NY

despatch two hundred twelve berlin second london papers just received here reveal fact thomas curtin self confessed english spy who claims spent ten months germany on american passport representing self as staff worlds work is meeting severe criticism even in england whose stomach apparently turned by renegade americans disreputable methods stop I told by excellent authority his passport which expired october thirteenth refused renewal after investigation washington state department though possibly temporary laissez passer provided for him home paragraph advices received here state american journalists london declined attend session american luncheon club at which curtin scheduled speak and that whole newspaper fraternity frowns upon recognition man who used american passport and connection with walter page to do northcliffes dirty work stop times and daily mail november eighteen contain signed statement curtin explaining that on returning england he placed information he had obtained in hands american ambassador namely his former employer page proprietor worldwork stop statement continues quote furthermore I saw two it that valuable information cabled ustates proving that german govt was expending money on election hughes unquote who cabled this quote information unquote which is ridiculously false questionmark paragraph page has had nearly two months in which to repudiate curtin stop thus far no denial curtins claim represent worlds reached berlin.

HALE

Sent No. B 1 Date Sent Dec. 4 Time Sent 10.00 a Sent by sf Recd by po M I

Sayville 22 Oct. 20, 1916.

New York

Zentralstelle Fuer Ausland Sdienst, 62 Wilhelmstrasse, Berlin. International new service requests early wireless reply concerning proposition submitted by radiogram last Friday.

ALEXANDER FUEHR

Copy FLC

Atlantic Communication Co. Serial No. 1297

Character Recd No. 1283 Check 42 Time Recd. 415p Recd by NS Q

Recd. from S. S. Date: 2/20/17

To: Hearsts American New York

Berlin nineteenth bradford merrill promised remittance for wireless tolls unreceived suggest single remittance about five thousand dollars cover tolls meet possible emergencies stop patriotic wireless statement from Mr Hearsts would be widely printed here might have much influence.

BAYARD HALE M. I.

Sent No. B22 Date Sent 2.20 Time Sent 641p Sent by A Recd by KL

Atlantic Communication Co. Serial No. 181

Character TS Recd. No. 146 Check 121DPR Date Recd: Nov 2-16 Time

Recd: 943am Recd by FH

Recd from S. S. Berlin via: Nauen Date Nov 2

To Hearsts American New York

Despatch hundred thirteen Berlin first stop General staff eight this evening informed me fort Vauz would be voluntarily evacuated midnight stop both this point and Douaumont were important strongholds so long as occupied French therefore had be disposed of for purposes Verdun investment stop this accomplished and both strongholds having been stripped and practically demolished they constituted outlying German position needlessly exposed French artillery stop their occupancy having been considered only stepping stones in Verdun offensive now that latter come halt owing extensive activities Comme front no strategic importance attacked possession these points and their voluntary evacuation dictated military prudence stop region south and west Vaux unadapted defense and German battleline Verdun now been realized to conform Strategic developments.

BREWING AND LIQUOR INTERESTS AND GERMAN PROPAGANDA. 1751

HALE.

DHS
Sent No. 29 Date Sent Nov 2 Time Sent 1042 am Sent by B Recd. By FO

Atlantic Communication Co. Serial No. 375
Sayville

Character TS Recd No. 364 Check 82 Date Recd. Nov 5, 1916 Time Recd.
825AM Recd by OJ

Recd from S. S. Berlin via Nauen Nov. 5, 1916.

To: Hearsts American NY

Despatch hundred twenty three Berlin fourth Wednesday evening wirelessly general staff told me Fortvaux would be voluntarily evacuated midnight stop This done stop nevertheless French continued bombard deserted demolished works artillery heaviest calibre employing vaux till five Thur. evening when suddenly ceased as is believed because of wireless news evacuation intercepted Eiffel tower stop Quite possible French owe New York Amer. thanks information which saved them hours expenditure ammunition stop Little comedy affords moments relief grim tragedy war.

HALE.

LeL
Sent No 43 NY Date Sent. Nov 5, 1916 Time Sent. 125 pm Sent By WX
Recd By FO.

Atlantic Communication Co. Serial No. 1447

Character: TS Recd No. 1431 Check: 90 PRCOL Date Recd. Nov. 21 Time
Recd. 219 P Recd by FH

Recd from S. S. Berlin via Nauen Nov 21 16

To New York American NYK

Despatch hundred sixtyeight berlin twentieth my correspondents in adjacent neutral capitals inform me impression prevailed generally in circles well informed regarding english internal conditions that these far from satisfactory stop food situation growing daily more acute squabbles of cabinet Northcliffe elone daily more shameless stop in activity english navy astonishing results german submarine campaign against ships carrying contraband deeply agitating nation and the cry stop the war is with difficulty being suppressed stop additional disquieting items furnished by outleaking news insurrection India labour unrest australia Newzealand.

HALE

DHS
Sent No. 52 Date Sent nov 21st Time Sent 351 p Sent by X Recd by FO

Commercial Traffic

U. S. Naval Radio Service S. R. S. No.

Radio Station Tuckerton N J Mar 1 1917

Berlin 37 OT/LE 203 Press 271 514PM

Hearsts American NY

Despatch hundred sixtyeight Amsterdam first reports arriving here show England determined severest measures accelerate production foodstuff stop farmwork seven days week stop announcement from pulpits Sunday work absolutely necessary ploughing day night release indispensable farmworkers from military service employment farmwork all civil military prisoners well as soldiers present in England for defence home country stop recruiting women for farmwork encouragement small farmers fullstop Frankfurt first Frankfurter Zeitung hears from Stockholms martial law declared Petersburg by General Habalow city commander who issued warning especially directed workingmen against demonstrations stop for coming reopening Duma Habalow empowered appress all means any riot or resistance against executive power fullstop

1752 BREWING AND LIQUOR INTERESTS AND GERMAN PROPAGANDA.

Madrid first portugese Spanish newspapers state Portugals interior situation visibly aggravated since departure Portugese troops France and epecially since announcement German seaarea stop economical situation almost desperate stop account lack transportation facilities entire vintage last year sold already partly France must remain Portugal stop crisis hereby created increased by restriction axport alcohol England consequence British regulations stop gov perfectly helpless meet there events stop cabinet crisis imminent full stop Geneva first petit Parisien announces order prevent lack officers French army commission preparing bill providing immediate appointment fit highschool boys upper classes non commissioned officers after short training

/S[4] HALE

/S[4] E A Lichtenstein B12 AX/FA Mar 1 1917 558 PM M I.

Nov. 4, 1916

294 FH 252 Presse Collect 263 M. I.

Hearsts American Nyk.

Despatch hundred twentytwo Berlin third stop I am permitted tell traic story fate German Uboat fortyone Commanded by Lieutenant Hanssen Stop September Twentyfour Nineteen fifteen this Submarine at work vicinity Scilly Isles hailed steamer flying American flag which stopped and made apparent preparations lower boat sto Submarine approached to three hundred yards suddenly steamer dropped false sides and opened fire two guns numerous rifles all while flying American flag paragraph Badly damaged submarine moved for few moments stop Coming surface again order release crew only lieutenant Crompton firstmate Godau succeeded outgetting boat before sank disappear forever paragraph Spite severe injuries Crompton godau managed reach empty boat drifting nearby steamer observing this returned spot bore down upon boat rammed it stop Leaping sea two survivors kept afloat half hour then uppicked stop They say no medical assistance given but uplocked small cage on deck where kept unattended till following day arrived Falmouth paragraph September twentynine Crompton Godau clothed only shirts and drawers at hospital ashore October tenth sent plymouth November sixth transferred Yorkcastle military prison december thirteenth lieutenant Crompton still precarious condition from wounds sent dyffryn alled stop Physician in charge in view lieutenants condition recommended extradition to Switzerland Acquiesced in by commission of Swiss surgeons stop English staff vetoed proposition and severely wounded officer is held prisoner england under conditions unfavorable recovery stop several times crompton attempted report home through American embassy London but reports never reached paragraph German admiralty believes crompton held close confinement order prevent his damaging testimony.

HALE

103 PM Recd complete at ———
B 1 FO PE 240PM

Atlantic Communication Co. Serial No. 8

Station: Sayville N. Y.

Character TS Recd NO. PR 550POZ Check 53 coll cc dpr Date Recd. Time

Recd. 5;27AM Recd by JO OJ

Recd from S. S. Berlin via Nauen Date: July 1/15

To Hearst American, New York.

Cabling to-day exclusive interview with Excellenz Helfferich words predicts failure English war loan causing stock market smash billions in securities to be wiped out reaction to be felt in America England so pressed for money it stoops to Russian methods Germany raised twice more for war and excellent financially.

SCHWEPPENDICK.

OK FC

couldn't get chance to sent till last period which ended 9AM other press ahead.

Sent NO. Date Sent: July 1/15 Time Sent: 9:48 AM Sent By X MI
Red by

BREWING AND LIQUOR INTERESTS AND GERMAN PROPAGANDA. 1753

Atlantic Communication Co. Serial No. 1353

Recd No. 1307 Check 324/323 press collect Time Recd 1202A Recd by OJ

Recd. from S. S. via: Date: Jan 20-17 M. I.

To New York American

despatch fortysix berlin seventeenth german uboats continue make astonishing records cruising radiuses cyomach destroyed stop american newspaper readers who inclined skip lightly over daily bulletins featuring havoc wrought these subsea terrors contraband cargoe little realize enormous loss they inflicting shipping northsea eastern atlantic stop yesterday submarine returned to base after sunk sixteen boats loaded grain coal ironor lumber etcetra this ongoing daily hourly and operations appear outcarried strictly keeping promises made ustates sussex I note tis not be denied apparent increased activities of german uboats past week be taken indication germany determined amply her cruiser warfare and this medium and that commanders submarine displaying new skill secience unonly in moneuvering underwater craft but also marksmanship paragraph illustration this now first—time obtainable stop She—accompanied destroyers yet spite this and high deagerman commander succeeded handing fatal shot which accomplished almost instant annihilation for when submarine again appeared surface crowd smoke only visible remnant massive turret monster which few moments before heedlessly onsteaming paragraph captain persias discussing this future sea warfare quote impression prevails almost universally best answer to high standing rhetorical note our foes to wilson is contained in constantly mounting records our uboats stop not blindly oblivious fact only way meet determination our foes annihilation us demonstration our part yet more powerful will accomplish same goal stop we may have implicit confidence determination our naval commanders upkeep constantly recurring evidence their expertness heroic sacrifices stop commanders like forstmann who up middle august has record hundred ships two hundred sixty thousand tons comma arnauld de la perire with uboat thirtyfive hundred twenty six ships tonnage two hundred seventy thousand and valentier who has hundred twentyeight ships two hundred eighty two thousand tons tell us we are wrong placing future faith our uboats stop these only three in long line promising officers who already given splendid accounting or be relied upon when opportunity comes their way end quote

HALE

Sent No. 4 Date Sent 20/1 Time sent 528A; Sent by O; Recd by Bd.

Atlantic Communication Co. Serial No. 4

Character TS Recd No. 1 Check: 116/115PRCL Date Recd. Feb 1/17 Time

Recd. 855 PM Recd by JO

Recd from S. S. Berlin via Nauen 2/1

To New York American.

Despatch seventyfour berlin 31st however the discussion respecting resumption uboats warfare regarded ustates must be remembered that expression of rightfulness is one imposed on german policy by enemy press stop no one here considers for a moment jeopardizing lives americans unlawfully board enemy vessels stop sold discussion has do with some action world combat and somewhat liberaler interpretation rules stop govt. contemplates nothing could be described as indiscriminant uboat warfare and if more stringent english searules and intended tightening ironring intended starvation german people have created strong demand part germans retaliation this if decided upon atall will be within uboad lines possible stop quote ruthless endquote quote indiscriminate endquote are words unknown german vocabulary.

HALE

L. E. L.

Sent No. A-5 Date Sent: Feby. 1st-17 Time Sent: 1014 AM. Sent by: DL
Recd by: PE. M. I.

Commercial Traffic.

U. S. Naval Radio Service S. R. S. No.

Radio Station Tuckerton NJ Sep 28 1916

Berlin 1134 Br/C 554 Collect DPR 1100AM

Hearsts American New York

Despatch sixtytwo general headquarters September twenty seven stop battle of somme continues unfinished proportions stop from noon Monday until Tuesday night rage of steel and nitrogen were unintermittent concussions high explosives one continuous tempestlike howl of anser stop in world so beautiful as this canopied over delicious September skies tis impossible bring see apprehension that human beings slaughtering each other rate unbefore paralled earth stop other day twentysix aeroplanes shot down out blue stop today more do... stop these contents on high spectacular extreme but tis in holes and ravines scoured and bruised earth that the thousands victims lay them down ingloriously in dust paragraph whole world has contributed send hither these tragic acres implements and devices death which been manufactured faraway shops during last year stop further more neither now have come last reinforcements expedition just sent England stop under cover of embarkation British Isles between fourteenth eighteenth September English dispatched as I thought attempted cable they were dispatching great reinforcements army to somme the new force has duly reached scene their hopeless task stop from thousands the now prisoners tis learned expedition comprised no less three hundred thousand stop they appeared week ago chiefly in triangle dis closed by the great highways from albert and peronne meeting at bapaume hapisme this in region desperate fighting neighborhood baucouhut l abbaye comma guene court combles and west of bouchauesnes stop along this line german general believe english placed one division twenty thousand men to every kilometer paragraph by way twas less than thousand miles bapaume that other day came across captain von papen not unknown to fame stop hour was evening afternoon was bitter but was not lacking fifteen seconds for exchange just stop quote whom do you blame every thing in general on noro that I and have not in NYK questionmark who brought scourge infantile paralysis questionmark I hope giants doing well but if they meet occasional defeats what conspirators responsible now unquote paragraph net gain offensive this last day supreme exertion been few farms hamlets west highway bapaume peronne stop in no place advance more quarter mile stop price these slight gains only be described is stupefying stop many of divisions outsent in england fortnight ago last unmore as recognizable organization stop in l abbaye their losses especially heavy stop paragraph battle somme now past twelfth week stop careful measurements show total entente gains this period one hundred fifth square kilometers stop conservative estimate losses english three hundred fifty thousand french hundred fifty thousand total half million paragraph their still remains german hands twentynine thousand square kilometers belgian twentyone thousand square kilometers french territory lost fifty thousand stop in three months agonized exertion with loss half million men entente now regained three tenths of one percent lost territory stop simple calculating that at same rate progress will reach german frontier eight four years that is say year two thousand provided willing sacrifice one hundred fifty millions which I believe is rather more than total population france and land including women children paragraph expenditure amazing and impossible comprehension or belief by any one whose ears unbeen paralysed as mine have by days nights continuous roar stop this difficult believe ammunition factories whole world able furnish such quantities explosives and certain they can continue doing much longer.

HAF

DPR Collect $7.52 /s/E. A. Lichtenstein B1 MA/FA Sep 28 1916 10 AM

Atlantic Communication Co

Rec 48-49 Serial No. 226

Recd No. 204; Check 128 press collect; Time Recd 940PM * Recd by of BD
Recd from S. S. Bln via Nauen Dec 3/16

To HEARST Amn NY

Despatch two hundred ten zuerich second swiss who has been many years resident london makes sensational disclosures local publication concerning treatment belgian refugees england quote pass two year thousand belgian refugees been forced work english ammunition and war factories under conditions equal those colored laborers plantations Ceylon and india stop belgians oncalled menial labor practically starvation wages stop insubordination so severely punished that frequently promptly belgian minister protest but no avail stop belgian colonies scattered throughout england feeling resentment against the govt increasing owing failure latter protect her citizens stop english using

BREWING AND LIQUOR INTERESTS AND GERMAN PROPAGANDA. 1755

possible measures conceal plight belgians wards from neutral countries stop view fact much attention being given german methods tis time world at large also concern itself condition belgians in england unquote.

HALE.

Sent No. 15 Date Sent Dec 4; Time Sent 1051A Sent by: X Recd by FO

Atlantic Communication Co. Serial No. 16

Recd No. 1686 Check 310Press Col Date Recd. 3/1/17 Time Recd. 105 PM

Recd by DL.

Recd. from S. S. Via: Date:

To HEARSTS AMERICAN, NY.

Despatch hundred sixtyfour berlin twentyeight while without update events america sufficient information insepded make clear sentiment usstates drifting towards war stop declaration signed taft parker ectera saturdays turmoil senate presidents mondy speech about all news received stop today comes belated statement two american women perished exposure after torpedoing laconia practically within sight british shore paragraph I gather from opinions wide circles men all classes positions that little expectation entered avoiding conflict stop have tramped around berlin fruitless effort obtain from someone more quoting expression sentiment or new point view which could transmit in hope assiting avoid last resort am obliged confess find nobody who either suggests formula hopeful saving situation or even especially concerned with any further effort conciliate ustates paragraph sentiments given public expression chancellor yesterday represent absolutely unanimous upholding german govt. people stop will be no recession from announced program upholding stop germany feels practicall acquiescence by ustates in british isolation german ports last two years amply justifies long delayed decision isolate british ports by only instrument available stop is employment this instrument unhappily results destruction americans who gamble—with death in adventuring on—ships navigating dangerzone—inface timely—warning comma then can only be replied some fate would overtaken sporting americans embarking ships bound hamburg Bremen stop if ustates govt. had practically insisted right send ships german ports comma germany been brought under no necessity stop shipping from British ports paragraph furthermore effort president enrolled neutrals in his antigmn. program and his effort separate germany from ally austria by different treatment ambassadors governments which joined in neutral—note robbed of their last arguments those friends peace here who day nigh endeavouring convince govt. correct neutrality ustates attitude paragraph transmits their—sentiments solely as reported whose duty inform paper from who receives salary and people who to certain extend rely truthfulness in news.

HALE.
M. I.

Sent No. 27 Date sent 3/1; Time Sent 340P Sent by X; Recd by PE.

Rec 10-11-12

558 of Bd 535/532 Presse Collect

HEARSTS AMERICAN NY Nov 13 1916

Despatch hundred forty one berlin twelfth I asked secretary foreign affairs for comment asquiths guildhall speech stop vonjagow proceeded read Sonorons extracts from british premiers sppech about english love for small nations comma devotion to torch of liberty comma sacrifices for freedom europe and so forth stop then secretary uppicked volums bernard shaws play man of destiny and read me following words which british author puts into mouth on one his characters stop quote when englishman wants anything he never tells himself that wants it stop he waits patiently until there comes into his mind burning conviction that tis his moral religuous duty to conquer those who have thing he wants stop is never at loss for an effective moral attitude stop as great champion freedom and national independence he conquers and annexes half world and calls it colonization stop when wants new market for his adulterated manchester goods he sends missionary to teach natives gospel peace stop natives kill missionary he flies to arms defence christianity fights for it and takes market as heavens reward stop to defend his island he puts chaplain on board ships nails flag with cross on it to topplant mast and sail to ends earth sinking burning destroying all who dispute empire of seas stop he boasts that a slave is free moment foot touches british soil and he sells children his poor six years old to work under lash in his factories for sixteen hours a day stop theres nothing so bad or so good that youll not find englishmen doing it but youll never find englishmen in the wrong stop he does everything on principle stop he fights you on patriotic principles robs you on business principles he enslaves you on imperial principles bullies you on man's principles stop his watchword is always duty and he never forgets that nation which lets its duty get opposite side its interests is lost unquote paragraph thus far english dramatist paragraph vonjagow continued as paced room w. helmstrasse in mediatation quote now lets see what asquith declares been done british govt deliver greece from international discord stop his pretensions illustrate all shows revelations of british hypocrisy stop with all the ingenuity of british conscience asquith adds that real reason was to prevent greece from falling into german net stop with same british ingenuity of conscience he admitted that he took certain drastic means to accomplish this high moral result colon namely he introduced war into peaceable neutral country by landing entente troops at saloniki he persuaded venizelos for whom he expresses remarkable sympathy comma to inaugurate revolution he persuaded greek troops mutiny against their commanders their govt he took possession of greek barracks greek arsenals greek railroads telegraph he refused legitimate greek govt right communicate in code with own ministers abroad he sequestered greek fleet decreed expulsion foreigners obnoxious interests entente stop and he did all this dash with extremely little result paragraph this what mister asquith describes as subquote liberation of this small nations and achievement independence oppressed balkan states unsubquote paragraph the flame of liberty which mister asquith would light again in hell as is the torch of war and of bloody revolution unquote.

HALE

Recd complete at 1047am 1215 PM

Commercial traffic

U S Naval Radio Service. S. R. S. No.

Radio Station, Tuckerton NJ Aug. 2, 1916.

Berlin 37 BR/C 520 collect /s/E. A. Lichtenstein

HEARSTS AMERICAN New York

Berlin thirtieth stop cut off as Berlin is from free communication world report reached this capital of widespread belief existence some sort military crisis stop simple fact is no one all Germany aware of stop since first week great English offensive no real apprehension existed regarding it stop last week developed stupenduous effort colossal scale but results leave Germany unimpaired possession front paragraph exhaustive review military situation personally laid before me by unimpeachable authority forces conclusion that Germany enters third year war with her lines east west firmly intact stop early July manuevres English French on Somme yielded small gain territory but not sufficient even make much as dent German front stop they were so apparently only prelude gigantic mass attacks launched July twenty twenty two twentyfourth which constituted the biggest military action entire war with more than million men engaged all sides stop this three days fighting English French forces former heavy predominating numerically paid appalling lives rushing into German machine gun fire and then beating retreat under withering German artillery fire stop attacking forces shape wedge attempt crush German circle built up with wonderful artillery machine gun position stop doubtful whether Americans really learned true English French losses stop commonly believed here General Haigs fiftytwo divisions all passed through this fire and are now reconstructed stop allies loss three days exceed hundred fifty thousand stop Germans reason defensive fighting artillery machine guns able operate great economy human forces paragraph at Verdun Germans steadily pounding way forward and fall Souville which but matter short time will mean automatic falling whole eastern front Verdun and capitulation stop estimated half entire French army fighting forlorn hope there paragraph German Russian front intact Hindenburgs whole line being impune today it was last November stop this front not worrying any of Germany paragraph fighting Galicia Wollynien going on varying fortunes stop

Russians succeeded embarrassing Austrian army this front but any belief that Russians likely be able turn tables completely and penetrate far beyond Carpathians sheer nonsense stop must not be overlooked that Russians largely only recapturing part own territory held by Austrians stop Russian gains here purely local significances and without any bearing military situation at large paragraph Austrian Italian front unchanged Austrians holding lines firmly and not intending attempt any important offensive stop feeling here and Vienna regards that front void any uneasiness stop outstanding feature military situation today Germany lies circumstance that western front crisis passed without allies having been able force decision their favor after gigantic effort and heaviest casualties war stop ground gained barely sufficient dimensions bury their dead top blow aimed glanced off and quote breaking through unquote attempt now deteriorated in pressure on German front paragraph end second year war finds central powers possession four hundred thirty one thousand square kilometers Alsace and twentyone thousand Bukowina stop end first year war respectively hundred eight thousand to eleven thousand stop central powers end second year war holding two million six hundred fifty thousand prisoners against one million six hundred ninety thousand year ago

HALE 1112 P

B1 JO/W Aug 2 1916 D. P. R. Collect $6.50 M. I.

Commercial traffic

U. S. Naval Radio Service S. R. S. No.
Radio Station Tuckerton NJ March 19 1917
Berlin 1265 R/G 137 Press Collect 534PM

HEARST'S AMERICAN NYK

Despatch two twentyfive headquarters west front eighteenth west front enemies Germany been allowed occupy strip territory including Bapaume and Peronne stop all declared be accordance German military plans stop by evacuating these positions which could been held German forces shorten defensive line stop military authorities assert evacuation slight slice land accomplished insignificant new line defense long in process preparation infinitely stronger also that price exacted from enemy was well worth far more than surrendered land paragraph yesterdays clear weather remarkable for pictures and dramatic duels in air stop no less than nineteen French English aeroplanes down brought German fliers and three by shots from earth stop against this record headquarters admits Germans lost three aeroplanes stop Baron Richthofen who few days ago I reported having conquered twentyfifth opponent yesterday down brought twentyseventh twentyeighth Lieutenant Baldamus fourteenth and fifteenth

HALE
M. I.

§S E A Lichtenstein
B 14 QN/MY March 19, 1917 653PM

Atlantic Communication Co. Serial No. 939

Character: TS Recd No. 923 Check 102 DPR Date Recd. Nov 15-16 Time

Recd 712 am Recd by JO

Recd From S. S. Berlin via Nauen Date Nov 15

To HEARST'S AMERICAN NYK

Despatch hundred fifty Amsterdam fourteenth private reports reaching here which indicate conflict Irish nationalists English recruiting officers reaching straining point stop recruiting meetings upbroken sinn feiners under caption quote thrown out britons quote efforts organize purely Dirsh regiments bound fall because attempts recruiting invariably intercepted stop Brochure quote the lost war unquote widely circulated sets forth England fully knows cannot out-crash Germany but anxious deplete Irish manhood so as no fear Irish situation after war stop brevier containing extracts casements writing confiscated also publication quote Englands lie unquote Sinn' Fein demonstrations outbreking freely general atmosphere one great uneasiness.

HALE

LEL

Sent No. 6; Date Sent: Nov 15; Time Sent 851am; Sent by B; Recd by FO
M. I.

1758 BREWING AND LIQUOR INTERESTS AND GERMAN PROPAGANDA.

Commercial traffic

U. S. Naval Radio Service S. R. S. No.

Radio Station Tuckerton NJ Feb 28, 1917

Berlin 1929 R/L 200 Press Collect $2.68 720 AM

HEARSTS AMERICAN NYK

Despatch one sixty Berlin twentyseventh sensation created here by publication report Cucai Boasso Italian ambassador Tokio to his government regarding activities Japanese in China stop while wellknown that recent disturbance celestial empire and republic fomented from land rising sun remarkable that official confession this fact indicated by representative European power supposed be in alliance paragraph ambassador says quote Japanese been many years spreading over China invisible net monstrous intrigue espionage sewing seeds disorder results of which shown last few years colon fall of oldest empire world comma two revolutions followed by third now underway comma inclement halted between north south and what threatens be permanent estrangement prompted all treacherous means stop this purpose Japan last decade send gold arms ammunition hired innumerable agents stop Chinese revolutionists in need protection found refuge and secret support in Japan paragraph althou reform President Yuanshika likely prove victim of European strife which prevents Caucasian govts offering relief to cause of progress in China this unfortunate situation doesnt excuse weakness representatives entente powers Tokio who permitting Japan collect monstrous and impossibly impudent price comma unonly cash but freedom its Asiatic ambitions comma for help which niggardly yielding to entente cause end quote.

HALE
M.L.

/s/ J A NELSON B 45 MA/FA Feb 28 1917 1042am

Atlantic Communication Co Serial No. 320

Sayville

Character: TS Recd No. 263 Check: 150 Date Recd: Nov 4 Time Recd: 438pm Recd by: JO

Recd from S. S. Berlin via Nauen Date Nov 4/16

To HEARSTS AMN NYK

Berlin 1st despatch hundred twelve if anything could atone for sufferings this war twould be righting greatest wrong European histroy comma, Reestablishment kingdom Poland stop Histroy records no tragedy pitouser than disemberment nation which during many heroic generations formed Europes bulwark against Asiatic invasion and was its principal centre leaning culture paragraph.

Some of us for two years have dared dream this possibility unparalleled in story of worlds peoples comma, Hilaire Belloc for one your correspondent for another stop The reaction of a nation and that the nation of Yan Kasimir Sobleski comma, of the heroes of Yasnagora Kamenyets Zbaraj, comma the rectification of historys crime dash it springs into the imagination like beautiful vision such as only an epic moment of histroy could vouchsafe paragraph.

I have reason to suggest the hope that this beautiful vision may soon indeed be realized in sober fact.

HALE

LEL.

Sent No. 151 ny Date Sent nov 4 Time Sent 603pm Sent by WX Recd by KL.

Atlantic Communication Co.

Sayville Serial No. 378

Character TS Recd No: 370 Check: 108 Date Recd: Nov. 5-1916 Time recd: 1053 am Recd by: OJ

Recd from S. S. Berlin via Nauen Nov. 5, 1916

To Hearsts American NY

Despatch hundred twenty five Berlin fourth Great historic event shadowed forth my despatches last ten days be consummated tomorrow Sunday what at noon General Von Beseler at Warsaw and General Kuk at Bublin well read proclamations establishing poland as autonomous heriditory monarchy stop proclamations identical terms stop Set forth that German Kaiser Austrian Kaiser apostolic King Hungary confiding fully in ultimate victory their arms and inspired by such valour and with such sacrifices into home destined happy future have agreed create individual state with monarchy and constitution stop more exact delimitation frontiers reserved for future stop Polish army be created to oncarry glorious traditions.

BREWING AND LIQUOR INTERESTS AND GERMAN PROPAGANDA. 1759

BAYARD HALE

Cr. 1115am std 1145am Walt in NY

LEL.

Sent No. 27-31 NY 27-N Date Sent. Nov. 5 1916 Time Sent. 1155 pm Sent by WX Recd by FO

Atlantic Communication Co.

Serial No. 377

Character TS Recd No. 369 Check: 212 DPR Date Recd: Nov 5-16 Time Recd: 1035 am Recd by OJ

Recd from S. S. Berlin via Nauen Nov 5/16

To Hearsts American NY

Despatch hundred fourteen Berlin third there are in Berlin tonight ten men whose names may take high place roll of honour when story century written stop they are Poles till year ago subjects Czar stop have taken lives in hand and come urge conquerors Poland reestablish anew ancient Kingdom whose splendour was glory of four centuries stop these men include seven representatives of chief noble families Poland such as Radzivill comme two representatives Polish intellectuals and one spokesman Jewish element stop last Sunday received by Chancellor next three days spent Vienna returning yesterday German capital paragraph while I have no authority whatever for the prophecy I make it namely that very soon German Austrian Kaisers will unite in historic proclamation reestablishing the occupied territory of Russian Poland as constitutional hereditary monarchy stop that Autonomy of revived nationality will be complete comma although precise delinlation its frontier and designation its dynasty may not be determined until end war stop that general Beseler who while military governor Belgium earned warm commendation from American relief administrators by his practical sagacity will for present exercise chief authority Polonia paragraph rich in romance comma of storied interest almost unparalleled in fascination comma reedification Kingdom Poland would mark one greatest moments life of Europe.

HALE

LEL

Sent No. B 19 Date Sent. Nov 5 Time Sent. 1143am Sent by WX Recd by FO

Atlantic Communication Co.

Serial No. 403

Character: TS Recd No. 392 Check: 48 DPR Date Recd: Nov 6-16 Time Recd: 749am Recd by: FH

Recd from S. S. Berlin via Nauen Nov 6/16

To Hearsts American New York

Despatch hundred twentyeight Warsaw fifth amidst booming of cannon pealing bells acclaim populace enthusiasm gatherings intellectuals and representatives heriditary families comma rehabilitated Kingdom Poland just been proclaimed at high noon stop spectacle presented ancient picturesque capital this history hour one never be forgotten.

BAYARD HALE.

DHS

Sent No. 41 Date Sent. Nov 6 Time Sent. 1118am Sent by: A Recd by: PE

Commercial traffic

U. S. Naval Radio Service

Radio Station Tuckerton NJ. March 9 1917

Berlin 496 BR.LE 290 DPr $3.87 12 PM

Hearsts American NY

Despatch one eightyseven Berlin eighth eve theor release I visited Americans inbrought Yarrowdale interned prison camp Brandenburg stop three dreary miles from ancient city founded eighth century and patronized by German hyphen German Emperor Otto across melancholy plain frozen canals havellays snow in furrow fields comma a forlorn desolate landscape to prison camp where comma enjoying such comforts as prevailing conditions permit comma have lived men American passports sharing lot English Russian prisoners camp is brickyard and Americans housed in temporary shelters corrugated iron stop when approached assembled group officers remarked consisted fifty-nine Americans six neutrals paragraph to tell truth American internes are sorry lot wharfrats roustabouts such as one encounters lower Manhattan Brooklyn South Street Waterstreet still human beings and pitiable plight couldnt fall rouse emotion stop across bleak Brandenburg plain swept colder winds winter before which dirty unkept array captured cattlemen seamen shivered as endeavored answer inquisies American correspondents paragraph twas with elation heard announced tomorrow onstarted way Copenhagen American after two months interment prolonged by discovery case spotted fever necessitating quarantine paragraph no distinct complaints treatment made by Americans though much grumbling meagreness food and general discomforts camp stop one could imagine from narratives wretched creatures what life lately been stop if any spice adventure clings idea sailing on ship contraband could be exploded listening story Frank Daily Indianapolis who tearfully recalled good eating Tom Aggerts restaurant Carl former attendant StLukes Hospital Albert Ferolie who sold Americans Brooklyn Bridge stop John Hutchins boss Georgic cattlemen most talkative whole party declared men unaware Georgic armed when hired statement sustained by Clark Dallas Harry Hynes NYK John Glennon Boston stop Hutchins outspoken protest treatment Brandenburg Camp but admitted due necessities hour and declared no bullying by guards.

HALE

/S. E A Lichtenstein
b 17 AX/FA March 9 1917 513PM

Atlantic Communication Co.

Serial No. 843

Recd No. 799 Check 190 Date Recd Feb 11th Time Recd. 1055am Recd by Q

Recd from S. S. Berlin via Nauen Feb 11th

To: Hearsts American New York

Despatch hundredfour berlin ninth ten pm last few days marked some anxiety over reports threat in german citizens german ships america stop pending reliable information refuting story confiscation german ships new york interning crews doubt regarding bernstorffs safe conduct german gov apparently held justified release american residents here today seems determination reached spirit stop unfortunate blunder some subordinate officials wednesday night offcut ambassadors telephone but matter soon rectified with full explanation paragraph results submarine activity last few days while not publically reported indicate swiftness efficiency with which uboats at work yesterday alone fifty thousand tons sunk but must be remembered chief result not in tonnage actually destroyed but tonnage from leaving ports comma thus today practically not single restricted ship leaving from europe for brits stop confidence expressed practically all circles submarine be able justify promises naval leaders stop universal known entente preparing tremendous aggressive west front scheduled early spring but doubt expressed whether eventual stop evident war entered upon last phase stop views slight number unimportant character vessels plying to from america belief widely held here little probability estrange american life loss consequence extended submarine work.

HALE

WJC M. I.

Sent No. 28 Date Sent. 2-11-17 Time Sent. 1257pm Sent by: A Recd by: PE

Atlantic Communication Co.

Serial No. 1306

Recd No. 1275 Check: 113 Date Recd. 2/21/17 Time Recd. 815a Recd by. CF LA

Recd from S. S. Berlin via Nauen 2/21 LA

To: Hearsts American NY

Despatch onethirtyone berlin eighteen am authorized deny strongest possible emphasis that slightest foundation story maliciously circulated america eff.

BREWING AND LIQUOR INTERESTS AND GERMAN PROPAGANDA. 1761

german govt. offered leas molestation embarrassment american legation brussels especially false is tale germans lowered american flag front legation offices equally untrue story attache herter anyway harrassed stop facts are whitlock and secretary ruduck continuing work exactly as heretofore offices open and every facility precisely as in past stop governor Von besoler exchanged courtesies with whitlock expressing deep appreciation work american legation officials in interest humanity whitlock extended thanks for message and been uninterruptedly persuing bevolent endeavors unonly without hinderance but moveover with particular support and appreciation german officials brussels

HALE.

M. I.

Sent No. 24 Date sent: 2/21 Time sent: 1103A Sent B: X Recd by: FO

Commercial traffic

U. S. Naval Radio Service S. R. S. No.
Radio Station Tuckerton NJ Feb 13 1917
Berlin 912 BR/J 77 DPR $1.03 545PM
Hearsts American New York

Despatch hundredthirteen Berlin thirteenth newspapers discussing departure many American correspondents including United Press whole force Associated Press expressing gratification decision few correspondents remain purpose maintaining communication United States stop noted with satisfaction benevolent public kitchen long maintained American Chamber Commerce remaining open paragraph borno thirteenth discretionary interview outgiven Gerard widely approved stop ambassador expressed satisfaction arrangements his departure explain off cutting telephone as misunderstanding declared had freely walked street and no embarrassing demonstrations anywhere

HALE

S/E A Lichtenstein

B 19 N/UD Feb 13 1917 708pm

Atlantic Communication Co.

Serial No. 484

Recd No. 506 Check: 115 Date Recd: Feb 7th Time Recd: 1132am Recd
By: Q

Recd from S. S. Berlin via Nauen Feb 7th

To: American New York

Despatch ninety-nine Berlin sixth correspondent in high place american people maintain all rules civilized warfare and full faith negotiations washington government observe principles international law comma german govt as tonight
I learn its sentiments premeditates nothing whatever against personal liberty usual activities any american citizen holding proper passports momentarily embarrassed here stop several ways egress open so far German govt involved and every honorable assistance freely granted stop no threat confiscation american bank accounts and exchange proceeding freely stop however practically whole american colony will onto with ambassador including all correspondents except of two stop though failure understand wilsons psychology universal thus far no americans experienced slightest embarassment public places.

HALE.

WJC

M. I.

Sent No. 30 Date Sent. Feb 7-17 Time Sent. 1220 pm Sent by X Recd
By: FO

Commercial Traffic

U. S. Naval Radio Service S. R. S. No.
Radio Station Tuckerton NJ Feb 12 1917 M. I.
Berlin 866 HA/LE&UP 63 Press collect $.84 623PM
Hearsts American NY

Despatch hundredtwo Berlin eight twelve noon now developes that while officials polite no possibility any Americans leaving until more known of treatment Germans in American stop Government also delrous knowing decision
U States question reaffirming treaty seventeen ninety-nine with suggested extentions I wirelessed yesterday stop Also official certainty Bernstorff safe conduct stop No reason anxiety personal safety Americans in Germany

HALE

/S/E A Lichtenstein

B 13 N/VD Feb 12 1917 958PM

1762 BREWING AND LIQUOR INTERESTS AND GERMAN PROPAGANDA

Atlantic Communication Co.

Serial No. 599

Character: TS Recd No. 566 Check: 217/216 Date Recd: Nov. 9-16 Time

Recd: 1246pm Recd by: OJ

Recd from S. S. Berlin via Nauen Nov 9-16

To: HEARSTS AMERICAN NY

Despatch hundred thirtyfive Berlin eighth press comment Hughes semi official Cologne Gazette quote do not therefore expect administration Hughes any essential improvement relations two nations but hope his personality will contribute eliminate these relations hostile acrimonius elements which Wilsons offending Mannes obstinate Dogmaticism injected into them stop if this new era bring with it yet better things we of course welcome them are not however building any air castles such prospects stop have victoriously oncarried war two years in spite Americans hostile attitude and will prosecute it victorious conclusion notwithstanding this attitude unquote Berliner Tageblatt quote Hughes who is above all Jurist has followed Wilson in emphasizing international rights demands ustates stop in doing so he arrived conclusions from which we can deduct whether he be inclined extend great accommodations from German viewpoint in adjustment still disputed questions than predecessor stop for us Hughes still unwritten page yet we uninclined identify his tendencies those Roosevelt whom he employed active campaign mouthpiece unquote Deutsche Tageszeitung quote politics ustates controlled strong financial group operating behind scenes stop these may concede President certain freedom action regards foreign affairs yet directing latter unalterably prescribed stop their tendency calls for solidarity angloamericanism at any rate so long as war lasts stop for us Germans this important decisive unquote.

HALE

DHS

Sent No. 91 Date Sent: Nov 9 Time Sent: 450pm Sent by: B Recd by: FO

Atlantic Communication Co Serial No. 747

Character: TS Recd No. 730 Check: 141 DPR Date Recd: Nov 11-16 Time

Recd: 1145am Recd by: FH JO

Recd from S. S. Berlin via Nauen Nov 11

To: New York American Newyork

Despatch hundred thirtyeight Berlin tenth Berliner Zeitung ammittag published today following poem by Robert Leibmann quote Hughes question mark man nezlemlich kritisch und es fragt sich ganz berlin wie verhalt er sich politisch ausserdem wie spricht man ihn es spricht in jedem kaffeehaus ihn der stammgast anders aus sicher haelt nur mit der ruh es etwas mehr als Wilson Hughes hoeher als die notenbluffs schaetzt entschlossene tat der hoeffs die entente mit ihrem schmus hat nicht mehr viel glueck bei huhs na und ob es fuehrt ein straffes regiment bestimmt der haffes immerhin der alts fuchs Roosevelt immerhin*der ist ein freund von jux aber als ein feind des luges leiht ihm nicht sein ohr der Hughes alles das ist richtig nicht weilsich juhs der neue spricht wenn man nicht den president poetslich wieder Wilson nennt.

HALE

DHS

Sent No. 62 Date Sent Nov 13 Time Sent 324 pm Sent By: B Recd by: FO

729 FH 104 Press collect Nov 11 1916

HEARSTS AMERICAN NewYork

Despatch hundred thirtyseven Berlin tenth despite false news outsent Reuter announcing election Hughes neither German Government people betrayed into any expressions which regret view latest news announcing probably triumph Wilson stop as I telegraphed wednesday morning announcement Hughes victory received without elation or disappointment stop have now to remark that revised result received interest but without expression particular enthusiasim stop If required give impression German feeling would say some relief unoblises struggle with pronunciation hughes name next four years together with disposition say with hamlet better bear those ills we have than fly to others that we know not of.

HALE

34 Wx FO 1210 P 1120AM

Commercial traffic

U. S. Naval Radio Service S. R. S. No.

Radio station Tuckerton NJ Nov 3 1916

Berlin 90 W/W 447 Press collect $5.96 800AM

HEARST'S AMERICAN New York

Berlin first despatch hundredeleven Presidents Cincinnati speech reached Europe imperfect disconnected stop Comment is based on sentences without content stop This mostly critical suspicious as following excerpts show stop Nevertheless private disposition is reserve judgment till President makes meaning clearer stop Reventlows Tageszeitung quote Wilson confirms in his speech our conception of role which he Grey and ruling financial groups have assigned UStates stop Referring to great economical strength UStates he urges this be marshalled meet conditions which war has created Europe stop Wilson gives this inference very neat moral turn when he says he be ashamed any American who viewed satisfaction reduction Europes physical powers stop We might state this connection that for more than two years UStates under Wilson done much weaken Europes physical powers stop Enormous deliveries munitions war material to Britain her allies have contributed much lengthen duration war stop Had these untaken place war been ended and weakening Europes been fraction that now is and yet bound be stop Berliner Zeitung am Mittag quote thus Wilson proclaims his quote society of nations unquote from which note be excluded who willing cooperate along these lines stop Leadership this new phase development mankind appears be reserved America stop Neutrality now seems be thing past stop Since Monroe down present time been principle American policy not interfere any international problems not immediately concerning UStates above all avail international treaties or guarantees stop Wilson now indicates important turn American policy stop More than one reason why we view Wilsons ideas skeptically stop Perhaps his personal intention higher than has before been assumed stop Lokal Anzeiger quote superficial inspection Wilsons proposition proposes that even normal times goal he aims achieve cannot be reached stop How can thought such society nations be effected at time when four great world powers constantly proclaiming it their war aim to exclude all central Europe community national stop If Wilson asks himself this question he will have admit that chief enemy his scheme is exactly that nation whose statesman hypocritically preferring his world peace league as incarnation thought calculated redeem mankind stop He will become conscious fact that no greater obstacle in path fulfillment this thought that English war aims and their scheme destruction proclaimed Grey in same speech in which he expects unequally world peace alliance stop If Wilson wishes not be suspected being ally England for whom this world league be but means established for unrestricted world dominion he must first confer with Grey remaking a thorough revision latters war aim stop He should not fear such discussion if he be sincere and if his plan making mankind happy really be prompted idealistic and not materialistic motives unquote

HALE

/S/ E A Lichtenstein

B 10 JO/FA Nov 3 1916 1150am

Commercial traffic.

U. S. Naval Radio Service. S. R. S. N.

Tuckerton Radio Station, Tuckerton, NJ. Feb. 18, 1917.

Berlin. 1106. OT. B. 113. Press collect. 800 am.

HEARST'S AMERICAN, NYK.

Despatch hundred twenty-three Berlin fifteenth Deep interest felt here development relations UStates Austro-Hungary stop Well understood Austrian relations different those Germany because of small tonnage Austrian ships present America but other hand well known that while recent German emigration American been slight Austro-Hungarian emigration great stop Some feeling expressed point Wilson endeavouring separate Germany from her chief ally but utmost confidence both here and Vienna as conveyed me from Austrian capital that if any such effort being exercised twill be fruitless understanding and harmony Germany Austria complete stop Austria fortunes inthrown absolutely Germany present crisis and interest absolutely identical stop All central powers await deep interest question Tarowskys reception White House.

HALE.
M. I.

/s/ J. A. NELSON.

B. 1. QN/Y. Feb. 18, 1917, 1153 am.

1764 BREWING AND LIQUOR INTERESTS AND GERMAN PROPAGANDA.

Commercial traffic U. S. Naval Radio Service.
Radio Station, Tuckerton, NJ.

S. R. S. No.
March 14, 1917.

Berlin 864. TI/JO. 228/226. DPR. $3.04. —pm.

HEARST'S AMERICAN, New York.

Despatch two hundred three section B. For instance Germany many days believed Lloyd Hamburg ships America practically confiscated crews sent Ellis Island other inventions calculated incite anti-American feeling here transmitted day after day by Reuter Havas under ordinary circumstances many these reports been too ridiculous belief any human thing but in strained state public mind and total absence all denial most extravagant stories all treatment Germans in America and extraordinary declarations fathered upon President and Cabinet inevitably provoked ill feeling aroused suspicion here stop One notable result incoming Bernstorff party will be inform Germany both officials private what Government people UStates really think about paragraph Bernstorff confirmed me truthfulness reported sent Wiegand Odell respecting treatment Halifax others including all distinguished members party their wives also humblest fully absolutely vouched accuracy inter*news reports Halifax twas general sentiment English officers regretted job unworthy their position but obliged outcarry instructions paragraph Mystery detention Frederick English halifax twelve days remains unsolved why was necessary take so long examine steamer which ordinarily passes Kirkwall two days query Did English Government believe presence Bernstorff Germany would dissipate misunderstanding between America Germany query On arrival Slettelner Bahnhof train met Count Montgelas representing foreign office Boyed Dernburg party greetings awaited ambassador from daughter Princess Hoewenstein Kittoe father mother Prince Princess Hatzfeldt children wellknown Doctor Albert relatives Consul General Hossenfelder Professor Bonn end despatch.

HALE

/s/ E. A. LICHTENSTEIN.
B 16 n/FA March 14, 1917, 351 pm.

Commercial Traffic U. S. Naval Radio Service
Radio Station Tuckerton NJ

S. R. S. No.

Feb 9, 1917

Berlin 642 HN/UP 248 DPR $3.31 900PM
Hearsts American NYK

Despatch hundred section A Berlin seventh four PM passports still undelivered to Gerard and staff because German Government without communication UStates without information fate German official especially comma and private German subjects resident UStates stop unofficial despatches arrived yesterday states Bernstorff given passports but German Government without information whether their official representatives guaranteed safe conduct stop official view is UStates must deliver German officials at point from which they can reach home without difficulty stop this apparently involves safe conduct across France but Government here not unnaturally desires assurance that return all German officials certified before granting safe conduct American ambassador and those accompanying him paragraph Gerard today extremely pessimistic regarding possibilities egress but this generally attributable difficulties situation which ambassador has met manfully but which naturally affect nerves all concerned paragraph Count Montgelas representing foreign office been in conference ambassador regarding maintenance century long treaty UStates Prussia eleventh July seventeen ninety-nine concerning treatment each others citizens and their private property after severance diplomatic relations paragraph in absence official instructions comma telegraphic intercourse having been suspended last week comma ambassador unwilling declare American adherence treaty stop its provisions laid before Gerard with suggestions that in present state affairs most desirable humanity civilization both parties adhere its long established provisions stop Gerard was offered opportunity communicate provisions treaty by wireless but he refused embrace unless allowed add comment his own stop therefore agreed that provisions treaty and supplement be transmitted UStates by neutral legation end section

HALE

/S/ E A LICHTENSTEIN

B 19 AX/VD Feb 9 1917 1132PM

Commercial Traffic U. S. Naval Radio Service

S. R. S. No.

Radio Station Tuckerton NJ

March 14 1917 120PM

Berlin 863 292/290 DPR $3.89

Hearsts American NYK

Despatch twohundred three Berlin thirteenth section A twas precisely three o'clock when Bernstorff aboard big ferrysteamer Prins Christian updrew dock warnemuende and party hundred fifty feasted eyes on long unfamiliar scenes nativeland stop Ordinary routine warnemuende the most difficult frontier station notably altered for occasion officials and populace uniting to give every travellers heartfelt posible welcome homeland stop Captain von Cannenburg commanding frontier station stepped across gangplank few moments conversation Prince Hatzfeld paid respects Bernstorff then led by heads late embassy Washington party came ashore stop First to greet ambassador and secretaries were representatives Hearst press and first words uttered Bernstorff were thanks to those Americans who declined be stampeded into flight and remained endeavoring maintain some sort communication between two nations temporarily estranged stop Twas both tearful and joyful scene stop Berlin begun on special train party complete exception Minister Hael von Haimhausen and Von Kellenbach and family from Cincinnati consulate who remained Copenhagen detained illness.

While ambassador asked excuse making any statement this time talked frankly as did all members party regarding conditions America and probabilities developments relations two countries gave distinct impression optimistic expectations avoidance formal armed conflict provided both sides maintain common sense and some possibility exchange ideas sentiments maintained.

Advent party with authentic news event opinions prevailing UStates was like fresh breeze inblowing stifled room stop Tis fact which never should be forgotten Germany practically offcut communication America and only vaguest unreliablest conflictingest rumors incoming nobody German able form slightest conception American sentiment American events stop While hopes most despatches few remaining correspondent reach America sooner later all communications eastward delayed many days and evidently stringently censored somewhere stop End section A.

HALE

/S/

E A LICHTENSTEIN

B 15 N/FA March 14 1917 328PM

Atlantic Communication Co

Serial No. 1686

Recd. No. 1651. Checks: 430/429 press collect Date Recd. Time Rec. 430p

Recd By of

Recd from: Berlin via: Nauen Date: Dec 24-16

To New York American

Despatch two sixty seven berlin twentytwo president wilsons note unyet been published germany but its contents has attracted deeply interested attention readers german opinion stop somewhat verbose text perused profound interest and while wilsons literary style excites admiration many quarters comma precise meaning his literary locations not clearly penetrated german mind stop on whole impression is president has a slightly belated proffer his good offices under sense fidelity of supreme moment pointed to by hands of clock which timed chancellors thanksgiving interview and peace offer Tuesday december twelfth paragraph ambassador gerard arrived here last thursday night stop allong with other passengers frederic elghth been detained kirkwall while american christmas mails for continental europe seized by english meanwhile tremendous world events moving on stop arrived berlin to find secretary grew charge daffaires and in had within last few minutes communicated to german foreign office president wilsons response to german offer paragraph text president note still at this hour under close scrutiny members all departments govt stop work of translation into german naturally occupying sometime and not has objects aims and spirit wilsons reply been thoroughly digested stop but I in position report that while presidents views comma thought lacking at many points in expression consciousness full import this historic hour comma especially relation subject freedom of seas comma is at many other points satisfying to german mind stop yesterday the allied central powers europe expected nothing asked nothing Mr. Wilson stop had made their announcement to opposing belligerents directly and without any suggestion mediation stop today the unexpected message from washn places whole situation in somewhat different light paragraph first in importance in fact Willsons rather verbose note indulges no specific suggestions comma unless several references fate small states be interpreted as pointing belgium stop in view germany these references applicable equal force to case greece and in a modified form to scandinavian countries now so harshly oppressed by entente stop there is evident therefore no disposition resent those messages paragraph tis not too much say consciousness germany been depply impressed presidents statement that general objects belligerents as expressed authoritatively utterances leaders exists no difference of aim and desire, comma so far at least as these been officially expressed stop believe here president impressed by remarkable similarity of views chancellor english prime minister american president as those remarked upon by chancellor thanksgiving interview accorded me stop this exhibition of converging not to say identical political views is believed to have profoundly affected consciousness of neutrals and presidents note believed probably received final inspiration these significant passages.

HALE
M. I.

Sent No. 81 Date Sent: 12/24 Time Sent: 620 PM Sent By: A Recd by: KL

Atlantic Communication Co. Serial No. 36
Recd. No. 11 Check 322/320 Press Coll Date Recd. 3/2 Time Recd. 1055a
Recd. by CF
Recd from Via: Date. 3/2/17
To: Hearsts American New york

Despatch hundred sixty five five berlin twentyeighth in effort contribute some slight illumination American German relations in last hope avoiding conflict. I transmit following gathered from most informed circles berlin; declaration chancellors speech yesterday echoed unanimous voice german people stop humanitarian sentiments expressed president fully appreciated but attitude which he allowed unstates govt assume mobilize neutrality against germany and incite misunderstanding with austria profoundly deprecated stop underlying last problems is question wny America govt which tacitly asquiesced two years closing american ports and offcutting rights american farmers planters merchants deal freely germany a country with which ustates not war how suddenly in paroxism because germany after long delay resolved apply to british isles methods at which america winked when applied germany paragraph particularly us germany been impressed by fact american men women willing throw dice with death in executing attempt make voyage through danger zone premature struggle in which germany now engaged for existence can adequately appreciate disgusting sense frivolity those who adventure on seas present tragic moment paragraph furthermore outpointed that ustates govt oncarried negotiations britain during many months respecting fate american vessels american goods passing across atlantic but when germany undertook obstruct atlantic passage not moments considering not single exchange messages designed arrive modus vivendi attempted stop when germany after onlooking american submission british sea tyranny two years finally undecided decisive measures instant reply came from america dissolving relations without stating reasons for dissolution and made impossible any discussion details which had freely discussed british govt paragraph is reflection upon divergence attitude ustates govt toward britain toward germany that has finally created feeling hopelessness sincere effort central powers maintained friendly understanding america stop no overt act will be committed centrals but program announced February first still be outcarried paragraph I repeat above sentiments are transmitted as those unanimously entertained germany by reporter whose sole business is convey news.

HALE
M. I.

Sent No. 36 Date sent 3/2 Time sent 1203 p Sent by x Recvd by FO

Atlantic Communication Co. Serial No. 879
Recd. No. 873 Check 268 Date recd. 2-12-17 Time recd 757 am Recd by GM
Recd. from Berlin via Nauen Date Feb 12th
To: Hearsts American Newyork

Despatch hundred nine section B I repeat I report this belief and all that follows in no other spirit than desire inform american sentiment prevailing germany paragraph much having do recent history relations belligerent powers and ustates will remain unchronicled till years after close war then only can judgments be outmeted but scores international rivalles complications figure in wonderful chapter paragraph among elements as yet inadequately unchronicled are devious machations england in denmark motherlands norway greece endeavoring indrag these countries straggle comma reluctance russia only france continue war beyond few months comma extraordinary distress british isles which british censorship concealing from world stop recent conference rome was convened purpose assuring british allies final effort made before midsummer otherwise all realized from engagements stop in full knowledge all these facts central powers sensational successes roumania and steadfast holding all fronts german government made known wilson willingness and struggle interests humanity causian civilization practically on basis status quo ante bellum stop then waited for practical response from whitehouse response tailec come but evidences came that somehow enemy had received encouragement continue struggle on supposition with many evidences ring enemies tightening consequence outside encouragemet germany decides make supreme effort being tragedy swift conclusion stop as interpreted here this decision involved nothing more than extension principles which england been allowed announce and practice last two years stop twas felt if wilsons professions sincere ustates would be in interest swift conclusion dreadful conflict preserve the neutrality which spain switzerland holland denmark norway sweden have found selves able preserve paragraph end section B

M. I. HALE

Sent No A10 Date sent Feb 12th Time sent 1118 AM Sent by A Recd by FO

Maj. HUMES. Captain, I would like to ask you another question in that connection. You have studied these cablegrams. What is the nature of the cablegrams that came from Dr. Hale? Were they what you would call news matter or were they editorial in their nature?

Capt. LESTER. They were editorial, and laudatory of Germans and German officialdom in practically every instance. That was their purpose. There were some few messages of actual happenings. There were innumerable messages belittling the cause of the allies. I suppose there were hundreds of them. Their general character, however, is as I have stated.

Reference was made in Mr. Brisbane's testimony to the cutting off of the International News Service by England. I have some information of the reason that this news service was cut off; but I am expecting a great deal more, and I should like, perhaps, to put it in the record at some later date. Just at the present time it is not available, because it is not in the country.

Senator OVERMAN. Very well.

Capt. LESTER. But I think it proper, in connection with Mr. Brisbane's statement, to note this cable, which passed from Lord Northcliffe to Arthur Brisbane sometime in December, 1916:

LESTER EXHIBIT No. 9.

ARTHUR BRISBANE,
American, New York City:

Suggest you come England; full authority in that event given proper assurances your part believe matter can be satisfactorily adjusted. Best wishes for 1917. Reply.

NORTHCLIFFE,
Broadstairs, Kent, England.

Mr. Brisbane testified that he was requested by Lord Northcliffe to come to England to straighten out the matter of eliminating the Hearst news service.

My recollection is that he said it was in February. This is not to criticize his testimony; but he must have made a mistake in the date, the fact being that the Hearst news service was cut out from England in October, 1916. That service, as I described it, was by cable.

Senator STERLING. What is the inference from that, Captain; that Lord Northcliffe had received some previous communication from Mr. Brisbane in regard to the Hearst news service?

Capt. LESTER. Yes; I think the inference is that after the Hearst news service was eliminated and forbidden to conduct its operations through England negotiations were taken up by Mr. Brisbane or by Mr. Hearst with Lord Northcliffe to get him to intervene to get it back, and that this cable suggests to Mr. Brisbane to come, first, with full authority, and second, with appropriate assurances.

Senator WOLCOTT. You say that the Hearst service was known as the International News Service?

Capt. LESTER. Yes, sir.

In October, when the Hearst news service was barred from Great Britain, Dr. Fuehr——

Senator STERLING. Pardon me for interrupting; let me ask you this question before you proceed: What does the barring of the International News Service from Great Britain imply?

Capt. LESTER. Cutting off the cable service; not permitting them to use the cables for sending news or any information.

Senator STERLING. I see.

Capt. LESTER. That was what actually happened. I think there was quite a little in the papers about it at the time on account of certain attitudes taken by this service.

Senator NELSON. That was afterward restored, was it not? I mean the embargo against the use of that service was afterward lifted, was it not?

Capt. LESTER. I am not informed as to that, Senator; but I have information as to the method by which Dr. Hale's news and telegrams were sent to the Hearst papers, from October down to the time when Dr. Hale left.

Senator NELSON. How was that? That was after the cable service was cut off?

Capt. LESTER. As I have stated, the German Government maintained, through an office in Berlin, a wireless service from Nauen by way of Sayville, and later on by way of Tuckerton, N. J., when Sayville was put under the censorship; and on the 13th of October, 1916, Alexander Fuehr sends a wireless by way of Sayville to the German foreign office, reading as follows:

Boycotted by Britain International News Service desires obtain addition to regular transocean service complete continental news service via Nauen to be furnished by transocean cooperating with special representative international news service on his way there. Service would have to carry less lengthy reports than numerous concise news items. Can such special exclusive wireless service be arranged at current press rates considering that other neutral agencies receive news via London. Recommend favorable consideration after consulting Doctor Wilhelm.

Senator NELSON. Let me understand this. This wireless service that you refer to was controlled and operated by the German Government, was it not?

Capt. LESTER. Yes.

Senator NELSON. And now, when the other source of transmitting news or editorials over here by cable from Dr. Hale was cut off, the Germans furnished them this service?

Capt. LESTER. That is a fact, Senator.

Senator NELSON. That is, he knew where to go. After he was cut off from the other source he applied to the German Government, and got the use of their wires?

Capt. LESTER. Yes, sir.

Senator NELSON. Those are the facts in the case?

Capt. LESTER. That is the fact.

Maj. HUMES. Reference is made to "Doctor Wilhelm." Who is that?

Capt. LESTER. The Dr. Wilhelm mentioned is Dr. William Bayard Hale. In this connection, I might say that they adopted "Wilhelm" in referring to a man by the name of William. They called him "Dr. Wilhelm Hale." And there are cables here in our files sent to "Wilhelm Hearst" from Berlin.

The foreign office on October 21, 1916, sent a wireless from Berlin via Sayville to Dr. Fuehr reading as follows:

Dr. Wilhelm been several days urging arrangement like that proposed your telegram and working understanding already reached. Inform Hearst and suggest giving Wilhelm full authority.

Senator STERLING. Who signed that?

Capt. LESTER. That is the Zentralstelle Auslands Dienst, a central office, and is signed by a man by the name of Baron Mumm, who was in charge. That was the government representative of the Nauen Service in Berlin. The full name is Zentralstelle Auslands Dienst—that is the central bureau for foreign affairs.

Senator STERLING. Was the service via Sayville discontinued, Capt. Lester, or was it simply censored? Was the news censored, merely, that came by way of that station?

Capt. LESTER. There was a discontinuance, Senator; and then there was a censorship. Then, after we got into the war there was a dismantling of the whole place, and Tuckerton also. Those were the receiving stations.

Senator NELSON. But before the war, after our Government took possession of the Sayville office, they turned to Tuckerton, did they not?

Capt. LESTER. Yes.

Senator NELSON. I mean the Germans.

Capt. LESTER. The Germans turned to Tuckerton, and operated Tuckerton up until about, I think, the middle of May, 1917, when it was shut off.

Senator NELSON. Yes.

Senator STERLING. Do you know the immediate occasion for the discontinuance of the Sayville service?

Capt. LESTER. It was apparent from the investigations that had been made by the Department of Justice in 1915 and 1916 that this wireless was being used for all kinds of purposes. There was a determined effort on the part of our Government to find, at that time, the ramifications of the German espionage and propaganda system; and this wireless service was in practically instantaneous communication with Berlin; and they, of course, had to close it up.

Senator NELSON. The fact that our Government took possession of the Sayville office was enough to show that they—these Germans—were not safe in sending messages through an office under the control of the Federal Government.

Capt. LESTER. There is another message touching on this news service, from Dr. Hale to Mr. Hearst, dated October 21, 1916.

Senator NELSON. Read that.

Capt. LESTER (reading):

LESTER EXHIBIT No. 10.

Oct. 21, 1916.

View British news blockade would you consider enlarged internews service connection important agencies here. Have already obtained temporary working understanding, including larger accommodation wireless. Full understanding only waits your authority. Strongly hope success negotiations now underway radically reducing rate. Believe large possibilities open great European news service especially view contracts about expire and new alignments possible.

BAYARD HALE

Senator NELSON. That was sent to Mr. Hearst?

Capt. LESTER. That was sent to Mr. Hearst.

On the same date Hale sent him another telegram, reading:

LESTER EXHIBIT No. 11.

Oct. 21, 1916.

Can perfect arrangements international news service and agencies here if given authority. Believe can obtain valuable connection for you thus making possible greatly expanded international news service. Service would include photographs films. You should come yourself or give authority me and nobody else.

BAYARD HALE

Senator STERLING. What date is that?

Capt. LESTER. That is dated October 21, 1916.

That arrangement was made. There is a wireless in the files here that I can not find at the moment, by which the rate was fixed at 6 cents a word.

In that connection it is interesting to note the method by which the payments were made from this end to Germany. They were transferred by a firm by the name of Shulz & Ruckgaber, bankers, in New York, by wireless to Leipsic, sometimes to Stuttgart. There are lots of messages here of that kind. I will put one or two of them in as illustrative.

The wireless message would read: "Pay to Shulz & Ruckgaber's agent in Stuttgart or Leipsic 10,000 marks; International News Service." Or "Pay 20,000 marks; International New Service"; and that is the only financial transaction that we have any evidence of in connection with the arrangement.

I want to take up for a moment one of the connections that existed between the Albert Bureau and the American-controlled interests.

Senator NELSON. When you say "American," you mean the American newspaper interests?

Capt. LESTER. Yes.

Senator NELSON. That means the Hearst papers?

Capt. LESTER. Yes; the New York American interests.

We have information that a man by the name of Marshall Kelly, who is reported as being in the employ of the Hearst organization, was the confidential go-between that handled matters in conjunction with the Albert Bureau and the Hearst News Agencies, where a personal connection was necessary.

Mr. Marshall Kelly was sent to Baltimore some time in 1915, in behalf of Dr. Albert and Dr. Dernburg, as our information shows, to negotiate the purchase of the Baltimore Sun for the Germans.

This mission, apparently, came to nothing.

We next find that Marshall Kelly is connected with the Chicago Herald-Examiner in 1917, and in the fall of 1918 he is sent to Milwaukee, Wis., to take charge of the Wisconsin, the paper purchased by Mr. Brisbane.

Senator NELSON. The Evening Wisconsin?

Capt. LESTER. Yes.

There are no other evidences of Mr. Kelly's activities, except——

Senator NELSON. Was this Mr. Kelly an employee at that time of Mr. Hearst's papers?

Capt. LESTER. Yes, sir; he is so reported.

Senator NELSON. And he afterwards turned up as an employee of Mr. Brisbane?

Capt. LESTER. Well, he was employed in the Hearst publication, the Chicago Examiner.

Senator NELSON. You referred to the Milwaukee Wisconsin, which Mr. Brisbane claims he had bought.

Capt. LESTER. Yes; he was in a certain managerial position in the Evening Wisconsin in the fall of this year—1918.

Senator OVERMAN. What paper was that? Who owned that?

Capt. LESTER. Mr. Brisbane owned that.

Senator NELSON. Mr. Brisbane bought two papers there. He bought the Evening Wisconsin and the Free Press, and another one, I think. I am not sure about that.

Capt. LESTER. Yes; there were three of them. Four of them, is it not, Major?

Maj. HUMES. Three.

Senator NELSON. Three; yes. He stated that on the stand when he was testifying here.

Capt. LESTER. In conjunction with the Hearst publications was operated a paper, as I testified this morning, known as the Deutsches Journal, of which Mr. Gustav Schweppendick, who afterwards turned up in Berlin as the manager of the Hearst Bureau, was the managing editor.

Senator NELSON. This Deutsches Journal is one of Hearst's publications, too?

Capt. LESTER. Yes; that was discontinued about the time the United States went into the war with Germany, and it has not since been published.

Another writer for the Deutsches Journal was Albert O. Sander, the man who was convicted of sending spies to England.

Mr. Sander was used by the management of the Deutsches Journal as a member of the German Literary Defense Society and the Friends of Peace. He was connected with all of the pro-German movements in New York, and a further connection was Albert Schoenstadt, who was manager. That is the only information that I have on Mr. Schoenstadt, outside of his connection—that is, as to his position on the Deutsches Journal. Mr. Schoenstadt was a member of the press committee of the Friends of Peace. That was the society intimately associated with the German-American alliance.

The interesting part about the connecting link is this: Schoenstadt, after the Fuehr Bureau had gotten established, was the man through whom the various information and propaganda was disseminated by the Albert Bureau. He was the man who ran between the Deutsches Journal and the Albert Bureau, and in order to facilitate this means of communication there was a private wire between Dr. Albert's office and the office of the Deutsches Journal—that is, a private telephone wire.

Schoenstadt was an admitted German propagandist. He was connected, I believe, with the German Literary Defense Society, and assisted in the spreading of information through the German papers particularly.

Senator OVERMAN. This Marshall Kelly that went over to buy the Sun, was he sent over there by Albert, did you say?

Capt. LESTER. Marshall Kelly is reported as being the man who was representing the Hearst publications in the bureau; that is, he was the messenger, the man who came to discuss matters.

Senator OVERMAN. With whom?

Capt. LESTER. With the German bureau conducted by Albert and Fuehr.

The Hearst American interests, or some one affiliated with them, conducted a library similar——

Senator NELSON. That is the name of a magazine, is it not, called the Library?

Capt. LESTER. No; they conducted a library similar to Viereck's, called the Deutschland Library.

Senator STERLING. Who did that?

Capt. LESTER. The Hearst interests. That is according to the information that is in our reports.

Senator NELSON. What was the nature of this library?

Capt. LESTER. It was a bureau of dissemination of literature of various kinds. A great deal of it was brought from Germany. We have here probably 150 cables—or wireless messages rather, showing the ordering of a large number of German publications by the International News Service. Those were shipped to this country and disseminated through this service. I have a list of them here that I will show you in a moment.

But this Deutschland Library, or rather Mr. Hearst, personally, undertook, in September of 1916, to publish a book on the "Under-sea Boat Deutschland," written by Capt. Paul Koenig. The Deutschland had made a trip to this country from Germany and gotten back safely, and so Capt. Koenig, or somebody for him, had written a book in Germany, or they were preparing to write a book, and Dr. Hale takes up with Mr. Hearst the question of buying the rights to the book to be written by Capt. Koenig, to publish it in the United States, and to donate the profits of the Deutschland book to the ——; it is a German name which I can not find for the moment, but the proceeds were to be donated by Mr. Hearst to the widows and orphans of the crews of the submarines—the under-sea boats. The proceeds were to be donated to this widows' and orphans' society in Germany.

Senator WOLCOTT. You mean the widows and orphans of the German sailors who were on those ships?

Capt. LESTER. Yes; the widows and orphans of the sailors who were on the submarines.

Senator STERLING. This was a proposition from Dr. Hale to Mr. Hearst?

Capt. LESTER. Yes. Dr. Hale put it up to Mr. Hearst as to, first, the purchase of the Koenig book and the publication of it in the United States, and Mr. Hearst sends a counter proposition that he will buy the rights, publish the book and distribute it, and turn over the proceeds to the society for the widows and orphans of the sailors of the undersea boats. That is not the name of the society, but that is about what it means.

Senator WOLCOTT. Not for the benefit of the widows and orphans of the victims?

Capt. LESTER. No; not for the benefit of the widows and orphans of the victims, but for the widows and orphans of the men that ran the submarines. It is a German society.

The facts in that connection were that such a book was printed and was distributed, but, unfortunately, another New York newspaper, while the manuscript was in transit, cabled the whole story over to a New York newspaper, and it was published serially before the book was published. In other words, they beat the Hearst American out on the Koenig story by getting it by cable, after they had sold it once.

Senator WOLCOTT. Getting a "scoop" on the American? What paper was it?

Capt. LESTER. The New York World. There are quite a good many cables in connection with that.

Senator OVERMAN. The World scooped the American on that?

Capt. LESTER. Yes. The manuscript that was brought over was printed and published in book form and distributed.

Senator NELSON. By Hearst?

Capt. LESTER. Yes; by the Deutschland Library Co.

Senator NELSON. Was not that the boat that was at Baltimore when it got over here?

Capt. LESTER. Yes; the Deutschland, commanded by Capt. Paul Koenig.

One word more in connection with Mr. Marshall Kelly and some of the redistribution of this German literature.

There existed in Boston a concern by the name of Ritter & Co., who were handlers of German publications and pro-German literature. They continued after the United States entered into the war, and Mr. Ritter was proceeded against in the Federal courts, although I think the case has not been tried. I do not believe he has been tried. The system was broken up, however.

That was one of a group of members all over the United States who systematically handled this literature. The profit was enormous. In fact, much of it was given free, and the profit, of course, was everything that they could sell it for. There were tons of it—thousands of tons—that we found were brought over. Mr. Marshall Kelly—

Senator OVERMAN. Was he an Irishman?

Capt. LESTER. I would rather imagine so, from his name, Senator, although he says in this letter:

I am a Scotchman, completely assured that Germany has the right in this war

That is written February, 1917. He wrote two or three books, or had them written, and offered them to Ritter & Co., who took them up.

Senator NELSON. And they made use of them?

Capt. LESTER. Yes. The man in charge of the Deutschland Library—which was run, by the way, at 1919 Broadway, New York City—was a Mr. J. L. Perkins. I do not know anything about Perkins, except that he was the man who, apparently, had charge of the library, as the correspondence shows.

Maj. HUMES. Now, will you tell the story of the Golden Book, Captain?

Senator NELSON. Is that the Book of Life?

Maj. HUMES. No, Senator. That was the Golden Book.

Capt. LESTER. This is the Golden Book, as it has always been referred to, and is an interesting piece of German propaganda that was put out by the German Government in this country in 1916.

It purports to be, according to its title, "The Golden Book of the German War Orphans." And the second title page reads as follows:

In order to give to Her Majesty, the German Empress, Augusta Victoria, Queen of Prussia, testimony of the never-dying spirit of love and charity, the noble thinking people of the United States of America inscribe their names in this Golden Book, and give generously to the support of the German war orphans through the New York Local Society of the Aid Society of German Women.

Werner Stenzel, General Agent, United States; Messrs. Carl F. Schurz, Treasurer for the United States; Richard Wackerow, Counsel.

This book was taken by Mr. Wackerow, a German Government official, in this case that is here, from New York to San Francisco, ostensibly to obtain subscriptions for this fund for the German orphans.

Every time that he would get into a community he would solicit money; but that was just a cover up for his real purpose. His real purpose was to get prominent people in the United States on record, by their signatures, to show their allegiance to Germany, and through this as an excuse to visit people to test out, in 1916 and 1917—the latter part of 1916 and the early part of 1917—their loyalty to Germany.

It is perfectly clear that he had a sad story to narrate when he went into a man's place of business—the needs of the orphans of the German soldiers. He had with him this beautiful book, with a picture of the Empress on the outside and something that looks like the American coat of arms on one side and the German on the other; and he tells a sad story, and he gets them to write their names in here.

He got a good many hundreds of them to fall for it. But he carried this book from New York to San Francisco; and the last entry is made in Los Angeles, Cal., on March 7, 1917, where a certain gentleman down there gives $25.

Senator NELSON. That was about a month or so before we declared war?

Capt. LESTER. Yes, sir. The amounts will run up to $3,000, $1,000 frequently, and so on. But the facts in regard to the book are as I have stated them.

The ultimate object was that the book was to be completely filled with subscriptions of loyal Germans; that is, people who were loyal to the German cause, and then sent to Germany and presented to the Empress of Prussia.

Senator OVERMAN. It is about time to adjourn, now. You are not through, Captain?

Capt. LESTER. I have very little more, Senator. I would like, to-morrow, to say a few words on the negro propaganda matter. A great deal of information has been gotten by our Military Intelligence agents on that, and I think it would be interesting to the committee.

Senator OVERMAN. Very well. You may resume your testimony at half past 10 in the morning, and we will finish with you, and after that you can put in whatever you have to fill in with, Maj. Humes.

Maj. HUMES. I do not think there will be any other evidence to-morrow, Senator, except possibly some of this documentary material——

Senator NELSON. Get in your documentary stuff to-morrow.

Maj. HUMES. Yes, Senator, we will try to do that.

Senator OVERMAN. Then I think we will go over until Tuesday.

(The matter in regard to the Golden Book referred to is here printed in the record, as follows:)

LESTER EXHIBIT No. 12.

[First title page.]

THE GOLDEN BOOK OF THE GERMAN WAR ORPHANS.

[Second title page.]

In order to give to Her Majesty, the German Empress, Augusta Victoria, Queen of Prussia, a testimony of the never-dying spirit of love and charity, noble thinking people of the United States of America inscribed their names in this Golden Book and gave generously to the support of German war orphans, thru the New York Local Society of the Aid Society of German Women.

(Signed)	WERNER STENZEL General Agent for the US
(Signed)	MRS. KARL L. SCHURZ Treasurer for the US
(Signed)	RICHARD WAEKEROW Consul

[First signature.]

Let man be noble, helpful and good. August 3, 1916

(Signed) J. BERNSTORFF

[Inscriptions follow.]

To my beloved old German Fatherland. Mighty Germany you may well vaunt that your sons are victors and that the jealous boastings of the enemy will soon be met by their merited end. Fifty years have passed since I migrated but my heart has ever felt a love for Germany's welfare.

New York, October 19, 1916

(Signed) LEOPOLD ZIMMERMAN.

Enclosed check for $1000.00

We donated to the Aid Society of German Women of Berlin and New York 10,000 feet of original German war moving pictures taken on the different battle fronts, of the value of 25,000 marks. for the support of the orphans of fallen heroes.

1776 BREWING AND LIQUOR INTERESTS AND GERMAN PROPAGANDA.

New York, August 22, 1916

(Signed)

THE AMERICAN CORRESPONDENCE FILM Co., Inc.

FELIX MALITZ,

General Manager.

GUSTAV ADOLF ENGLER

Assistant Gen. Manager.

Good fortune and blessings for the noble work. May there be no blank page

(Signed)

GEORGE SYLVESTER VIERECK

The pages already subscribed so generously and so nobly prove in a most convincing manner how full the German American heart is of sympathy for the terrible sacrifices of our racial brothers on the other side, made for the purpose of preserving our German Fatherland.

(Signed)

THEODORE SUTRO

Out of gratitude and love for the good old Fatherland. the German Evangelical Reformed Church, the Kaiser Bell Church, $100.00.

East 68th St., New York City

(Signed)

REV. JULIUS JAEGER.

BROOKLYN, N. Y., January 9, 1917.

The members of the Hanover Society of Brooklyn donated on this day to the orphans of fallen warriors in our beloved Fatherland, $350.00, in order to make them good and useful members and citizens of Germany.

By command of the Executive Committee of the Hanover Society.

As a token to our German hero brothers and as a mark of our highest admiration of them and of their incomparable hero Kaiser, the German-American Committee in co-operation with the German Church of Elmhurst, New Jersey, donates $260.00

With thankful hearts and feelings of accomplishment of a faithful duty. the Sons of Germania in Long Island City, New York, collected $250.00.

For the benefit of the orphans of German warriors the United Societies of Bayonne, N. J., donated the sum of $310.25.

As a token to the beloved German Fatherland and her great Kaiser, Wilhelm II, the best and noblest prince of all history, from a number of truly German thinking Evangelical churches of the city of Brooklyn, $100.00. Feb. 23, 1917.

(Signed)

J. DIETZ,

34 Prospect Ave., Brooklyn, NY

German Round Table at Kuechlers Roost, Reading, Pa.

That the old year, so rich in suffering, may give away to a new and better one, to you little heroes and sufferers over there. whose fathers have been killed on the field. May you have a Happy Christmas in the old year and may the new year bring us soon the Golden Peace.

Christmas, 1916 $1000.00.

So long as German bells ring from the Memel to the Rhine, so long as the German sea breaks upon the strand, so long, O German People, remember what your fathers created in a memorable monument of German glory.

August 2, 1917,

(Signed)

H. URKSCHWERDT

The officers and crew of His Majesty's Auxiliary Cruiser, "Cormoran" donated on the occasion of the birthday of His Majesty The Kaiser. on January 27, 1915, 10,000 marks for needy ones of the Imperial Navy. Further they have collected the sum of 3,658 marks. This sum will be turned over to the Aid Society of German Women of the Prussian House of Lords with the direction that this sum be given to the orphans of the Navy, which on the Australian Nation during the war gave their lives for the glory of the flag.

Fort Douglas, Utah, August 2, 1917.

The last piece of money. I hid it in a stocking. shall be dedicated to the war orphans.

Fort Douglas, Utah, November 17, 1917.

In Prison Camp

(Signed)

DR. KAMPMANN

The subcommittee, at 5 o'clock p. m., adjourned until to-morrow. Saturday, December 14, 1918, at 10.30 o'clock a. m.

BREWING AND LIQUOR INTERESTS AND GERMAN PROPAGANDA.

SATURDAY, DECEMBER 14, 1918.

UNITED STATES SENATE,
SUBCOMMITTEE OF THE COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY,
Washington, D. C.

The subcommittee met at 10.30 o'clock a. m., in room 226, Senate Office Building, Senator Lee S. Overman presiding.

Present: Senators Overman (chairman), King, Nelson, and Sterling.

TESTIMONY OF CAPT. GEORGE B. LESTER—Resumed.

Capt. LESTER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to make a brief statement for the record in reference to a newspaper article which appeared in the Washington Post of this morning respecting my testimony in connection with Edward Lyell Fox, the statement being in substance that I made a misstatement under oath in reference to Mr. Fox's connection with the Hearst newspapers, and that being so, the charge is flatly made that I committed perjury. This news item is sent out to the Washington Post by the Universal Service, a telegraph service, which is the Hearst service. Concurrently with this publication there appears a headline article in the New York American under date of December 14, to-day, entitled "Edward Lyell Fox, Correspondent, Never was in the Employ of Mr. Hearst."

Then follows the vicious attack upon the testimony which I have given before this committee. I wish to state for the present, and let it go upon the record, subject to a more detailed statement and further evidence of Mr. Fox's work in Europe, that I made no statement that Edward Lyell Fox was in the employ, in the sense that he was a war correspondent in Germany in 1915-16. The evidence is perfectly clear on that, that Mr. Fox had received credentials from Bradford Merrill in the form of a letter, the same gentleman who signs this article in the New York American of this morning; that he received letters from Mr. Schweppendick, the Hearst representative in Berlin, and wrote for the Hearst newspapers, the New York American, and the articles were published in the New York American. I have in my possession, written in Mr. Fox's handwriting, his confessions covering his activities with the Germans, and I have a mass of evidence that two of the officers of the Military Intelligence have been kind enough to bring down here, which further elaborates that connection, if it is deemed advisable to put that in the record. I merely would like to make this statement as a preliminary statement, subject to a further and possibly more formal statement when I have gone through this article and had the benefit of the reporter's minutes of my testimony and the opportunity to go through additional evidence.

I may add to my testimony given yesterday with reference to the International News Service, that I have been in touch with the British military authorities in Washington since our last hearing and am informed by them that the Hearst service was barred from Great Britain in October, 1916, on account of the extreme pro-German character of the telegrams that were going over the cable, and that it was restored in April, 1918. They have undertaken to get for the benefit of this committee some information covering more in detail the reasons, which they will submit within a few days, and if the committee desires to have it we can put it in the record.

At the session yesterday, Senator Wolcott requested that I select from the large mass of telegrams passing between Dr. William Bayard Hale and the Hearst papers certain ones showing an anti-American attitude or containing anti-American statements, and also certain messages covering a variety of subjects dealt with in German propaganda through these messages. I have here a telegram sent on March 1, 1917, addressed to "Hearst American" and signed by Dr. Hale. which reads as follows:

LESTER EXHIBIT No. 13.

TUCKERTON, N. J., March 1, 1917.
BERLIN, 3.45 P. M.

HEARST AMERICAN, N. Y.

Despatch hundred sixtynine Berlin first Presidents concept "Armed neutrality" not understood here. Armed neutrality of century ago was concert of nations resisting British assertions right to control seas. Precisely what is Mr. Wilsons idea armed neutrality present day unknown here. If President means assert right American ships pass to from American English German neutral ports with lawful cargoes this believed entirely accord precepts international law precedents American history. But thus suddenly to assert rights of neutrals apparently against Germany after having two years submitted British pretentions rule seas confuses European mind.

President's idea arm merchant ships arouses profound astonishment as arming merchants undoubtedly places them category combatants which legitimate prey. Berlin isn't without information of famous Sullivan law and wonders why American President so far departs from usages deemed necessary even by Tammany as to legitimatize possession and use private weapons.

HALE

S. E A Lichtenstein, B 13 AX.FA 607PM.

As the committee will probably know, the Sullivan law referred to is the law which makes it a crime to carry weapons in the city of New York. It will be noted by the committee that this cablegram was sent after the breaking off of our diplomatic relations and was sent over the German wireless, every one of which messages was not only subject to censorship by the German foreign office but subject to scrutiny. Nothing could go over that wire that did not meet the approval of the German Government. There are quite a number of these messages. The next one which I shall read is dated January 13, 1917, and is as follows:

LESTER EXHIBIT No. 14.

TUCKERTON, N. J., Jan 13, 1917.
BERLIN 1.00 PM

NEW YORK AMERICAN.

Despatches twentynine Berlin twelfth feeling tonight Berlin hardly be described as one unexpected disappointment but certainly is profound astonishment. Past month certain number persons optimsticly endowed have believed early peace within realm possibility this hope being based undeniable successes central arms everywhere generally satisfactory economic position centrals and knowledge growing stringency England France Russia Italy together with impossibility understanding what entente could possibly hope achieve continuation war. True unparalleled vindictiveness British press aggressive speeches members British Government seemed indicate entente unyet ready believe this effort crush Germany hopeless. Insolence answer peace proffer December twelfth accepted final by many but still remained few who expected entente answer Wilson be couched different terms.

That answer now known here and while in truth more decent in phraseology brutal accusation having now degenerated into querulous recrimination, core of note reiterates denial willingness discuss peace except on terms ridiculously impossible. Contracted military position belligerents after more two years war makes it in German opinion monumental insolence entente assume dictate reorganization Europe involving unonly restoration Belgium northern France Alsace-Lorraine Poland Polish East Prussia Servia Montenegro Roumania Trentino total dismemberment Austro-Hungarian empire and over handing Constantinople Russia. Tis perfectly understood everybody names extreme figures when approaching negotiation but still dare to which entente proposes negotiator I sit down is so stupefying in its colossal effrontery that its effect is render all thought peace this moment utterly hopeless. Germanys proffer was made absolute sincerity and with every willingness give Europe and world lasting peace on based mutual respect rights all nations great small. But not man woman child all Germany for moment dream submitting to such terms as infatuated circle men moving unreal atmosphere Downing Street printing house square wildly talk of imposing upon the four allies central Europe victorious everywhere and only ready waive advantages further certain victories because sincere lovers peace.

War will go on.

Senator STERLING. That refers to the President's note?

Capt. LESTER. That refers to President Wilson's note in reply to the note of December 12, 1917, of the German Government. That is from Dr. William Bayard Hale to the New York American on January 13, 1917.

The next message which I shall read is dated February 12, 1917, addressed to "Hearst American," signed "Hale," and is as follows:

LESTER EXHIBIT No. 15.

Recd. from S. S. Berlin via Nauen Date Feb. 12th.

HEARST AMERICAN, New York:

Despatch hundred nine section C. Twas undoubted shock German Government people that president took moment inthrow fortunes ustates with britain whose contemptuous profession right controll ocean his so harshly oppressed american trade true large party here believes action taken january thirty-first would inevitably provoke american resentment but wilsons professions early peace was decisive factor decision invoke ultimate measures especially in this fact germany had informed him desired nothing beyond swift termination conflict without victory of aggrandisement.

President's instant retort by severance relations universally interpreted here as results his personal favoritism england which though often before displayed has awaited final hour deal what intended be fatal stroke germany.

Especially in his effort alienate austria denounced. Germany's note was undeniable austria's yet german ambassador given passports austria permitted remain which germans view as action for which inconsistency is mild word.

Regarding location january thirty-first was decisive opinion unbefore taken but since saturday while nation together allies united agreement now necessary bring fight one conclusion or another against world of foes stop unquestionably central europe is welded into absolute unit deeply embittered in inspired final resolve preserve selfexistence. Many believe this single action wont necessary envolved single american life. Even dictate humanity equally selfevident recommends this hope and many facts seem justify belief in it gerard has repeatedly expressed belief no war some.

Sentiments above retort absolutely without comment disavowing any responsibility beyond that of reporter to communicate facts.

Sent by Hale.

Date Feb. 12 Time 10 pm.

Senator OVERMAN. I understand that these telegrams which you are now reading came over the German wireless after the Hearst service had been barred?

Capt. LESTER. Yes. They came over the German Government wire, the Overseas News Service.

Next is a message sent on the 7th of March, 1917, by Dr. Hale addressed to Hearst American by wireless as the others.

Senator OVERMAN. Instead of reading these, if you desire, you can just put them in the record.

Senator KING. Is there any necessity for putting all of these in the record?

Senator OVERMAN. He has selected some of these at the request of Senator Wolcott.

Capt. LESTER. I have selected out of this mass of cablegrams a number covering certain topics, at the request of Senator Wolcott, the first topic being in response to his inquiry as to whether there were any messages which showed that Dr. Hale was anti-American, and on that subject I have read some of the messages referring to President Wilson and the Government policies. This message of the 7th of March, 1917, dispatch 182, is as follows:

LESTER EXHIBIT No. 16.

Date 3/7/17

Hearst American New York.

Despatch hundred eighty two berlin sixth noon extraordinary interest created receipt uncompleted reuter message communicating presidents message american people stop unknown whether this inaugural stop as received message on dwells paralysis government reason possibility senate filibuster commiserates expression feared caused europe states not back of president because senate methods make power american govt. helpless and contemptible stop message seems declare president not call sixtyfifth congress especially because just discovered certain acts would render practically invalid congressional measure giving executive powers especially act eighteen nineteen forbidding use armed privateers against naval vessels nations amicable relations states stop this point message thus far received stops paragraph interest central question what president proceeded propose stop submarines are armed naval vessels nation not war us states stop tis asked whether wilson proceeds announce determination declare that while germany not actually war states comma not in amicable relations not in any relations therefore act eighteen nineteen inapplicable and he free arm merchantmen paragraph other anticipations remainder message current stop prevailing belief is american merchantmen armed comma contest with german submarines possible likely comma still these isolated combats unprovoked formal war paragraph some degree astonishment here american colony zimmerman note unaroused more resentment america

HALE.

I submit also the following:

LESTER EXHIBIT No. 17.

Date

To Hearst Amn NY.

despatch two hundred twelve Berlin second London papers just received her reveal fact Thomas Curtin self confessed English spy who claims spent ten months Germany on American passport representing self as staff World's Work is meeting severe criticism even in England whose stomach apparently turned by renegade Americans disreputable methods stop I told by excellen authority his passport which expired October thirteenth refused renewal after investigation Washington State Department though possibly temporary laissez passer provided for him home paragraph advices received here state American journalists London declined attend session American luncheon club at which Curtin scheduled speak and that whole newspaper fraternity frowns upon recognition man who used American passport and connection with Walter Page to do Northcliffe's dirty work stop Times and Daily Mail November eighteen contain signed statement Curtin explaining that on returning England he placed information he had obtained in hands American Ambassador namely his former employer Page proprietor World's Work stop statement continues quote furthermore I saw to it that valuable information cabled U States proving that German govt was expending money on election Hughes unquote who cabled this quote information unquote which is ridiculously false question mark paragraph Page has had nearly two months in which to repudiate Curtin stop thus far no denial Curtin's claim represent World's reached Berlin.

Hale.

Now, following these messages are messages on the following topics: Detentions of Americans in Berlin after the breach of diplomatic relations.

Senator NELSON. Can you give the date when that occurred, Captain?

Capt. LESTER. I think it was the 12th of February.

Senator NELSON. The 12th of February, 1917?

Capt. LESTER. Yes; about that time. I can verify that.

There are some messages from Mr. Hale to "Hearst American," and the American. These messages, by the way, are addressed indiscriminately to "Hearst American," "New York American," and "American," outside of those addressed to Mr. Hearst personally, all of them signed William Bayard Hale.

There are messages from Mr. Hale to the Hearst papers on the treatment accorded Mr. Girard, our ambassador in Berlin, immediately prior to his departure from Berlin for the United States in 1917 that throw an interesting side light on some of the happenings there.

Senator NELSON. Are you putting them into the record?

Capt. LESTER. I thought I would lay them aside and go over them with Maj. Humes, and select specimens on topics that might be of interest, and then submit them to the committee.

Senator OVERMAN. All right.

Capt. LESTER. There is a message from Mr. Hale to Hearst American on March 5, 1917, giving certain information on the Zimmermann note. It is as follows:

LESTER EXHIBIT No. 18.

TUCKERTON, N. J., March 5, 1917.

(Press collect)

BERLIN 850AM

HEARST'S AMERICAN N. Y.

Despatch hundred seventy five Berlin fourth while hints contents Zimmermann letter circulating Berlin yesterday only today alleged text published stop Publication arousing amazement all circles stop Vorwaerts says that having doubted long as doubt possible establishment proof accuracy letter dumbfounding Vorwaerts continues the Mexican adventure is a piece of that section German foreign politics for which social democrats disavow responsibility paragraph Count Reventlow in Tageszeitung sharply criticises action characterizing it inconceivable especially that German government could have offered Texas New Mexico Arizona on slender basis Reventlow says quote those who set hopes on divided sentiment U States deeply regret turn events deeming it unwise that in this moment there was invented a German foreign policy which might be described as touching match powder barrel end quote Whole subject undoubtedly ventilated Reichstag chief committee which will listen Zimmermann tomorrow paragraph Statement made me by Zimmermann and wireless yesterday gave best possible explanations his action but secretary failed on touch approached Japan or offer of free hand Mexico to recover last territory stop To anyone familiar America the absurdity any effectual aid from Mexico the improbability any response Japan together with a certainty of absolutely solidifying American opinion and rendering impossible further efforts those disposed friendly Germany so apparent that action incredible.

BAYARD HALE

S/ E A Lichtenstein B3 March 5 1917 933AM

There is a message from Mr. Hale to Hearst's American, under date of March 9, 1917, giving probably a truthful description of the treatment of the Yarrowdale prisoners by the Germans—the American prisoners who were taken off from the Yarrowdale that was sunk by a German submarine.

We can cull these telegrams out and put them in.

Senator OVERMAN. Do not put in too many. We do not want to cumber the record with unnecessary stuff, but anything you want to read that you have selected——

Capt. LESTER. I am simply pointing out, Mr. Chairman, that these messages have been selected as specimens of different general topics, and on each general topic that I have mentioned there are hundreds of wireless messages.

Senator KING. My idea is that you might select some that are types, and then state that there were 40 or 50 or whatever the number is of other similar ones that belong to the same class.

Capt. LESTER. Yes.

Senator OVERMAN. What did you say about the Zimmermann note?

Capt. LESTER. In that cablegram of March 5, 1917, from Mr. Hale to Hearst's American, he gives the German governmental view of the Zimmermann note, that at the time had been published, the interesting point being that the German Government did not repudiate the Zimmermann note or state that it was a forgery, but looked upon it as an unfortunate blunder.

Here are some messages on the subject of the independence of Poland, and the welcome given to Germany upon its entrance into Poland and taking possession of the Government.

Here is a message on the alleged Japanese situation. This is a specimen of many.

I have selected from messages on the subject of Ireland one interesting one, which is a report by Dr. Hale of an interview with Dr. Solf, the recent foreign minister.

Senator KING. What did he say? Read that.

Capt. LESTER. The message is four closely written pages.

Senator OVERMAN. Then put it in the record.

Senator KING. If it is going to be put in the record I can read it there.

(The cablegram referred to is here printed in full in the record. as follows:)

LESTER EXHIBIT No. 19.

Recd. from S. S. Berlin Via Nauen Date: Jan 29th, 1917.
To NEW YORK AMERICAN

Despatch seventy Berlin twenty-eight today enjoyed opportunity conversing Doctor Solf, Imperial Colonial Secretary stop Important as were excellency's remarks regarding the reasonable colonial aims Germany comma these less interesting to Americans than were certain declarations in which secretary indulged expressive of sympathies Imperial German Government with Ireland paragraph Excellency said quote historic senate address President Wilson January twenty-two sets forth among other great principles following subquote no peace can last or ought last which doesn't recognize principle governments derived their just powers from consent governed dash that the inviolable security of life worship industrial social development should be guaranteed to all peoples who have lived hitherto under power governments devoted to faith and purpose hostile their own unsubquote If this noble sentiment applies anywhere it applies to case Ireland which during many years has been subjected under English ideas and desires paragraph I remember well occasion when that unfortunate patriot Sir Roger Casement who had just come from U States told me of fact that British Government widely publishing in Ireland declarations to effect German victory would influence severe damage Irish people that their land be devastated homes churches desecrated priests surrendered to mercies of army invaders bent plunder paragraph These allegations reiterated and reenforced interviews prominent public men with dubitable Irish connections hand so Casement told me comma caused some concern Ireland as to possible effect German victory stop

The misrepresentation of German intentions was so complete and palpable that at behest Imperial Chancellor Acting Secretary State Foreign Affairs made the statement that Imperial Government emphatically objected as unwarranted the intentions imputed to it and availed itself opportunity give categorical assurance Germany entertained only best will and good wishes for welfare Irish people their country their institutions stop Imperial Government always actuated utmost sympathy oppressed country and its people for whom wished only national existence national liberty end quote Secretary State for Colonies continued impressively quote These sentiments still represent feelings German Government stop Far from regarding Ireland as country which should be laid open to foreign conquest we look upon it as oppressed land which Germany most sincerely desires see liberated and endowed civil social political religious independence stop No half hearted concessions wrung from reluctant oppressors because of their foreign embarrassment ought satisfy natural and manly aspirations Irish peoples but only a complete independence in happy atmosphere of which Irish genius could bring beautiful Ireland to state prosperity and well being which it enjoyed before twas brought under English yoke end quote.

HALE.

Capt. LESTER. I have selected this because it throws a very interesting sidelight on Dr. Solf's character, just in view of recent events.

In going over a portion of the messages last evening I found another message from Alexander Fuehr to the foreign office under date of October 20, 1916, reading as follows:

LESTER EXHIBIT No. 20.

SAYVILLE, NEW YORK, Oct. 20, 1916.

Zentralstelle Fuer Ausland Sdienst, 62 Wilhelmstrasse, Berlin. International news service requests early wireless reply concerning proposition submitted my radiogram last Friday.

ALEXANDER FUEHR

This refers to the substitution of the German wireless for the cable service by way of England.

Senator NELSON. Did any other newspaper service aside from this Hearst service get the use and benefit of the German wireless at this time?

Capt. LESTER. None that I know of.

Senator NELSON. That was the only American newspaper service which got the benefit and use of the German wireless?

Capt. LESTER. I know of no other.

There was introduced in evidence in connection with the large number of telegrams sent by Mr. Hearst to the New York American, or to those representing the New York American, in February and March, 1917, one telegram that purported to give Mr. Hearst's personal views on the international situation as between the United States and Germany at that time.

I have found among the radiograms the following message sent by Bayard Hale to Hearst's American on February 20, 1917:

LESTER EXHIBIT No. 21.

Date: 2/20/17

To Hearst's American.

New York. Berlin nineteenth Bradford Merrill promised remittance for wireless tolls unreceived suggest single remittance about five thousand dollars cover tolls meet possible emergencies stop patriotic wireless statement from Mr. Hearst's would be widely printed here might have much influence.

BAYARD HALE.

Capt. LESTER. I have selected some messages sent by Mr. Hale to the New York American, addressed New York American and Hearst's American, covering the general subject of description of atrocities and horrors of war and U-boat horrors. These, which were sent during the early part of 1917, depict vividly the horrors of war and its consequences from the European standpoint.

Here are some messages selected on the subject of the breaking down of the morale of England among the populace, and certain types of anti-English messages.

Senator STERLING. Those were sent in 1917?

Capt. LESTER. Yes; early in 1917, most of them in January, February, and March.

Senator STERLING. Would you mind saying what you believe to have been the purpose of telegrams of that kind?

Capt. LESTER. The purpose of those telegrams, and all of these 1,200 or 1,500 telegrams, was to supply the Hearst publications with material for publication in their newspapers, the telegrams themselves, what are referred to as editorial telegrams, being published in the New York American as sent over, over William Bayard Hale's signature. The news telegrams, so far as they relate to the type that I have read here, were used, according to a great many articles that have appeared in the New York American, as a basis for further elaboration. These telegrams such as I read were information telegrams, or merely news telegrams that could be used as a basis of an editorial, or as a basis of an elaborated news article.

Senator OVERMAN. You stated yesterday, Capt. Lester, that you were going to put in some information in regard to German propaganda among the negroes in the South.

Capt. LESTER. We have some evidence and information, Senator, of the work among the negroes by the Dr. Albert propaganda bureau, the facts being these: That a separate department was maintained in the Albert bureau for the handling of American race problems, the principal among which was the negro question.

The bureau obtained through newspaper agencies and exchanges and from these so-called clipping bureaus records of every lynching in the United States, and every attack by colored men upon a white person, or every news item which showed the alleged oppression of the colored race.

These were formed into propaganda articles, and were forwarded to the editors of established newspapers, that is, white newspapers, and also to the editors of colored newspapers.

The field work was conducted by a man by the name of Von Reisz, formerly a consul, I understand, at one time at Chicago.

His headquarters, if you could say that he had any headquarters, was in and about New Orleans, and all of the negro propaganda work was conducted from Mexico by Von Eckhardt. I say all of it in the sense that the directing head was in Mexico. The men used for the negro propaganda work were Mexicans and halfbreeds, and men that were brought to Mexico City and instructed and sent across the border; and the wave of negro propaganda work went from the Mexican border east, and embraced the States, principally, of Texas, Louisiana, Arkansas, Mississippi, Alabama, Georgia; and States such as North and South Carolina and Tennessee were really on the outskirts of the movement.

The propaganda was directed to stir up trouble continuously between the whites and the blacks of any nature and description. That was the first item.

The attempt was also made to win the colored race to the cause of Germany by innumerable arguments. We have information that the propaganda took this form: That the negro leaders who were subsidized, or attempted to be subsidized, in various local communities and by letters—I do not mean the big leaders of the negro race but small men scattered here and there—told the negroes that in Germany the blacks were equal to the whites; that in Europe they had no color line. They exhibited statements, presumed to be authentic, to this effect and argued with them that if Germany won the war the rights of the colored people in the South would be equal to those of the whites. That was the principal argument. They played continuously upon the lynchings, and the propaganda also took the form of attempting to prove discrimination in 1917 against the colored soldiers.

In the years 1915 and 1916, when this propaganda really began to get into full swing, the obstacle that the Germans ran up against was the increase in wages and the enormous influx of colored labor into the northern or border States; but they counteracted that, or attempted to counteract it, by telling the colored people that the increase in wages was due to Germany's paying their help much higher wages. However, their whole system was actually broken up, so far as the civil population was concerned, before 1917 on account of the high wages paid and the demand for labor in the North.

In the military end the propaganda took the form that the negro soldiers when they were wounded were left on the ground to die without medical attention; that the negro soldiers in France were sent to the front firing line; that various forms of discrimination were practiced against the negro soldiers; and that if the Germans were victorious Germany had promised to set aside a portion of this country where the colored people could rule themselves.

This propaganda became so serious from the military end that active measures were taken to suppress it.

The real leaders of the colored race in this country were called to a conference in Washington on July 6, 1918. There was a large number of these representative men of the colored race present, a list of which I have.

As a result of this conference, which lasted several days, an active counter propaganda, through the committee on public information was prepared. Articles were written denying statements of this character, and as a net result the President issued a statement on Friday, July 22, 1918, deprecating and denouncing mob action; and that is about the last that was heard of the German propaganda among the negroes. The matter seems to have settled down after that.

The fact was, however, as stated, that there was a determined attempt on the part of the German propagandists to stir up that trouble.

Senator NELSON. Trouble among the colored soldiers?

Capt. LESTER. Yes.

Senator OVERMAN. I heard that they were also offering lands to the negroes.

Capt. LESTER. The propaganda among the soldiers was that if Germany were victorious in the war Germany, when it took the United States, was to set aside a portion of the United States for the colored race, where they would have an independent rule or some form of government.

Maj. HUMES. Yesterday, Captain, I asked with reference to the financing of the trip of William Bayard Hale into Roumania, and you said at that time that you did not have any recollection on the subject.

I would like to ask you now if you have refreshed your recollection and if the Government has available any information with reference to how that trip was financed and who financed it?

Capt. LESTER. On the 5th of August, 1918, Mr. Louis Durant Edwards, a private secretary of Dr. Hale, and the man who accompanied Dr. Hale to Germany, made a statement before Mr. Becker, deputy attorney general of the State of New York. I have the record of this statement before me, and Mr. Edwards says as follows, in part:

In July, 1916, we—

Meaning himself and Dr. Hale—took a trip to Roumania and remained there about two weeks. We were there a little over a week, I should judge.

Q. Who paid the expenses of transportation to Roumania?

A. The German foreign office made all of our arrangements on that trip including the buying of the tickets and sleeping-car accommodations.

Q. Did you meet with any interruption in passing the border?

A. None whatever. We went through on a special pass. In fact, on my passport a thing that aroused the attention of the British officers at Kirkwall when I came home, was that Vermark saying that "traveling in the business of the foreign office," which was still on my passport; meaning the German foreign office.

That is the only information that is in my possession, or that has come to my attention, that the German Government paid the expenses of the trip to Roumania.

Senator KING. Have you talked with Mr. Edwards yourself, Captain?

Capt. LESTER. No, sir; I have not.

Senator KING. Did you talk with Dr. Hale in regard to this matter?

Capt. LESTER. I have never interviewed Dr. Hale; no, sir.

Maj. HUMES. I think Mr. Bielaski on the witness stand called attention to Mr. Edwards' passport, and especially with relation to that notation on the passport.

Capt. LESTER. There is one form of propaganda conducted by Dr. Albert and Dr. Fuehr's bureau that was not touched upon in Mr. Bielaski's testimony, and that was through the Lutheran Church.

For the information of the committee, the Lutheran Church in the United States is divided into a number of so-called large synods, principal among which are the Missouri synod and the Iowa synod, and the large ministeriums and the Philadelphia and New York sections.

There are about 6,000 congregations in the United States, and communicants numbering nearly 3,000,000.

There are certain sections of the Lutheran Church that have maintained the mother tongue of Germany in all of the church services and all the teachings in the Sabbath schools and parochial schools, and are doing it at the present time.

Senator KING. Let me ask you this: Do I understand that there are churches now that conduct their services in the German language?

Capt. LESTER. Oh, yes.

Senator KING. And that their parochial schools are teaching the German language to the exclusion of the English language.

Capt. LESTER. Not to the exclusion of the English language, as I understand it, Senator, but there are a great number of churches, as I am informed by some of the heads of the Lutheran Church that I have interviewed in connection with this investigation, that conduct their services in the German language at the present time, scattered all over the country.

Senator STERLING. Have you known, Capt. Lester, of the action taken by different States, through their State Councils of Defense, in regard to the teaching of the German language, or the use of the German language in religious services?

Capt. LESTER. There are 14 States that have passed laws forbidding the use of the German language in public schools. There are only two States that I know of that, under their State Councils of Defense, have prohibited the use of German in churches. One is Iowa, and I think the State of Washington is the other. I am not certain as to the latter, whether that was finally withdrawn or whether it has continued. The State of Iowa was one, however.

Senator STERLING. In the State of Iowa, as I understand it, the use of any foreign language is prohibited in public meetings of any kind?

Capt. LESTER. Yes.

Senator STERLING. Church or otherwise?

Capt. LESTER. Yes. The propaganda among the Lutheran pastors was directed entirely through the channels of pastors who had been born in Germany or were alien enemies or were of German parentage and strong German leanings. There were over 1,200 individual cases investigated. By that I mean an actual investigation of all of the surrounding conditions in which the subject lived, the opinion of his neighbors, the following up of statements that were attributable to him, of either a disloyal character or statements that were hostile to the governmental policies of the United States.

In addition to these direct investigations, there were two or three prominent Lutheran clergymen who assisted the Government in getting information. Great difficulty was experienced, after the United States got into the war, in certain of the camps or mobilization camps and cantonments, on account of the activity of certain pro-German Lutheran clergymen in and about the camps among the soldiers.

We have had conferences—I personally conducted a number of conferences—with representatives of these large synods, and pointed out to them the facts in reference to individual cases; and they have admitted, and stated in written statements that are on file, that there have been clergymen in the ranks of their church who have been anti-American and have been disloyal to the United States.

Active measures were taken by the better element—not the better element; that is not the word, necessarily, but—

Senator NELSON. The American element?

Capt. LESTER. The American element of the Lutheran Church, to curb those men. Some of them have been convicted under the espionage act, and are doing time in Atlanta at the present time.

The difficulty of approaching the subject, of course, is obvious. These men, after all, are clergymen of the Christian religion, and have the protection which is due that. Their services were conducted during the period of our entering into the war, in over 50 per cent of the churches in the German language. Unless distinct evidence of disloyalty was found, no action was recommended nor reports made to the Department of Justice, which, in the last analysis, handled all of this matter.

Senator KING. From your investigation did you find, Captain, that the effects of the pro-German sentiment of some of these Lutheran ministers were observable in their congregations?

Capt. LESTER. Oh, yes; in practically every case. The relation between the German Lutheran clergyman and his congregation is exceedingly close. They are really pastors, almost in the literal sense. The members of their congregations go to them with every conceivable personal affair. They confide in them. And we have found, in localities, to use a slang expression, that "the word had gone down the line," to groups of Lutheran clergymen, that they were to preach sermons in favor of Germany; and that was done. There are cases in the city of New York. One case particularly I investigated personally, where the clergyman admitted to me that he had received instructions to preach such a sermon.

This man was taken by the Department of Justice agents, and interned on Ellis Island, before there was any espionage act passed and he was afterwards released on his promise to keep still.

From the period of August, 1914, down to April 6, 1917, in hundreds of the Lutheran churches the continuous preaching was in favor and hope of German victory.

Some of them could not stop after we got into the war. They continued. But it is proper to say that those in authority among the great synods and among, also, the 30 or 31 smaller synods, have vigorously taken up the disloyal end and are endeavoring to stamp it out.

Senator KING. Did these same leaders take up the question of advocating the use of the German language in their churches?

Capt. LESTER. That, Senator, I am informed by one of the leaders is the big vital question in the Lutheran Church in America to-day. They realize that they have a bad asset in the German language. They are confronted with that. But, on the other hand, they are confronted with the almost positive assurance that the abolishment of the German language will lose adherents to the Lutheran Church. They realize that in the second generation—that is, the coming and the next coming generation—unless the German language is perpetuated, it will be a lost language in the Lutheran Church.

There is a group that are in favor, at the present time, of making a clean sweep and abolishing the German language.

There is another group that is in favor of still perpetuating the tenets of the Lutheran faith through the German language, in order to keep that language alive; claiming that Martin Luther's belief can only be explained through the German language, the English language being inadequate.

Senator KING. I wish all of the American people and those in our country could realize the fact that unity of language is essential to a unity of political ideals; and the sooner we get rid of foreign languages in our country the better it will be for the American people and for this Republic.

When we were conducting the National German-American Alliance hearing, a gentleman who is in the service of the Government now and has been for some time, occupying quite an important position, stated that there was evidence that Germany paid some of these Lutheran ministers. Have you any information as to that, Captain?

Capt. LESTER. That is the fact, as we found in a few cases. They handled the Lutheran clergymen, Senator, in much the same way as they did the college professors of the higher educational groups, the idea being this: They would single out—and I have in mind the city of Philadelphia—a very intelligent, brainy Lutheran clergyman, and they would arrange an interview with him in New York or in Philadelphia. They would then tell him that they wanted him to write on religious subjects, and he would write articles, and submit them, and receive money for them. That was a part of their system of holding them.

They were particularly fortunate, however, among the most of the Lutherans, because they would not accept money. They did it for the Fatherland. They would do anything for the good of Germany.

We had a man working among the Lutheran clergymen around through the East, who was a former German agent, sent over from Germany into this country, who interviewed about 40 of the leading Lutheran clergymen, giving the story to them, which was true, that he had been in trouble with the Government, and was looking to his future; that he was a writer—which he was—and he wanted their advice; that he was a stranger in a strange land and liable to be taken by the Federal Government at any moment. And these gentlemen gave him counsel and advice and came out very openly and discussed this Lutheran question and their connection with the German propaganda.

That was one angle. In other innumerable investigations it was found that the clergymen offered this as a personal sacrifice; that they were glad to do it.

There were instances of the subsidizing of a branch of the Lutheran Church, which is not denied, through what is known as the Kropp Institute in Germany. It is the Evangelical Lutheran Church—I think that is the name—but the Lutheran Church in Germany that is under Government supervision, the Kropp Institute being the evangelical seminary.

The graduates are sent from that institution to various parts of the world; and the admission is, from these men, that they are sent over—were prior to the war period—to confer with heads of the various synods, take pastorates, and carry the true faith as they had received it in their course of instruction in the Kropp Institute.

Those men were paid by the German Government. That is, their expenses were paid.

That, of course, comes legitimately under the head of foreign missions, I suppose.

The foreign mission work of the Lutheran Church in the world is enormous. It extends through practically every civilized country in the world, where their clergymen are sent, and their missionaries are sent. Their yearbook is particularly interesting in that the information therein contained shows the wide ramifications of that church—probably the widest of any Christian church in the world.

Senator KING. Did you make any investigation, Captain, at the Atlantic Trust Co. or any other of those banks in New York or Philadelphia, or other parts of the United States, which had to do with foreign exchange?

Capt. LESTER. I never had anything to do with the financial investigations personally, Senator.

Maj. HUMES. I think you can get more information on that subject from Mr. Becker, when he gets here, than from any other source. Senator. He has given especial attention to financial transactions.

Senator NELSON. I think in Prussia the Lutheran Church is a State church, like the Church of England in England.

Capt. LESTER. A part of it is the same church, Senator, as I am informed.

Senator NELSON. Of course, a good share of the German Empire, especially the southern States, is Catholic.

Capt. LESTER. In Germany; yes, sir.

Senator NELSON. Bavaria, or what they call Berne and Baden, I think, are largely Catholic.

Senator STERLING. In your investigation, Capt. Lester, did you find any evidence of efforts on the part of German Lutheran ministers to influence Members of Congress and Senators in regard to legislation here in regard to the munitions embargo act, or to influence them against any act on the part of our Government that might precipitate war with Germany?

Capt. LESTER. No. I never made any investigation along that line. Senator. The investigation that I conducted and directed was along the line of individual cases of disloyalty and the relations of the individual Lutheran clergymen to the Army; that is, that was conducted in conjunction with other officers and with other investigators.

Senator STERLING. You were not brought in contact, then, with any correspondence on the part of these ministers with Congressmen and Senators?

Capt. LESTER. Yes; we were in one case that might be mentioned. Senator Calder turned over to the Military Intelligence a large number of letters which he had received from Lutheran clergymen resident in and about New York City. These letters were all strong appeals to Senator Calder to vote against the United States going into war, and also some of them are very strong in their utterances as to why we should not, giving a great many reasons. I think there were about 25 or 30 of those letters.

Senator STERLING. I remember the list received by Senator Calder. They were a fair sample of those received by others.

Capt. LESTER. My attention has just been called to the activities of Rev. Otto Engle, of Milwaukee, who was the organization head in handling the protests to Congress, just before we entered the war.

These various individual cases, Senator, I have prepared in the form of a memorandum or summary that I was directed by my superior to submit to the committee for their personal information, but requested that it not be placed in the record. It shows the activity along definite lines; that is, the opposition to Liberty loans, for example, was a favorite form—in communities every effort was made to defeat the Liberty loan—opposition to the Red Cross, opposition to the Government's general policies. But I must state this in fairness to the Lutheran clergymen, even those who were pro-German, that when the question of conscription came, there was no evidence, except in isolated cases, of any attempt upon the part of the Lutheran church to persuade the young men to evade military service. In other religious bodies there was a strong effort to defeat conscription, but when the conscription law was passed and the first draft, there was no attempt to defeat its operation, except in one or two very isolated cases.

In conjunction with this German propaganda as carried out by the Albert bureau, I should like permission to put into the record a brief summary showing the forms that this propaganda took and the directions that it took. It can be much better put in in that form than stated.

Senator OVERMAN. That is all right.

Capt. LESTER. It was along definite and so-called scientific lines and was kept up systematically for the period that they were here.

(The statement referred to is here printed in the record as follows:)

LESTER EXHIBIT No. 22.

The German propaganda was directed along definite lines and with definite objects in view, which can be generally grouped as follows:

(1) Peace Propaganda.—This form was continuous from the time the Bureau was formed down to its close in 1917. Every conceivable argument why the United States should not enter the war and why the European war should cease was incorporated in hundreds of thousands of pamphlets and in the German Information Service sheet and scattered broadcast throughout the country. This form of propaganda was materially aided by the German-American population and Albert's Bureau was assisted in its dissemination by the German-American Alliance and its various affiliated societies, numbering over twelve hundred in the United States. As has been seen, innumerable peace societies were organized through which literature was distributed and propaganda spread by public meetings and lectures.

(2) A more direct propaganda was the effort made by Dr. Albert and his assistants to actually bring about an Embargo on the shipment of munitions and through fake labor organizations and paid agents to disorganize or stop the production of munitions. Coupled with this was the notorious Bridgeport Projectile Co., to which we have already referred.

(3) The most disturbing form of propaganda was that directed toward our foreign relations, particularly with Great Britain, and also with Japan and Mexico. In the former every effort was made to provoke hatred toward Great Britain and subtle arguments were used to prove that the United States was not interested in the European conflict and never would be; that England was seeking a world domination commercially; instances were cited to show the alleged disregard by England of so-called American rights; Also the Japanese menace and a war with Mexico, singly and in combination, was continually put forward to discourage the United States from venturing into the European conflict. The freedom of Ireland and the oppression of Ireland by England was constantly put in the foreground. Alliances were made between German societies and Irish societies and through subsidies liberally distributed these organizations were supported and their propaganda kept alive. The Sir Roger Casement case was used as a strong weapon for propaganda against England and the Sinn Fein uprising in Ireland and the English method of handling this rebellion was used to inflame the minds of the sympathizers with the Irish cause. It is now a well known fact that Sir Roger Casement was not only a traitor to his country but attempted to organize from Irish prisoners in Germany a regiment to be taken to Ireland to bring about a revolution, failing in which he attempted to get to Ireland himself to aid the revolution, when he was arrested.

In conjunction with all of these forms of propaganda the invincibility of German arms was constantly in the foreground. The defeats of Germany were minimized and her victories magnified and subtle arguments were advanced for the cessation of hostilities, such as the following:

(1) Germany, a country of intellectual, scientific and economic activities, is obliged to fight for her existence, and therefore deserves the sympathy of the whole world, because she was forced into the war by a coalition, treacherously contrived by England. Great stress was laid upon the intellectual and scientific side of the German character. Their literary and musical attainment were woven into the propaganda so as to excite sympathy.

(2) The Allies desire to destroy Germany so that they can get control of German commerce. It is a commercial war—a money war. Germany's army is invincible, therefore, it is only a question of time and why should the neutral countries prolong a wasting war, where ultimately commercial relations will have to be built up all over again with Germany. The neutrals are, therefore, urged to bring pressure to bear on the Allies so that German commerce, of such great value to the neutral countries, will not be interrupted for a long period.

(3) Germany is fighting for the freedom of the seas, which England keeps in her hands, so it is all the more the duty of the neutrals to help Germany to enforce peace. Strong stress was always laid upon the butchery and inhumanity of the war and how easy it would be for the United States to stop this horrible butchery by refusing to ship food and munitions to the Allies. (See three specimens of this propaganda with comments.)

LESTER EXHIBIT No. 23.

PEACE OR WAR?

[Published under the imprint of the Organization of American Women for Strict Neutrality. Compiled from the Congressional Record by William Bayard Hale (with an introduction by him).]

The so-called Organization of American Women for Strict Neutrality was founded by Miss L. N. Miller, of Roland Park, Baltimore. The purpose of the organization was to enlist the women of America in a crusade against the sale and shipment of arms and munitions to the Allies. Dr. Hale, while employed by agents of the Imperial German Government, entered into communication with Miss Miller and later held conferences with her in New York City, with the purpose of fostering and financially helping this supposedly independent American undertaking.

According to Miss M. K. Stauffer, Dr. Hale's private secretary at that time, Dr. Hale acted as "legal adviser" to Miss Miller and her organization. After Dr. Hale had tied up with Miss Miller her organization launched a country-wide campaign designed to create such American sentiment against the shipment of arms and munitions to the Allies as would force the Administration to establish an embargo.

A vast campaign of bill-board advertising was carried out in the various big cities of the country. On these posters Americans were urged "to uphold the arms of the President in the maintenance of a strict neutrality by demanding an embargo on the shipment of arms and ammunition." These posters bore the name of the Organization of American Women for Strict Neutrality. Miss M. K. Stauffer, Dr. Hale's secretary, arranged the contracts for this bill-board advertising, which according to Miss Stauffer cost $7,000 to $8,000, money for the payment of which was given to her in cash by Dr. Hale. The amount of the bill-board advertising used is indicated in the following schedule, which was given by Miss Stauffer:

New York City-----	100	Specials.
The Bronx-----	200	Regulars.
Brooklyn-----	} 154	Regulars.
Jamaica-----		12
Boston-----	6	Regulars.
Washington, D. C-----	100	Regulars.
Baltimore-----	75	Regulars.
St. Louis-----	75	Regulars.
Atlanta, Ga-----	50	Regulars.
Cincinnati-----	75	Regulars.

In addition to this bill-board advertising campaign, Dr. Hale directed a campaign for the securing of signatures to a petition to be sent to President Wilson demanding an embargo. Dr. Hale desired to organize bands of people to secure these signatures and declared he was willing to pay five cents apiece for each bona fide signature secured.

Dr. Hale published his book "Peace or War?" under the imprint of the Organization of American Women for Strict Neutrality. Moneys for these various undertakings by this organization and for the payment of Dr. Hale's books and pamphlets passed through Dr. Hale's hands.

Dr. Hale's book, "Peace or War?" purports to give an account of the debate in Congress following the introduction of the Gore resolution and the McLemore resolution, whose purpose was "to warn Americans not to travel on armed belligerent merchantmen." In his introduction, Dr. Hale, on page 5, makes the following statement:

"Provoked by the introduction of resolutions designed to warn Americans not to travel on armed belligerent merchantmen, and by an intimation from the President that he regarded the resolutions as an invasion of the prerogatives of the Executive branch of the Government, the discussion widened until it had embraced the whole range of subjects connected with the attitude of Americans towards the war."

Dr. Hale implies that the news of this debate was not given to the American public in the following words:

"No truthful account of this great debate has reached the public. Nothing like an adequate narrative of the proceedings in Congress has come into print.

"The newspaper press of the United States in this case entirely failed to fulfill what is commonly regarded as its function. Indeed, the impression given by such of the despatches from Washington as got into print in the newspapers can only be described as false in the extreme."

Dr. Hale's interpretation of this debate as a rebuke to President Wilson and his policy is stated as follows:

"For instance, the impression has gone out from Washington that the Senate and the House voted down the proposal to warn Americans off of armed belligerent ships. This impression is quite false. Again, the impression has gone out that Congress washed its hands of foreign affairs and delivered their settlement over into the absolute hands of the Chief Executive. This is equally false. The impression has gone out that President Wilson asked a vote of confidence, and received it. The degree of confidence that can be deduced from the respective several votes of the Senate and the House is slight, and any confidence at all that can be detected in the recorded remarks of Senators and Congressmen is extremely attenuated. The frequent reversals of opinion which seem to have marked the diplomacy of Mr. Wilson were universally regretted; his personal attitude toward the belligerents was criticized; his theory of absolute Presidential control of the nation's foreign affairs was attacked in weighty speeches by leading Senators both of his own party and of the opposition; and while the utmost goodwill was expressed toward Mr. Wilson personally by all participants in the debate, it was made abundantly manifest that Congress was of no mind to be led blindly by any mortal man into the gulf of armed conflict."

Dr. Hale goes on to say, page 6:

"The prevailing argument in favor of tabling the resolutions was the general desire not to embarrass the nation's Chief Executive in the presence of any foreign power. Notwithstanding the repeated and puzzling changes in position by Mr. Wilson, and notwithstanding furthermore the general disapproval of his final attitude on the armed merchantman question, it was generally agreed that it would be unfortunate to humiliate him. On the part of Democrats, this feeling was especially strong; it would not promote the party's chances of success in the approaching election publicly to repudiate the leadership of the Democratic President."

Dr. Hale implies that President Wilson was not acting according to the general desire of the American people in the following paragraph, on page 7:

"Moreover, it will be evident that, while the two Houses of Congress were extremely reluctant to go on record in any vote which might be interpreted as an expression of a lack of confidence in the President, there was no hesitation in the assertion by individual members that the course of the Administration was not in accord with the general desire and design of the American people to refrain from participation in the European struggle unless upon the most substantial grounds."

Dr. Hale continues to say, page 7 and 8:

"But the significance of the great debate went far beyond this. It reached to the proportions of an admonition, the most serious ever addressed by an American Congress to an American President, that he must restrain his private prejudices to conform with the general sentiment of his fellow-countrymen. It secured from that President's reputed spokesmen a pledge that before breaking off diplomatic relations with any Government, he would submit to Congress all the facts in the case. It became a mandate to the President to take no step toward plunging the country into war except with the consent of the chosen representatives of the people.

"It is of course perfectly understood by everybody in Washington that Mr. Wilson's sympathies are with the British, and that his hatred of Germany and of Germans is unrestrained. There can be no objection to his entertaining a sentimental attachment to the land where his mother and all four of his grandparents were born and with whose literature and political history alone he is familiar. But it is apparently the belief of the representatives of the American people in Congress that it is one thing to have a private animosity and quite another thing to attempt to commit the nation to a bloody conflict in support of it. It is impossible to imagine language calculated more decisively than was that employed by a majority of the participants in the great debate, to rebuke the very evident desire of Mr. Wilson to involve the United States in war in behalf of England."

LESTER EXHIBIT No. 24.

AMERICAN RIGHTS AND BRITISH PRETENSIONS ON THE SEAS.

[Published under the imprint of Robert M. McBride, New York, 1915.]

The title page states that this book was "compiled, with introductory memoranda, by William Bayard Hale."

This book was published in two editions, one of cheap grade, and a second, printed on a superior quality of paper and bound expensively. The expensive edition was sent by Dr. Hale to various universities throughout the world, to many distinguished people and particularly to men high in affairs in Germany.

The paper-bound edition was distributed widecast, being sent to members of Congress, libraries, smaller colleges and other institutions.

The nominal selling price of the book at $1 per copy would by no manner of means have covered the manufacturing costs of the book itself. The book was printed by a concern now known as the Redfield Kindrick Odell Company, Incorporated, 311 West 43 Street. The changes and corrections in the make-up of the book were very costly.

Dr. William Bayard Hale at the time the book was prepared was occupying offices on the 6th floor at 1123 Broadway. The manuscript was sent from this office to the printers. Proofs were returned to this office and representatives of the printers conferred with Dr. Hale there. These offices were provided for Dr. Hale by the German Propaganda Council and all the expenses pertaining thereto were paid by this body. Dr. Hale at the time of the compilation of this volume was a paid employee of the German Government.

The purpose of this volume is stated by Dr. Hale in the first chapter entitled "The First Encroachments" (pg. 5, col 1):

"It aims to afford materials for such study of American interests in at least one aspect—the aspect which, as the months draw on, emerges as perhaps the most anxious object of our concern; the vindication of the right of neutral ships to sail the seas on peaceable errands with innocent cargoes.

"Against Germany that right has been vindicated.

"It remains to assert it against Great Britain."

Dr. Hale then proceeds to discuss in a general way the subject of blockade and asserts that the British maritime policy was developed not only as a measure of war but for Great Britain's commercial gain and that Great Britain was exercising a tyrannical power at the expense of American citizens in order to assist her own merchants and capture American foreign trade. Dr. Hale specifically states, page 9, paragraph 5:

"So Great Britain confiscates our products on the way to our customers—and there proceeds to sell them herself at a profit for herself,"

In order to test the British rulings in regard to American vessels and if possible to embroil the United States and Great Britain, the German interests in the United States by indirection and through apparently American concerns or individuals sent to Germany two vessels, the Dacia and the Wilhelmina. The Wilhelmina was consigned to Hamburg with a cargo of food stuffs, and the Dacia was consigned first to Bremen and then to Rotterdam with a cargo of cotton. The Wilhelmina was captured by the British and sent to a prize court. The Dacia was seized by the French. The owners of the cargo of the Wilhelmina (the W. T. Green Commission Co. of St. Louis) made a statement to the American Department of State that the food stuffs on board that vessel were designed for the civilian population of Germany, and furthermore, Count von Bernstorff, the German Ambassador, communicated a guarantee to the U. S. Dept. of State that the cargo on the vessel would not be used by the Germans Government, its agents or contractors, nor by the naval or military forces.

Conferences attended by the members of the German Propaganda Council were held at this time and the advisability of securing from the Imperial German Foreign Office the guarantee that the food shipped on the Wilhelmina would be used only for the civilian population of Germany was discussed. Dr. William B. Hale was in attendance at these conferences. He was employed by the German Propaganda Council as an expert on International law. It was after his return to his office from one of these conferences that Dr. Hale made the statement to one of his assistants that the Wilhelmina was "a test case," and as he expressed it, "had been sent by our people."

On page 9 of this volume Dr. Hale states, paragraph 6:

"Great Britain refuses to recognize the registry awarded by the Government of the United States to ships purchased by American citizens, in good faith, for the sole purpose of relieving the distresses of our commerce."

In paragraph 8, on this same page, Dr. Hale reflects upon the administration of President Willson in the following terms:

"Thus the insolence of unrebuked naval power has been extended to our own waters."

The important point in this quotation is the use of the word "unrebuked."

The general tenor of the purposes for which this book was written and produced are indicated by the following paragraphs (page 9, 3 paragraphs):

"The exercise of intimidating arguments designed (successfully) to prevent the American Government's meeting the critical national necessity of an American merchant marine."

"The intimidation (at first by the hand of its ally, France) of American enterprise in the legitimate purchase of mercantile vessels to ply the seas under the protection of the American Flag."

"The chronology of the British war on American commerce is easy to master—the principle dates to learn are but three: August 20, October 29, 1914, and March 11, 1915. These are dates of three Orders in Council—for it is by the same method and in the same form as that which outraged our forefathers and finally provoked them to the War of 1812 that England today is closing the sea to our commerce."

The implication that the acts of the British Government were of a nature sufficient to provoke armed hostilities between the United States and Great Britain—that in fact actions of a similar nature had in our previous history provoked such hostilities—is continuously referred to throughout the book.

Coincident with this suggestion is the other one that the administration at Washington was either too weak or too prejudiced or too feeble to take action such as the circumstances warranted. This is clearly brought out in a paragraph on page 10:

"A year ago, when the above sentence was first written, it seemed a thing impossible that Britain would be permitted to forbid our selling the products of our farms to whom we would. She has been permitted to do it for a year, and the shock of the thing has passed. Yet surely, even though it has been endured for a year, it cannot be the settled policy of the people of the United States to submit to so intolerable an oppression."

Great Britain's alleged purpose of aggrandizement is stated in the following paragraph on page 12:

"Great Britain does not, however, now limit herself to 'war against commerce of every description between the people of a neutral and those of a belligerent State'; she has gone on to declare war against commerce of every description between the people of neutral States among themselves."

In the following paragraph Dr. Hale writes:

"The first steps in the hostilities against us were those considered above."

On the same page Dr. Hale again reflects upon the American Government in the following paragraph:

"Today the American Government is unable to assure merchant ships flying the American flag that they may cross the Atlantic to any port except by permission of the British Admiralty. Today an Iowa farmer or a Texas cattle raiser is forbidden, by the English Government, to sell his products to European customers whose families need food. Not a barrel of flour nor a ham can be landed in Rotterdam or Copenhagen without England's permission—which is unobtainable."

That Great Britain is waging economic war against the people of the United States is insinuated in the following paragraph, on page 13:

"England is assumed to be the enemy of Germany, not of the farmers, planters, and merchants of the United States. but it is the merest statement of fact to say that thousands of the citizens of the United States are being interfered with in the ordinary pursuit of their livelihood, not to say in the enjoyment of the ordinary comforts of life—and unnecessarily interfered with—by the economic war which Great Britain is waging upon the United States under the excuse of its war with Germany."

In carrying out the argument that American rights are not adequately protected by the Administration, Dr. Hale refers specifically to the case of the ship Hocking which was captured by the British while en route between New York and Norfolk. Commenting on this capture, Dr. Hale states (paragraph page 15):

"If this ship was not safe, no American coast-wise trading ship is safe. However, up to the present time, American vessels are permitted to navigate the Great Lakes and the Hudson River."

Dr. Hale sums up his indictment of Great Britain in the following paragraph, from page 15:

"The Government of Great Britain has virtually set up in the midst of the busy seas an arbitrary court, claiming unheard of powers and exercising the most tyrannous police functions; seizing and haling into the dock, as suspects, all travellers upon the ocean highways, and visiting many of them with heavy penalties for unproven, and indeed unprovable, offences. This lawless assizes of the seas, contemptuous alike of its own precedents and of the rights of others, scarcely stoops to the pretense of citing authority for its actions, which are determined solely by its brutal will, and enforced, though indeed largely through intimidation, by the gigantic power of its naval police. The extent of the earth's surface over which this extraordinary court is permitted to wield its self-arrogated jurisdiction, the magnitude of the interests which its actions vitally affect, and the supineness with which sovereign States submit to the erection, upon the ruins of their self-respect and the debacle of their highest commercial and political interests, of an island's municipal statutes into international formulas, unite to render this one of the spectacles of history.

"A contemplation of that spectacle suggests that the hour imposes upon the United States a duty of supreme historical importance."

The last paragraph of this quotation deserves earnest consideration.

Dr. Hale presently dwells on the sufferings inflicted by the British on American concerns and upon his pet "made-in-Germany" theory that this action on the part of the British is designed to appropriate for their own merchants our trade. Furthermore, he implies constantly that the vacillation and weakness of the American government at Washington tend to assist Great Britain in this plan.

The following paragraph on page 16 sums up his argument:

"Shut off from direct relations with their legitimate customers, American merchants are thus rendered helpless in the disposition of goods and the establishment of prices. Thus American business abroad, fostered and developed for years at great expense, has been usurped by British interests which can themselves, under present conditions, without hindrance or competition, supplant American manufacturers."

In the following paragraph from page 22, Dr. Hale makes his usual charges against the British government and clearly states that the alleged sufferings of American shippers receive no attention at Washington:

"There are certain classes of crimes concerning which it is next to impossible to procure evidence. Murder is said to be the safest of felonies because the victim, who is often a sole witness aside from the criminal, is silenced. Dishonored women do not commonly make public their humiliation. Few indeed of the victims of English wrong-doing are willing to furnish the facts for publication. As for protesting and appealing to the United States Government, few now do even that, either because they have learned that their protests and petitions are of no avail, or that the United States Government will do nothing more than possibly put the case in a memorandum and send a Trade Adviser over to the British Embassy to chat with Sir Richard Crawford over it.

"The prostration of American enterprise before the domineering naval strength and commercial mercilessness of England, and acquiescence without hope of succor, are among the most discouraging features of the situation."

On page 28, Dr. Hale again reflects upon the Administration when he states in view of some alleged infringement of American rights that:

"The British Ambassador was 'requested' by an official of the United States Government to extend relief to the embarrassed shippers by adopting some rule that might permit such shippers, who had sold cotton to Germany before March 1st, to forward their cotton."

The following paragraphs are quoted in extenso from a chapter entitled "Our Larger Interests," beginning on page 43 and extending to page 46:

"Will the positions which the present administration has taken, during the progress of the European war, with reference to maritime warfare, bear inspection in the cool light of the best interests of the United States? To raise the question is to make no reflection upon the patriotism of the administration. Whatever may have been the ruling motives which determined them, there is some reason to believe that, from one cause or another, the government of the United States has taken a series of positions which, when scrutinized in the light of commercial and political possibilities of the future, work precisely the wrong way, so far as the interests of America are concerned.

"Consider:

"Should the United States ever become involved in war, the war would be one of defense on our part. The American people would not sanction a war of aggression abroad. No one contemplates aggression. We entertain no ideas of aggrandizement that suggest an aggressive policy. The most pronounced advocates of a big army and a big navy dare not urge more than a policy of 'preparedness' against attack.

"What, then, would be the effect of the policies of the present administration upon the ability of the United States to defend itself in a foreign war?"

"The foreign wars in which we might possibly become involved fall into the following general classes:

"(1) A war with some other power or powers on the American Continent.

"(2) A war with a European Power or a European alliance.

"(3) A war with an Asiatic Power or an Asiatic alliance.

"(4) A war with allied European and American, allied European and Asiatic or allied American and Asiatic Powers.

"1. Suppose we were engaged in war with another American Power.

"We have taken the ground that it is legitimate for the manufacturers of any nation to supply the armies of another nation with arms and ammunition. We have gone further than this; we have taken the position that for a power to deny the armies of another Power arms and ammunition would be unneutral: that is to say, that it is the duty of the people of one country to supply the armies of a belligerent Power with munitions of war. In a war between the United States and another American Power, it would consequently be the duty of European and Asiatic arms and ammunition manufacturers to supply our opponent with weapons with which to fight against us. But this is opposed to the interests of the United States.

"2. The case would be still worse in the event of a war between the United States and a European Power. Under the precedents established by Mr. Wilson's Administration, it would be the duty of all European and Asiatic manufacturers to furnish arms and ammunition to the Power combating us. True, it would be their duty likewise to supply us with arms and ammunition. But these would never be delivered to us. For, while the manufacturers of the various European and Asiatic countries would have no difficulty in transporting munitions of war overland to the army and navy of the European Power at war with us, they could by no means send them across the seas. We have acceded, practically, to the proposition that a blockade may be laid anywhere; it is no longer necessary, under our admissions, that a blockade be laid before particular ports or that it be actually maintained by ships. A torpedo boat or two in the Strait of Gibraltar, a few mines in the English Channel and the North Sea, and the Atlantic seaboard of the United States would be in a state of blockade. Not only no ammunition, but nothing else could get through. We should have all the ammunition makers of Europe and Asia furnishing our opponent with guns and shells, while we ourselves would be thrown upon our own resources.

"3. In the event of a war with an Asiatic Power, that Power could procure overland from Europe all the munitions of war she desired, and it would be the duty of European Powers to furnish her with these instruments of combat. But it would be opposed to the interests of the United States to have Japan, for instance, supplied from Europe with arms to be used against us.

"4. In the event of an alliance between European and Asiatic Powers—and this is precisely the combination of Powers most likely to envisage us—the situation would be far worse. All the arms manufactories in the rest of the world would be combined against the United States. We should probably not be able to get anything overseas into our ports.

"The biggest navy we shall ever, by any possibility, build would be none too big to guard our own extensive coasts. We have—or Mr. Wilson's Administration has—made the submarine impossible as a weapon of defense, to say nothing of attack. Otherwise by far the most potent weapon of maritime defense thus far invented, we have declared it an illegitimate weapon. The submarine, we say, must visit and search before it acts.

"While the Government of the United States allows its people to be plundered by the new definition of contraband enunciated by Great Britain, it takes, with regard to goods of an actual and always admitted contraband character, namely arms and ammunition, a position of peculiar contrast to its meek admissions with regard to goods heretofore always considered innocent.

"There has been some difference of opinion among nations and among authorities on international law as to the duty of a neutral government to prevent its subjects engaging in contraband trade, some contending that such a duty exists; others, including the United States, holding that the neutral State is under no duty to stop contraband exports, the punishment being in the hands of the belligerent adversely affected thereby. But probably never has a nation undertaken to protect its citizens in the contraband trade and to claim (what the United States Government claimed in its recent notes to Austria) that contraband trade is legitimate, and that the United States Government has no control over it, or that the attempt to exercise such control would be unneutral, and therefore impermissible.

"The net result of the positions we have taken, or acceded to with very mild protests, is the preposterous one that, while the Government of the United States has no control over its own trade, even its contraband trade, with belligerents, any belligerent that is physically able to exercise it enjoys complete control over our trade, even in the most innocent articles.

"Take again our position with regard to the activity of submarines. We assert that a submarine may not sink merchant vessels belonging to the enemy without 'visit and search.' But visit and search is a right and not a duty; a right, moreover, the assertion of which on the part of Great Britain the United States combatted for many years, finally going to war largely in its contention against it. Visit and search, furthermore, applies only to neutral vessels. It was an unheard of thing until the United States Department of State invented it, that a belligerent was compelled to visit and search an enemy ship before dealing with it. Visit and search was a privilege claimed with regard to a neutral vessel; never a duty incumbent upon a warship with regard to a belligerent vessel. Its purpose was that of ascertaining whether the suspected craft carried contraband. But there is no longer a necessity for that, because all vessels leaving our shores for Europe carry contraband—under the new all-inclusive definitions.

"We insist also that all merchant ships carrying contraband shall be free from attack until after it is ascertained that no neutral citizen or subject is on board. We have asserted that the life of this hypothetical neutral citizen or subject, who may be or may not be aboard, and who really has no right to be on board, is more vital than the right of the submarine commander to defend the lives of the soldiers of his country who are beyond all question in the trenches where they will be attacked by the ammunition which the spared ship is carrying.

* * * * *

"Considerable sentiment has been developed in the United States in favor of a larger army and navy by way of preparedness for future wars. But the increase of our army to half a million men and the doubling or tripling of the size of our navy will not serve to overcome the disadvantage we shall labor under in consequence of the precedents we are allowing Great Britain to pile up against us in her interpretation of the laws of the sea, and the precedents we are piling up against Germany in our interpretation of the laws of the sea.

"We shall probably never send an army abroad, at least not to the other hemisphere. Our soldiers will stay at home to defend our own territory. But suppose a European or an Asiatic enemy obtains a foothold in America, or an American Power undertakes to invade us; his munitions of war, in his own merchant ships even, cannot be attacked by our submarines, provided he brings a neutral passenger with him.

"As for our great navy, what good is a great navy unless it be the greatest navy? Great Britain maintains the right to have a navy equal to the sum of the two next largest navies in the world, plus ten per cent. Is it proposed to build a navy greater than the British navy? Is it for a moment believed that England would permit that? And even if England were to permit it, one need only take a glance at a map of the world on which is displayed Britain's widely-scattered and artfully-disposed naval stations to realize how very much greater indeed an American navy would have to be to hope to cope successfully even with a British navy considerably smaller. But, of course, our navy would not go abroad on aggressive expeditions. Its primary work would be to defend our territory—work that a navy of submarines could better do, if we had not ruled submarines out of warfare. We might, indeed, do some blockade work, but it is we ourselves who would be the chief victims of the blockade. Great Britain, for instance, by her control of the narrow passages through which the commerce of the world is forced to pass, could practically, without moving a ship, cut us off from all connection with the rest of the world. Because, remember, everything is contraband now, and a blockade may be thousands of miles away from the ports against which it is directed. And not England alone, but any other European naval Power could cut us off from Europe; while in conjunction with an Asiatic naval Power our enemy could absolutely close our ports."

Page 44 includes a map prepared under Dr. Hale's directions (and based upon a map used in a pamphlet by Dr. Dernburg) to bear out the substance of his statements in the last paragraph quoted.

The succeeding portions of the book contain "List of Ships Detained," the Declaration of Paris, the Declaration of London, Instructions to British Delegation to the Second Peace Conference (The Hague), The Orders in Council of which complaint had been made by the Germans, and a compilation of Diplomatic Correspondence. Dr. Hale says (p. 85):

DIPLOMATIC CORRESPONDENCE.

"The following papers are believed to contain all the important communications exchanged between the Government of the United States and that of Great Britain, with respect of the rights of neutral trade, so far as these are at present accessible. In addition are included salient communications exchanged with the German Government.

"When not otherwise indicated, the text of the papers is that appearing in the two volumes, dated respectively May 27 and October 21, 1915, and other memoranda published by the Department of State. For the text of documents which the Department of State has not seen fit to include in its publications, the only resource has been the daily press; but only communications officially allowed to become public have been noticed."

THOU SHALT NOT KILL.

[Published, 1915, under the imprint of The Organization of American Women for Strict Neutrality.]

(Inside Title page: "The Exportation of Arms and Munitions of War—Should the United States Government Allow it Or Forbid It? A Discussion.")

While counseling and conferring with the Teutonic agents, Dr. Hale early in 1915 undertook to carry out a widespread propaganda for the placing of an embargo on the shipment of war supplies to the Allies. Also Dr. Hale conferred with labor leaders, whom he sought to engage in propaganda for an embargo, and inspired and directed the activities of the so-called Organization of American Women for Strict Neutrality. Dr. Hale himself contributed writings, a conspicuous example of which is found in the pamphlet entitled, "Thou Shalt Not Kill."

On the inside cover of this pamphlet, Dr. Hale publishes a picture of the Bethlehem Steel Plant, under which is the caption, "An American Arms and Ammunition Factory (Bethlehem, Pa.)." Under this photograph is printed a picture showing dead soldiers (presumably Germans) lying on a battle-field, and under this picture Dr. Hale printed the caption, "The Product Of An American Arms And Ammunition Factory."

The major portion of this pamphlet consists of an article entitled "The Exportation Of Arms And Munitions Of War—Should the United States Government Allow it Or Forbid It?" This is signed "By Dr. William Bayard Hale, Author of: 'The New Obedience: A Plea for Social Submission to Christ;' 'A Week in the White House with Theodore Roosevelt;' 'Woodrow Wilson: The Story of His Life,' etc." The pamphlet also contains what was alleged by Dr. Hale to be a letter to a New York newspaper by "An Old-Fashioned Friend," which was a protest on religious grounds against the supplying by the United States of munitions to the warring nations.

This letter was signed "William Harlan." This fake production was composed by William Bayard Hale in his office at 1123 Broadway.

While in the throes of composition, Dr. Hale read extracts from the production to one of his assistants. Dr. Hale's pamphlet contained a short article by Charles Nagel, ex-secretary of Commerce and Labor entitled, "Our Right To Stop The Traffic." (Mr. Nagel delivered the eulogy at the death of Adolphus Busch, the St. Louis brewer, which was subsequently read into the Congressional Record by a representative from Missouri.)

Dr. Hale's pamphlet also contained excerpts from speeches or writings protesting against the sale of munitions to the Allies by Robert Marion La Follette, United States Senator from Wisconsin; Clyde H. Tavenner, representative in Congress from Illinois; Stephen G. Porter, Representative in Congress from Pennsylvania; part of an editorial from The Christian Herald entitled, "The Ghosts Of The Slain," and part of an advertisement "of a machine for making extra-fatal, extra-high-explosive shrapnel shells," which had been published in The American Machinist by the Cleveland Automatic Machine Company, upon which Dr. Hale made editorial comments under the heading, "America's Contribution."

Dr. Hale's pamphlet was widely distributed to clergymen of various denominations, to members of Congress, and many others throughout the country with the purpose of fomenting an agitation against the exportation of war supplies to the Allies. Fifty thousand copies of this pamphlet were distributed through the American Embargo Conference. Dr. Hale began his introductory article with the following statement:

"The war in Europe is now being fought in large part with ammunition provided by citizens of the United States."

Dr. Hale began the distribution of his pamphlet in the early summer of 1915, which was before the munitions shipped from America actually had reached the fighting front in any great quantity. In the course of his pamphlet, Dr. Hale cites statistics from the manifests of ships sailing from the port of New York. The last statistics referred to go up to the latter part of April, 1915. This would indicate that the pamphlet had been prepared some time before the middle of May. It is well known that the agitation against "American bullets" originated in Germany. Practically the first utterance in regard to "American bullets" was credited to Prince Rupprecht of Bavaria, who declared that thousands of German soldiers had been killed in the battle of Champagne by American manufactured bullets used by the French troops. The records of shipments by American manufacturers demonstrated that extensive supplies to the Allies did not reach the troops at the front until late that summer or early in the fall. The anti-bullet campaign originated in Germany and this pamphlet prepared by Dr. Hale was part of that campaign.

Dr. Hale's pamphlet, being primarily addressed to ministers, dwells upon the hypocrisy of Americans in having days of prayer while the manufacturing of deadly weapons was carried on. He specifically refers to the President's proclamation for the day of prayer on October 4, 1914, and the comments in the following paragraphs illustrate the aspersions indirectly cast upon the sincerity of the President and the American people:

"On October 4th, 1914, the religious people of the United States of all denominations, at the suggestion of the President, assembled in their places of worship and besought the Almighty to bring the war to the end. Was that action sincere? How does it comport with that apparently solemn petition to God to end the war, for us now to manufacture the shot and shell with which to continue it?

"There are some moral situations which are so clear that it is a mockery to attempt to becloud them. This would seem to be such a situation. If we do not desire the killing of men to cease, the people of America should not have appeared before God and prayed for peace. If we do desire it, we should stop selling weapons to the belligerents. To pray for peace and sell munitions of war is an inconsistency which surely requires a good deal of casuistical ingenuity to justify.

"Of course, if we want the war to continue, it is another matter. But, in that case, does not honesty suggest that we should cease prayers for peace? If we, for instance, desire to see Germans killed, we are perfectly justified in making weapons to kill them. If we really believe that Germany should be destroyed and are so fixed in that belief and so anxious to see it realized that we are willing to contribute to that end, we are justified in supplying Germany's enemies with weapons. Only, in that case, let us stop pretending to be neutral."

Dr. Hale plainly suggests that American manufacturers are allowed to make and ship munitions of war to the Allies because the American Government is disposed to confer "an advantage on England" and to discriminate against Germany.

On pages seven and eight, Dr. Hale says:

"No one in America dreams of openly making war on Germany. But would that not be more manly and more honest than to make war on her under the mask of neutrality? There is no suggestion from any quarter that, if American bullets kill Germans, German bullets would be justified in killing Americans. Germany has enough enemies to fight, without us, and there is not the remotest probability of that logic being carried to its conclusion. All the more, however, is it mandatory upon the conscience of America to face the sorry conclusion that we are in the position—hardly a manly or courageous position—of those who are waging war without accepting the responsibilities of war, as well as in the position of mercenaries who are selling for money their capacity for murder.

"If England did not control the sea, and Germany could buy arms of us equally with England, there is no doubt but the over-whelming sentiment of the country would demand the instant cessation of the traffic in arms. What then? Are we prohibited from a righteous and humane act, because the British navy is stronger than the German? Are we forbidden from following the mandates of our conscience to withhold deadly weapons from both sides, because one side has already seen to it that weapons are withheld by us from the other? Is an unrighteous and inhumane course of conduct to be persisted in because not to persist in it would be to stop conferring an advantage on England?"

On page nine Dr. Hale asserts:

"The Germans already truthfully allege that we are furnishing the Allies the bullets with which thousands of their sons and brothers are being slain."

Dr. Hale makes the plea that we cease providing weapons of death on religious grounds, as follows:

"If it is asserted that an embargo on the exportation of arms would act in favor of Germany, it must be in the same breath admitted that the continuation of the exportation of arms is acting against Germany and in favor of the Allies. This is, of course, the case. The argument is, then, that we should not continue doing wrong in one direction, because if we do not we shall be doing wrong in the other direction.

"The answer is that the wrong-doing lies in the providing of deadly weapons. So long as we continue furnishing instruments of murder, we do wrong: and all the more ignoble is the wrong if we furnish them to one side only. But the minute we cease providing weapons of death we cease doing wrong.

"It is not our concern which side, if either, will be benefited by our act or our failure to act. It is our concern, it is our only and our most solemn concern, to see to it that our act or our failure to act is itself righteous, humane, Christian. Not upon us rests the responsibility for possible effects. Those we may safely leave to a Providence, wiser than ourselves."

The circulation of Dr. Hale's pamphlet was designed to influence the clergy of America and to promote a religious protest against the shipment of munitions to the Entente Allies. Dr. Hale says on page 11:

"The United States is face to face with the necessity of deciding whether we are going to add to the death list or going to keep it down."

Dr. Hale indicates by listing the seven nations comprising the Allies the overwhelming odds against Germany, Austria Hungary and Turkey, and thus implies that the United States is affording unfair advantage against the under dog. Dr. Hale says (page 11):

"The fact is, the plain, practical fact is, that for the best part of a year by our willingness to manufacture deadly weapons for the gold of whoever would buy them, we have been conferring an unfair advantage upon one side to the war. It may be the side most of us look upon with favor; it may possibly be that we are seriously minded to continue conferring this advantage. The probability, however, is that most of us, whatever our private predilections, are unwilling, deliberately and after consideration, to have our country take a side, as practically it is now taking a side."

Dr. Hale comments on American neutrality, on page 11, as follows:

"We have been calling and thinking of ourselves as neutrals, all the while sending shells and cartridges to the armies of one side, because we thought we must. Shall we not consider? Shall we not reflect? Shall we not take counsel of our own reason, declining to accept the ready-made declarations of the recipients of the big war-order profits? Shall we not understand that neutrality means neutrality—and that it not only permits, but in truth requires, a Christian nation to keep its hands clean from the blood of men spilled in a quarrel not its own?

"Is it not a monstrous thing that a nation which calls itself enlightened, humane and even Christian, should manufacture implements of war and send them by shipload to enraged men bent on killing all they can reach whom they denominate 'enemies'? The people of the United States have no 'enemies'. We desire to see no one killed. Are we not false to every suggestion of humanity, are we not unworthy of our century, do we not make Christianity a thing of derision if, for the sake of blood-stained money, we take deadly part in the struggle in the result of which we continue to protest we have no interest?"

Dr. Hale charges that American corporations are interested in prolonging the war, and that our munitions trust will become a standing threat to the peace. Dr. Hale says (page 12):

"It is, of course, unnecessary to pay any attention to this argument for the sake of any effect it may have upon the minds of Christian ministers. No one will aver that the clergy of the United States are mercenary. But the subject is one upon which they should reflect and inform themselves, because the real reasons behind the campaign in defense of the war orders are mercenary. The American people are not making and selling shells and cartridges for the Allies because they hate the Germans. The American people are permitting a group of corporations to sell their shells and cartridges to the Allies because the corporations want the money they can get for the abominable things, and, wanting that money, have persuaded the people that there is no harm in making them. These corporations are interested in prolonging the war, and they are interested in convincing the country that the Allies deserve to be aided against the Germans; and, to advance their interests, they are using all their tremendous power over the press and over business. It is not good to have in this country a great capitalized interest in war. Such an interest has been born and is at work here."

Dr. Hale cunningly and pointedly uses the favorite German threat of the menace of Japan in the following paragraph (page 13):

"There will exist in the United States a vested interest in war so tremendous that any enterprise upon which it might set its mind would be in danger of realization. Every possible friction between nations will be promoted. Every possible alarm will be invented to induce the United States Government to keep itself armed on to the teeth. The Japanese peril will cease to be a mere bogie."

After alleging that America's share in the war is founded upon the American desire for dollars, Dr. Hale undertakes to argue for the establishment of an embargo on the same traffic on the following specious plea (page 13):

"Every German or Austrian our shells kill means one less customer for our goods, one less pair of hands to create wealth to be traded to us for our products."

Dr. Hale continues (page 14): "You cannot get rich by destroying wealth. You cannot do yourself any permanent good by killing off one set of customers at the behest of another set."

On page 14, Dr. Hale clearly implies that America has estranged the friendship of Germany and predicts German victory as follows:

"What folly for us to contribute to further demolition of wealth, to further loss of wealth-creating lives, what folly to estrange the whole Teutonic race! What folly in any view of the outcome of the struggle, and especially what folly when one reflects that there is such a thing as putting one's money on the wrong horse!"

Dr. Hale assails the United States Government on page 15 as follows:

"It is asserted that, whatever action it might have been proper for the United States to take at the beginning of the war, it would be a violation of our neutrality to make any change in our policy now. This feeble pretense might be indulged as the last-ditch argument of a criminal lawyer, but it is difficult to restrain the impatience at seeing it invoked, as it has been invoked, by high officials of the United States Government. Has the United States ever before held that an embargo on the exportation of arms during the progress of the war was a violation of its neutrality? On the contrary, it has repeatedly placed embargoes and removed embargoes, and made changes in its laws of neutrality, during the progress of wars, never dreaming that it was departing from its neutrality."

On pages 16 and 17, Dr. Hale summarizes the attitude of the Wilson administration in the case of Mexico. His thesis is that by refusing to sell arms to the Mexicans, the United States befriended Huerta and weakened Carranza, and that when this fact was brought to Mr. Wilson's attention the embargo was lifted. Dr. Hale then argues that if we have reversed our policy by first prohibiting and then permitting the export of arms to Mexico, we are justified by that precedent in forbidding the export of arms to the Entente Allies. In concluding this article, Dr. Hale on page 18 says:

"The declaration that it would be a departure from neutrality to stop selling arms today is a false declaration, by whomsoever it is made. Not a shred of international law, not a precedent, not an analogy can be cited in support of the preposterous assertion. It is inconceivable in any view of any international relations, it is antagonistic to every principle of national right, that a Sovereign State should be compelled to allow arms to be shipped from its port to anybody. It would be a feeble invertebrate of a nation indeed that submitted to such a doctrine. Every nation in the world has at one time or another ordered its arms kept at home, for any one of a dozen possible reasons, and without explanation to anybody.

"The sole and only requirement of neutrality is that it shall affect both sides alike. It is arguable that our present policy is unneutral because it does not affect both sides alike, but, however that may be, there can be no question that the refusal to sell to either side is the completest possible fulfillment of neutrality."

(The following letter, received after Capt. Lester testified, is here printed in full in the record, by direction of the chairman:)

[Officers: Rev. H. G. Stub, D. D., chairman; Hon. John L. Zimmerman, vice chairman; Rev. Lauritz Larsen, secretary. Executive committee: Rev. H. G. Stub, D. D., Hon. John L. Zimmerman, Rev. Lauritz Larsen, Rev. G. A. Brandelle, D. D., Rev. F. Knobel, D. D., Rev. F. Richter, D. D., Rev. G. H. L. Schuette, D. D., Rev. H. A. Weller, D. D.]

NATIONAL LUTHERAN COUNCIL,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
811 WOODWARD BUILDING,
Washington, D. C., December 20, 1918.

The Hon. LEE S. OVERMAN,
Chairman Judiciary Subcommittee,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: With reference to the minutes of the proceedings of your committee last Saturday, I beg leave to submit the following to the attention of your committee:

The Lutheran Church has as long and honorable a history in our country as any church, dating back to colonial days (1638). The man who rang the Liberty Bell in 1776 was a Lutheran, as was also the first speaker of the House of Representatives. The church in America has always stood for absolute loyalty to the government of the United States of America, and the people of our church have always been willing and ready to shed their blood for the nation's principles. I am sure the percentage of Lutherans in the army and navy is as great in proportion to membership as that of any church.

It is therefore to be deplored that the impression has been created that it is a German or a pro-German church. It has 9,788 pastors, 15,266 congregations and numbers 3,639,208 souls in the United States. How many of these congregations are German language congregations, it is hard to say. Perhaps 30%. But in nearly all of these the English language is also used. What part our members of the church have taken in the pro-German propaganda, they have taken as German sympathizers, and not because they were Lutherans. The Lutheran Church should not be blamed any more than any other church for that which individual members have done under influence from without. Certainly no church authorities or officials have instructed the pastors to preach pro-German sermons or "passed the word down the line" that this should be done. Until our country entered the war, the church officials encouraged support of the President of the United States in his effort to keep the country neutral. When our country took up the battle for humanity, the church rallied to the flag.

During the war the Lutheran Church has given to the army and navy 81 chaplains. Over 100 more had applied for commissions. According to the records of the Adjutant General's office, not one of these has been court martialed for disloyalty, although the minutes of your committee give the impression that several are now "doing time."

The state church of Prussia is not Lutheran, and the Lutheran Church in America has had no connection with it. The former kaiser, his father, and grandfather were not Lutheran, but members of the Reformed Church. In 1817 the king of Prussia compelled the Lutheran Church to unite with the Reformed or Calvinist church and formed a union church officially known as the Evangelical Church. This church is also represented in our country, but has no connection with the Lutheran Church. Since 1845, the Lutheran Church has been tolerated in Prussia as a nonconformist church.

The Lutheran Church in America has never been subsidized by the Prussian state church.

With reference to Kropp Seminary, the following is submitted:

"A STATEMENT OF THE RELATION OF THE GENERAL COUNCIL TO THE KROPP SEMINARY MADE BY THE PRESIDENT OF THE GENERAL COUNCIL.

The seminary at Kropp was founded in the year 1882 by Pastor Paulzen as a private institution for the training of ministers who should work in the Lutheran Church of America and especially in the mission field of the Northwest of Canada. As it was not advisable to have pastors serve in the Lutheran Church of America without any acquaintance with American conditions, the General Council entered into an agreement with the Kropp Seminary to the effect that graduates from the seminary should spend a year in an American institution. This was to acquaint them with American life and with American church conditions. This agreement was entered into in the year 1909. Furthermore, the General Council sent over to the Kropp Seminary an American Professor to introduce the students into American church life. A professor was sent in 1913 and ended his labors in 1916. During the year 1913, as far as is known, two candidates from the Kropp Seminary came to America. In the year 1914 two candidates and in the year 1915 none. The Kropp Seminary received from the General Council $4,000 annually which included the salary of the above-mentioned professor.

(Signed) T. E. SCHMAUK."

It will be noticed that this was not a way of subsidizing the Lutheran church in America. Quite the contrary.

The position of the Lutheran Church on the language question is clearly set forth in the following resolutions adopted by the National Lutheran Council, which represents most of the Lutheran bodies in America, at its meeting in Columbus, the 11th of December,

"Whereas, for the past twenty months the great world war has justly demanded the best of the resources, the manhood, and moral support of our people—the American nation—and has been carried on with such signal effectiveness and crowning success for justice, liberty, and equality in all the world, and has now been brought to an honorable and victorious ending; and,

Whereas, we realize that the ending of the war has brought upon our people many pressing and difficult social, economic, educational, and religious problems, to the consideration and solution of which the best possible thought and energies must be given; and

Whereas, it is apparent that the question of international relations, of immigration and emigration, as well as the vital question of the proper assimilation and Americanization of the many foreign elements within our country, must be considered and just policies attained; now, therefore,

Be it resolved, by the National Lutheran Council in meeting assembled,

1) That we humbly and sincerely render our heartfelt thanks unto Almighty God, who has given our just cause such magnificent victory; who has raised up men and leaders among us successfully to carry out the great war and readjustment programme, and blessed them with the spirit of selfsacrificing service; who has prompted the men and women of our nation to rally to the support of these leaders with all the best they could give, and to give unsparingly; and,

2) That we express our gratitude to God and to the people of our Lutheran Church for the magnificent way in which they have supported the Government of our country in the past emergency, giving unsparingly of their money and produce, their manhood and womanhood, as an integral part of the American nation, for the successful consummation of our national programme; and,

3) That we rejoice in the splendid and prominent part taken by the members and pastors of our church in the unselfish work for the welfare of the men of our army and navy and the upbuilding and maintenance of the morale both of the military and civil population; and,

4) That we pledge our continued support to the president of the United States, as well as all other officials and agencies of the national and state governments, in every effort for the welfare of our country and the people of other nations who may be in need as a result of the recent war; and, we call upon the people of our churches to continue their liberal support of the government and other officially recognized welfare and relief organizations so far as possible, that nothing may be left undone which might help to bring lasting peace on earth and good will among men; and,

5) That we declare our hearty sympathy with all natural and sane plans for the Americanization of immigrant and foreign elements of our country, and pledge our support to this work as an American church with nearly three hundred years of American history; and, as an organization peculiarly fitted for this work because of its constituency, character, and peculiar harmony with the institutions and principles of the United States, we call upon all pastors and members of our congregations to support such natural movement by encouraging the use of the language of the country in all public services where this can be done without neglecting in any way the spiritual care of such as must have the Gospel preached to them in the language of their childhood and youth to derive real benefit from it; and,

6) That maintaining the constitutional relation of church and state as separate institutions with divine sanction, yet having correlated functions, we call attention to the injustice and transgression which result from an inconsiderate attempt to infringe upon the liberty of the Christian to have the Gospel ministered unto him in a language which his heart and mind can best comprehend."

In order to avoid misunderstanding and that future historians shall not form a wrong impression of the position of a Lutheran Church in America during the war, it would no doubt be right that the letter be added to the minutes of your committee. I do not hesitate to ask for this, as I know that there is no intention on the part of your committee to do the Lutheran Church an injustice.

Respectfully submitted,

LAURITZ LARSEN,
Secretary National Lutheran Council.

In order that this statement shall be made for the entire Lutheran Church of our country, we hereby approve and endorse it in behalf of the Synodical Conference.

D. H. STEFFENS, Chairman.
J. FREDERIC WENCHEL,
Secretary Committee at Washington.

Capt. LESTER. I think that is all I have to offer.

Maj. HUMES. Are there any questions that the committee wants to ask Capt. Lester about any of the matters that he has testified to?

Senator STERLING. I want to ask him just one question relative to Dickinson alias Josiah Wingate. You spoke about his connection with the International News Service.

Capt. LESTER. No; with the Albert Press Bureau—I mean the Albert German Information Service.

Senator STERLING. Do you know his connection with the International News Service?

Capt. LESTER. Dickinson's?

Senator STERLING. Yes.

Capt. LESTER. I never found any connection with the International News Service of Dickinson. Dickinson worked entirely through Viereck, as far as our investigations showed.

Senator STERLING. I would like to ask Capt. Lester two or three questions in regard to some cartoons. Capt. Lester, in your investigations you have come in contact with the various forms of German propaganda, have you not?

Capt. LESTER. A great many of them.

Senator STERLING. Have you come in contact with the cartoon as a form of German propaganda?

Capt. LESTER. Yes, sir.

Senator STERLING. What would you say in regard to the use of the cartoon as a means of spreading propaganda?

Capt. LESTER. I think it is one of the most effective means of spreading propaganda that has ever been devised.

Senator STERLING. I call your attention here to a cartoon found in the New York American of July 2, 1917, some months after we had entered the war. It is the picture of an American Beauty rose. In the rose and at the top are a number of money bags, indicated by the dollar mark on each bag. Just over the money bags is some kind of an insect, probably meant to represent a bee, and on the wings of the bee are these names, and over them what is meant to represent the flags of the various countries, England, Italy, France, and Russia, and the cartoon is meant to portray the idea that this insect is after the money bags found in the American Beauty rose. This was published shortly after the first Liberty loan. Now, what would you say would be the natural effect of a cartoon of that kind? For what purpose was it published, in your opinion?

Capt. LESTER. Of course, the purpose of the cartoon is to convey the idea that the humming bird or bee, or whatever is represented by the wings, is seeking the honey from the rose, which will wither away later on, while the humming bird returns with what it has gathered. The idea which would be conveyed to me is that it is a warning. I do not think that cartoon—you have asked my opinion—would be construed as literally preventing an intelligent person from subscribing to the Liberty loan, but I think it is a cartoon to warn people to watch out that we do not lose the nectar that we have here, and let the allies fly away with it. That is as far as I could consistently go in answer to your question.

Senator STERLING. I call your attention to another cartoon in the American—

Senator NELSON. Was the cartoon you refer to above, in the American?

Senator STERLING. Yes. I am not sure whether this one is in the American or not, but it is published by the Hearst publications.

“Montag den 18, Juni, 1917.” It is a cartoon of Uncle Sam, Columbia, and the Geld-teufel, which I suppose means the “money devil,” and the British lion, and the legend under the cartoon is as follows:

THE LION'S SHARE.

Columbia, standing at the window with a signboard “War loans to be had here,” is pouring her savings into the hat of the “Uncle of the entire world” while the British lion is gathering into the English crown the gold falling through the holes in Uncle Sam's hat. The hats of Belgium, France, and Italy have been filled up, and the Russian bear and Japan are coming to get their shares. Greed remarks: “Now there will soon be no more poor devils.”

What would you say might be the effect of a cartoon like that upon the popular mind, and what was the purpose of publishing such a cartoon?

Capt. LESTER. The effect on the mind would be that the American people were being used—that is, they were being made the object of—I can only express it in one way, that they were being used by the allies; that the only interest that the allies had in the United States was the money that they could get out of her; and if taken literally or believed, if a man was on the point of subscribing to liberty bonds and that cartoon was placed in front of him on the street car as he came to his office, the thought might go through his mind, “Well, after all, I think that I am being used personally, so I won't subscribe. I am not going to waste my hard-earned money for people that are filching it out of America.”

Senator NELSON. In other words, this was to show that the allies were milking the United States.

Capt. LESTER. That is the obvious purpose of that cartoon—to convey the impression that the allies were milking the United States for their own purposes, and we were getting nothing in return.

Senator NELSON. And England was getting the cream?

Capt. LESTER. And England was getting the lion's share.

Senator OVERMAN. Was that published while the bond sale was on?

Senator NELSON. Afterwards.

Senator STERLING. Just soon after the first bond sale.

I call your attention to another cartoon of April 16, 1917, entitled "America First." The cartoon contains a picture of John Bull at the left. On the right is a fine figure representing the United States Army, also an army in addition to this particular figure. I call your attention to this: John Bull is represented as saying "Are you training those boys to fight over here for me, Mr. Officer?"—the one particular figure represents an officer—and the officer is reported as saying "They are to be trained in defense of the American Nation only."

What would you think was the object, purpose, and probable effect of a cartoon like that?

Capt. LESTER. The object of the cartoon was to convey to the observer the thought that when our army was raised and drilled it should be used solely within the United States for defensive purposes. The effect, of course, would be to discourage the shipment of troops to the allies.

Senator NELSON. That was part of the German propaganda—

Capt. LESTER. Yes, sir.

Senator NELSON (continuing). That we had no right to take our National Guard or State militia out of the country; and there was a good deal of agitation going on in the West in some localities. I do not know whether you have ever heard of it or not.

Capt. LESTER. There is abundant evidence of that.

Senator NELSON. We had a case of that kind where a lodge meeting was held, and a prominent attorney and the mayor of the town both claimed and argued strenuously at a public meeting that we had no right to send American soldiers over to Europe, that the National Guard or the State Militia ought to be used in the country. The lawyer was disbarred by our Bar Association, and the mayor was removed from his place by the governor of our State.

Senator OVERMAN. Did not some Senators claim the same thing?

Senator NELSON. I think the claim was even made in the United States Senate.

Senator STERLING. I will ask you, Capt. Lester, if the cartoon just shown you, in its idea comports with the following from the American of April 11, 1917, following the declaration of war, but before the passage of the espionage act:

Every shipment of food and military supplies from this time on is a blow at our own safety.

Now, our honest suggestion to the Congress is that it imperatively refuse to permit the further drainage of our food supplies and our military supplies and our money supplies to Europe. We insist that none of these things, at this eleventh hour, when the U boats are already launched in silent death graph, can have any decisive effect one way or the other upon Europe's conflict.

If the allies are to win, they will, and they must win with what preparedness they have, for all we can send them now, can not possibly change the result.

On the other hand, if the Teutons are about to win, we need every ounce of food and every ounce of preparedness, and ten times as much, right here at hand to meet that peril.

What do you think would be the natural effect of a publication of that kind, and what was its purpose, in your opinion?

Capt. LESTER. If that publication had reached every man of mature age in the United States, and he believed it, there would never have been any supplies shipped to Europe from the date of this publication, or any Army or Navy go over there, and the obvious purpose was to convey the idea emphatically that it was not the proper thing for the Government to do.

Senator NELSON. What paper was that published in, Senator?

Senator STERLING. The American.

Senator NELSON. The New York American?

Senator STERLING. The New York American of April 11; and I call your attention to the following, published in the American of May 17, 1917:

Our part in this war, for months to come, is to pay the bills—to finance and feed hungry and bankrupt England, hungry and bankrupt France, hungry and bankrupt Italy.

All the allies are begging us for cash.

England wants money—in heaps—at 3½ per cent, while she pays her own people 5 per cent, and demands 5 per cent for the money she lends France, Italy, Russia, and Canada and Australia.

The Italian commission is here with a request for money. Serbia is begging for money. So is Roumania. So are Panama and Cuba. We suppose Mexico and Argentina and Brazil and Colombia will soon prefer their modest requests.

All the world seems to be headed toward our National Treasury. And Mr. McAdoo ardently believes in the Scripture which avers that the Lord loves a cheerful giver.

The German Empire went into this war with less than half the wealth of England and France. Germany has managed to get along without help. France is now begging us for millions. We do not understand why England, with much more wealth and income than either Germany or France, must be handed a scoop shovel and be told to help herself to our money.

What would you say would be the effect, if believed, of that article, so far as creating distrust or suspicion for England is concerned?

Capt. LESTER. Well, the effect of that article, if believed, would be an absolute severance of any commercial or financial relations with England, and refusal on the part of every American, through public taxes or otherwise, to contribute to the financial needs of England or the allies.

Senator STERLING. And this:

Our only correct strategy is to spend all our money and all our labor in preparing our Navy and our armies here at their natural base, and so compelling Germany, if she wants to fight, to come to us and see how she likes the taste of our granite.

To throw away our strategic advantage by sending our fleets and our armies away from their home base to be parts of a European offensive which has practically broken down is a blundering proposal that would make a real strategist gasp, and that will cost us dear if we accede to it.

Our money, like our armies and our fleets, should be concentrated at its home base and not dispersed abroad.

Senator NELSON. Is that in the American?

Senator STERLING. The American of May 17, 1917.

I would like to ask Capt. Lester if the natural effect of that, if believed, would not be to prevent any participation in this war on the part of America?

Capt. LESTER. Yes, sir; without a question that was the purpose of that.

Senator STERLING. Here is a short extract from an article in the American of July 5, 1917:

If, the allies, with American assistance, can thoroughly defeat the central empires, France is to regain Alsace, Poland is to be made an autonomous State, and England is to annex the German colonies in Africa and establish British control of Mesopotamia, Armenia, Palestine, Syria, and the Near East. In addition to these gains, Germany's oversea trade is to be so thoroughly crippled that it can not effectively compete with Great Britain's commerce and carrying trade for many decades to come.

In brief, the British Government's program, naturally and intelligently enough, is to make England the undisputed dominant power of the world.

Her colonial empire, already too vast for the safety of other nations, is to be hugely increased. What the British Government's proposal actually means is that no other people can trade overseas without having the permission of Great Britain, or without paying tribute to Great Britain.

Now, I will ask you if the natural effect of that, if believed, would not be to further create distrust and suspicion of England, one of our principal allies in the war?

Capt. LESTER. Unquestionably.

Senator STERLING. I call to your attention an article in the American as late as July 5, 1917:

We can imagine no statesmanship more futile than for us to exhaust our wealth, to endanger our prosperity, and to sacrifice our young men, not to equalize and stabilize the political relations of the world, but to pull down one power on the ground that it aims at dangerous domination of the world and then to place another power in the seat of world empire and world dominion.

To what other power is reference there made, in your opinion, from the previous excerpts which I have read?

Capt. LESTER. It is an obvious reference to England.

Senator STERLING. And what would be the natural effect, if that is believed, on anyone in America in regard to our ally, England?

Capt. LESTER. The obvious effect would be to create distrust and lack of support of the allies.

Senator STERLING. And what effect would it most likely have on the war, and the vigorous and successful prosecution of the war, if distrust of our principal ally was created?

Capt. LESTER. It would have the effect of deterring any alliance or association with England or the allies.

Senator STERLING. My attention has been called, Capt. Lester, to an issue of the North American of April 25, 1917.

Senator NELSON. Of the North American?

Senator STERLING. Of the American.

Senator NELSON. Of New York?

Senator STERLING. The New York American of April 24, 1917, and I read from the editorial:

Some of the blunders in contemplation and, we fear, in process of commission are, first, the loan of billions to the unstable and unestablished revolutionary Government of Russia, which may vanish any day in the storms of counter-revolution, whose imminent approach are heralded by so many signs; second, the complete subordination of preparedness for America's defense to supplying England's frantic demands for help; and, third, the steady entanglement of the United States in the web of European intrigues and ambitions, against which Washington so wisely warned us when living, and would warn us if he were alive to-day.

The painful truth is that we are being practically used as a mere reinforcement of England's warfare and England's future aggrandizement, and to all intents and purposes are simply assuming the rôle of another Canada and another Australia—a crown colony rushing to lay all its sources and risk all its own safety for the sake of the empire.

It is not pleasant to have to say these things, but they are talked everywhere among the people and are the fundamental reasons why the war does not get along any faster among the people.

Senator STERLING. I will ask you if in your opinion an editorial like that was calculated to make the war get along any faster among the people?

Capt. LESTER. Decidedly not.

Senator STERLING (continuing reading) :

We say plainly in Washington that the whole people are ready to back up solidly, with all possible enthusiasm and with all their resources, to the last dollars and the last man, an American war for the rights and benefit of America, but that the majority, and the vast majority, too, are not disposed, to put it very mildly, to be enthusiastic over fighting a war for England, to save England from defeat, to reestablish her insolent tyranny over the seas that should be free, to put our Navy at her disposal, to strip our own people of food for her, to neglect our own defense against terrible dangers that may come in order that England may be safeguarded with American men, American money, American resources, and everything that is absolutely necessary to our own defense and safety.

Had that been published before we entered the war, how would you characterize it, Capt. Lester, as pro-German or not?

Capt. LESTER. Why that is a question, Senator, that requires an answer with an explanation which I feel perfectly free to give you so far as my opinion may be of any value. The editorial policy of the New York American, or rather Hearst publications, so far as it was formed apparently from information furnished by Dr. William Bayard Hale, while he was in Germany acting for the Hearst papers, was an editorial policy that was made and formulated in Germany, intended and designed to be spread through the Hearst publications in this country, and this information was sent out by Dr. Hale under the control of the German Government. If there had been in Dr. Hale's telegrams which were sent to the Hearst papers one scintilla of criticism of the German Empire, or the German war policy, or the Kaiser, or anything which hinted at remarks and statements reflecting upon Mr. Wilson and this Government, Mr. William Bayard Hale would have been guilty of a crime under the laws of Germany, and would have been dealt with summarily, without a question, and that is the reason that I stated to Senator Wolcott yesterday that after reading these messages twice—there are hundreds of them—not in a single one was there a statement that was anything but pro-German. That is a fact, also.

Senator STERLING. Since this was published after we entered the war, and since it is a bitter attack upon England, and intended to create suspicion and distrust of England, our principal ally in the war, would it be said to be other than simply pro-German?

Capt. LESTER. I think I will have to ask that your question be a little more definite.

Senator STERLING. I can not ask what might be called a leading question in a lawsuit, but I think here we have a little more latitude. Would it be called anti-American, since it was published after we entered the war?

Capt. LESTER. There is no question about that, the particular portion of the editorial being anti-American, contrary to the governmental policies, contrary to the desires of the people as shown by the action of Congress, and contrary to the established policy of the Chief Executive, the President. It was anti-American.

Senator NELSON. And pro-German?

Capt. LESTER. And pro-German. That was pro-German in the sense that it favored the exact things that Germany was to accomplish by its propaganda system in the United States, as conducted by its direct agents.

Senator STERLING. Reading a little further from this same editorial:

We know right well the argument which those who are apparently interested in England's welfare more than America's welfare use to justify this subordination of our own preparedness and our safety to England's wants.

They argue that America and England are common foes of Germany and that we are only defending America by defending England.

But what about all these loud and jubilant assertions that the allies are crushing Germany—that they need only a little more time to smash the German armies and to dictate terms to the German Government?

The English Government and the English press tell us every day that such is the situation. Why, then, is it necessary for us to stop the construction of our new battleships, empty our storehouses of food, strip our Treasury of billions, and send our Navy and Army to save victorious England from these poor, beaten, starving, mutinous, despairing Germans?

Will some one kindly help our feeble-thinking machinery to make these two propositions square with one another?

Now, let us get down to brass tacks and business—for war is no time for academic theses or sentimental nonsense. War is purely a matter of business—and of swift, bloody, brutal business.

The huge armies which are now swaying backward and forward in France are in the last, gigantic grapple of the war. A few months—a few weeks, probably—will settle the issue upon land.

The submarine warfare that is being waged around England will either succeed in its purpose within a very few months or it will begin to fail, and the beginning of failure in that case is equivalent to an end in failure.

Within the few months that we are bound to settle the ultimate result of the war, even if they do not produce peace, we can not give any substantial aid of any kind at all that can possibly change the result of the present spring and summer campaigns on land or sea. It is impossible. Time does not permit.

The only help we can proffer is the use of our Navy, the use of our money, and the shipment of what food and supplies we can get through to England.

And we affirm, and we know that not one of our naval and military officers of standing and experience will deny, that neither our battleships nor our money, nor our shipments of supplies can have the slightest appreciable effect upon the decisive battle raging in France or can, in any substantial way, affect the predestined success or failure of the submarine siege of England.

It is too late.

Within 90 days one side or the other will be so definitely on the road to victory that nobody will any longer doubt the outcome.

And it seems to us that we ought to be looking ahead and settling upon what our demands and our policies will be.

We know, of course, that looking ahead and preparing for future emergencies is not usual in Washington; that it is a coincidence, and not a habit, when preparedness and emergencies happen to meet; that the theory of our statecraft is to wait till something happens and then look around to see what can be done in a hurry—and badly and expensively done, of course.

But we do think that some foresight and some preparation should be in evidence now.

I will not read further from the article; but taking it so far as I have read it, what would you say its effect, as a whole, would be?

Capt. LESTER. If every official in the Government service of the United States, including the Chief Executive, and every male citizen of the United States of the age of 18 and upward, had read that article and believed it, they would have quit—laid down.

Senator STERLING. And there would have been no unconditional surrender by this time?

Capt. LESTER. It would have been an unconditional surrender by the United States.

Senator NELSON. To Germany?

Capt. LESTER. Yes, sir.

Senator STERLING. Yes. I think that is all I want to ask along this line.

Capt. LESTER. I would like to make a statement in reference to editorials, advertisements by commercial houses, and propaganda, that will take but a minute.

The object of an advertisement is to convince a person to whom it is directed that he must buy the particular article to the exclusion of anything else.

The advertising agent's design is to convince 100 per cent of the people to whom his advertisement is directed that they must follow the suggestion of the advertisement.

The object of propaganda, whether conducted by Germans or anybody else, is to convince that 100 per cent that the statements they make are true and that they must believe them and govern themselves accordingly and act accordingly. The object of an editorial in a newspaper, where it is directed to action, or resistance to action, has the same identical object in view; it is to convince that 100 per cent. In other words, the message it carries, if accepted and believed by the person who reads it, is contained in the editorial for the purpose of obtaining the result of action or refusal to act. That may be a little involved, but the idea is identical in all forms of that kind of propaganda.

In answer to your question on this particular editorial, Senator, and others that have been called to my attention: The object of the editorial, or those responsible for it, whether it is the publisher or somebody that was directing the publisher's efforts, was to get action on the part of the person to whom it was directed, which is the public of the United States in this instance, or, on the other hand, to get that same public to refuse to act.

Senator OVERMAN. Is there anything else, Captain?

Capt. LESTER. I believe that is all.

Senator OVERMAN. Have you anything further, Maj. Humes?

Maj. HUMES. Gentlemen, there is one matter here that I will call attention to. There are some gentlemen present who are interested to be heard by the committee on this question of the reading into the record of certain editorials of the Chicago Tribune. There was a suggestion made, at a hearing last week, that certain editorials be read into the record. The gentlemen representing the Chicago Tribune are present, and they would like to be heard before these editorials are read into the record, by way of a protest.

Senator OVERMAN. A protest against their being put in at all?

Senator NELSON. They have not been put into the record.

Senator OVERMAN. They have been ordered put in.

Maj. HUMES. They were ordered to be put in, but the actual mechanical work of putting them in has not been accomplished.

Senator OVERMAN. They were ordered put in, and Maj. Humes was to read them and put in such parts of the documents as he thought contained German propaganda. It was left to his discretion to read the articles and put in such parts as related to German propaganda.

Does this gentleman wish to be heard?

Mr. WEYMOUTH KIRKLAND. Yes, Senator; I would like to be heard for a few moments.

Senator OVERMAN. Had we better wait for the full committee, or hear him now?

Senator NELSON. I think we might as well hear him if he wants to make a statement.

Senator OVERMAN. Very well. We will hear you.

STATEMENT OF MR. WEYMOUTH KIRKLAND.

Mr. KIRKLAND. The Tribune has no desire, Mr. Chairman, to protest against this matter going into the record, but we would like to have the committee understand who compiled it and why it was compiled and the purpose of compiling it.

Senator OVERMAN. What has that to do with it—who compiled it or the purpose of compiling it? The question is: Do you protest against its being put in to the record, and is it not true? What difference does it make who put it in or who had it put in? The question is: Is it German propaganda?

Mr. KIRKLAND. The motive of the parties who prepared it, it seems to me, is material.

Senator OVERMAN. Suppose somebody had a motive against Hearst and had prepared all this stuff, is that any reason why it should not go into the record?

Mr. KIRKLAND. I would not care to pass on that, Senator.

Senator OVERMAN. I do not think we ought to hear anything about the motive of preparing it or who prepared it. What has that to do with it? Do you think it has anything to do with it, Senator?

Senator STERLING. Hardly.

Senator OVERMAN. The question, it seems to me, is whether this is German propaganda. If it is, is there any reason why it should not go in?

Mr. KIRKLAND. You understand, Senator, I am not here on behalf of the Chicago Tribune to protest against its going in. I do not know if my protest would be heeded or whether I have any right to protest; but we are not protesting against its going in.

Senator OVERMAN. We would like to have you make a statement, if you think it should not go in.

Mr. KIRKLAND. I do not make that statement on behalf of the Tribune that it should not go in; but I think this, that it was prepared by certain attorneys on behalf of Mr. Henry Ford, who has a lawsuit pending against the Tribune, and that was the purpose of its preparation, and that was the reason the lawsuit was continued, on behalf of the attorneys for Mr. Ford, over the protest of the Tribune, which has been trying to get the case to trial, and they prepared this document, and called it the war record of the Chicago Tribune picking out articles from the Tribune and certain editorials and parts of editorials that they think sustained certain propositions in their case, which, apparently, they wish to have tried in the newspapers rather than in the courthouse in Detroit.

We contend that it is not the war record of the Tribune, and that the only reason—we thought as attorneys for the Tribune that the motive of the men in preparing it might be of some material interest to the committee. I am not attempting to pass on whether——

Senator OVERMAN. I understand you claim that Mr. Ford is trying to get notoriety for this German propaganda in order to aid him in his suit, wherein he has sued the Tribune?

Mr. KIRKLAND. No; he has sued us for a million dollars libel, and the suit was to come up last Wednesday, on the motion of the Tribune, which has been trying to get it to trial. Over their protest it was continued, which is the second continuance. It was continued for various reasons stated, one of which was the sickness of counsel.

It was our opinion that it was continued in order to give them time to get out this pamphlet, not that Mr. Ford personally seeks notoriety for German propaganda—because I insist that that is not German propaganda—but that he preferred to have the case tried in that way, and to have the contents of that pamphlet get to a great many people, possibly jurors who might be called on in the case for the State of Michigan; and when it gets into the record it has the object that the gentleman who prepared the document evidently desired that it should have; it gets to a great many people who might not otherwise see it or who might not otherwise read it, and who might, from these few editorials that are taken, think that that was the war record of the Chicago Tribune. It might, undoubtedly, have the desired effect in the actual trial of the case, if we can ever get them to trial.

That is the only reason that we thought that the committee should understand that, when they consider that document.

Senator OVERMAN. The committee certainly does not want to hurt anybody or injure anybody in this investigation. It is not for the purpose of aiding Mr. Ford or anybody else. The only question, to my mind, is, Is it German propaganda?

We have a telegram here put into the record, from the German office, showing that the Chicago Tribune was friendly to Germany.

Mr. KIRKLAND. I heard that telegram read, Senator, and I would not say that it showed that the Chicago Tribune was friendly to Germany.

Senator OVERMAN. It said that it is.

Mr. KIRKLAND. That was a telegram to von Bernstorff.

Senator OVERMAN. I stand corrected on that. However, it stated it, as a fact, rather than an opinion.

Mr. KIRKLAND. Yes. I heard Capt. Lester read that yesterday.

Senator OVERMAN. Yes.

Mr. KIRKLAND. But they could take editorials from the Chicago Tribune, along in the days following and preceding the editorial that Ford's attorneys have picked out, which were decided proally.

Senator OVERMAN. I do not doubt that.

Mr. KIRKLAND. Yes. It was the desire of the gentlemen who prepared that pamphlet to show that the Chicago Tribune wished certain intervention in Mexico for the purpose of aiding Germany.

If they had gone back before the war, they would have found the Chicago Tribune was decidedly in favor of the same thing in Mexico before Germany was involved in war.

I did not come here for the purpose of asking the committee not to receive that at all, but——

Senator OVERMAN. What is your purpose?

Mr. KIRKLAND. I just wanted the committee to understand why it was prepared, and who prepared it.

Senator OVERMAN. So you have no objection to its going into the record?

Mr. KIRKLAND. No; I have no objection whatever.

Maj. HUMES. Do you mean why the editorials were prepared, or why this pamphlet was prepared?

Mr. KIRKLAND. Why the pamphlet was prepared.

Maj. HUMES. As I understand, it is not the purpose of the committee to put the pamphlet in evidence.

Senator OVERMAN. Not at all.

Maj. HUMES. But the committee was to put certain editorials from the Tribune in evidence, and until I could get a chance to verify them. I have not taken it up, because I wanted to make sure that the excerpts were correct; and I thought that possibly it would be necessary to put the whole editorial in, rather than excerpts, in order to be fair.

Mr. KIRKLAND. I think that is perfectly proper.

Maj. HUMES. Just as I asked you if you would furnish me with the full text of the editorial.

Mr. KIRKLAND. And I said that I would.

Maj. HUMES. So that when they went into the record, if they did go into the record, it would be fair to all parties concerned.

Senator NELSON. That is the best way. If they go in, put in the whole article.

Maj. HUMES. Yes.

Mr. KIRKLAND. I am perfectly willing to furnish you with them. The editorial is proper to go in, but I wanted the committee to understand why the pamphlet was prepared.

Senator OVERMAN. We do not want to aid any lawsuit or injure the rights of any man, but the question in my mind is whether the editorial is pro-German. If it is pro-German, I do not see why it should not go into the record, the same as any other pro-German editorial from any other paper.

Mr. KIRKLAND. I was not attempting, Senator, to tell you what you should let in and what you should not let in, at all. That was not my purpose.

Senator OVERMAN. I think I understand your position, and I believe you understand ours.

Mr. KIRKLAND. We do.

Senator OVERMAN. Now, Maj. Humes, is there anything else?

Maj. HUMES. I do not know that the committee will be interested in this. Some of these papers were left with me to go over during Mr. Bielaski's testimony. I have not read them into the record as yet. I can do that after the committee adjourns, of course.

Senator OVERMAN. Have you read these Tribune articles?

Maj. HUMES. I have read the excerpts, Senator. I have not been able to get the original text.

Senator OVERMAN. I wish you would examine them, and if you think they are German propaganda, let us see them, and we will decide this question later.

Maj. HUMES. I did not feel that I wanted to take a quotation or an excerpt from an editorial and read it into the record, assuming responsibility for just how it should be interpreted; and I wanted to get the original editorials themselves, so that I could see, then, just what the connection was.

Senator OVERMAN. I hope you will get the editorials, Major, and if you think they are in the interest of Germany, let the committee know, and we will decide hereafter whether we will put them in.

Maj. HUMES. Yes, sir.

Senator OVERMAN. Is there anything else that you want to put in?

Maj. HUMES. I believe that is all at this time, Senator.

Capt. LESTER. I wish to present to the committee a statement of various books, periodicals, and magazines published in Germany and widely distributed there, which were ordered by the International News Service to be shipped from Germany to the United States during the years 1915 and 1916, which were referred to in my testimony of yesterday. They are as follows:

LESTER EXHIBIT No. 26.

1. Gartenlaube, a periodical for youth.
2. Fliegende Blätter, a humorous publication.
3. Jugend—a periodical for youth.
4. (Klasing) and (Vilhagen's) Monatschrift—a political and scientific publication.
5. Ueber Land und Meer, an illustrated publication.
6. Daheim, an illustrated family paper.
7. Der Wahre (Jakob), a humorous publication.
8. Buchhalle, a book review.
9. Für Alle Welt, an illustrated popular weekly.
10. Fremdenblatt, a political publication.
11. Simplicissimus, a humorous paper.
12. Brummer, a humorous publication.
13. Berliner Tageblatt.
14. Die Wache, an illustrated magazine.
15. Lustige Blätter, a humorous publication.
16. Zukunft, Harden's magazine.
17. Kaiserkalendar, a calendar.
18. Leipziger Illustrierte Zeitung, this is a very widely distributed standard publication.
19. Hamburger Wache, an illustrated weekly.
20. Berliner Illustrierte Zeitung.
21. Echo, an illustrated weekly.
22. Modenwelt, a fashion magazine, and
23. Interessante Blatt.

I also desire to put into the record at this point the following messages from the International News, giving orders to various concerns in Germany for shipment to America of quantities of the above publications:

Capt. LESTER. The following radios passed between Dr. Hale and Mr. William Randolph Hearst:

LESTER EXHIBIT No. 27.

Recd. from S. S. Berlin Via. Nauen Date: 9-15-16
To RANDOLPH HEARST
New York

Have secured you American rights Captain Koenigs book provided following arrangement satisfactory Colon manuscript approximately thirty thousand words delivered me September twentieth stop we pay cost translation and agree

1818 BREWING AND LIQUOR INTERESTS AND GERMAN PROPAGANDA.

cable approximately ten thousand words for serial use during month or so required for full text reach American by submarine stop you have American rights both English German texts two sets mats latter being forwarded stop profits sale this book go to pension fund Oceanreiderel stop they demanded large lump sum but finally agreed basis royalty for which they await your offer hoping it liberal as possible stop they expect first high class edition book sell for about dollar quarter followed by cheaper popular edition stop book is signed by Koenig is in first person and first five chapters read well stop can send you instalment within a week and first publication possibly in Sunday paper will synchronize with event adding interest to story stop tis stipulated that special courtesies be extended Staatszeitung and Fatherland and expectation is your royalty offer benefit pension fund liberal

BAYARD HALE

LESTER EXHIBIT No. 28.

From Jx NYK 15 Date Sept 16/16

To BAYARD HALE

American Correspondent Berlin

Desire to donate entire profits of all koenig book to pension fund would like to publish all or large part of book in sunday american believe sunday publication will help rather than hurt sale of book

HEARST AMERICAN.

LESTER EXHIBIT No. 29.

Recd from S. S. Berlin Via. Nauen Date 9-22-16

To WILLIAM RANDOLPH HEARST

New York

Berlin twentyone your generous offer donate profits Deutschland book deeply appreciated stop no objection publication almost entire Sunday American stop tis hoped however publication begin soon how much shall I cable stop hope first edition be handsome cloth volume

BAYARD HALE

Senator OVERMAN. We will take an adjournment now until Tuesday at half past 10.

(The subcommittee thereupon, at 1.10 o'clock p. m., adjourned until Tuesday, December 17, 1918, at 10.30 o'clock a. m.)

BREWING AND LIQUOR INTERESTS AND GERMAN PROPAGANDA.

TUESDAY, DECEMBER 17, 1918.

UNITED STATES SENATE,
SUBCOMMITTEE OF THE COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY,
Washington, D. C.

The subcommittee met at 10.30 o'clock a. m., in room 226, Senate Office Building, Senator Lee S. Overman presiding.

Present: Senators Overman (chairman), King, Wolcott, Nelson, and Sterling.

Senator OVERMAN. I have here a letter, addressed to me, from Mr. Morris Jastrow, jr., which he desires to be incorporated in the record, and, at the request of Senator Penrose, I direct that it shall be.

(The letter referred to is here printed in full in the record; as follows:)

248 SOUTH TWENTY-THIRD STREET,
Philadelphia Pa., December 11, 1918.

Hon. LEE S. OVERMAN,
Chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee,
Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: In view of the fact that my name appears in a long list that was published in the press of this country a few days ago, said to have been found in the diary of a certain Dr. Fuehr, (agent of the German Embassy at Washington), that was laid before your Committee, I beg to submit the following statement in earnest protest against the unwarranted use of my name, and in explanation of my attitude towards the war.

I do not know Dr. Fuehr, and never heard his name until I saw the publication in the newspapers above referred to. I never had any connection of any kind with the German Embassy or with any kind of German propaganda, or any other kind of propaganda, before, or during, or since the war. The use of my name in the diary was, therefore, entirely unwarranted, and I beg to submit that the Department of Justice, before allowing that diary to be brought before your Committee as evidence, should have given those whose names appeared therein an opportunity of making an explanation. It is not fair to citizens in good repute to have their names published far and wide through this country as connected with a propaganda with which they not only had nothing to do but which they strongly condemn, in common with all other fellow-citizens. I venture to think that it is the duty of a Department of Justice to protect citizens against unfounded implications, as much as it is the function of such a Department to expose persons who are guilty of misdemeanor.

As for my own attitude towards the war, I wish to say that at the beginning of the conflict in 1914, after my return from Munich, where I spent the summer of 1914 engaged in research in my chosen field, I wrote a number of articles which were published in the Public Ledger of Philadelphia, and some letters which were published in The New York Evening Post and The Nation, which were mainly concerned with "a plea for fairness and moderation" (as, in fact, I entitled the first article) regarding our judgments about the war. These articles and letters were written entirely of my own initiative and solely with a view of presenting certain facts and views which I thought might be of value and interest to others on the subject that was occupying the attention of the entire American public. My chief aim was to counteract the tendency which I regarded as unjust, to turn every incident and occurrence of the war to the disadvantage of Germany and to blame her for things which could not be laid at her door. The tone of these articles was moderate, and I may say that in the very first one I condemned the violation of Belgium. At the same time they indicated a sympathetic attitude towards Germany, the result of a strong intellectual attachment to that country, due to the training that I had received at German universities (after finishing my college course at the University of Pennsylvania) and further strengthened my repeated sojourns in that country, more particularly in Munich.

My attitude received a shock when reports concerning the treatment of Belgium by the German government and soldiery were confirmed, and this sympathy was entirely dispelled by the sinking of the Lusitania. Shortly after that inhuman act, I published in the New York Evening Post, of June 6th, and likewise in the Public Ledger of the same date, an article expressing my horror of the act, and appealing to the friends of Germany to recall to her "her obligation to the world and to herself as one of the standard-bearers of civilization." Instead of making amends for her brutal act, Germany continued in her course which lost her the sympathies of those who still believed in her at the beginning of the war and forced them to become her enemies.

Since that time I have published two books on the war, (1) "The War and the Bagdad Railway" (Philadelphia, Lippincotts, 1917) and (2) "The War and the Coming Peace" (Philadelphia, Lippincotts, 1918), in which I set forth incidental to my subject, in clear and unmistakable language my attitude of opposition towards Germany's policy, as revealed in the course of the war, and my horror at the brutal manner in which she was conducting the war. I may refer you more particularly to the statement found on pages 124-126 of the former book, and on page 32 seq. of the latter, in which I condemn in unmeasured terms Germany's inhumane conduct, and mention specifically the insidious propaganda and the elaborate spy system organized by her, as part of a system that converted the war into a struggle for a great moral issue waged by the Allies and ourselves to save the world from the menace to liberty and civilization.

In view of this I feel justified in asking your Committee to be kind enough to include this statement in your records, and to ask also for your protection against the further unwarranted use of my name. For your further information, I beg to call attention to an error in the published list from Fuehrer's diary, in which I appear as being connected with the University of Wisconsin. That is not correct. I have never been connected with that institution, but have been associated, as a member of the faculty, with the University of Pennsylvania, and as Librarian of that institution, for almost thirty years; and I may add that I have resided in Philadelphia ever since my fifth year. The error furnishes a further illustration of my contention that the Department of Justice, before submitting material as evidence, should first ascertain the facts.

I have the honor to be, Sir, obediently yours,

MORRIS JASTROW, Jr.

Senator NELSON. I have a letter here from Rev. Paul Ludwig which I desire to have incorporated in the record.

(The letter referred to is here printed in full in the record, as follows:)

BARRINGTON, CAMDEN COUNTY, N. J., December 15, 1918.

The Honorable KNUTE NELSON,

United States Senator, Washington, D. C.

SIR: You having been mentioned in certain newspaper reports as a member of the Senate Committee for the Investigation of German Propaganda, I take the liberty of addressing you regarding a matter which has come up before your committee, and which needs to be corrected.

In to-day's issue of "The Philadelphia Record," first page and first column under the glaring headlines, "Propaganda Plots reach to Pulpits—German Lutheran Ministers accused of Preaching Pro-German Sermons, Penitentiary for Some," etc., it has been reported that Captain George B. Lester, of the Army Intelligence Service, has made the following statements before your committee:

"That the German Government for many years had subsidized the Kroeber Institute, a Lutheran theological seminary, graduates of which went to " parts of the world to preach in favor of Germany, with their expenses paid by the German Government."

If Capt. Lester has been quoted correctly, he unjustly brands by these statements about 200 faithful Lutheran pastors in the United States and Canada as paid agents and active propagandists of the former German Government. Many unjust suspicions have been aroused and many actual persecutions have been enacted during these times of passion and hate against ministers of the gospel who were unfortunate enough to serve German-speaking congregations; but such specific accusations are about the worst along these lines, and I for one am not willing to let them go unchallenged, nor to be stigmatized as a traitor to this country to which I have sworn allegiance many years ago.

Please permit me to give you the facts in the case, which I am in a position to know, as I have been a student in the seminary for six years.

Early in the eighties of the last century, when the German emigrants came to this country in very large numbers, the American Lutheran church sent urgent appeals to the Lutheran church in Germany to help in taking care of these newly-arrived Germans, for whom the American church was unable to supply German-speaking ministers in sufficient numbers. In response to these appeals the seminary at Kropp was founded, as a pure work of faith and an absolutely private undertaking, in an obscure village in Schleswig-Holstein and by an unknown village pastor in the year 1882. It continued its work until 1916, when the death of the founder and the war conditions put a stop to it. About 200 graduates from this institution have come to the United States and Canada, the great majority of whom have become loyal citizens of these countries, and use the English language as well as the German in the performance of their ministerial work.

The seminary was supported by the tuition fees of the students and by benevolent contributions from Lutherans of Germany and America. It did not receive any subsidies or support whatever from the Government. The government was rather antagonistic to distinctively Lutheran institutions of this kind, as being in a sense opposed to the non-Lutheran Prussian state church. And the founder and principal of the seminary has even been imprisoned twice for criticisms of the government.

The graduates did not go to all parts of the world "to preach in favor of Germany." They are not political agents of Germany or any other country, but consider themselves servants of the Kingdom of God. No matter what their political or national sentiments may be they, together with all other Lutheran pastors have too high a regard for their divine calling as to bring such matters into the pulpit. The Lutheran church insists clearly and strongly upon the separation of church and state.

The greatest injustice is done to these pastors in the statement that their expenses were paid by the German Government. I am personally acquainted with at least half of their number, but I do not know of a single one who ever received a single penny from the German Government. The very idea is so utterly ridiculous to every one who knows the true conditions as to make one laugh, if it were not at the same time so maliciously unjust as to bring the bitter tears of helpless innocence into our eyes.

It may not be possible that "audiatur et altera pars;" but even if this letter of defense does not reach all who heard the accusations, at least one member of the committee shall know the truth.

I am, sir,

Yours very respectfully,

(Rev.) PAUL LUDWIG.

Senator OVERMAN. I have also a letter here from Mr. Merrill, the manager of the Hearst papers, which I shall first read, and may put in later. He is entitled to be heard, of course. Are you ready to proceed, Maj. Humes?

Maj. HUMES. I see that Mr. Samuel Untermeyer is here. He asked to be heard, and this is the time fixed for his hearing.

Judge AARON J. LEVY. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the indulgence of the committee for a moment? I am Judge Aaron J. Levy, of New York. I likewise asked for an opportunity to be heard. I am a judicial officer in the city of New York, of rather pressing activities, and if the committee will indulge me, and Mr. Untermeyer will pardon me. I would like to be heard first, so that I may get back to my labors.

Senator OVERMAN. If that is satisfactory to Mr. Untermeyer, it will be satisfactory to the committee.

Mr. UNTERMEYER. Certainly, that is satisfactory to me.

TESTIMONY OF JUDGE AARON J. LEVY.

(The witness was sworn by the chairman.)

Senator OVERMAN. What position do you hold?

Judge LEVY. I am president justice of the municipal court of the city of New York.

Senator OVERMAN. You may proceed, Judge Levy, with what you have to say.

Judge LEVY. In amplification of my wire to Senator Overman, yet with all possible brevity at my command, I wish to state that after an effort with my friend, Dr. James F. Dorr, of Florida, at the request of Mr. Miller, in the late spring of 1915, to secure help for Mr. Miller in support of the Leader, which began publication in March of that year in opposition to Warheit, although he had 47 per cent of the stock in the latter, he again asked me to intercede in his behalf and go to the leader of the Democratic Party in the city of New York and suggest the purchase of an interest in the Leader. The Leader was owned, edited, and published by a close corporation, in which Mr. Miller practically owned all of the stock, and, therefore, the Leader was in the exclusive control of Mr. Miller. I did this, as he requested, and learned that the Democratic Party in New York had no funds for this purpose, but it was suggested to me that since I knew Mr. Untermeyer, and since the person speaking told me that Mr. Untermeyer thought well of me, I might approach him; that he had confidence in the business judgment of Mr. Untermeyer; and if Mr. Untermeyer said it was a good business proposition this leader would be willing to personally join him. I told this to Mr. Miller, and also that I did not wish to presume upon my friendship with Mr. Untermeyer in this respect. Mr. Miller said that his condition was desperate, and he would be obliged to go into bankruptcy and ruin, and would probably lose his Warheit stock, which was then pledged with Mr. Jacob N. Schiff, of New York, of the firm of Kuhn, Loeb & Co., for $35,000, which sum Mr. Miller had invested in the Leader; that his creditors were pressing him; and I yielded.

I saw Mr. Untermeyer with Mr. Miller some time after the middle of August, 1915. Mr. Untermeyer heard Mr. Miller out and advised him not to borrow this money, which he requested, since he would lose it. I urged Mr. Untermeyer to assist Mr. Miller. Mr. Miller stated that he would give as collateral his Warheit stock, which he would redeem, and 45 per cent of the Leader stock, retaining 45 per cent for himself, and leave the remaining 10 per cent with some third person mutually agreeable, to hold the balance of power, recommending that I be made such third person. To this I demurred telling Mr. Untermeyer in Mr. Miller's hearing that I did not wish to be involved in possible controversy, knowing of Mr. Miller's difficulties with his former partners in the Warheit. Mr. Miller argued that there was no reason for such apprehension, and, unless he received aid by the following day, he would be obliged to shut down publication of the Leader. Mr. Untermeyer then said to him, "I think your proposition hopeless, but I am willing to help you on account of Aaron." Referring to me, that being my first name. "Turn this over in your mind overnight and let me know to-morrow. If you feel then as you do now, I shall help you." The next evening Mr. Untermeyer called me on the phone and expressed great surprise at a letter, Senator, which was made a part of the letter to you, addressed to Mr. Untermeyer, on the date of August 19, 1915, and Mr. Untermeyer said to me that he could not understand that letter of Mr. Miller's. I could not understand it either, and later asked Mr. Miller about it. Mr. Miller said, "It can not do Mr. Untermeyer any harm, and may be of service to me in the future." I was indeed very angry, and Mr. Miller plainly saw I was, and attempted to conciliate me.

About March, 1916, Mr. Miller came to me again and wished me to help him find some one who would take his Warheit stock off his hands. He told me that Mr. Schiff, with whom the stock had been pledged, was pressing him rather hard, and had demanded payment several times, the last demand being evidenced by a writing. He showed me that writing and said that he was obliged to sell many of his household effects, and from other sources I learned that a public auction was being held at his home at 590 Bedford Avenue, Brooklyn—I think the number is—and that the auctioneer's red flag was hanging from his front door. I sympathized with Mr. Miller, but could see nothing that I could do for him. He suggested that I purchase his stock in the Warheit, stating that he would make the offer very reasonable. He knew full well that I had no funds to meet his wish. Perhaps he had it in his mind that I could borrow. He left me, insisting that I should look into his proposition. A little later Mr. Paley, who was one of his associate stockholders in the Warheit, and who has since become president of that corporation, whom I also knew very well for many years, called on me to find out if I would talk to Mr. Miller, Mr. Miller not having been identified with the Warheit for approximately a year and a half, to learn if Mr. Miller would dispose of his stock, as the stockholders were very anxious to get rid of him because he was doing everything to injure the Warheit. Mr. Paley did not know that Mr. Miller had approached me first, and so I told him. I told him that Mr. Miller offered me the stock, and that I had told Mr. Miller that I had no money with which to buy it. He asked me if I would talk to Mr. Miller again, and I did, and Mr. Miller asked $55,000 for this block of stock.

I reported this to Mr. Paley, and he suggested that we buy it in partnership and asked me to go to Mr. Schiff and ask Mr. Schiff to continue the loan of $35,000 which he had made to Miller, against Paley and myself, rather than against Miller, on condition that we repay with the earnings of the Warheit annual installments. I did not feel that I had a right to call on Mr. Schiff for any such favor as this, and then he advised me to go to Mr. Untermeyer. He knew of my relations with Mr. Untermeyer. We both went to see Mr. Untermeyer, and on hearing Mr. Miller's name, Mr. Untermeyer refused to have anything to do with the matter. Finally we were afforded an opportunity of explaining. Mr. Paley insisted that the proposition was good business, that we would give any form of security that Mr. Untermeyer wished, and besides it would be of service to us all. Thereupon Mr. Untermeyer said that he would call up Mr. Schiff in our interest and endeavor to get him to continue the loan. Failing in this, he said that he would let us have the money. He called in his secretary later, a Mr. Hoffman, and instructed him to advance us the money we required, with interest at 6 per cent per annum, payable semiannually, principal at the rate of $5,000 per year for five years, when the remainder would become payable, leaving the matter of the form of security to me. I told Mr. Untermeyer that we wanted him to have all of our holdings as security. He told us the reason why he called his secretary, stating that he was then a member of the United States section of the High Joint Commission to South America, and he would be obliged to leave the country very soon and would probably be absent when the consummation of this deal should take place.

I then resumed by negotiations with Mr. Miller early in May of 1916, and on the 5th day of that month we closed the transaction for $50,000 in Mr. Untermeyer's absence and at his office, or rather at the office of a Mr. Herman, who was a partner in profession of Mr. Untermeyer, Mr. Untermeyer not yet having returned from his South American visit. I paid $5,000, Mr. Paley paid $10,000, and the $35,000, the difference, came from Mr. Untermeyer's secretary, Mr. Hoffman. We have since repaid Mr. Untermeyer $15,000 of the $35,000, leaving owing to him $20,000, which I hope we will soon be able to liquidate.

In Mr. Miller's letter to you, Senator Overman, he states that he never transferred the stock to me, but rather to a Mr. Herman, Mr. Untermeyer's managing clerk, and lays claim to a conversation with me on our return from the office of Kuhn, Loeb & Co. This is all pure fiction. Mr. Miller sold me the stock, as is evidenced by certain writings in my possession, and I did not go with him and Mr. Herman, or with either of them, to the office of Kuhn, Loeb & Co. It was Mr. Hoffman, and not Mr. Herman, who, in company with Mr. Miller, did go to that office. It is quite apparent, therefore, that I could not have had any such conversation as he lays claim to. He urges also that he was driven from the Warheit because of his strong pro-ally tendencies. This, likewise, seems to me to be fiction. My attention was recently drawn, by my associates in the Warheit, to section 2 of article 3 of its by-laws, which were drafted by Mr. Miller himself, he being a member of our bar, and his associates all being laymen. That provides as follows:

SECTION 2. The president of the corporation shall ex officio act as the editor in chief of all the publications of the company, and as such he shall have exclusive control over the staff, the contents, tendencies, form of all the publications of the company, and he should have the sole and exclusive right to engage and discharge writers, determine their compensation, and manage, edit, and supervise the publication of the company to the best of his own abilities and judgment, and to account for his acts to the stockholders at their annual meeting.

This by-law was never modified or amended, except by the voluntary act of Mr. Miller, who resigned his position as editor in chief by the following announcement, which he wrote in his own hand on November 23, 1914, after his then associates refused him an increase in salary:

With deep regret the publishers of the Warheit inform its readers that our editor, Mr. L. E. Miller, has been ill for sometime and decided to resign from the Warheit as editor. The paper which has recently been edited by our well-known city editor, Mr. I. Konikman, will hereafter likewise be edited by him. Meanwhile, Mr. L. E. Miller will remain president and director of the Warheit Publishing Company.

The original of this after its publication in the Warheit remained and still is part of the files of the Warheit, and may be submitted if called for. I repeat, this is in Mr. Miller's own handwriting. It is quite apparent that Mr. Miller was free under the by-laws to do as he pleased, and obviously his resignation was not due to interference with editorial policy, or any other policy. However, as evidence of the very strong proally sympathies of Mr. Miller, I wish to quote from several issues of the Jewish Leader, which, as I said before, was edited and published exclusively by him in opposition to the Warheit, and because, as he said, he could not have his own way in respect to proally matters in the Warheit. These I have picked at random from a mere cursory glance over the files of that paper.

In the issue of Thursday, May 20, 1915, but a few months after he resigned from the editorship of the Warheit, there appears an editorial entitled, "Story about Banker Speyer." That is the name of a banker, I take it, and there follows a very bitter arraignment of England. In that he stated that there is no doubt that the noble lords of England are not any better than the degenerates and low lives that attack the innocent Jews of White Chapel, and the reason is that England is a comrade of Russia, and here I might tell you that all of the proally tendencies I have observed in Mr. Miller's journalistic endeavor lay in three editorials he had written while associated with the Warheit in favor of Russia, and none of the other allied countries, and you will see how important that is as I develop the points, and I wish very serious thoughts given to them. Quoting now his exact words, he says:

It is impossible to be a comrade of Nicholas and not be a Hooligan. In the days of Beaconsfield, when England was far from Russia, no massacres of Jews were made, not on the poor, and not on the rich. Today, when England is an ally of Nicholas, she must do as Nicholas does, she must make massacres, she must preach against the Jews.

In the issue of Sunday, June 6, 1915, in an editorial headed, "Jewish sympathy for Germany," he says:

We are not German agents, we are not sold to the German Government, but we declare that England has not done its duty to the Jews. What did England do, and what stand did it take on the bloody massacres of the Jews in Russia, her comrade in battle? Did she protest against the massacres of Nicholas's army in the towns and villages of Nicholas's country? No, England did not do anything of the kind. She did not have a word to say about the Jewish massacres in Russia, not only that, but at the first opportunity a series of massacres against Jews was arranged for in England. We believe that English Jews should be English patriots, just as the German must be German patriots and the Austrian Jews must be for Austria. Nobody in the world, however, will give England the right to complain against the Jews of America when on certain occasions they forget their duties of absolute neutrality.

In an editorial of Saturday, 19th of June, 1915, he declared that the Jews of Austria are extremely patriotic and are willing to sacrifice their lives for their country, and, quoting his exact words:

The reason is simple, because the Jews in Austria were treated like citizens, and their rights are secured. But the Jews must hate Russia because Russia does not treat them in a humane manner.

In an editorial of Thursday, June 24, 1915, under a headline "Przemysl and Lemberg," there appears the following:

What concerns us Jews, even the most neutral, we would not fear to say that we are happy and overjoyed that Lemberg has been torn out of Russian hands. We hope that we did not violate our duties of neutrality in making this statement, and if we did violate our duty of neutrality, we did it at least knowing that we did it with the knowledge of telling the truth.

Mr. Chairman, that may not be the best of English, but I have tried to follow as literally as possible the translation that I made, so as not to be accused of coloring, so I must ask pardon for the English. On Saturday, July 17, 1915, there was an editorial under the heading "The writing of a godly hand." Miller in that went on to say:

There was a time when we believed the Jews should not show the feelings of hate and sympathies in this war, when Jewish blood is being spilled in every country and in every army of the world. The Jews of America must not speak in joy of the defeat of one army or another or one nation or another. Perhaps it would be wiser politics and more careful politics that we should demand the same today as we demanded before, but who cares and who can care today for politics or for carefulness. Who can think when on the threshold of hell about questions of diplomacy or diplomatic wisdom? Therefore, let us all pray to Him on high and hope that the last defeats of the Russian armies are not only an accident in history but that they are the writing of a Godly hand.

In the issue of Friday, July 30, 1915, in an editorial article headed "Warsaw of 1915 and Moscow of 1912," the editorial lauds and glorifies the industrial ability of Germany and the strategy of German generals and jeers at the Russian generals, who say that the Germans will be driven out of Warsaw just as Napoleon was driven out of Moscow, and it continues:

All the great and wonderful things that Germany has accomplished at every front since the war began was the result of her remarkable industrial development through the wonderful organization of her means of production in which she not only beat Russia and France, but also England, and even to a certain degree America.

In the editorial of Monday, August 2, 1915, under the heading of "Flax," it is stated, talking of the situation in Poland:

The idea of Wilhelm—

Of course, meaning the only Wilhelm—

The idea of Wilhelm is more humane and more progressive than the ideas of Nicholas, and being more humane and more progressive, his ideas are more welcome to us than the ideas of Nicholas. The ideas of both of them might not be satisfactory for us Jews, but in the plan of Wilhelm a certain humane principle of humanity that is very important for us Jews, as well as for the Poles, is recognized.

A leading three-column article of the same issue, headed "How France repays the Jews that have sacrificed their lives for her," with a subheading, "The spirit of Czar Nicholas in the French Republic," goes on to quote from an interview with several Jewish soldiers who have just arrived from France, and one of them, describing a battle, is alleged to have said:

After the third week of our battle I was taken sick and the doctors dismissed me from the service. I was overjoyed by it, because the French have treated us Jews contemptibly and on every occasion called us "sheeney" and reproached us that we came to battle only for the purpose of eating.

Another soldier is alleged to have said:

When the war broke out, I immediately enlisted, but I was astonished on my arrival at the camp at Lyons to see that I, together with many other Jews, were placed in a legion which was composed of criminals only. From all sides we were insulated. We were given cold black coffee and dry bread, and when we protested we were told that we were dirty Jews, and we came only to eat and nothing else. I refused to eat and got sick. When I applied to the sergeant to send me to the hospital, he began to beat me, etc.

Then the article contains other descriptions of brutal treatment of Jews in the French Army. In the editorial of Friday, August 6, 1915, under the heading of "Bridges of Vistula," it is declared that the entrance of the Germans into Warsaw and the victory of the Germans all over Poland is at the same time a victory of civilization. To quote:

The entrance of the German Army into Poland over the bridges of the Vistula was a great day in the history of all civilization and culture, but for us Jews it was the greatest day of all. In Warsaw it was (when the Germans came in) as if a supreme heavenly power would tear down the black cover of the sun and bring light to the hearts and souls of the population. Every one with the exception of the Polish spies, provocatures and hooligans, breathed more freely, when the two-headed eagle of Nicholas went out through one tower of Warsaw and in the second appeared the faces of the victorious troops of Bavaria under Leopold.

Senator STERLING. Yet he professes to be proally?

Judge LEVY. Well, Senator, I leave that to your judgment. To further emphasize the force of Mr. Miller's proally sympathies, let me quote you from another journalistic venture of Mr. Miller which lived for but a short time, and which was known as Miller's Weekly. I quote from the very first issue, under date of December 22, 1916. It was entitled "Why Germany wishes peace." And at this point I desire to show you gentlemen the newspaper, Miller's Weekly. Perhaps you can not read Yiddish, and it might be well for you to look at the cartoon on the very first frontispiece page, and then look at the picture, which is under the headline of the article to which I refer, and as I explain it I am confident you will see my point. This article, as I say, is entitled "Why Germany wants peace." Then follows the picture, and underneath the picture appear the words, "Why Germany wishes peace." Now, if you know that that is the title and then look at the picture, I need hardly say anything more about it. There is the iron cross of the German, hanging, as you see, from the neck of the picture of the male person in that picture, and two children hanging over his shoulders, and his wife beside him.

Senator OVERMAN. Domestic happiness.

Judge LEVY. Yes. That article goes on to say:

There cannot be any greater, uglier crime as the present hysteria in the land of the Allies, where the politicians of the entente (England, France and Russia) seek to show that the peace offer of Germany is a "political manœuvre," a diplomatic "trick."

Germany is today as far removed from political manœuvres, from diplomatic tricks as heaven from hell, as liberty from oppression.

It is said that there can be no peace until German militarism is shattered. The German army of today is not the old military organization. The present-day army consists of working men, clerks, farmers, business, physicians, lawyers, poets, and professors. These are the men and leaders of the present-day German army. These are the men of this army. And the spirit? To call the present military organization of Germany German militarism is exactly the same as to say that the army of Washington, which defended America against England, or Lincoln's army that fought to save the republic are American militarism.

Germany's sins. Great and dark was her crime when she called forth this war.

Much darker, however, is the sin of England, France and Russia, today, who refuse to end the war. Germany when she began the war, wished to realize certain political and military ambitions and to win certain economic advantages. She was egotistical, brutal, if you will it so, but in harmony with the prevailing political dogmas, yet in no event insane.

England, France, Russia, are prepared to bleed themselves together with the enemy. To bury themselves in a grave so long as they buried Germany underneath them, and this is worse than egoism, worse than brutality. It is insanity.

While on Miller's Weekly, let me say that with the appearance of the first issue, of which I speak, I soon learned what Miller meant by the remarks made to me in respect to the letter written by him to Mr. Untermeyer. He published this letter in that issue, in photo-engraved form, and wrote an editorial accompanying it. In this virgin editorial he assigned as the only reason for closing the Leader, "that we did not have the necessary means to successfully fight financially the terrible crisis through which all business was then passing, and newspaper business in particular."

He made no mention whatever of possible difference of opinion or sympathies in respect to the world war. In fact, the world war was never there even once referred to. He goes on to say that he approached me and reported the sadness of his plight, and that I advised him that Mr. Untermeyer was ready to finance the paper, and "to help me save myself from ruin as well as the results of my worth, my energy, my ambitions and my hopes; in fact, nearly all of my worldly goods."

Of Mr. Untermeyer he says:

It is necessary to say right here, that you made upon me a very deep impression from every possible point of view. Among our great and powerful leaders in American jury, there are very few such personalities as Samuel Untermeyer.

Later, after giving some details of his then version of the transaction, in speaking of me he said:

My friend (Judge Levy) answered me, that once he is placed in the position of arbitrator—third person—he cannot stop to reckon with my ideas and feelings, but that he would decide each question presented to him by both parties as he finds it just and fair. I told him (the judge) that the position he had declared was a just one and I thanked him for his sincerity.

Mr. Chairman, if I may I would like very much to file with the reporter a full copy of that editorial, so that you may have it, every word and syllable, and then see what kind of a man this fellow is.

Senator OVERMAN. Very well.

Judge LEVY. Still keeping Miller's Weekly in mind, may I ask what contributions were made toward its support and maintenance by the man who became so conspicuous in his intrigues against our country that our Government was obliged to intern him? Could some one tell me who it was that helped Mr. Miller in his travels through Europe? Why did Deputy Attorney General Becker, of New York State, report through the public prints, within the last week or so, that von Bernstorff recommended Miller as "reliable"?

Does Mr. Miller, by reckless and unjust accusation, wish to divert attention from himself?

Mr. Chairman, I just wish to say one word, with your permission, in respect to Mr. Untermeyer. Mr. Untermeyer requires no defense. In justice be it said that I know of no man who has done so much to bring the patriotic element among the people of the East Side of New York and other conjected communities as did Mr. Untermeyer. Miller not only acknowledged this but proclaimed it in the hearing of many persons from the platform of Cooper Union long after the occurrence of the Leader and the Warheit instance. I know of no man in this Republic who has been so willing at all times in patriotic endeavor to yield up not only his very precious time but just as much money as was necessary in that endeavor, and let me recur to one instance of it. I recall very vividly before our country was at war, but when war seemed imminent, before any conscription law was enacted, and when it was not known definitely whether one could succeed, Mr. Untermeyer called together the representatives of the Jewish press of New York and urged them to form an American league or a Jewish league of American patriots, or an American-Jewish patriotic league for the purpose of securing volunteers in the military and naval service of the country, and he offered to finance the equipment of these men, to fill a regiment of them at his own personal and individual expense and began by contributing the necessary moneys for the propaganda that was necessary to bring about that result, and formed an organization of which he became the president and the representatives of all of the Jewish newspapers and periodicals in New York became other officials, respectively.

Senator STERLING. What was Mr. Untermeyer's position in regard to the selective-service law?

Judge LEVY. I know of no man in the country who was more upon the question, who came out publicly and spoke in its favor from time to time any more than he did, at large and monstrous gatherings. I wish to say in this connection that Mr. Miller himself, at a very large meeting in Cooper Union, New York, acknowledged Mr. Untermeyer's patriotic devotion, and proclaimed it from the public platform in my hearing and in the hearing of hundreds and hundreds of persons, not to say thousands.

Senator STERLING. Did he at this meeting of which you speak take a position in favor of the selective conscription law, which was then a law, which was then under discussion, as I understood you?

Judge LEVY. No, sir; the conscription law at that time was not under discussion. It was our volunteer endeavor. This was before conscription had taken effect, or before it had been introduced.

Senator STERLING. It was after the Congress had declared war?

Judge LEVY. I do not wish to be sure about that, but it might have been before that. I am not certain.

Senator STERLING. He would hardly be urging volunteers before we entered the war.

Judge LEVY. We were. This American Jewish Patriotic League was organized before we were at war, but when war seemed imminent, when it was generally spoken about that the President would go before Congress in April—I think this was in March, 1917; it was not so long before war was declared, but it was generally accepted that war would be declared—you will probably recall the howling of the newspapers throughout the country over the offenses of Germany against America and what the President would be likely to do. I think it developed as they predicted.

Maj. HUMES. Judge Levy; you have gone at some length into the attitude of the Leader. Have you made any analysis of the editorial policy of the Warheit?

Judge LEVY. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. Do you not think that the Warheit was equally a pro-German—if you choose to call it pro-Germanism—as the Leader during all this period of time?

Judge LEVY. Well, I have no belief in the matter. I want to be fair to the men who were in charge of the Warheit at that time, particularly Mr. Miller. I would not say that any of them were pro-German. It was not a case of their loving Germany more, but it was because they really loved Russia less that their attitude was so fixed in that situation.

Maj. HUMES. You have undertaken to attack Mr. Miller. You are probably aware that this committee is only concerned with the facts, not with the personality of the editor. Can you give us an editorial analysis of the policy of the Warheit during the period of Mr. Miller's severance of relations, and after he had severed relations, with that paper?

Judge LEVY. While Mr. Miller was in charge of the editorial policy of the Warheit, as I told this committee before, I recall approximately three editorials that were written in favor of Russia. I do not remember a single one in favor of any of the other allied countries. I spoke with Mr. Miller about that one day, and he told me, "You do not understand what a clever move that is." He said, "You never can tell the day when the Jews will need something in Russia." I said, "What day is more likely than this when there is need for aid in Russia?" He said, "It might work out that the Czar might become impressed with my editorials."

Maj. HUMES. Then you were complaining about him because he was not attacking Russia at that time?

Judge LEVY. I was not complaining at all.

Maj. HUMES. You took issue with him upon this editorial policy of supporting one of the allies.

Judge LEVY. No; I was taking issue with him because he supported Russia, and I hated it, as every Jew in this land hated it, for its massacres of the Jews.

Maj. HUMES. When was it that Mr. Miller severed his relation with the Warheit? I think you referred to it without mentioning the exact date.

Judge LEVY. I beg your pardon. I said he resigned as editor on the 23d of November, 1914.

Maj. HUMES. Is it not a fact that from that time on the policy of the Warheit was pro-German?

Judge LEVY. I refuse to call it so. I would not characterize it pro-German. I would say anti-Russian.

Maj. HUMES. Anti-English?

Judge LEVY. No, sir; no, sir.

Maj. HUMES. Have you made a study of the editorials of the paper?

Judge LEVY. I have, sir; not very carefully, but casually.

Maj. HUMES. Then the only one you are qualified to speak on with reference to the policy of the newspaper is the policy of the Leader, and you are not in a position to state definitely what the policy of the paper in which you were financially interested was?

Judge LEVY. I was not then interested financially.

Maj. HUMES. When did you become financially interested?

Judge LEVY. I told you, on the 5th of May, 1916.

Maj. HUMES. Subsequent to that time, what was the policy of the paper?

Judge LEVY. I would say anti-German until America entered the war, and then it became terribly patriotic.

Maj. HUMES. Who dictated the policy of the paper after you acquired control of it?

Judge LEVY. Why, I do not know that there was any change of policy that required dictation.

Maj. HUMES. Who controlled the policy?

Judge LEVY. There really was not any, except that Mr. Gonikman, who took Miller's place, was editor in chief, and he went on doing the work of Mr. Miller.

Maj. HUMES. There seems to have been some change of policy. You say when Mr. Miller was controlling the policy he wrote certain editorials, and they were editorials about Russia about which you say you complained. He was anti-Russian.

Judge LEVY. I was not there then. I could not tell you who dictated the policy. He left in November, 1914, and I did not get any interest until May, 1916.

Maj. HUMES. And the policy of the paper changed after November, 1914, and became anti-Russian?

Judge LEVY. I would not even say that. Let me read you from two editorials. Under Mr. Miller's control of the Warheit, while Mr. Miller was editor in chief, I will say to you——

Maj. HUMES. We are willing to accept Mr. Miller's policy as cited by you from the Leader, but we are inquiring about his policy of this other paper in which you were strongly interested.

Judge LEVY. It was very strongly American, probably the greatest foreign language pro-American paper in the country.

Maj. HUMES. Was it a member of the League of Foreign Newspapers, or the Association of Foreign Language Newspapers?

Judge LEVY. I could not tell you that; I do not know that association.

Maj. HUMES. Do you know Mr. Hammerling?

Judge LEVY. Very slightly.

Maj. HUMES. Do you not know that this paper was affiliated with Mr. Hammerling in his association?

Judge LEVY. No; I do not know that.

Maj. HUMES. What per cent of the capital stock did you own?

Judge LEVY. Mr. Paley and I bought from Mr. Miller 130 shares, which he said was 40 per cent. I was given 65 shares and Mr. Paley took 65 shares of the 130. I own 65 shares, which I hypothecated.

Maj. HUMES. Yes; hypothecated in connection with the loan that you made from Mr. Untermeyer.

Judge LEVY. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. You have not available any of the editorials of that paper subsequent to your purchase?

Judge LEVY. Oh, yes; I have; but not here.

Maj. HUMES. I mean here.

Judge LEVY. No; I did not carry the files of the Warheit here. It is a great big daily. I can furnish them, if you wish them.

Senator OVERMAN. What does the word "Warheit" mean?

Judge LEVY. It is a Yiddish word and it means "the truth."

Senator NELSON. It is a German word, too.

Judge LEVY. Yes; it is. Yiddish I consider corrupt German at best. Yiddish is corrupt German at best; that is, it finds its derivation in German. Remember, the Warheit has been in existence for 15 years.

Maj. HUMES. Do you know Dr. Isaac Strauss?

Judge LEVY. I do not know that I ever met the gentleman in my life, except perhaps to see him once at a convention at a distance. I know of him very well.

Maj. HUMES. He was very much interested in Jewish publications, was he not?

Judge LEVY. No; only in one, and that was in Miller's Weekly.

Maj. HUMES. He was not interested in any other Jewish paper?

Judge LEVY. Not that I know of; in no other single publication. I was told he was advancing Miller money, which kept the weekly alive. That is what I meant by asking the question in my narrative.

Maj. HUMES. You know nothing of any interest that he had in the Warheit—in its policy, not financially?

Judge LEVY. He certainly did not have any interest in the Warheit, because when I entered the Warheit he was discussed, and hatred and contempt expressed for him was shown very forcibly by the men with whom I am associated.

Maj. HUMES. Did you know what he was doing in this country?

Judge LEVY. I did not know until I read recently, when the Government put its hands on him.

Maj. HUMES. Did you not at that time know that he was an agent of the German Government?

Judge LEVY. I certainly did not; and if I had known it the Government would have known it also.

Maj. HUMES. From the statement you have made here you have undertaken to establish that Mr. Miller and his publications had a pro-German tendency rather than to show to the committee that the Warheit was not pro-German.

Judge LEVY. Oh, I beg your pardon. You have no right to make that assumption.

Maj. HUMES. You have produced nothing from the Warheit to indicate what its policy was.

Judge LEVY. I told you what it was. If I had known that you wished, I would have brought it. I brought here these quotations from Mr. Miller's publications, to show how insincere he was, and how foolish I believe some of our governmental functionaires were to employ him at compensation to involve innocent and decent men in scandal unjustly.

Senator KING. Where is Mr. Miller now?

Judge LEVY. I really do not know. I know that on Saturday last he was told about this meeting, and he was told that I was coming here. He discussed it with a gentleman, and was well conscious that it was going to take place, and I was hoping he might be here, as I felt he should be.

Senator KING. After you became interested in the Warheit I suppose you gave it only cursory attention.

Judge LEVY. No; I worked like a beaver down in the congested communities. For instance, the New York Evening World was beginning a very comprehensive Americanization endeavor, upon my personal solicitation of the editorial genius of that paper, generally trying to Americanize the foreign-born people down in the congested communities, and we struggled for a long time, and I was devoted to the work of Americanizing those people, to remove them, let me say, from the bolshevik influence that invaded those communities and that was working irreparable injury. I preached and I talked and I lectured, as did Mr. Untermeyer, and I wrote in the paper myself. I wrote for months anti-German propaganda, anti-German speeches, tracing the history of the Hun, for example, from the time of the Phœnicians down to the present, and you can find those articles, Major, without any difficulty. I would have brought them here with great delight if I had known you wished them.

Maj. HUMES. I understood from your telegram that you had taken a position in defense of the Warheit.

Judge LEVY. The Warheit needs no defense, let me assure you.

Maj. HUMES. That is what I was interested in—to ascertain if we had any analysis of its editorial policy, and it seems we have not.

Judge LEVY. Let me say it is a vigorous, healthful force for good in the interests of America.

Senator KING. Maj. Humes, I do not quite think that it is fair to state that we have not, because Judge Levy has attempted to give his interpretation of its policy; and until you have something here that would contradict that, I think that his generalization is entitled to credence.

Maj. HUMES. I was speaking of the production of editorials. We have not seen the editorials.

Judge LEVY. If you had suggested to me the bringing of them, I would have done so. Have you ever suggested it to me?

Maj. HUMES. No; I assumed from your telegram that you had them and were going to bring them. I am not undertaking to say what that policy was. I was simply expressing a regret that you did not have them with you.

Senator KING. From being familiar with the paper, the Warheit, after your connection with it, you would say, as I understand you, that the editorial policy of the paper was American?

Judge LEVY. Oh, thoroughgoing; the most pronounced of any foreign-language paper in America. I can not make that too emphatic.

Senator KING. Was anybody else connected with the editorial writing other than Mr. Gonikman?

Judge LEVY. No; no one else. We did splendid work. I think we were more largely responsible for the redemption, for example—and I do not wish to talk politics, but for the redemption—of that community in the last election, than any other agency that I know of. We were not partisan. We were just antibolshevik, anti-anarchist, antired flag, antimob, antivioleness, and antilawlessness, and we have had our hands full out there. You have no idea of the struggles we encountered.

Senator KING. Your paper stood for law and order?

Judge LEVY. It stood against all these things I mentioned, and certainly for law and order, and always for Americanism. I dare say there was hardly an issue when there was not a pro-American propaganda, something in some form or other. And let me say this: I can not arraign at the bar of this committee any Jewish paper for having sympathies with Germany before the Russian rebellion. Let me give you the Jewish psychology in America as elsewhere and you will understand why Jewish newspapers particularly could not be for Russia. Think of Kicheneff, Kieff, and the massacres and the programs for many years in Russia. Those things embittered every person through whose veins runs Jewish blood against Russia and the Czar, and so any one who would assault Russia would receive some degree of sympathy from the Jew. He would not necessarily be pro-German, but he would be anti-Russia, and so I pardon every Jewish newspaper, and every Jewish newspaper was anti-Russia, except Miller in the Warheit, and he wrote these three editorials and then reversed his policies as you notice in the Leader and in the Weekly. But I do not charge that against him. I feel that he could not help himself, because when he came to publish the Leader he realized the error of his policy for being pro-Russia in the Warheit, and therefore changed it to anti-Russia. I do not criticise him for that. I only urge that as evidence, as I said before, of his strong proally tendencies.

Maj. HUMES. Is there a voting trust in connection with the stock of the Warheit?

Judge LEVY. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. Who holds the stock?

Judge LEVY. Theodore Herman is the voting trustee, but the power of voting is vested with Mr. Paley and myself. Herman enters by the agreement signed in the event that we disagree. We have never disagreed. We have been nearly three years together. We have never called in Mr. Herman. We have never communicated with Mr. Untermeyer, and as a matter of fact Mr. Paley has been running the business himself. He is the business head of the Warheit.

Senator OVERMAN. Is there anything else that you desire to say?

Judge LEVY. No; I think not.

Senator KING. Is there anything further that you desire to state?

Judge LEVY. I hate to state it, but there is something on my heart.

Senator KING. I mean that is relevant to this investigation.

Judge LEVY. It is very relevant, I resent as vigorously as I know how these imputations, and it is a sad thing, a very sad thing, that true Americans, engaged in true American endeavor, are required, even by suggestion and innuendo, to defend themselves. I never before knew that that was an American doctrine. I thank you, gentlemen, for your very kind consideration.

Senator OVERMAN. We are obliged to you.

TESTIMONY OF MR. SAMUEL UNTERMYER.

(The witness was sworn by the chairman.)

Mr. UNTERMYER. Mr. Chairman, I think it will avoid discursiveness if I read the statement which I have prepared, although it may be rather lengthy. I expect to interpolate a few things as I read.

I thank you, Mr. Chairman, for this opportunity now for the first time accorded me and at my own request to justify my acts and to voice my earnest protest against the gratuitous dragging of my name into this proceeding on what I can not but regard as the most flimsy of provocations. There is not in my judgment a fact or suggestion in your record to justify such use. I respectfully submit that reputations that are the fruits of a lifetime of effort and public service are entitled to be protected against attack in this ex parte fashion. A mere informal private inquiry of me by the investigators would have met with a most prompt and cheerful response and would have thrown open without reserve my files, correspondence, and everything else that might have been asked, but no such inquiry was made of me, although Mr. Bielaski was very well acquainted with me, for he had acted under my direction when I was here a few years ago as counsel for the Department of Justice in the defense of Secretary McAdoo and Comptroller Williams in the Riggs Bank case and knew me very well. The first I knew of this business was when I found myself headlined in the newspapers.

Now that the few trivial incidents in which I am referred to have been publicly exploited and magnified (for which, however, the committee is not to blame), I am here also to disprove the innuendoes and implications that have been spread broadcast, based upon insignificant transactions that were entirely harmless and legitimate, but from which it is has been made to appear in effect that in 1915 and in March, 1916, my sympathies were pro-German and that I either assisted or was willing at that time to assist in propaganda favorable to its cause.

There is not a shred of basis for either of these vague implications. Being of German parentage, although it is almost a century since my people settled in Virginia, it would not have been unnatural under ordinary conditions, or in any sense improper if my sympathies had at that time been pro-German. Sentiment was quite evenly divided for a time, due partly to our large German and German-Austrian population and to the anti-English feeling in some quarters.

But it so happens that my sympathies were not at any time pro-German. I point to my consistent record both before and since the war in proof of that assertion. That was due to many causes, among them being (1) my familiarity with the characteristics and political institutions of the chief belligerents from long personal contact and my study of the merits of the controversy; (2) my intimate knowledge of the English people and my many lifelong friendships and professional associations in Great Britain extending over 30 years, whilst I had no such friendships or associations in Germany; (3) the fact that I had been during all those years and am still acting for large British financial interests in this country, not only as their legal adviser but as their representative, and have had no such relations with Germans or Germany; and (4) that Great Britain is the one country in the world, not excepting our own, that has developed and lived up to the highest standards of personal, social, and political liberty and opportunity, and where, above all other countries, including our own, race and religious bigotry are fortunately unknown. For that spirit the people of my race can not but be grateful, whilst in Germany the Jew has long been denied such liberty and opportunities.

From the notes of testimony before you furnished me it appears that the few matters, all said to have occurred in 1915 and early in 1916, with which my name has been associated are incidental and unimportant and quite out of proportion to the hubbub that has been raised in the misleading press reports that have been published in every town and hamlet in the land and which it will be literally impossible to correct, so rapidly does the circulation of falsehoods outrun the truth.

I propose now, with your kind indulgence, to take up these scraps of innuendo and answer them specifically and categorically; but before doing so I crave your permission to briefly review my record of activities in connection with the war, from 1914 to the present time, by which I hope forever to set at rest among thinking people the impressions that have been created. It will be impossible to correct these impressions among those who judge their fellow citizens by newspaper headlines.

It will, I am sure, be unnecessary to assure you that it is never a pleasant experience to have to catalogue and recount one's services to his country, especially at such a time as that through which we have just lived, and I beg you to believe that I do so in no spirit of vainglory or boastfulness or as though I were entitled to credit, but, on the contrary, with painful reluctance and mortification and only because it is necessary to a just understanding of my position.

When the European conflict broke out Mrs. Untermeyer and I were at Carlsbad, Bohemia. We passed through Leige, Belgium, on our way to London an hour ahead of the German troops. We found tens of thousands of Americans, including thousands of our school-teachers, ministers, and other tourists of modest means stranded in London, unable to get home or to secure funds to keep them there. I remained two weeks assisting them to get accommodations and with loans of small amounts of gold, which was the only money that passed current for a time and which it was well-nigh impossible to get.

When the matters concerning me were published I received, unsolicited, many messages, of which I submit a single instance. It is in the form of a telegram from Father Malone (Rev. Thomas H. Malone), Denver, Colo., whom I had not seen or heard from for years, and reads as follows:

DENVER, COLO., December 11, 1918.

SAMUEL UNTERMEYER,
120 Broadway, New York City:

As I now recall those early days of the war in London when you gave such splendid moral and material support to your stranded fellow countrymen when your loyalty stood out so brilliantly, I feel a deep resentment at the press reports emanating from Washington. No American was ever more loyal to his country or his people in those trying days of 1914 than you and I desire to bear personal witness to the fact that that loyalty has ever since continued.

FATHER MALONE

I had a message from Father Malone stating that he had at the same time, I think, sent a telegram to the chairman of the committee. I do not know whether that is correct or not.

Senator OVERMAN. I will look in the files and see.

Maj. HUMES. There is such a telegram.

Mr. UNTERMYER. Is it in the record?

Maj. HUMES. Not yet. I was holding it for use in connection with your testimony.

(The telegram referred to is here printed in the record, as follows:)

DENVER, COL., December 12, 1918.

Senator OVERMAN,
Washington, D. C.:

Will you allow me to state to your committee the following regarding Mr. Samuel Untermyer. When the war broke out in nineteen fourteen I was in London with many other Americans. Mr. Untermyer at that time gave unlimited support to his stranded fellow countrymen. Both he and his wife gave thousands of dollars to assist those in need. He arranged credit for me in order that I might buy and disburse garments and necessities to those in need. A more loyal patriotic citizen I have never known. During the past four years I have had occasion to observe the work of Mr. Untermyer in various fields and it has all been of the same tenor, splendidly patriotic and American. I am glad to have the honor to give this statement to your committee, both for the Record and publication, if you so desire.

(Sg.) THOMAS H. MALONE
Roman Catholic Priest

Mr. UNTERMYER. On reaching New York on August 22, 1914, I made a lengthy résumé of my impressions for the New York Times which occupies three or four printed columns, which I have seen in its publication of the following morning on the "Lessons of the War" which I herewith submit, from which I would like to have in the record a single paragraph as reflecting my views at that time.

Both monarchs (German and Austrian) evidently realized the peril of internal revolution and the destruction of despotic governments in the aftermath of the war. They must know that their peoples would not submit to having their lives sacrificed and their fate determined by the arbitrary will of a hereditary ruler.

So keenly was this peril seen by the greatest Ministry in the history of Great Britain that it steadfastly refused to yield to the demands of its allies France and Russia to commit itself to a policy of intervention or to assume any responsibility in the then impending conflict. It maintained the neutrality of Belgium, which it was in honor bound to do. Even then the Ministry declined to use its power to assist in the presentation of its case dispassionately to Parliament and to place upon the country the entire burden, and thus absolved itself from all accountability for the outcome. In Austria, Belgium, and even in France the heavy load of responsibility was placed upon the Government, but in Great Britain the representatives, have themselves assumed the burden of the verdict.

In September, 1914, Mr. Adolph S. Ochs, publisher of the New York Times, invited me, Mr. Beck, and myself to collaborate in writing "white books" that had just been issued by the other Governments concerned. I was asked to make the review of the arguments from the lawyer's point of view. Mr. Beck was asked to make the review of the arguments from the statesman's point of view. I was asked to make the review of the arguments from the statesman's point of view. I was asked to make the review of the arguments from the statesman's point of view.

cipal of my reasons in the following words, which I have the chairman's permission to read:

I have many dear and loyal friends in England to whom I am under lasting obligations for acts of friendship extended to me over the past 25 years and to whom I am largely indebted for the real start of my material prosperity. They have stuck to me through thick and thin and in their present misfortunes they have been writing me freely concerning their troubles. I feel that they would be pained to find me championing or maintaining publicly even in the rôle of a quasi advocate the righteousness of a cause opposed to that which they have so dearly at heart and for which some of their sons and brothers have already sacrificed their lives. It is as though I were to accept a retainer to appear in a cause against a friend in which his honor and fortune were involved.

The other reason I gave Mr. Ochs was that I felt it would be violating the President's proclamation requesting our citizens to observe neutrality, to which I intended strictly to adhere.

Throughout the greater part of the two years and eight months of our neutrality and until it became apparent to me in the latter part of 1916 that Germany would persist in or renew its piratical warfare, notwithstanding its repeated specious protests and apologies at every recurrence of the offense, I maintained an attitude of absolute neutrality.

I wrote articles and made addresses throughout the country during that period but no person ever heard me utter, until Germany announced that it would resume its submarine warfare, either in public or private conversation, a word that was not in strict accordance with the President's proclamation of neutrality.

Meantime whilst my personal relation with members of the German embassy continued pleasant, I did not refrain from denouncing the invasion of Belgium and the murder of our men on the Lusitania nor from publicly and repeatedly expressing my view in favor of the necessity for maintaining and insisting upon our right to put an end to the uncivilized submarine warfare. I have before me a clipping from an interview occupying three columns on the first page of the issue of the Washington Post of March 6, 1916, reviewing the President's policies, which I herewith submit, which I ask permission to have inserted in the record.

Senator OVERMAN. Very well, it may be inserted.

(The interview referred to was marked "Untermeyer Exhibit No. 1" and is here printed in full in the record as follows:)

UNTERMEYER EXHIBIT No. 1.

(By F. E. Ackerman. Special Correspondence of the Washington Post.)

BRILLIANT DIPLOMACY OF PRESIDENT IN GRAVE NATIONAL CRISIS INSURES HIS REELECTION, UNTERMEYER HOLDS.

WILSON AVERTED GREATEST CATASTROPHE THAT EVER THREATENED HONOR AND PRESTIGE OF REPUBLIC, SAYS DISTINGUISHED NEW YORK LAWYER—SINCE PEOPLE ARE NOW "BLIND OR FOOLS," WILL GIVE HIM STUPENDOUS MAJORITY—AMERICANS SHOULD NOT ADD TO COMPLICATIONS BY TRAVELING ON ARMED VESSELS. LAWYER ADDS, BUT THEIR RIGHT TO DO SO CANNOT BE SURRENDERED—VOTERS WILL REBUKE AUTHORS OF "VILE LIBEL" THAT EXECUTIVE WANTS WAR—PREDICTS BRANDEIS' CONFIRMATION.

NEW YORK, March 5.

Unless the people are "blind or fools" President Wilson's reelection is a foregone conclusion, according to Samuel Untermeyer, the noted lawyer. In an extended review of the critical and perplexing problems which the present administration has been confronted with, Mr. Untermeyer asserted that historians would regard the exalted and just course pursued by Mr. Wilson, as one of the brightest pages of the country's diplomatic history.

CONDEMNS WILSON'S CRITICS.

Admitting that the question of whether or not American citizens should travel on board vessels of belligerents armed for defense was one most difficult of solution, Mr. Untermeyer condemned vigorously the "intemperance, hollowness and bitter partisanship" of those who are opposing the President at this critical juncture of the country's history. He predicted that the men responsible for the "vile libel" that the President desired war would meet swift punishment at the hands of their constituents at the polls.

Mr. Untermeyer suggested that no American should add to the complications which confront the administration by traveling on board armed passenger vessels, but he added that he could not see how this nation could "surrender the undoubted right in principle with due regard to its own dignity now without creating a dangerous precedent that will have the effect of seriously circumscribing our future rights under international law.

MUST OBSERVE OLD LAWS.

"It is an old axiom among lawyers," he said, "that 'hard cases make bad law', by which is meant that where the law does not appear to square with the justice of the particular case, the temptation is almost irresistible to relax the wholesome rules of law that have been established as the result of generations of experience. The judge who, with the best intentions, yields to that temptation in his eagerness to promote justice in a given case perpetrates an enduring wrong upon the sacred cause of justice. He mutilates the landmarks that are intended to guide all judges in administering the law. So it is in this U-Boat controversy. It is neither wise nor right at such a time to break away from and set aside the settled rules that are our only guide in order to meet an emergency and find ourselves cut loose from our moorings, drifting in an unknown sea in the most violent storm in the annals of time.

BRIGHTEST PAGE IN DIPLOMACY.

"I am confident that the President's policy will triumph and that we shall look back upon it as the brightest page in our diplomatic history, and as having averted the greatest catastrophe that ever threatened the honor and prestige of the nation. The President's nomination is, of course, a foregone conclusion, and as the people are not blind or fools, I look for his reelection by a stupendous majority, based upon the justice, wisdom and high statesmanship of his foreign and domestic policies."

The President has endeavored to maintain an attitude of the most rigorous neutrality, Mr. Untermeyer said, and Mr. Wilson has administered the rules of international law as he found them.

FACED UNPARALLELED PROBLEMS.

"I believe that when the smoke of this conflict has cleared away," he said, "the President's administration will be regarded by the historians as the one that has been confronted by the most momentous and perplexing problems in our national existence, and that it has covered itself with everlasting glory by the splendid statesmanship and exalted sense of justice with which it has met them. Throughout the President's policy, from the beginning to the end of the controversies that have been thrust upon him, there is manifest the consistent and unyielding determination to maintain the most rigid neutrality and to administer without fear or favor the rules of international law as he finds them. In no other way can neutrality be maintained, whether those rules be right or wrong.

"That this has been and will be a difficult task and one that it will be hard for the partisans on either side to understand becomes more evident every day; but that it will win in the end I have no doubt, for it is the plain path of duty and the only safe road to travel. Every man who loves his country will stand by the President and hold up his hands in this great crisis through which he is so ably and fearlessly piloting us amid shoals of war into what will prove to be the safe haven of an honorable peace.

"Nothing more clearly demonstrates the intemperance, hollowness and bitter partisan spirit of the criticism to which he is being subjected than the brutal suggestion that the President wants war. I doubt whether there is any man in the land who is so earnestly praying and striving for peace, if that can be had without sacrificing our honor. It seems incredible that the people have the patience to tolerate such vile libel at such a time. I venture to predict that the men who are responsible for it will meet with swift punishment at the hands of the people at the polls. Instead of upholding the President they fatuously select this of all times to weaken him in the very crux of the delicate negotiations in which he is engaged. They do not realize the high order of statesman against whom they are playing this game of peanut politics in the mistaken belief that there are different brands of Americans.

"The question of whether Americans should be warned by their government not to travel upon armed merchant ships of belligerents is difficult of solution, and especially so to those who are not in possession of all the facts. Those of us who are in doubt should suspend our own judgment and follow our chosen leader with faith in his loyalty and wisdom, which have thus far kept us out of trouble. Divided counsels are bound to precipitate trouble.

"While no American should gratuitously add to the complications of his country by traveling on an armed ship, I for my part do not see how this nation can surrender that undoubted right in principle with due regard to its own dignity nor without creating a dangerous precedent that will have the effect of seriously circumscribing our future rights under international law."

Referring to the attacks being made on Louis Brandeis, nominated to be a justice of the United States Supreme Court, Mr. Undermyer said:

"Of course, he will be confirmed by the Senate, as he should be. The attack has collapsed, as every one knew it would who was acquainted with the facts. From its inception the opposition sailed under cover and flew false colors. In point of fact it was inspired by the old 'New Haven' crowd and the other predatory financial interests that are affiliated with them, and was supplemented by the bigots and smug, self-righteous 'blue-bloods' of the Boston bar, who do the bidding of corrupt corporations and whose conceptions of professional standing exclude every lawyer who champions corporate reform. If he happens also to be a Jew no punishment short of complete social and professional ostracism will fit his double crime. That is all there is or ever was to the Brandeis case.

"I am looking forward with unusual satisfaction to seeing the Senate prick this bubble of New England bigotry and snobbery. It will be a great triumph for true democracy and the most severe blow yet dealt to instructed corporate corruption.

"And what an awakening it will be! And how wholesome!"

Mr. UNDERMYER. I wish particularly to refer to the following from that interview:

Whilst no American should gratuitously add to the complications of his country by traveling on an armed ship, I for my part do not see how this nation can surrender that undoubted right in principle with due regard to its own dignity nor without creating a dangerous precedent that will have the effect of seriously circumscribing our future rights under international law. * * *

So it is in this U-boat controversy. It is neither wise nor right at such a time to break away from and set aside the settled rules that are our only guide, in order to meet an emergency and find ourselves cut loose from our moorings, drifting in an unknown sea in the most violent storm in the annals of time.

Senator NELSON. What do you mean by that statement?

It is not very clear to me [reading]—

It is neither wise nor right at such a time to break away from and set aside the settled rules that are our only guide, in order to meet an emergency and find ourselves cut loose from our moorings, drifting in an unknown sea in the most violent storm in the annals of time.

What do you mean by that as applied to submarine warfare as conducted by the Germans?

Mr. UNTERMYER. What I mean by that is that it would be neither wise nor proper for us to permit submarine warfare, which was against international law. The law had been that where a belligerent ship was captured it could be taken into a prize court, or if it could not be taken into a prize court, then the law required that the passengers and crew should be first cared for and then the cargo could be taken and the vessel taken in; but that there was no international law, and that it was in gross violation of all international law, without notice or warning, to fire upon a ship and murder and drown the passengers and destroy the ship itself.

I say that that was absolutely contrary to every known rule and practice of international law, and that if we submitted to it, permitted it to go on, our rights under international law would be lost.

Senator NELSON. I simply referred to it in particular because I think it was not clear. The statement you have now made I think is correct, and I entirely agree with you. This quotation here is rather vague.

Mr. UNTERMYER. Do you think it is when you take it in connection with the preceding paragraph?

Senator KING. I think it is very clear, Senator Nelson, in connection with that part of Mr. Untermyer's statement which preceded it, in which he claimed we had the right to travel upon belligerent ships.

Mr. UNTERMYER. Taking the whole thing together, perhaps it was a trifle too rhetorical to be entirely clear.

Senator KING. I think it is a lucid statement.

Senator WOLCOTT. Let me make a suggestion. I read:

It is neither wise nor right at such a time to break away from and set aside the settled rules that are our only guide, in order to meet an emergency.

Let us end the sentence there and then go on:

If we did so, we would find ourselves cut loose from our moorings, drifting in an unknown sea in the most violent storm in the annals of time.

Mr. UNTERMYER. I think that would probably be an improvement in phraseology, but that is the meaning of it, perfectly apparent.

Senator WOLCOTT. I caught it that way.

Mr. UNTERMYER. There is much more of the same sort as indicating my openly expressed attitude, with which it is not necessary to burden you. I was, of course, always solicitous, as were all of us, that a conflict be avoided and tried to do my humble part in my infrequent meetings with members of the German Embassy toward preserving the peace by making them feel that our hands were not turned against them, although I always insisted with them, and they knew that I felt deeply, that they were in the wrong.

During all of that period between September, 1914, and our entry into the war, I was repeatedly importuned at one time or another and consistently refused to act as their legal advisor or in the defense of cases, and in other transactions that were not only highly lucrative and legitimately within the sphere of the activities of an honorable lawyer, but that involved important international and other problems with which the leading men of the bar would have been prominently concerned and as to which some of them did, from time to time, accept of the fact I have never at any time acted either for the German or Austrian Governments or for their members or associates or for any German, Austrian, or American citizen charged with violating our neutrality or with any other offense connected with the war, although in 1915 and 1916 it would have been entirely proper and professional for me to have done so if I had seen fit.

Such retainers were being constantly and very properly accepted by other lawyers of high reputation, as they continued to do after we entered the war, and as they are to-day doing in the proper exercise of their professional rights and duties, and apparently without criticism, which is as it should be.

It so happens, however, that at no time did I ever, directly or indirectly, receive or handle a single dollar from anyone connected with either government or embassy or from any German, Austrian, or American citizen charged with violating our neutrality. I remember on one occasion—I think in 1916—writing a letter for Albert's counsel to a man with whom he was having a controversy, but nothing further came of it and I made no charge, rendered no bill, and did not ask or accept a retainer.

I think it is the highest province of the lawyer to defend anybody charged with crime.

Senator KING. Guiteau was defended and Czolgoscz was defended.

Mr. UNTERMYER. It would be a terrible situation in any civilized country in which a man charged with a crime could not secure defense. But there were special reasons for my not engaging in this case.

Senator KING. Germany has the right to employ attorneys here for her interest, and German citizens, if they have property here, and they believe it is threatened, have the right to employ attorneys to avail themselves of our courts, and to have such assistance as our lawyers will afford.

Mr. UNTERMYER. I have always in the bar association and in discussing the matter with lawyers contended for that rule of conduct, and have deprecated the cowardice of the bar associations of New York, and of lawyers in other States, in refusing to accept unpopular retainers, but in this case there was a special reason why I did not.

Senator KING. Daniel Webster set a very good example to the bar in a very unpopular case in his day.

Mr. UNTERMYER. Yes; I remember. My firm, of which my sons and nephews are members—I have not been a member for years, although I have my office there—as counsel had a controversy between a French and German cable company over the construction of a contract—I think it was an action for specific performance brought by the French company against the German wireless company—involving some very interesting questions of law. Mr. Marshall, of our firm, argued the case in the New Jersey courts; and that, I think, is the only thing we had, even for a corporation, and it is a thing with which I was connected only in the incipient stage, and I had no subsequent dealing with it.

I never came under any relation to them except in the same way as many of our most distinguished and patriotic citizens and high public officials throughout the country met them, in whose homes many of them were then welcome and honored guests.

In 1915 and 1916 Count Von Bernstorff and members of the embassy were often in New York, and they were very properly the honored guests in the homes of our best and most patriotic citizens, and they visited me, as they visited other citizens.

Senator STERLING. Who is Albert, to whom you refer?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Dr. Albert.

Senator STERLING. Heinrich Albert?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Yes. My refusals to act were based on the ground, and were stated by me to them to be on the ground, that I was under a debt of heavy obligation to the British people, many of whom are and have been for over 30 years my most intimate friends and clients, whose interests I have been all these years, as I am still, representing in this country. I told them further very frankly that whilst the United States was then at peace and hoped to remain so, it was in diplomatic controversies with both Germany and Great Britain, and that in the event of this country being drawn into the conflict I did not propose to be burdened with professional or diplomatic secrets of any belligerents; and that for that further reason I would not act.

This brings me down to the time of the severance of diplomatic relations on February 2, 1917. To me that, of course, meant war. With my hearty approval and encouragement my son, then 35 years of age, at that time and before war was declared, volunteered and went into a training camp in the West. From there he went into the first Plattsburg Camp, where he earned a commission as captain of Field Artillery, thereafter going to France to join his regiment. He is still in France.

After the severance of diplomatic relations and just before the outbreak of the war I became the president of an association of publishers of Yiddish newspapers in the city of New York, which embraced all the publications (except the Socialist paper, Vorwarts, which was openly antiwar), known as the Jewish League of American Patriots. At the outset there seemed then to be considerable apathy and division of sentiment among the Russian Jews as to our taking part in the war, due to the persecution of the Jews in Russia under the then government of the Czar and to the fact that Russia was aligned with the allies. Since the dethronement of the Czar that sentiment has been completely reversed and they have been among our most loyal supporters both in men and money. The purpose of this organization was to arouse and foster a spirit of enthusiasm and Americanism among these million and a half people of our foreign population in New York City, and subsequently to stimulate interest in the liberty-loan campaigns. The newspapers of the members of the league acted in concert in spreading that propaganda, which I financed unaided from my personal means.

It is the only kind of propaganda with which I have been associated in connection with the war, other than the making of speeches and writing of articles connected with our liberty loans and Red Cross and other war-relief campaigns. Our league held public meetings, and as soon as war was declared we opened recruiting stations.

Judge LEVY. May I interrupt one moment, Senator? In my haste to get away I failed to make one point which may I make now? In May, 1917, just approximately a month after war was declared, I visited with the President at the White House, and had approximately an hour of his time over propaganda, or the subject of propaganda, among these people of whom Mr. Untermeyer just spoke, to be directed by this league of which he spoke and of which he was then president, and laid the program before the President. The President advised me to get a book entitled "Why We Are at War," which he had written, I think addressed to all the Members of Congress and published by Harper & Bros. I got that book, and that became the basis of our propaganda. The Warheit was the first newspaper that began to make that propaganda, and then took up the other work of this American-Jewish League. I want that on the record as a point after the war was declared, bearing on the questions addressed by Maj. Humes, since the Warheit is in doubt. I do not believe it was in doubt. It was not seriously in doubt from anything Mr. Miller said in respect to the Warheit. I wanted to say this in reference to the policy of the Warheit.

Mr. UNTERMYER. I publicly offered to equip a regiment of volunteers at my own expense, and we started to enroll volunteers for such a regiment. This was before the selective-draft law was enacted. As soon as that law was passed further voluntary enlistments became unnecessary, but much was meantime accomplished in arousing public sentiment in that section and much more has since been accomplished by the league in that direction.

This man Miller, whose communication to your committee concerning the Warheit transaction in 1915 and 1916 has been put into your record and widely published, became a member of that league more than a year after that transaction as the then publisher of a weekly paper, and, as such, was present at my office when the league was organized. He attended meetings of the league committee and spoke subsequently at a public meeting at which I presided, and was most profuse in his references to me. All this after the alleged transaction to which he now refers.

From the outbreak of the war down to the present time I have devoted a substantial part of my time, without pay and at my own expense, to Government work of one kind or another connected with the war. I spent considerable time in Washington. I happen to have a letter here from Mr. Daniel C. Roper, which I would like to read. It does not bear on this subject, but it bears on the subject of my service—what I was doing. I will read this:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF COMMISSIONER OF INTERNAL REVENUE,
Washington, December 13, 1918.

Mr. SAMUEL UNTERMYER,
120 Broadway, New York City.

MY DEAR MR. UNTERMYER: It may seem presuming on my part to think that you can find time to read the report of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue for 1918. Nevertheless I am sending you a copy in the hope that the epochal tax year treated therein may induce you to examine that document.

My action is further prompted by a feeling of gratitude for your co-operation with the Bureau in handling this difficult tax situation of the past year. We shall need your continued support during the period of reconstruction, when government, industry and commerce must be transformed from a war to the normal peace basis, and I feel that I can rely upon your further good efforts in creating and maintaining among our citizens a spirit of co-operation in the administration of the Revenue Law.

With gratitude for your assistance in the past and coveting your good will and help for the future, I am,

Sincerely yours,

DANIEL C. ROPER, Commissioner

Senator KING. I would like to state that I know, from my connection with the Treasury Department and the Internal Revenue Department, of the most splendid service rendered by Mr. Undermyer in connection with the fiscal policies of the Government and interpretation of the bill and, in an advisory way, as to the method by which it should be interpreted and executed.

Mr. UNDERMYER. I was chairman of the committee of three appointed to work on the formulation of the regulations for the interpretation and enforcement of the income-tax law, and after that I assisted the Secretary in connection with the taking over of the railroads in an advisory capacity.

It is because I do not propose to have my usefulness, such as it is, for the Government in this period of reconstruction interfered with that I have asked for this hearing. I think I can do public, unselfish work in connection with the period of reconstruction, and I do not propose to be under suspicion.

I spent considerable time in Washington in a semiofficial capacity, and at the request of the Treasury Publicity Bureau I have traveled over the country at my own expense on speaking tours in aid of each of the four liberty loans, besides which I subscribed for each of the loans to an aggregate amount of $3,000,000, straining my credit and available resources almost to the breaking point in so doing, and have given considerably over $150,000 to the Red Cross and to numerous other war-relief funds. In all my published articles and public addresses, both before and since the outbreak of the war, I have eagerly availed myself of the opportunity to sustain all the war policies of the administration, and I have dozens, almost hundreds, of clippings from speeches I have made throughout the country in that direction. It has not been my good fortune to be able to risk my life in the defense of my country, but I have left no stone unturned to render such service as came to my lot.

At all times prior to our entry into the war I refused to become a member of any of the committees, associations, or alliances with pro-German proclivities, as not being in accord with the President's proclamation, and at no time contributed to any of them, though often solicited to do so. I was, of course, intensely concerned that our country should keep out of the conflict until it became apparent in 1916 that Germany was bent upon continuing its piratical submarine warfare. As soon as I became satisfied that this would continue to be its policy I was anxious that we would enter the war and was glad and proud that we did so to safeguard our honor and protect our rights, and have often so expressed myself in speeches throughout the country in aid of the various liberty loan campaigns.

I never at that time dreamed, nor did our President, nor did you gentlemen, nor anyone else who was not privy to or in sympathy with their unspeakably vile conspiracies, that these men, who were enjoying our protection and hospitality, and their Government, were betraying the country that was sheltering them, or that they or it were engaged in hatching the devilish plots against our neutrality that were afterwards uncovered.

Now, with respect to the specific matters referred to in the testimony:

First, as to my interest in the newspaper, the Warheit.

The facts are few and simple. Miller held 130 of the 280 shares of a company that was engaged in publishing a Yiddish paper in

New York City. His stock was pledged for a loan and the pledgee was insisting on his money. Miller was then in no way connected with the paper or its policies and had not been for some time. The men who were and are still in control were friends and clients of my friend, Judge Aaron J. Levy, of New York City.

It seems that Miller had arranged without my knowledge to sell Judge Levy his stock for $50,000, which would pay his loan and leave him $15,000, and that Judge Levy and his friends who controlled the paper had $15,000 but needed another $35,000 with which to make the purchase. I never met Miller in that transaction or had anything to do with him. Judge Levy asked me to lend him this $35,000, which I was glad to do so as to give him an opportunity to earn something through the interest he would acquire in the paper. I was quite content to take his obligation for the money, but he and his partners insisted on giving me their stock as collateral. As I was about leaving for South America, I left instructions with my secretary that whenever Judge Levy asked for the $35,000 it was to be given to him, which was done about two months later and shortly before my return from South America.

The interest on the loan has been paid promptly, $15,000 has been paid off on account of the principal, and $20,000 is still due me, which I understand will shortly be liquidated. The idea of this transaction having anything to do with the Germans or with propaganda is ludicrous. There was no change whatever in the management or control of the paper as the result of my loan to Judge Levy. I have never seen a copy of the paper and could not read it if I saw it, as it is printed in Yiddish. I know nothing about its business, its circulation; do not know yet where its office is located, nor who are its officers. I made the loan simply to oblige a friend, and that is all there ever was to it. Mr. Bielaski condescendingly says that if this was my own money, the transaction was entirely legitimate. Would it not have been fairer if he had investigated that question or even asked me about it before ventilating it as though there were something about it that required explanation?

Several months prior to that transaction Judge Levy brought Miller to my office. It seems that he had first applied elsewhere for a loan through Judge Levy to a political leader, on the ground that his paper and personal influence on the East Side could be made serviceable to the Democratic Party and that it was as the result of a suggestion from that gentleman to Judge Levy, which the latter repeated to Miller, that Miller succeeded after much urging in inducing Judge Levy to approach me. That was my introduction to him and was the only time I ever met him on business. The statement in Miller's letter that "no one can control my pen or collar my person" had reference to his alleged political independence. He said he was publishing a paper called the Leader, which was bankrupt and that he had arranged to discontinue publication the next day unless I would help him. He offered me as security for that loan 45 per cent of the Leader stock and to put the voting control in trust, and also offered his equity in the Warheit stock, which was then pledged as further collateral. He and not I suggested Judge Levy as trustee. Upon the urging of Judge Levy and on his well-meant assurances and those of Miller of the latter's great value to the Democratic Party, I consented to let Miller have the money to oblige Levy, who seemed set upon furthering Miller's wishes; but I earnestly advised the latter against taking the loan on the ground that his venture was, in my opinion, impossible of success; that he would sink the money in it in a short time and would thus lose his Warheit stock.

On my earnest advice against his assuming this burden in a hopeless fight he said he would think the matter over. Imagine then my surprise to receive from him the next day—August 20, 1915—the letter which he has embodied in his communication to your committee, addressed to me, marked "Personal," which I am now told he published shortly thereafter in a new paper that he started as proof of his independence of political control. That paper's existence was, I am told, as brief as the life of the Leader. When I received this letter from Miller the next day I read him this letter and asked him if this fellow was crazy. He replied, "I can not understand what he means." Sometime later Judge Levy explained to me that Miller had said to him, "That won't hurt Mr. Untermeyer, and it may be useful to me some day." That is the only reason I know for that letter.

Second, as to the citizens' committee on food shipments.

In my telegram sent your committee when the statement appeared in the newspapers that this committee was organized at my house, I have briefly summarized about all there is to be said on this subject except that I have since ascertained that the committee was not organized at my house, as has been asserted, but at the house of Dr. J. H. Wolf, in New York City, where a number of meetings were held, and that its membership included some of the most eminent physicians in America. The location of the place was found to be inconvenient, and I have just learned that upon request Mrs. Untermeyer consented that the committee might thereafter meet at her house, which was more centrally located. I have just secured a copy of the pamphlet of this committee. I do not know whether it has been put in evidence or not. Has it, Maj. Humes?

Maj. HUMES. I think it has not.

Mr. UNTERMAYER. The pamphlet is entitled "Are You Neutral in Your Sympathies for Little Children—the Innocent Victims of War?" It goes on and shows the names of physicians, clergymen, and women, and members of the citizens' committee, and among the list of women appears the name of Mrs. Untermeyer. My name nowhere appears. I knew nothing about it. Then there is a summary of the work of the committee, then later appears:

The aims of the committee are threefold:

One, the committee aims to spread accurate information concerning the best way of sending parcel post to Germany and Austria Hungary.

Since the formation of the Citizens Committee for food shipment, the Postmaster General has announced that he had been forced to suspend the United States parcel post to Germany and Austria Hungary, but that he has taken immediate steps to open new channels. Several plans are under discussion, and as soon as a decision is reached the Committee and sub-committees will announce it. Those who prefer sending their parcels may then do so.

2. The committee secondly aims to collect money for the purchase of condensed milk and other food at wholesale prices and to make up and send packages to designate addresses, either to individuals or to the ministers in towns or villages where the donors desire the distribution of their gifts.

Three dollars sent to the treasurer will pay for the contents and the postage and free delivery of one package.

3. The committee finally aims to offer to the administration in Washington the best argument for haste in the resumption of parcel post to Germany and Austria-Hungary, viz: the largest possible list of prospective patrons. Cash in hand talks loudest. Contributions should, therefore, be sent at once.

All that Mrs. Untermeyer knew about the business was that the purpose of the committee was to procure funds and secure the aid of the State and Post Office Departments in sending milk to the starving babies of Germany and in lifting the British blockade to that extent. In this I understand the committee succeeded for a short time, but the State Department was unable to secure the continuance of the privilege and thereupon Mrs. Untermeyer resigned. It seems that Mrs. Untermeyer's brief experience in trying to help the babies cost her about $700. She never knew or heard of any other purpose connected with the activities of the committee, and I have not known or heard of any other.

I was in ignorance of the whole business, never was asked for or contributed a penny and never attended or knew of their meetings which were, however, apparently not only for a proper but for a highly laudable and public-spirited purpose and which I would doubtless have encouraged if I had been asked to do so.

Meantime, as heretofore stated, as evidencing my "pro-German proclivities," it is costing me at the rate of over $25,000 a year for rent and advertising toward supplying milk to French babies. That venture has been very successful and the committee is still in possession of my house at 675 Fifth Avenue, free of rent, and is actively at work.

Third, as to my letter of February 19, 1916, to Dr. Albert:

The incident referred to in that letter was so fleeting and unsubstantial that it had entirely escaped my recollection when I was first asked about it. I did not then even recall that there had been such an attempted negotiation or that I had written any letter, so completely had that thing faded from my memory, like many things that do not materialize and are accordingly dismissed. I did not even at the moment recall whether my talk had been with Bernstorff or Albert. Since the subject has been agitated I have given it much thought and it now all comes back to my mind. Nothing was ever done about the thing. The nebulous business proposition which I discussed with Dr. Albert of his investing money in an American owned and controlled newspaper apparently did not appeal to him for I heard nothing further from him beyond a note saying he was communicating with his friends. A week after writing the letter, which was written from Florida, I left there and a week later sailed for South America for a two-months' stay.

The negotiation, if it can be dignified by that name, was conducted by one of my friends, a well-known and experienced newspaper man. This was before I mentioned the subject to Dr. Albert or had any thought that he might be interested and was for our joint account. I never came in contact with the proposed vendors; it never reached that stage. The talk about this evening and morning paper being in the market had been common gossip for a long time and we were anxious to acquire it on proper terms. I had discussed it in 1913 before the European war with the same friend, at a time when he was considering the purchase of the Evening Post that was then supposed to be for sale. We have been and are still in negotiation for another paper on his behalf.

On learning that the paper referred to in my letter to Dr. Albert might possibly be had I suggested to him, as it now appears, not a majority, as has been claimed, but a minority interest; that is, a four-sixth interest, from which we were to reserve an interest of one-fourth in the paper, which would leave him and his friends five-twelfths and would leave seven-twelfths to the American interests, including the one-third that the former owners were to retain. Even that was conditioned on our receiving an option to buy back sufficient of the five-twelfths thus sold to give us, together with our one-fourth, a clear majority without respect to the other one-third held by the former owners, on a basis of Dr. Albert and his friends, of course, receiving a profit on the optioned stock, the amount of which would have had to be the subject of future discussion if it were found that he was interested and if the paper could be had on proper terms, neither of which situations ever materialized. The idea of a minority interest in the paper, with the right to us to buy back the bulk of that interest, even at a profit, evidently did not appeal to Dr. Albert and his friends.

That, however, did not interfere with my friend thereafter continuing to pursue the negotiation, until he found that the owners were not willing to give him an option to enable us to investigate the financial merits of the enterprise and insisted on our buying in the dark, which we were, of course, unwilling to do, and there the matter finally ended. This latter information, however, came to me some months later on my return from South America.

The way I happened to learn that Dr. Albert might be interested in the effort that was then under way by myself and my friend to acquire a paper was purely accidental. The circumstance comes back to me now. I was recounting to my experiences of the great fortunes that had been made by enterprising men in the newspaper field. I instanced the purchase of the New York Times by Mr. Ochs when it was in the hands of a receiver with a daily circulation of 9,000 and was losing at the rate of $200,000 per year. I had been professionally connected with that transaction when Mr. Ochs took it over. I instanced also among a number of others, the cases of the New York World with about 15,000 circulation per day when Mr. Pulitzer bought it for a trifling sum and of the New York Journal when it was purchased under similar conditions by Mr. Hearst and is now said to be earning over $1,000,000 a year, I think $1,200,000.

I told Dr. Albert in substance that my friend was one of the most experienced and in my judgment one of the ablest newspaper men in the country and had been an upbuilder of properties of that character and that he and I believed the property had tremendous possibilities in the way of profits.

It is interesting in this connection, as bearing on the accuracy of our judgment of the business proposition, to note that my predictions on that subject are already well on the way to being more than fulfilled. The papers were afterwards sold. Notwithstanding the almost prohibitive price of white paper and of all other materials entering into the present cost and the great advance in labor the evening paper alone, that was then represented as earning $62,000 is said to be now earning over $400,000 under the new management and, in my opinion both papers have just about fairly started on their careers of prosperity. It would not be at all surprising to find them soon yielding 50 per cent and upward per year on their cost.

But to resume: Dr. Albert expressed a desire to have the opportunity of interesting his friends on a purely business basis and I told him that if anything was started I would let him know, which I did by the letter of February 19, 1916, from Florida. He seemed entirely familiar with the law, that if he became interested his interest would have to be fully disclosed. It may be that that circumstance also had something to do with his declining to participate, although he did not so state.

The phrase in my letter of February 19, 1918, written from Miami, Fla.—

My friends would be willing to take a one-fourth interest provided some arrangement could be made giving them the option to acquire the majority interest, say after the lapse of one or two years from the close of the war, which would afford every opportunity that could possibly be wanted.

has been torn from its context and an interpretation put upon the clause that will not bear analysis, although the whole matter is in itself of no significance. It is now sought to contort the phrase into an invitation to Dr. Albert to use the paper into which we were to put $750,000 of our money for a one-quarter interest and in which he was invited to acquire only a minority interest to promote German propaganda although there is nowhere a suggestion that there was to be any secrecy about the transaction and he could not have held a secret minority interest to promote German propaganda without violating the law.

I am sure that a moment's thought will convince you that his is an impossible construction and that it could not have meant anything of the sort. It was intended to persuade him that the requirement that we be given an option on sufficient of his five-twelfths to give us with our then holdings a majority, without reference to the one-third retained by the then owners, would still leave Albert a substantial interest in the property and ample opportunity for profit, for we would, of course, have had to take back the optioned stock at a substantial advance, if we exercised the option and if we failed to do so our $750,000 in cash would be indefinitely tied up in a minority holding. Meantime, he would have had an opportunity for the profits on his holdings. As events proved it would have been a magnificent venture for him.

My tentative suggestion as to the duration of the option—"say after the lapse of one or two years from the close of the war"—was based, as I recall it, on the idea (perhaps not very clearly formulated in my mind at the time, as the occasion for adjusting terms had not yet arrived and it had never been discussed with Dr. Albert), First, that we would want time to develop the business so as to know definitely how the venture would succeed under normal peace conditions before being called on to exercise our option, especially as we would have to pay a substantial profit for the option and it would be impossible for us to make such a test with the constantly rising price of materials and labor under the impetus of the foreign demand.

due to the war; Second, that it would be difficult to raise the large sum required to take up the option under war conditions; Third, that while Albert remained in this country, which he would have to do, as he could not get home until the close of the European war, he would want an opportunity during that time to reap his share of the returns from the business if it proved prosperous; and, Fourth, that he would then want to return home and would probably not care longer to leave this investment impending here in the form of a continuing option to us without being here to watch over the investment.

If I had suggested the option for a fixed term it might end before we were prepared to decide or be able to act because of money conditions or of our inability to determine whether we wanted it, unless it were for a long term, to which he would probably not have agreed. The whole plan was, of course, conjectural, but the thought was that we must have the option on sufficient of the stock to give us the control before considering an investment of $750,000 in a small minority interest. On the other hand, I wanted to make the option conditions sufficiently attractive to him to secure his participation, but always with due regard to our safety and the certainty that we would have a fair chance to test out the possibilities of the property under peace conditions before we put more money into it.

As far as we had gone, this tentative proposal involved our getting under the option sufficient of Dr. Albert's stock to give my friends, with our one-quarter, the virtual control without regard to the one-third retained by the former owners. That meant that Albert would have to give up, under the option, at least three-twelfths of his five-twelfths, which, together with the one-quarter that we were to get at the beginning for our $750,000, would give us, in any event, at least six-twelfths, or one-half, the stock independently of the one-third that was being retained by the old owners. One-half was virtually control with another one-third in the other American hands, and my friends had, of course, no idea of going into the venture unless we could get at least that kind of control independently of every other interest. All experience has shown that a newspaper property can not succeed without concentrated control—and that is what we were seeking. That arrangement would at no time have given Albert more than five-twelfths and would still have left him and his friends, after the exercise of our option, with possibly two-twelfths, or one-sixth, of the stock; and they would, of course, have been entitled to a substantial profit on the three-twelfths, or one-quarter, on which we exercised our option. The amount of this profit was never discussed, as the business never reached that stage.

There would have been nothing that would have been the subject of just criticism if in February, 1916, Dr. Albert or his Government had seen fit to buy a newspaper either alone or in conjunction with loyal American citizens—if he could have found any fool citizen to join him—for the avowed purpose of openly exploiting the German point of view in a neutral country to secure the sympathy and moral support of the citizens of that country. It was the right of either belligerent to state and espouse its case, and it was in our interest to know both sides of the controversy. The "White Books" and "Yellow Books" and the others were all propaganda, as were the speaking tours of eminent British and French citizens throughout our country, and the articles written by them, with which our magazines and newspapers were filled before we entered the war. And they were open, proper, and educational propaganda, for which we are indebted to them. What other newspaper propaganda, if any, they may have spread over the country through the mails and the cables, that they alone controlled, we do not know and will never know. but I am sure it did no harm.

If Dr. Albert or the German Government had acquired a newspaper, the law required, as before stated, that the facts as to ownership must be fully disclosed, and they would hardly have dared do otherwise.

But all this is beside the question. No such thing happened. What an asinine performance it would have been from a business viewpoint for my friends to put up or for me to have permitted them to invest $750,000 in good money, which would have been their initial investment for our one quarter, in order to enable Albert to use the paper for unpopular propaganda? For after the Lusitania murders all their propaganda, open as well as secret, was not only unpopular but intolerable, and would have ruined any paper that championed it. Dr. Dernburg's speeches, for instance, that were delivered in universities and elsewhere, and his newspaper and magazine articles, that received respectful attention before the Lusitania was sunk, could thereafter get no hearing, until he was finally virtually forced to leave the country.

We might better have thrown our money into the gutter than to have permitted that sort of experiment with it, besides which our option on the other one quarter, which would probably have cost us double that amount, would have been worthless from the beginning, and the whole thing would have been a foredoomed failure upon the mere publication of his interest such as the law required. Everybody knew that.

Dr. Albert might have imagined that it would pay his Government in other ways to make that sacrifice, for it appears that they had all sorts of dreams. But how would it have paid us? Why should we have been willing to throw away $750,000 for such a purpose?

It is apparent from the letter that no detailed financial plan had been worked out. The time for that had not arrived and never did arrive. On the one hand, we did not know whether we could get the paper on proper terms, and the event proved that we could not have gotten it. On the other hand, we did not know whether Dr. Albert or his friends cared for a minority interest purely as a project with big possibilities for money-making, and the event proved that they did not interest them.

And so the thing died before it was born, but there was no idea of propaganda about it. Whether or not it would have been proper, it certainly would have been foolhardy. We were not venturing a large fortune for any such purpose. If any reasoning mind fails to see that it is because he is determined not to.

Senator WOLCOTT. Mr. Untermeyer, just a little point that I failed to catch: I understood you to have made the point that it would have been financial folly for you and your associates to have invested the sum of money in a newspaper for the purpose of spreading German propaganda, which, at that particular time, was exceedingly unpopular?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Yes.

Senator WOLCOTT. Because it would have meant sure loss of your money?

Mr. UNTERMYER. It could not have been kept secret; it would have had to be open. The law required that all interests be publicly disclosed.

Senator WOLCOTT. Yes; of course.

Mr. UNTERMYER. Because his interest would have had to be disclosed.

Senator WOLCOTT. In the paragraph in the middle of page 19 you seem to depart somewhat from that thought or, at least, to approach the thing from a different angle. That paragraph reads:

"We might better have thrown our money into the gutter than to have permitted that sort of experiment with it, besides which our option on the other one-fourth, which would probably have cost us double that amount, would have been worthless from the beginning, and the whole thing would have been a foredoomed failure upon the mere publication of his interest such as the law required."

Mr. UNTERMYER. I think that should read "upon the mere publication of his interest, if the paper engaged in any propaganda." If it were just a business proposition, and if it were truly a pro-American paper, the fact that he had a minority interest in it would not have hurt it in 1916.

Senator WOLCOTT. That is the point that I was referring to.

Mr. UNTERMYER. Yes; that is badly expressed, and I am indebted to you for calling my attention to it.

Senator STERLING. Why, upon the mere publication of his interest in it, would it have been a foredoomed failure?

Mr. UNTERMYER. As I have explained, upon Senator Wolcott calling my attention to it, it should have read "upon the publication of his interest, if the paper were engaging in pro-German propaganda in 1916"—which this was in February, 1916—and should it have appeared that Dr. Albert or the German Government had a substantial interest in it, the venture could not have succeeded.

Senator STERLING. You mean by that that it was then known that Dr. Albert was interested in German propaganda?

Mr. UNTERMYER. No; but when he took his interest it would have had to be published. It was a crime not to do so.

Senator STERLING. That is to say, simply his interest in the newspaper and not any publication or expression of his sympathies, pro-German or otherwise?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Well, you see this was after the sinking of the Lusitania, which made public sentiment in America almost solidly proally, I think. Now, if he had taken an interest in this paper, and then this paper had attempted to defend German interests or to engage in German propaganda, the paper would have been thereby permanently destroyed; but the mere fact that he had an interest in it, if the paper were a good pro-American paper would not in itself have destroyed it. It would not have hurt it, in my opinion.

Senator WOLCOTT. Two things conjoined; Dr. Albert, a German, being one of the owners, and the paper engaging in German propaganda—those two things in conjunction would have assured destruction of the venture?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Yes; but simply his connection with it, alone, would not, in my opinion, have hurt it.

Senator STERLING. It was not the fact that he was a German, but that he was a German with strong German proclivities, and strong sympathies for the German cause.

Mr. UNTERMYER. Yes. He was a representative here of German interests in America, and so known.

Senator STERLING. Exactly.

Mr. UNTERMYER. And it would have been regarded as a German Government paper, if it had engaged in German propaganda; but if he merely took an interest, and that was a minority interest, and high-class American publishers, men known all over the country, had the control and management of that paper, and it did not engage in any such propaganda, it would not have hurt it. His money was as good as anybody's else.

Senator STERLING. You knew him at all times during these negotiations as a representative of German interests in America, did you not?

Mr. UNTERMYER. I did not know him when he first came here. I think he first came as a representative of a private corporation. I do not think he was connected with the embassy at the beginning. My recollection is that it was not until sometime afterwards. That was the time I knew him.

Maj. HUMES. Do you mean in 1904, the time he first came to this country?

Mr. UNTERMYER. I did not know that he was here in 1904.

Maj. HUMES. He was here in 1904 at St. Louis at the time of the World's Fair. I thought possibly you were referring to that time.

Mr. UNTERMYER. No. I never knew him until 1915 or 1916; I do not know which it is. I did not know that he had ever before been in this country.

Maj. HUMES. You knew, or at least know now, that he came to this country in the fall of 1914 as a representative of the German Government?

Mr. UNTERMYER. I understood he did not originally come as a representative of the German Government.

Maj. HUMES. Did he not come as the commercial attaché of the embassy?

Mr. UNTERMYER. I understood not. I understood he came first as representing a corporation of a very unpronounceable German name—a very long German name.

Maj. HUMES. Was it the Central Purchasing Agency?

Mr. UNTERMYER. How is it in German?

Maj. HUMES. The Zentral Einkaufs Gesellschaft.

Mr. UNTERMYER. Yes; that is it.

Maj. HUMES. Was not that the Government purchasing agency itself?

Mr. UNTERMYER. I do not know, Maj. Humes. I never had any transaction with them at all, except as I have stated here, when their counsel asked me to write a letter to somebody, so I had no knowledge of their business; never heard of any of their other transactions.

Now, I will finish reading this; it is just half a page, if I may.

Maj. HUMES. Yes; proceed.

Mr. UNTERMYER. I do not recall ever having known or met Dr. Fuehr nor of his having at any time called at my office. I did not know that he was connected with a German publicity bureau or that there was such a thing in existence. I gather from the newspapers that among the papers introduced in evidence before you is a letter from Mr. Viereck to his mother or father to the effect that if he or any of his publications got into trouble, he expected me to act as his counsel in defending his interests.

Although I knew Mr. Viereck, and have known him for many years as a member of the American Poetry Society, he was quite a distinguished poet, and the American Poetry Society held its annual meetings at my country place for many years before the war, up at Greystone, in Yonkers, and I had known him as a poet——

Senator STERLING. You mean before 1914?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Yes; I think I have known him, in one way or another, for 10 or 15 years, as a poet, and a very good one, too. I know nothing whatever about his activities except what I have read, but if he had any such expectations they had no basis, as I had never agreed to do anything of the kind. When he asked me I declined, not because it would not have been proper for me to have done so, from what I then knew concerning him, but because of the reasons I have already given, that applied to all such offers of retainers.

I beg to apologize for having imposed upon you this long and dreary statement, but as libels travel so much faster than the truth, so, too, it takes longer to disprove than to assert them. I have endeavored here to cover everything, and believe I have done so. Yet it may be that I have not. If I have not, I would be glad to have Maj. Humes call my attention to anything that has not been covered.

Maj. HUMES. I gather from your statement, first, that you did have some conference with Dr. Albert as to the desirability of his making an investment in this proposed newspaper?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Certainly.

Maj. HUMES. When and where was that conference?

Mr. UNTERMYER. I think it was at my office. I am not sure whether it was at my office or at my house.

Maj. HUMES. How well did you know Dr. Albert at that time?

Mr. UNTERMYER. That was in 1916. Well, I think I had met him probably half a dozen times.

Maj. HUMES. In connection with business transactions, or purely in a social way?

Mr. UNTERMYER. No; I had met him in a social way, but I had never had any business transactions with him whatever. He had called at my office, and he had frequently endeavored to interest me in their affairs and in business transactions, but I had never accepted, as I have said, any retainer to do so, although I had, at times, when he asked my judgment about things, very frankly given it to him.

Maj. HUMES. Did you, after your conversation with Dr. Albert, undertake to negotiate the purchase of any other newspaper, except this one?

Mr. UNTERMYER. It was not after my conversation with Dr. Albert that I undertook to negotiate this one. I have stated, and very plainly, that this negotiation was then under way, before we ever heard of Dr. Albert in connection with it, and that when I spoke to him, I spoke to him incidentally, with the idea of suggesting that he might want to take an interest; but the negotiation was under way, as I have very fully explained, and it continued after he said that they did not want to have anything to do with it.

Maj. HUMES. Is it not a fact—or at least, is it not susceptible of the construction that you meant in your letter to Dr. Albert—that the one-fourth interest which your client was to retain was the one-fourth of the contemplated four-sixths for which you were negotiating?

Mr. UNTERMYER. I do not think so. It may be, but that is not what was in mind by anybody.

Maj. HUMES. If that was meant, then Dr. Albert would have had one-half of the capital stock of the paper?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Let us see. I have not figured that.

Maj. HUMES. Four-sixths, and one-quarter of that you were retaining, which would have left three-sixths for Dr. Albert, would it not?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Yes; that would have left three-sixths, if that had been true, but that was not true. Nobody dreamed of that. You must not forget, Maj. Humes, that the management and control of this paper that I was buying was to be by a newspaper man and a man of experience in the newspaper world and that we had to have control of it. Nobody would have dreamed of putting up the money without that.

Senator NELSON. Have you any objection to stating who that man was?

Mr. UNTERMYER. I do not object to stating it to the committee. I have been dragged into this thing and I do not want to drag any more people into it than can be helped. Might I write it for the committee?

Senator NELSON. Yes; just hand it to the chairman.

Senator OVERMAN. Yes; just hand it to me.

Mr. UNTERMYER. Yes [handing slip of paper to the chairman]. I think Maj. Humes knows. If you do not know, Maj. Humes, I would be very glad to tell you.

Maj. HUMES. I think I know who it was.

Mr. UNTERMYER. Yes; because he appeared before the grand jury in Washington.

Maj. HUMES. Yes; I am familiar with that.

Senator KING. I think that should not be put in the record.

Senator OVERMAN. No.

Mr. UNTERMYER. He was one of the oldest and, I think, one of the best-known newspaper men in the United States.

Maj. HUMES. He is probably connected with other publications?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Yes; with other important publications.

Maj. HUMES. Mr. Untermeyer, I call your attention to one statement in your letter—

Mr. UNTERMYER (interposing). You mean the letter of February 19, 1916?

Maj. HUMES. Yes; your letter to Dr. Albert. In that letter you state, with reference to the retaining of a one-quarter interest by your client and the option to be exercised after a lapse of one year or two years from the close of the war, as follows, "which would afford every opportunity that could be possibly wanted." Now, what was the possibility that was desired there at that time? Was it for propaganda for the purposes of Dr. Albert, or was it for the welfare of your client?

Mr. UNTERMYER. I have told you, Maj. Humes, that there was no propaganda, and I do not think it is quite proper to put a question of that kind.

Maj. HUMES. It is intended in an inoffensive sense.

Mr. UNTERMYER. Well, the word is inoffensive, but I have explained that very fully.

Maj. HUMES. Was it the opportunity that Mr. Albert wanted that you had in mind?

Mr. UNTERMYER. No; let me explain. It was the opportunity that we wanted, which I have fully explained, which would afford all the opportunity that could be wanted. That is, we did not propose to go into this thing if we had to exercise our option under the exceptional conditions of the war, when we probably could not borrow the money even if we were satisfied that the paper was a great success, nor could we determine whether it was going to be a success until normal conditions were resumed. Then, on the other hand, Dr. Albert would have gotten in that way his share of all the profits of the paper until the option was exercised, and then when the option was exercised, of course, we would have had to pay a substantial profit on that option. We did not expect to get it for nothing, and he would not only have his option but probably if it was exercised he would get his one-sixth interest remaining for nothing, and perhaps get his money besides.

Senator NELSON. Your opinion, then, is that Mr. Albert was in this country for the purpose of investing in newspaper enterprises in order that he might make money?

Mr. UNTERMYER. My opinion is that Dr. Albert was a very clever business man, and my information is that he invested in a great many things in which he did make a great deal of money—business enterprises here.

Senator NELSON. And that is what he was here for?

Mr. UNTERMYER. No; I do not say that is what he was here for.

Senator NELSON. You had no idea that he was here in the interest of the German Government?

Mr. UNTERMYER. I did not say that, Senator Nelson.

Senator NELSON. I do not ask you what you said. I ask you now, had you no idea that he was here in the interest of the German Government?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Of course, I knew he was here for the German Government after a certain time. The question that was asked me was whether I knew, when he first came here, that he was acting in the interest of the German Government.

Senator NELSON. Was he here in the interest of the German Government at the time that you had this newspaper negotiation with him?

Mr. UNTERMYER. I think he was then connected with the embassy.

Maj. HUMES. You knew that at that time?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Yes; I knew that.

Maj. HUMES. Now, I call your attention to another paragraph in your letter:

I shall be glad to hear from you as to whether you are in position to take up this subject seriously and promptly with me and bring it to a conclusion.

Mr. UNTERMYER. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. If you were, only as a favor, going to permit Mr. Albert to have a minority interest in the paper, why was it necessary for him to bring the transaction to a conclusion?

Mr. UNTERMYER. In the first place, I have never said that I was doing it as a favor and never intimated I was doing it as a favor. On the contrary, I was making him a business proposition. There was no favor about it. I thought it was an attractive business proposition, and it has turned out to be an enormously attractive one.

Maj. HUMES. In other words, you were willing to take him in on what you considered a good transaction?

Mr. UNTERMYER. I was willing to take him in in order to get about a million and a quarter dollars that we did not want to put up.

Senator OVERMAN. What paper was it? Have you any objection to stating?

Mr. UNTERMYER. It has been published, I think, in the newspapers that it was the Morning and Evening Sun. I would not have stated it, but it has been quite fully stated.

Maj. HUMES. Mr. Bielaski so stated.

Mr. UNTERMYER. Yes; I think the evidence shows that. I never came in contact with the people at all. The negotiation never got that far. I never met any of them.

Maj. HUMES. At that time you knew that Mr. Albert, if he made the investment, was going to invest the money of the German Government?

Mr. UNTERMYER. No; I did not.

Maj. HUMES. You knew it upon receipt of his reply, did you not?

Mr. UNTERMYER. No; I do not think that cable reply stated. He said he was sending a cipher cable to Berlin and would let me know. There were lots of Germans who were investing great sums of money in this country in 1916 wherever they got the chance.

Maj. HUMES. Let me quote to you from that letter:

I have sent at once a cipher cable to Berlin asking for authorization to take up the subject.

Mr. UNTERMYER. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. Now, if it was a personal investment he was making, it was not necessary to secure an authorization from someone else, was it?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Yes; because I did not understand, and you will see that we did not understand, that he was going to do it alone. I assumed he was going to get other people to go into it with him, and I did not know and did not care who it was as long as the money was forthcoming and as long as we controlled our paper. That is all. If he thought it was good business and good money——

Senator OVERMAN (interposing). You would not have cared if you had known German money had gone into it, would you?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Not at all. I would not have cared anything about it in 1916 if they had a minority interest; not in the least. if we controlled this paper and it was a business proposition. I considered it splendid business, and am very sorry we lost it.

Senator NELSON. How can you account for the fact that Albert wanted to communicate with Berlin before he closed the transaction?

Mr. UNTERMYER. I assumed that whoever his friends were there he would have to communicate with them.

Senator NELSON. Who had you supposed his friends there were?

Mr. UNTERMYER. I supposed he had in the financial world as well as the Government hundreds of friends.

Senator NELSON. You had no suspicion, then, that he wanted to communicate with the German governmental authorities?

Mr. UNTERMYER. I did not consider the thing at all, Senator Nelson. Let me tell you how it lay in my mind.

Senator NELSON. You had no suspicion at that time that he intended to communicate about this matter with the German Government at Berlin?

Mr. UNTERMYER. I did not consider it, and it made no difference to me.

Senator NELSON. And you did not care?

Mr. UNTERMYER. I want to add, if you will let me, that when that answer came, I was just about on the way to South America, and never thought of it again. That answer, I think, is dated in March, is it not, Maj. Humes? Just about the time I left for South America, I think. That is all I had to do with it. That ended it.

Maj. HUMES. It is dated February 23.

Mr. UNTERMYER. I think I left Florida on the 26th of February.

Senator KING. As I understand your position, Mr. Untermeyer, it was something like this: At that time, as you understood, Mr. Albert and other Germans were investing from time to time in the United States various sums of money, as they had been doing prior to Germany's entrance into the war?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Very large sums.

Senator KING. And you were perfectly willing to associate yourself—that is, your client was perfectly willing to associate himself with a German or with persons representing German money, provided you or he could get control of the enterprise, and had a majority of the stock?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Yes; provided we had absolute control, and provided they thought it was good business in which they could make money as a business proposition. That is all there was to it.

Senator STERLING. You knew at the time of these negotiations of the relations of Dr. Albert to the German Embassy, did you not?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Oh, yes.

Senator STERLING. Now, could you imagine Dr. Albert's desire to acquire a great newspaper in America for any other purpose than to promote the German cause and German interests?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Yes; I could imagine not only his, but any other shrewd investor picking up that property at that time, which Mr. Munsey has since picked up and is making a fortune out of it.

Senator STERLING. Could you imagine Count von Bernstorff being interested in a newspaper for any other purpose than the promotion of the German cause or German interests and creating sympathy for the German cause?

Mr. UNTERMYER. No; but I think Count von Bernstorff was in a different situation, because he was the ambassador here, and ambassadors do not engage in business, but a commercial attaché who is a business man and a merchant and an investor and to some extent a speculator, as he was, in large amounts, as I am told, would be very likely to see a business opportunity as we saw it, and would be glad to have an interest in it.

Senator STERLING. And you think he would do that independently altogether of any good that might be accomplished for the German cause?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Yes; as he did many other things for himself.

Senator STERLING. Did he invest in any other newspapers?

Mr. UNTERMYER. I do not know.

Senator STERLING. You say when this matter was first called to your attention you were uncertain whether your conversation in regard to it was with Bernstorff or Dr. Albert?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Yes; I so stated. I did not remember it at all.

Senator STERLING. Then you must have had in mind that Dr. Bernstorff was somewhat interested in the acquisition of such a paper?

Mr. UNTERMYER. I did not know with whom the talk took place. I did not remember anything about it, until I thought it all over.

Maj. HUMES. Did you discuss the newspaper situation with von Bernstorff at any time?

Mr. UNTERMYER. No; I never did.

Maj. HUMES. Did you know Dr. Fuehr?

Mr. UNTERMYER. I do not remember ever having seen Dr. Fuehr.

Maj. HUMES. Was he ever at your house?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Not to my knowledge.

Maj. HUMES. Was he not on the 12th of January, 1916, at your house, and did he not spend the evening with you discussing press matters?

Mr. UNTERMYER. No, sir; that is not true.

Maj. HUMES. Then, if the diary of Dr. Fuehr shows that upon the night of January 12, 1916, he was at your house discussing press matters, his diary is wrong, is it?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Yes; I think it is a lie.

Maj. HUMES. It is incorrect?

Mr. UNTERMYER. There may be a great many other lies in it. Is there such a statement in that diary?

Maj. HUMES. Yes, sir. After you returned from Florida, and before you went to South America, did you see Dr. Albert or have any conference with him?

Mr. UNTERMYER. No; I do not think so. I do not recall any at all. I think that ended the whole business. That is my recollection.

Maj. HUMES. Did you not on March 5, 1916, have a conference with Dr. Albert?

Mr. UNTERMYER. I do not know, Maj. Humes. I do not recall any. I do not keep any such diary as you have there. I think I left about that time, on the 5th or 6th, for South America. I am not sure of the date. It would not be at all impossible that I had seen him on the 5th of March.

Maj. HUMES. Could it be possible that you talked to him over the telephone during that time?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Why, quite possible. I talked to him occasionally on the telephone.

Maj. HUMES. Now, is it not a fact that on March 4 Count von Bernstorff was in New York, and that there was a conference at that time between you and Dr. Albert and Count von Bernstorff?

Mr. UNTERMYER. I do not recall any such occasion.

Maj. HUMES. Did you ever have a conference at which both Dr. Albert and Count von Bernstorff were present?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Yes; I did.

Maj. HUMES. How many times did you have such conferences?

Mr. UNTERMYER. I think once; but not with respect to this subject, nor at this time.

Maj. HUMES. Did that conference pertain to newspapers and the purchase of newspapers?

Mr. UNTERMYER. No, sir. I do not recall ever having spoken to Count Von Bernstorff on that subject.

Maj. HUMES. Were your interviews with Count Von Bernstorff of a personal nature or did they pertain to business matters?

Mr. UNTERMYER. I had very few with Count Von Bernstorff. I think I had met him only two or three times in all the years that he was here. One of them pertained to a matter about which he wanted me to advise them, and the others I think were purely personal. He was at my house at "Graystone" once.

Senator STERLING. When was that?

Mr. UNTERMYER. I can not fix the date except in this way. It was shortly before Dr. Buenz of the Hamburg-American Line was placed on trial in New York. Shall I state the whole thing? I would be glad to do so. Dr. Buenz with others, I think, had been indicted on a technical charge of violating our neutrality by coaling some warships outside the harbor. He was the president of the Hamburg-American Line and had lived in this country for many years. He was a very old man, 70 years and upwards of age, I think, and like a great many thousand other people, I knew Dr. Buenz. I had declined to act for or defend Dr. Buenz in that affair. It seems that the trial was about to come on and Dr. Buenz's counsel had advised the Embassy that there could be no conviction in the case; that there were insuperable legal obstacles and they were very strongly of the opinion that he should go to trial. I believe there had been some talk of his being let off with a fine if he pleaded guilty, but he did not want to plead guilty and they did not want him to—his lawyers did not want him to; they were all perfectly sure about his acquittal, so the lawyers came up to my house with Mr. Albert, Dr. Buenz, and Count Von Bernstorff, and they wanted my judgment as to what they should do. Dr. Buenz was very anxious to know what to do. They put the situation before me, stated their legal proposition, and I told them that I thought the thing for them to do was to plead guilty. They did not take my advice, but went to trial and Dr. Buenz was convicted and sentenced to prison. That was the only occasion. It was purely as an act of kindness to a man 70 odd years of age, in great distress, not knowing what to do and not doing what he ought to do after he was told.

Maj. HUMES. Now, Mr. Untermyer, were you acquainted with Dr. Rumely; I mean in 1914, 1915, or 1916?

Mr. UNTERMYER. I think that I had met him once, Maj. Humes?

Maj. HUMES. Did you help him one time in any way?

Mr. UNTERMYER. I never helped him. I never had anything to do with Dr. Rumely or with the Evening Mail purchase; never knew the purchase had been made; never heard of it until it got into trouble in June or July, 1918, about three years after its purchase by Dr. Rumely.

Maj. HUMES. Is it not a fact that when the ownership of the Evening Mail was discovered you approached the alien property custodian as well as others agreeing to purchase the Evening Mail for $200,000, on condition that the facts were suppressed as to German ownership of the paper?

Mr. UNTERMYER. That is not only not true, but it is a very unjust and improper implication. I have the correspondence here. I represented and still represent the American bondholders of the Evening Mail, Mr. Henry L. Stoddard and Mr. Block. Mr. Stoddard was the former owner, the old owner, of the Evening Mail, one of the oldest newspaper men in America. He sold it to George W. Perkins, and Mr. Perkins, I think, or somebody, made the deal with Rumely. I do not know who it was. At any rate Mr. Stoddard owns $275,000 of the $400,000 first mortgage bonds of the Mail, and he owns a great many of the second mortgage bonds, and Mr. Block owns a large number of them. They are conducting the Mail to-day.

Now, when the question was raised of Rumely's ownership in June or July, 1918—not 1915 or 1916, mind you, but 1918—and before there was any publicity concerning Rumely's purchase, my clients became very much concerned that if there was any publicity before they got into control of the Mail, as their Americanism was pretty well known, they feared they would lose the money owing them on their bonds, and I went on behalf of Messrs. Stoddard and Block and put the whole situation before Mr. Palmer, the Alien Enemy Property Custodian. We had a number of talks on the subject, and this is the letter I wrote Mr. Palmer a few day later, as I had promised him, and which has been presented to you, I think, Maj. Humes. May I read it?

Maj. HUMES. No objection, if you desire.

Mr. UNTERMYER (reading):

JULY 5, 1918.

HON. A. MITCHELL PALMER,
Alien Property Custodian,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. PALMER: I beg to apologize for being a few days in default on my promise to submit to you a bid in writing covering the equity in the Evening Mail as represented by its outstanding share capital over and above the bonded debt secured by mortgages on its property and franchises. The delay has been due to the unexpected withdrawal of a purchaser I had in mind and whose name I confidentially disclosed to you, due to his fear that in making this purchase the good-will might be gravely impaired if not entirely destroyed by publicity of the facts of his previous affiliations. The extent of the assurance I was able to offer him following our conversation was not satisfactory.

All other efforts to secure a purchaser have proven unavailing and I have now arranged with a few of the bondholders led by Mr. Henry L. Stoddard (who, I am told, owns about $229,000 of the First Mortgage Bonds and holds in one way or another a large block of the Seconds) that in order to save their security from the destruction that would follow publicity they will make an offer for the property and I am accordingly authorized to and do hereby make on their behalf the following offer:

(1) Mr. Stoddard will pay for himself and associates $200,000 for the share capital of the Evening Mail of which $100,000 will be paid within five days just following the publication of these articles that stolen from him?

R. I do not at the moment remember that. Have

Yes. I call it to your attention to refresh your [ling newspaper to Mr. Untermeyer].

ER. I do not recall it now, as I glance hurriedly
Humes. I saw the reports referring to some letter that was mentioned in your testimony here "I know le." I forget the words, but I read it in the news-

(reading) :

very flattering comments on the statement. I know to whom
ed. I do think it was the right thing to do.

MYER. Yes.

Were you not in conference with Dr. Albert on the seizing or stealing of these papers from him?

MYER. I do not think so.

S. Are you sure whether you were or not?

MYER. Not to my recollection.

ES. Was it not a transaction of sufficient importance to sed itself on your mind if you had had such a confer-

ARMYER. I can not tell, Maj. Humes, unless I know that I ing to do with it. Certainly all the publications were not importance, day by day, to impress themselves on my

MES. Is it not a fact that that article was published by Dr.
er conference with you and in collaboration with you?

ARMYER. I do not think so; no.

MES. Are you sure that it was not?

INTERMYER. Fairly sure; yes. I saw the reference in the ors to it and saw what you read from Fuehr's diary, and, as you before the recess, I do not remember ever having seen

HUMES. You remember receiving from Dr. Albert the letter is cited in the testimony with reference to this matter, do you

UNTERMYER. I did not until I saw it in the newspapers.

HUMES. Did that refresh your recollection?

UNTERMYER. No; it did not.

j. HUMES. You have no recollection of that transaction at all?

UNTERMYER. No; I have not at the moment.

aj. HUMES. When did you first discover that certain of Dr.
rt's papers had been stolen or gotten away from him in some

Mr. UNTERMYER. I do not know. My general impression is that aw something in the newspapers about it. That is my impresn.

Maj. HUMES. Did you have any knowledge of it prior to the publition of the documents themselves?

Mr. UNTERMYER. I do not think so.

duced to the extent that money is being lost and that there is likely to be a substantial amount of current liabilities over current assets.

I understand that if you have not already done so you will make inquiry as to the value of this equity and that your action upon this offer will be guided to some extent by the result of your investigation.

May I ask that this be done speedily if done at all? It seems to me that in this particular transaction our interests are alike and if you desire any help from me in the way of securing the services of Mr. Don Seitz or Mr. Adolph S. Ochs, whose names I suggested to you, in advising you as to the value of the property, pray do not hesitate to command me. I might add the names of Mr. Norman E. Mack and Mr. Vance McCormick as those of men likely to know something about values of this character but for the fact that New York City properties of this kind are sui generis on the subject of market values.

Very truly yours

SAM'L UNTERMYER.

Maj. HUMES. Well, the fact remains then that the offer of $200,000 was made for the paper, the condition being that publicity be avoided, at least as far as possible.

Mr. UNTERMYER. No; that is not a fair statement of the letter. The letter speaks for itself. There is no condition that publicity be avoided where the commission of an offence against the United States is involved. On the contrary, there is a specific statement that if anything of that kind transpires, the bondholders must take their chance of losing their money, if necessary. This letter is dated July, 1918. It has no connection with the Mail purchase by Rumely in 1915.

Maj. HUMES. The letter also indicates that you had in mind the withholding of the publication of the fact that this paper was an organ for German propaganda prior to the declaration of war by this country, it constituting at that time no violation of the criminal statute.

Mr. UNTERMYER. Unless it involves some legal wrong. In order to protect the purchaser; to protect loyal citizens who had their money in the paper, certainly. It was an eminently proper suggestion, and Mr. Palmer so regarded it.

Maj. HUMES. You represented Mr. Stoddard in that transaction?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Yes; Mr. Stoddard and Mr. Block, the present owners; the people who have the paper now.

(Thereupon, at 1.15 o'clock p. m., the subcommittee took a recess until 2.30 o'clock p. m.)

AFTERNOON SESSION.

The subcommittee reconvened, pursuant to the taking of the recess, at 2.30 o'clock p. m.

TESTIMONY OF MR. SAMUEL UNTERMYER—Resumed.

Maj. HUMES. Mr. Untermyer, do you remember the occurrence of the seizing of certain of Dr. Albert's papers in 1915 and their publication in the New York World?

Mr. UNTERMYER. I remember the occurrence; yes.

Maj. HUMES. You remember that occurrence?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. Do you also remember an article published by Dr. Albert in the New York papers, among others the New York Times.

on the 20th of August following the publication of these articles that had been seized or stolen from him?

Mr. UNTERMYER. I do not at the moment remember that. Have you got it there?

Maj. HUMES. Yes. I call it to your attention to refresh your recollection [handing newspaper to Mr. Untermeyer].

Mr. UNTERMYER. I do not recall it now, as I glance hurriedly through it, Maj. Humes. I saw the reports referring to some letter of Dr. Albert's that was mentioned in your testimony here "I know who is responsible." I forget the words, but I read it in the newspapers.

Maj. HUMES (reading):

I have heard very flattering comments on the statement. I know to whom they are addressed. I do think it was the right thing to do.

Mr. UNTERMYER. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. Were you not in conference with Dr. Albert on the subject of the seizing or stealing of these papers from him?

Mr. UNTERMYER. I do not think so.

Maj. HUMES. Are you sure whether you were or not?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Not to my recollection.

Maj. HUMES. Was it not a transaction of sufficient importance to have impressed itself on your mind if you had had such a conference?

Mr. UNTERMYER. I can not tell, Maj. Humes, unless I know that I had something to do with it. Certainly all the publications were not of sufficient importance, day by day, to impress themselves on my mind.

Maj. HUMES. Is it not a fact that that article was published by Dr. Albert after conference with you and in collaboration with you?

Mr. UNTERMYER. I do not think so; no.

Maj. HUMES. Are you sure that it was not?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Fairly sure; yes. I saw the reference in the newspapers to it and saw what you read from Fuehr's diary, and, as I said to you before the recess, I do not remember ever having seen Fuehr.

Maj. HUMES. You remember receiving from Dr. Albert the letter which is cited in the testimony with reference to this matter, do you not?

Mr. UNTERMYER. I did not until I saw it in the newspapers.

Maj. HUMES. Did that refresh your recollection?

Mr. UNTERMYER. No; it did not.

Maj. HUMES. You have no recollection of that transaction at all?

Mr. UNTERMYER. No; I have not at the moment.

Maj. HUMES. When did you first discover that certain of Dr. Albert's papers had been stolen or gotten away from him in some way?

Mr. UNTERMYER. I do not know. My general impression is that I saw something in the newspapers about it. That is my impression.

Maj. HUMES. Did you have any knowledge of it prior to the publication of the documents themselves?

Mr. UNTERMYER. I do not think so.

Maj. HUMES. Mr. Untermeyer, is it or is it not a fact that you approached the New York World and endeavored to prevent the publication of those Albert papers prior to their publication.?

Mr. UNTERMYER. I do not recall any such occurrence, Maj. Humes; but if you have anything that would refresh my memory——

Maj. HUMES. Are you acquainted with a Mr. Frank Cobb, of the New York World?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Very well.

Maj. HUMES. Did you not confer with him on the subject of those stolen papers?

Mr. UNTERMYER. It may be, but I do not remember it. It may be that you are right. I do not recall a thing about it now.

Maj. HUMES. If you had conferred with Mr. Cobb in reference to the publication of these papers after they were stolen, at whose instance did you act?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Well, that is rather a hypothetical question, Maj. Humes. I have no doubt that if I did I must have done so because Dr. Albert or some one of his people asked me to do so; but I do not recall doing so.

Maj. HUMES. If you did approach Mr. Cobb with relation to the publication of these papers, you did so at the instance of Dr. Albert, undoubtedly?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Do you not think that is rather a hypothetical question, Maj. Humes?

Maj. HUMES. I do not think it is hypothetical, because you, better than any man except Dr. Albert, would know whether or not you had discussed that subject.

Mr. UNTERMYER. I tell you that I do not recall ever discussing it. Still, if Mr. Cobb says that I did, I undoubtedly must have, because anything he says is true. It may have escaped my memory at the moment, and I may recall it if given an opportunity.

Senator WOLCOTT. It seems to me, Mr. Untermeyer, that it is rather curious that you say that if you discussed it with the New York World man—the question of the publication of these papers—you do not recall it. It seems to me that would be a fact that you would know positively.

Mr. UNTERMYER. Why, Senator Wolcott? I have thousands of transactions. I see all kinds of people. I have been everywhere since then. I do not know when this date was. What year was it, Maj. Humes?

Maj. HUMES. August, 1915; some time between the middle of July and the 20th of August.

Mr. UNTERMYER. A great many of these things will come back to your mind, and will come back to my mind, and to other people's minds when they are asked concerning them. Maj. Humes mentions Mr. Cobb's name, and I assume that he does so because he must have information on the subject. Now, it is very likely. It may have happened and yet have entirely escaped my memory at the moment, and may come back to me as have other occurrences when I have had the chance to think them over or to consult my papers.

Senator OVERMAN. If you did do it, you would not have done it voluntarily?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Not unless somebody asked me to do it. Undoubtedly if I did it it must have been because Dr. Albert or somebody asked me to do it.

Maj. HUMES. If you did do it, you must have had information from Dr. Albert or some of his friends with reference to the stealing of the papers?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Certainly I must. There is no doubt of that.

Maj. HUMES. You stated, in your general statement and in the statement which you gave to the prints a week ago last Sunday, that the only connection that you had with any of these German agents, or anyone connected with the embassy, except with regard to the newspaper transaction that you testified to this morning, was of a social nature, and was the ordinary social intercourse that was common among all of the people acquainted with them.

Mr. UNTERMYER. What I said was that I had never acted as counsel for any of them; that I had never taken a retainer; that I had never rendered a bill; that I had no business transactions with them, except this one.

Senator NELSON. But your answer is what I would call a negative figment. You seem to dwell upon not having received a regular retainer or getting a fee. That is not the point. Did you have under any circumstances, with or without a fee, with or without a retainer, any consultation with them? That is the question.

Mr. UNTERMYER. As a lawyer, Senator Nelson?

Senator NELSON. No; as a citizen—in any capacity, either as a lawyer or as a citizen.

Mr. UNTERMYER. Certainly; I have said repeatedly, and said in my statement, that I had often talked with them.

Senator NELSON. No; but did you consult about these affairs here that they were carrying on in this country?

Mr. UNTERMYER. No. No, gentlemen, I did not do anything of the kind.

Senator NELSON. You never consulted with any of them about these stolen papers that have been referred to?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Not so far as I recall.

Senator NELSON. Well, now, Mr. Untermeyer, that is a little surprising, in a prominent matter like that. If you had talked with these men about it I should think that would have impressed itself on your memory.

Mr. UNTERMYER. I do not see why it should, Senator Nelson. I do not think you realize how many hundreds of things come to a man in the course of time.

Senator NELSON. But you do not have hundreds of cases of stolen papers?

Mr. UNTERMYER. I did not think there was any importance about that, when I read about it or saw about it. It may be he spoke to me before I saw it. That I can not tell. But suppose he did. What on earth difference does that make, and what has that to do with any of these transactions? Suppose I did go to Mr. Cobb and ask him not to publish about this stolen property. I can not see any significance in it, at all. But I do not recall doing so.

Senator NELSON. Now, Mr. Untermeyer, you indicated in your written statement there that before we entered into the war it was perfectly proper for anybody to take sides on any side of this question.

Mr. UNTERMYER. Yes.

Senator NELSON. You, as an able lawyer and a man of vast information and reading—did you not realize from the beginning that if Germany should succeed in conquering and destroying France and England that she would get absolute control of Europe and that we would be the next victim? Did not that occur to you, or dawn upon your mind?

Mr. UNTERMYER. If you have paid any attention to my statement and to the publications that I made, and to the speeches that I made, and to the articles that I wrote, you will see that I was not pro-German at all.

I have tried to impress that on you, and if I can not make that plain, if I have not made it plain in all that I have done and said before the war, I never can, Senator Nelson.

Senator NELSON. I have not had a chance to read all your speeches, or any of them.

Mr. UNTERMYER. But I have quoted a number of them in this document.

Senator NELSON. But here is a question that I asked you clearly, and I would like to hear your views on it.

Mr. UNTERMYER. I shall be glad to give you my views, Senator Nelson.

I always thought it would have been a most unfortunate thing, from the standpoint of America, to have Germany win this war, and often said so, privately and publicly.

Senator NELSON. Yes.

Mr. UNTERMYER. I thought it would have been unfortunate first because Germany had begun the war without provocation; the invasion of Belgium is the thing that first impressed me. Secondly, after the Lusitania disaster, I felt very strongly against Germany. But as to the ultimate result upon America of Germany winning the war, I do not think any of us really seriously thought that Germany was going to attack America. So far as that is concerned, I have never felt that way. I have felt that she should be beaten for many other reasons—in the interest of civilization and in the interest of righteousness, but not because of our own personal safety.

Senator NELSON. If those were your views, ought not every patriotic American who took that view of the case to have taken the side of the allies from the start and not waited until the war came?

Mr. UNTERMYER. My answer to that, Senator Nelson, is that if you are not satisfied from all the indications that I have given and from the documents that I have read here that I did take the side of the allies, nothing would ever convince you. But there is this to be said, and I think we should all have it prominently in mind: This country was supposed to be neutral. The President, by proclamation after proclamation, was asking us to be neutral. We wanted to keep out of the conflict. These people were the accredited agents here of a neutral government, and I, in common with every man of any—well, I will not call myself a man of consequence, but I, as well as men of consequence were all anxious to avert war. We could not avert war by simply turning our backs upon the accredited representatives of a neutral country. We were in duty bound to show them the courtesdue to official representatives of a neutral country. I do not think it had much to do with our personal relations at that time. My personal relations with these gentlemen were friendly, you understand, Senator.

Senator NELSON. That is evident.

Mr. UNTERMYER. My personal relations with these gentlemen were friendly and pleasant.

Senator NELSON. That is evident.

Mr. UNTERMYER. As were the relations of a vast number of people in Washington at whose houses they visited.

Senator NELSON. Yes.

Mr. UNTERMYER. In New York and other places with whom they were on social relations—at the White House, where the President for a long time trusted them; where we all trusted them until we found out what they had been doing.

So that I can not see any reason why we should have immediately started to make enemies of them before there was any danger of our getting into the conflict.

Senator NELSON. Then you had no idea of the propaganda they were carrying on in this country until war came, or until diplomatic relations were broken?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Yes; I did. I knew of their propaganda. I forget when it was made public, but as soon as it was made public I knew of it.

Senator NELSON. Did you not know it before?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Certainly not.

Senator NELSON. None of it?

Mr. UNTERMYER. None of it. I never heard of any of it.

Senator WOLCOTT. What do you mean by "before it was made public"?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Before the newspapers published it.

Senator WOLCOTT. That is to say before the propaganda articles came out?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Yes.

Senator WOLCOTT. None of us knew it until they were published.

Mr. UNTERMYER. I had no more knowledge than any other man had who reads the newspapers. They were mighty careful, perhaps, that I should not know.

Senator WOLCOTT. In other words, you did not know that they had formulated a propaganda plan?

Mr. UNTERMYER. No.

Senator WOLCOTT. Your first knowledge in connection with the matter was the appearance of the propaganda itself?

Mr. UNTERMYER. That is all I knew about it, in common with others—the general public.

The word "propaganda" has been given a very uncertain meaning in recent newspaper articles. We all know that propaganda is conducted by individuals and by corporations and by nations. As I said in my statement the white books, the yellow books, were all propaganda, very proper propaganda, which we were entitled to know.

The thing that is improper is secret propaganda and criminal propaganda. But to take the word "propaganda" and apply it indiscriminately to every attempt of a nation to get the sympathy of a neutral nation, by showing the justice of its cause, simply abuses the meaning of the word.

Maj. HUMES. Mr. Untermeyer, then, as I understand it, when you say that you had no connection with the German embassy, the German Government, or the German agents, you mean that you had no connection with them in the sense of an attorney representing them as clients in business transactions?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Either as an attorney or as an agent, or as any one who had any business relation with them whatever.

Maj. HUMES. Did you as a friend and an acquaintance intercede in their behalf and assist them or act for them in any way, without compensation?

Mr. UNTERMYER. I do not recall having done so, except in one instance that I have mentioned in my statement.' Let me see, what was that?

Senator KING. Dr. Buenz's case?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Yes; that is about all, I think; and then the Hamburg-American case that I have told you about; I mean the wireless case.

Maj. HUMES. Oh, the wireless case?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. That was long before the war started as I understand?

Mr. UNTERMYER. No, I do not think so. I think the wireless case between the French wireless and the German wireless was in January, 1915.

Maj. HUMES. Was that the case in which you represented Lemke.

Mr. UNTERMYER. No; I think it was the case in which we represented—I did not, but the firm did. It was a question of law on the construction of a contract, and the firm represented this German wireless company—I forget the name of the company, it is a long, difficult name. Lemke was, I think, either the president or the manager or something connected with it.

Maj. HUMES. You remember the fact of the publication of these World articles—this World exposure?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. And, as I understand, you are not sure whether or not you participated in the preparation of this Albert letter that appeared on August 20, 1915?

Mr. UNTERMYER. I do not think I did, Maj. Humes; I would like to read it. It is a pretty long document.

Maj. HUMES. I wish you would look at it sufficiently to refresh your recollection, if you will?

Mr. UNTERMYER. It is nearly four printed columns long, is it not?

Maj. HUMES. No; about two and a half, I think [handing newspaper to the witness].

Mr. UNTERMYER. I do not know. It does not seem to refresh my recollection very much. I may have had something to do with it. I do not know. I do not now recall having had. It may have been shown to me and it may not.

Maj. HUMES. Then you are not sure of the significance of this statement in Dr. Albert's letter to you of August 20:

I have heard very flattering comments on the statements. I know to whom they are addressed.

Mr. UNTERMYER. No; because I see from your record here that you have introduced a letter or something from von Papen, in which he states that he and Dr. Albert prepared this statement. I remember that, so I judge from that that they prepared it. This is a letter, is it not, to his wife, or somebody?

Maj. HUMES. Yes; it is a letter to his wife.

In this same letter of August 20 that Dr. Albert wrote you he makes this statement:

Will you please find enclosed draft of a note which I want to write to the State Department.

Mr. UNTERMYER. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. What was the nature of the note he sent to you that was to be prepared for the State Department.

Mr. UNTERMYER. "Which I want to write to the State Department"?

Maj. HUMES. Yes; a draft of a note "which I want to write to the State Department." The first sentence in the letter. That is a carbon copy of the letter from Dr. Albert's files. [Exhibiting letter to witness.]

Mr. UNTERMYER. Yes; I saw that, too, in the public prints. I can not imagine—I suppose you must have gotten the document, did you not, from the State Department?

Maj. HUMES. I have not checked the State Department.

Mr. UNTERMYER. There must be some such note, I mean.

Maj. HUMES. That is what I was inquiring about, Mr. Untermeyer.

Mr. UNTERMYER. I do not remember it. That is the trouble about it, Major. But the State Department would certainly have it in the files.

Maj. HUMES. Did Dr. Albert submit to you, on occasion, notes that he was preparing for submission to the State Department?

Mr. UNTERMYER. No. Yet he may submitted that one. I read that in the newspapers, and I looked over everything I had and I could find nothing of the kind. Yet, undoubtedly it must have been enclosed. But I assumed that you would get it from the State Department or wherever it was and have it, if there was such a paper.

Maj. HUMES. Well, then, there was nothing unusual about his submitting to you the draft of notes that he was preparing for submission to the State Department?

Mr. UNTERMYER. I do not remember this one, and I do not remember ever having seen any note to the State Department, so far as I can recall—never.

Maj. HUMES. But, as I understand, you do not deny that you may have received such note as is indicated by this letter?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Oh, I should judge—is that a copy of a letter?

Maj. HUMES. This is the carbon.

Mr. UNTERMYER. From Dr. Albert?

Maj. HUMES. Of Dr. Albert's letter to you.

Mr. UNTERMYER. I have no doubt that I must have received it, but of course I do not know. There could have been nothing very suspicious in a note to our State Department.

Maj. HUMES. He also asked you what you think of it, and to give him your ideas.

Mr. UNTERMYER. I can not find a word on the subject. I looked it up since I saw reference to it in the newspapers, and there is not a line or word in my files of an answer to that letter from Dr. Albert. It is August, 1915?

Maj. HUMES. August 20, 1915.

Mr. UNTERMYER. August 20, 1915? There is not a word. I have not been able to find it; and yet it looks as if it must have happened, you know.

Maj. HUMES. If this did happen, how do you account for the cordial, friendly relation that Dr. Albert must have felt to feel justified in submitting to you papers that he proposed to submit to the State Department?

Mr. UNTERMYER. I account for it very naturally on the ground that our relations were very pleasant and friendly, and on no other ground.

Maj. HUMES. Were not those relations even intimate and confidential?

Mr. UNTERMYER. They were not intimate. I do not think I ever saw Dr. Albert over half a dozen to perhaps a dozen times in my life, over a period of these two or three years, and never before then.

Maj. HUMES. How were you in the habit of communicating with Dr. Albert?

Mr. UNTERMYER. When Dr. Albert wanted to see me, he wrote me or came to the office. I think on two or three occasions he was at my house as a guest.

Maj. HUMES. Was there any other method by which you communicated with him?

Mr. UNTERMYER. I do not know of any; no. It may have been by telephone.

Maj. HUMES. Was he in the habit of telephoning you?

Mr. UNTERMYER. No; I do not think so; but he doubtless did telephone to me.

Maj. HUMES. Did you ever seek conferences with him about these various matters?

Mr. UNTERMYER. I do not recall ever having done so.

Maj. HUMES. Would not this letter indicate that the relations that existed between you and Dr. Albert was more than simply a friendly social relation?

Mr. UNTERMYER. No; I do not think so. That one letter would not indicate it, because I do not think that is the only time on which he asked my advise about things. I think he has done it before, and I think probably he did it afterwards.

Maj. HUMES. About business matters?

Mr. UNTERMYER. No; I would not call them business matters. For instance, take the Buenz transaction that I have told you about. Then, again, he came to me a number of times when people got into trouble—I think in connection with a number of his troubles—and asked me to act, and each time I declined. I think, on one or two occasions I did suggest counsel when he asked me to do so. I think I suggested Mr. Stanchfield, who acted in some of those cases.

Maj. HUMES. Is it not a fact that Dr. Albert was in constant communication with you with reference to these cases and that the attorneys who appeared as attorneys of record in the several cases were really junior counsel in the case, and you had the actual charge of the practical handling of the litigation?

Mr. UNTERMYER. It is not only not a fact, but it is entirely contrary to the fact. I never had any discussion except on the occasion of the Buenz case with any of his lawyers concerning any of the cases so far as I know, or the merits of them. I do not recall a single instance. I simply did not have anything to do with them, and they were not junior counsel and I was not senior counsel, or any other kind of counsel, and I never saw the indictments; I never saw the pleadings; I never was consulted about them, did not know who they were, who were their counsel, and with what they were charged, or anything about them.

These cases were tried, no end of them, and I think Mr. McCombs tried one—the Tauscher case. I forgot who tried the Koenig case, but there were a number of those cases and a number of different counsel. I never saw the men, never met them, never saw their counsel, never consulted with them, never knew who they were, or had anything to do with any of them; I simply declined to do so.

Maj. HUMES. While you were coming in contact with Dr. Albert, did you ever come in contact with Capt. Boy-Ed?

Mr. UNTERMYER. I think I met all the members of the embassy. In fact, I know I met Capt. Boy-Ed, and I know I met von Papen once.

Maj. HUMES. Did you ever discuss business matters with them, either as attorney or in a friendly way?

Mr. UNTERMYER. No; I do not recall having had any business discussions with them, so far as I recall.

Maj. HUMES. Mr. Untermeyer, do you remember the steamship Atlantic?

Mr. UNTERMYER. I remember the case that I have referred to in my statement here, with which the steamship Atlantic was connected. That was a controversy between Dr. Albert and a man named Simon, was it not?

Maj. HUMES. Yes. That is, it afterwards developed into that.

Mr. UNTERMYER. But that was the only time I knew anything about it. I never heard about it until Dr. Albert's lawyer asked me to write a letter which I have discussed in my statement.

Maj. HUMES. Who was Dr. Albert's lawyer in that matter?

Mr. UNTERMYER. His lawyers were Hayes, Kaufman & Lindheim. They were the counsel for the embassy, too; the general counsel for the embassy.

Maj. HUMES. Did you ever have any conference with Dr. Albert about this matter?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Yes, I did.

Maj. HUMES. Do you know Carl Heynen?

Mr. UNTERMYER. No; I never saw him as far as I know. I do not remember ever having met him.

Maj. HUMES. Then, I presume you had no conference with him, if you never met him.

Mr. UNTERMYER. I do not remember having met him at all. I do not think I ever saw him.

Maj. HUMES. Can you tell us in what way the steamship Atlantic came into the hands of Dr. Albert?

Mr. UNTERMEYER. No; I knew nothing about it, Major, until he and Simon got into some kind of controversy over money. He claimed that Simon owed him a large amount of money, and his counsel discussed with me the beginning of a suit. I think I wrote a letter. Yes; that is all I did—I wrote a letter to Simon. That is the only connection, so far as I remember, that I had anything to do with. I think they were preparing a complaint, or came near doing so.

Maj. HUMES. Is that a photostat of the letter you wrote to Simon in that matter? [Exhibiting paper to the witness.]

Mr. UNTERMYER. That is my signature. Yes; it is. That was written at Mr. Lindheim's request, while he was in my office.

Maj. HUMES. It is on the letterhead of Guggenheimer, Untermyer & Marshall, 120 Broadway, New York.

Mr. UNTERMYER. What is the date?

Maj. HUMES. October 6, 1916, and it reads as follows:

JOHN SIMON, Esq.,

15 William Street, New York City.

DEAR SIR: I have been asked by Dr. Albert on behalf of the Zentral-Erwaufts-Gesellschaft to begin proceedings against you arising out of transactions with which he tells me you are familiar. If you care either in person or through Counsel to discuss the subject-matter of the claims with me, I shall be pleased to have you do so or to have you refer me to Counsel who would accept service of papers.

Very truly yours,

(Signed)

SAML. C. UNTERMYER.

Mr. UNTERMYER. That is the transaction which I outlined in my original statement, and that is the only one I ever had with him.

Maj. HUMES. The steamship Atlantic was a ship that had been purchased by Dr. Albert in the name of this central purchasing agent in order that it might be taken out of allied trade and used in trade with South America, was it not?

Mr. UNTERMYER. I do not know anything about it. I did not have charge of the transaction or the negotiations and had never heard of it. I wrote this letter at the request of his counsel because they thought that if I wrote the letter they might be able to get a settlement; and that is all I had to do with it.

Maj. HUMES. Is it not a fact that at your office Dr. Albert and Carl Heynen had a conference relative to this claim against John Simon, and as a result of that conference you wrote this letter?

Mr. UNTERMYER. No; that is not my recollection of it, at all. My recollection of it is that it was through their counsel, because I think there is a letter there—you will find, if you have Dr. Albert's letters—in which he says that the matter is in the hands of his counsel.

Maj. HUMES. Is it a letter to you?

Mr. UNTERMYER. I think it is; yes.

Maj. HUMES. You have not that letter with you?

Mr. UNTERMYER. I do not think I have, but I will send it to you. I will be very glad to do so. It is a very short note, as I remember it.

in which he said if anything came of that note please to take it up with his counsel.

Maj. HUMES. Did you not give Carl Heynen and Dr. Albert a legal opinion that the claim was good as against Simon, at the time of this conference?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Maj. Humes, I do not think there ever was any such conference with Heynen. There is no doubt that Dr. Albert spoke to me about it, but I do not recall any conference with Heynen. In fact, I do not remember ever having met Heynen. Who was he? What was his relation to the embassy?

Maj. HUMES. He was an agent of the German Government.

Mr. UNTERMYER. What was his relation to the embassy? Did he have any official connection with it?

Maj. HUMES. I think he had no official connection with the embassy, but he had charge of Dr. Albert's shipping.

Mr. UNTERMYER. I do not remember him at all.

Maj. HUMES. Is it not a fact that at the time that this matter came to your attention you had in your hands litigation on behalf of John Simon?

Mr. UNTERMYER. No; it is not.

Maj. HUMES. And that you expressed your purpose of withdrawing from that litigation?

Mr. UNTERMYER. No; it is not true that we had any litigation on behalf of John Simon at all. I did not know John Simon; I had never seen him or met him, but later on I learned that Mr. Marshall, a long time before, had organized some company——

Senator STERLING (interposing). Who is Mr. Marshall?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Mr. Louis Marshall. He was my partner. That is, I am not a member of the firm, but I call him "my partner."

Maj. HUMES. When did you cease to be a member of the firm, so that we may fix these dates?

Mr. UNTERMYER. I should say it was at least five or six years ago, but still I am there all the same, and my sons are members of the firm, and my nephews are members of the firm, and while I am not a member of the firm, I work just as though I were.

Maj. HUMES. And the litigation in which you are interested is handled in the name of the firm, is it not?

Mr. UNTERMYER. No; not as a rule.

Maj. HUMES. Is it not a fact that what you are pleased to call your "firm" brought a suit against John Simon for Dr. Albert and this central purchasing agency to recover $750,000 that they claimed was due as a result of the transactions in connection with the steamship Atlantic?

Mr. UNTERMYER. I do not recall that any suit was brought. I understood a suit was threatened.

Maj. HUMES. Well, a declaration was prepared and served, was it not?

Mr. UNTERMYER. I did not know that. I knew of one being prepared, but I had never heard the suit had been brought. It was a private quarrel between those men, you know.

Maj. HUMES. I call your attention to a copy of the declaration in the case of the Central Purchasing Agency against John Simon [handing paper to witness].

Mr. UNTERMYER. Was that ever served?

Maj. HUMES. It is my understanding it was served.

Mr. UNTERMYER. I do not think so.

Maj. HUMES. It may have been only the subject matter of conferences.

Mr. UNTERMYER. I do not think it was ever served.

Maj. HUMES. Was that prepared in your office, by your firm?

Mr. UNTERMYER. I think it was prepared by these lawyers.

Maj. HUMES. Which lawyers do you mean?

Mr. UNTERMYER. I mean the lawyers for the embassy—Hayes, Kaufman & Lindheim.

Maj. HUMES. I call your attention to the fact that the affidavit is sworn to by Albert Untermeyer.

Mr. UNTERMYER. I have not any doubt that it was prepared in the office of the embassy. I do not think it was prepared in our office.

Maj. HUMES. Hayes, Kaufman & Lindheim were the attorneys for the embassy, were they?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Yes; so I understood.

Maj. HUMES. You knew that at the time you had your talk with Mr. Lindheim, and wrote the letter to John Simon, did you not?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Yes.

Senator OVERMAN. You had no connection with Hayes, Kaufman & Lindheim?

Mr. UNTERMYER. No.

Maj. HUMES. Then you were volunteering to assist Hayes, Kaufman & Lindheim, as attorneys for the embassy, in securing a settlement with John Simon?

Mr. UNTERMYER. I was not volunteering, but I was asked by them to write this letter, and I was very glad to write it, because I thought this was a private controversy in which Simon was trying to cheat Albert.

Maj. HUMES. In that letter you say you had been asked by Dr. Albert to write the letter.

Mr. UNTERMYER. Yes; I have no doubt he also asked me.

Maj. HUMES. He probably asked you also?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Very likely.

Maj. HUMES. Now, are you not familiar with the fact that in connection with the steamship Atlantic an effort was made to send a shipment of rosin to Archangel, with the distinct understanding on the part of Dr. Albert and the central purchasing agency that the ship would be captured by Germans and be taken into a German port, and that Dr. Albert so admitted?

Mr. UNTERMYER. I do not think you ought to ask me such a question, Maj. Humes. I have told you I never heard of anything of the kind; did not know anything about the Atlantic, the ship, or any of these affairs, and you should not have asked me that question, because it carries out broadcast the implication that I knew something of the kind. I never heard of the rosin, or the capture, or any of these stories that you now are embodying in your question.

Maj. HUMES. You say that Dr. Albert conferred with you with reference to his litigation against John Simon. Was not that litigation because of the differences and the difficulties that arose between Dr. Albert and John Simon in the manipulation of the steamship Atlantic?

Mr. UNTERMYER. No; I did not so understand at all. I understood that Simon had gotten away with some of Albert's money, and Albert wanted to get it.

Maj. HUMES. Dr. Albert told you the manner by which he had gotten away with the money, of course?

Mr. UNTERMYER. I do not think so. I do not think there was anything about rosin that I heard of, or about the capture of a ship.

Maj. HUMES. Did not Dr. Albert tell you that the understanding he had with Simon, when he sold the ship to him, was that Simon was not to permit the use of the ship in allied trade; that he was to hold it ready for the use of the German Government immediately at the close of the war, and, in the meantime, he was to use it for shipping to South America and to neutral ports?

Mr. UNTERMYER. No; I never heard anything about that story at all.

Maj. HUMES. I can not quite comprehend how he could present the question of his claim against Simon without outlining something of the facts in connection with the litigation.

Mr. UNTERMYER. Well, I did not go into the facts in connection with the litigation. All I said was that I would write Simon a letter, and he thought that he and Simon could get together and settle it.

Maj. HUMES. I see. Did you ever have a talk with Count von Bernstorff about this steamship Atlantic?

Mr. UNTERMYER. No.

Maj. HUMES. What, if any, part did you have in the effort to get Count von Bernstorff to act as an arbitrator to settle the differences between Albert and Simon?

Mr. UNTERMYER. All I heard was that Simon, as I remember it, was trying to get Count von Bernstorff to act as an arbitrator. Somebody was. I don't remember who it was.

Senator KING. All these transactions to which you refer, of course, preceded our entry into the war, Major?

Maj. HUMES. Yes, sir. This was in the fall of 1916.

Mr. UNTERMYER. Senator, as I stated in my statement, I agreed to write this letter for Dr. Albert and for his counsel, upon a personal controversy that he and Simon were having, without caring anything about the controversy itself.

Senator KING. The point, to my mind, was the materiality of this, or its relevancy.

Mr. UNTERMYER. I do not see it.

Senator KING. I do not quite see how Mr. Untermeyer or anybody else, for that matter, is to be condemned because they were friendly with Germans prior to our entering the war.

Maj. HUMES. Through the public prints, Senator, Mr. Untermeyer has assumed that unreliable testimony and untrue testimony has perhaps been presented to this committee, and I felt the committee was anxious to know whether or not the testimony presented was warranted by the facts, or whether a great wrong and error had been committed against Mr. Untermeyer when Mr. Bielaski presented this matter.

Mr. UNTERMYER. Through the public prints, if I may say, you have had go out the implication that I have been concerned in some sort of improper propaganda. You have had it go out that I had loaned a friend money for the Warheit for propaganda which was grossly false. You have had it go out that because my wife contributed something to saving starving babies in Germany, that that was propaganda, and have been answering that.

Maj. HUMES. I do not suppose that you are using the word "you" in a personal sense?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Certainly not, Major. I mean that the statement has gone out and it has been very much misrepresented.

Senator KING. I want to say that so far as I was concerned I believed we ought to have gone into the war when Belgium was invaded. That was my personal view, and I was proally and did not sympathize at all with Germany; felt that she was in the wrong; felt that her course for years had been for the purpose of preparing to engage in a world-wide war of domination. While entertaining those views I could not quite comprehend the psychology of a man who could look complacently upon Germany and her course; yet I can realize that it was entirely proper and consistent with a man's devotion to his own country, and with the highest patriotism for a man to be friendly with Germans here, and I can understand how a man could be pro-German rather than proally, although personally I took an entirely different view. But when our country entered the war, then, of course, no American could be pro-German. If he were pro-German he was anti-American.

Mr. UNTERMYER. I took the same point of view before the war that you did, Senator. I was not pro-German before the war at any time, for the reasons I have stated; but I thought it was the part of good and decent citizenship, when these men were here, that we should be friendly with them if we had been friends before. They were not in war with us. We were neutral, or supposed and expected to be. I did not intend to cut off my friendship with these men, to start with; and in the next place, I thought it was a good thing that they should have people here who were friendly with them, even though they did not agree with them; and whenever I got an opportunity, and thought it was consistent and proper and decent, and they wanted to know anything, I would be glad to tell them; but I would not take their money, and I would not take their retainers, and I would not act for them, because I did not want to get into the position of being custodian of their secrets under some professional obligation to them if we were ever to get into war. You see, Major, you have selected just two or three isolated transactions over a period of two or three years—a long time—and they amount to very little when you take into consideration the length of time over which they stretch. From the time of the blowing up of our manufactories and of the vile propaganda that was exposed, you will find that I had nothing to do with them at all.

Maj. HUMES. Did this not all occur after the sinking of the Lusitania?

Mr. UNTERMYER. After the sinking of the Lusitania; yes.

Maj. HUMES. It occurred after that?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Yes; it did; but we all believed for a while—I think all of us believed that the diplomatic negotiations under way would smooth out that difficulty. For six or nine months, you know, they did stop sinking ships without warning; but as soon as it became apparent that they were going to resume, then——

Maj. HUMES (interposing). Practically all of the blowing up of ships occurred prior to October, 1916, when for Dr. Albert you wrote the letter to Simon?

Mr. UNTERMYER. No; I do not think so.

Maj. HUMES. That was within three or four months of the severance of diplomatic relations?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Yes; but I suppose you know that between October, 1916, and February, 1917, a great many ships were blown up, and that after we severed diplomatic relations some people still thought that we were not going to war, but they kept on blowing up ships. I thought we were going to have war immediately.

Maj. HUMES. Now, to resume this matter, I want to call your attention to a letter from Dr. Albert to John Simon, dated December 8, 1916. Among other things, he says:

The invitation to make such adjustment or to discuss the merits of these claims was presented by me through my counsel, Mr. Untermeyer, in response to which he received a very curt and peremptory reply from your counsel, to the effect that there was no room for discussion.

And further:

Referring to your observations concerning Mr. Untermeyer, I have nothing to do with your difference with that gentleman, and do not recognize your right to dictate to me who I shall employ as counsel to represent me.

Does that refresh your recollection as to whether or not you were simply acting as a friend of Lindheim, or whether you were actually counsel in the case?

Mr. UNTERMYER. No; I was not counsel in the case.

Maj. HUMES. Then Dr. Albert was in error when he wrote that letter to Mr. Simon?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Not only that, but what I did was to ring up; I rang up Simon's counsel and told him I thought he ought to take this thing up with Lindheim, and he said there was nothing to take up, and that was on that account; but I never acted as his counsel, and he knows I never did.

Maj. HUMES. Is it not a fact that Lindheim did not get into that case until after the differences between you and John Simon, or the feeling upon the part of John Simon, at least, resulted in a refusal on his part to confer or negotiate with you regarding the transaction?

Mr. UNTERMYER. No.

Maj. HUMES. And then Mr. Lindheim came into the case?

Mr. UNTERMYER. No. My recollection is quite to the contrary. My recollection is that it was his case, as all those cases were. Lindheim has been in my office; had been a clerk; he had gotten his legal education in my office. I think he had been out of it 10 or 15 years, and by marriage, in some way, was distantly related to me, and he would often talk over his troubles with me.

Maj. HUMES. Had Kaufman ever been in your office?

Mr. UNTERMYER. No; I did not know Kaufman; never had met Kaufman until within the past six months; never had seen him.

Maj. HUMES. Had Mr. Hayes ever been connected with your office as a clerk or student, or in any capacity?

Mr. UNTERMYER. No; the only one I knew was Lindheim.

Maj. HUMES. In your statements you say that you have no real acquaintance with Viereck, except because of his poetical inclination?

Mr. UNTERMYER. I did not quite say that. I said I knew him; originally met him, I think, in connection with the American Poetry Society. Oh, I had known Viereck for many years.

Maj. HUMES. Did you have any conference with Mr. Viereck in the winter of 1914-15 with reference to German propaganda or German activities of any kind or German organizations?

Mr. UNTERMYER. No.

Maj. HUMES. Did he ever discuss with you the matter of writing articles for any of the papers at that time?

Mr. UNTERMYER. I know he has asked me a number of times to write articles for papers with which he has been associated, and I have consistently refused.

Maj. HUMES. Did you ever have any communication with William Bayard Hale on that subject?

Mr. UNTERMYER. No. I saw that in your record. I do not recollect ever having met Mr. Hale. I saw that reference there in the testimony.

Maj. HUMES. Mr. Viereck states in this letter, which is already in the record: "I had a long talk with Samuel Untermyer, who is strongly on our side, and will write an article in support of our contention for the New York Times."

Mr. UNTERMYER. What contention is that?

Maj. HUMES. I am not sure, except as he says that certain information is necessary, for which he has asked Dr. Hale, and the communication which he sent to Dr. Hale reads as follows.

Mr. UNTERMYER. Is it fair to put in all this stuff that these people wrote?

Maj. HUMES. This is in writing.

Mr. UNTERMYER. I know, but it has not the slightest reference to me, because I do not know anything about it.

Maj. HUMES. Well, if it is a wrong imputation, you certainly should have an opportunity to explain it.

Mr. UNTERMYER. Well, it is. He talks about my writing an article. Did I ever write an article?

Maj. HUMES. I do not know. That is what I am asking you for.

Mr. UNTERMYER. Well, I never did write any articles for anybody. The only articles I wrote were on the other side, during that time, and the public prints are full of them. He may have been trying to show how smart he was, and what he could do.

Senator WOLCOTT. If by his statement he meant to imply that you were on the German side——

Mr. UNTERMYER. I do not believe he meant to imply anything of the kind, but if he did it was not true.

Senator STERLING. You knew his publication very well, did you not—The Fatherland?

Mr. UNTERMYER. No. I had seen it perhaps two or three times.

Senator STERLING. You knew it well enough to know that it was strongly pro-German, did you not?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Yes; I knew it was strongly pro-German until we got into the war, and then I think it disappeared, if I am not mistaken, and was substituted by Viereck's Weekly, was it not?

Maj. HUMES. They just changed its name.

Mr. UNTERMYER. No; but a different looking paper.

Maj. HUMES. No; there was not much change in the looks; they just changed the name.

Senator NELSON. Here is the substitute for The Fatherland [exhibiting paper].

Mr. UNTERMYER. Have you The Fatherland, too?

Senator NELSON. No.

Maj. HUMES. May this letter not have been written in connection with the matter you referred to this morning, where the New York Times sought to have you write the German side of the question, with Mr. Beck writing the English side of the question—a review of the various white books, etc.?

Mr. UNTERMYER. What is the date of that letter?

Maj. HUMES. January 5, 1915.

Mr. UNTERMYER. My refusal to Mr. Ochs was in September, 1914.

Maj. HUMES. September, 1914?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Yes; and that would have been rather too late. Now, when that thing came out in the newspapers——

Senator STERLING. To what thing do you refer?

Mr. UNTERMYER. That letter.

Senator KING. The letter in the record here?

Mr. UNTERMYER. What's his name, Viereck, whom I had not seen for many months, and had no communication with, wrote me a letter on the subject, which I brought with me, if you would like to see it.

Maj. HUMES. I would be very glad to have it.

Mr. UNTERMYER. I do not know whether this is true or not, but this is what he says in a letter to me, under date of December 9, 1918 [reading]:

DEAR MR. UNTERMYER: May I not take the liberty to state that you have never in my presence expressed a pro-German sentiment? You were one of the few Americans who lived up to the President's injunction. You made it very clear to me that you were neutral, not pro-German, and you made your attitude equally clear to Dr. Albert in my presence.

I do not remember the letter to which Mr. Bielaski refers. At any rate, it seems to me that he has misinterpreted its meaning. No doubt the conversation mentioned in my letter referred to some issue pending between the United States and Great Britain. You naturally took the American point of view. Too many of our fellow citizens were taking the point of view of Great Britain.

If I said you were on our side, I presumably meant that you supported the attitude of the United States on the Freedom of the Seas. This is a subject on which the German Government found itself in total agreement with the Government of the United States. You were at all times ready to champion the Freedom of the Seas, irrespective of the consequences to either Germany or Great Britain, your motto being, "America first and America only."

I am making this statement without suggestion from you or anyone else. I shall be glad, if necessary, to repeat it before the Senate committee.

Sincerely, yours,

GEORGE SYLVESTER VIERECK.

Senator NELSON. What is the date of that letter?

Mr. UNTERMYER. That is dated the 9th of December, 1918. That is when this thing came out in the newspapers. I do not know whether that is true or untrue, or right or wrong, or anything about it.

Maj. HUMES. I call your attention to Mr. Viereck's letter of January 12, to Dr. Hale, asking that certain material be furnished to you in order that it might be available for the purposes of an article, and ask you if you ever received that material from Dr. Hale [turning paper to witness]?

Mr. UNTERMYER. This is signed by Viereck.

Maj. HUMES. Yes; it is his letter to Hale.

Mr. UNTERMYER. I do not remember whether I ever received it or not, but if I did, I did not pay an attention to it, because I never wrote any article.

Maj. HUMES. When was the conference that you had with Dr. Albert and George Viereck? When was that conference?

Mr. UNTERMYER. With whom?

Maj. HUMES. With Viereck and Albert?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Which conference do you mean?

Maj. HUMES. The conference that Viereck said occurred between you, and Albert, and himself.

Mr. UNTERMYER. You mean my having said in his presence——

Maj. HUMES (interposing). Yes; and in the presence of Dr. Albert.

Mr. UNTERMYER. I do not recall it.

Maj. HUMES. Did you have more than one conference? Was it a frequent matter?

Mr. UNTERMYER. No; it was not. I do not remember, in fact, having had any conference with Viereck and Dr. Albert. It may have been some meeting up at Greystone, when I saw them.

Maj. HUMES. Do you remember Viereck ever having come up to Greystone with Albert?

Mr. UNTERMYER. I do not remember his coming there with Albert: but Viereck has been at Greystone 10 or 15 or 20 years ago, probably, for the first time. I have known him for a great many years. But I want to make that perfectly plain, Major, so you will understand it. This was a time when the freedom of the seas was a question in controversy; when the United States was having its controversies with Great Britain, and I felt this was a "paper" blockade, just as our State Department felt. I was in entire accord with our Government on that subject; but when it came to writing any letters or writing any articles or assailing the attitude of Great Britain, even with our country, when we were neutral, I would not do anything of the kind. I stuck to my determination that I would do nothing of the sort.

Senator KING. But as an academic question, or a question based on international law, you felt that England's blockade was a "paper" blockade, and, therefore, her seizing of American vessels, particularly those which carried goods not contraband, was illegal and in violation of international law?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Yes; I took that view after a very careful study of the subject, and I was entirely in accord with our State Department on that subject; and I also drew a very great distinction between the seizing of ships and contraband, and the murdering of our citizens on the high seas. I felt that the one might be the subject of discussion and friendly difference, but the other was a very different matter.

Senator NELSON. Did not the Germans mean by the "freedom of the seas" freedom for the operations of their submarines?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Yes.

Senator NELSON. Was that not their conception of the "freedom of the seas"?

Mr. UNTERMYER. But this was a question between the United States and Great Britain as to the freedom of the seas, as to whether that entitled them to declare a blockade, when certain neutrals could trade with belligerents; and I understood a "blockade" to mean a blockade against all neutrals. If it were not effective against all neutrals, it was not a blockade.

Now, I do not think that Germany's idea of the freedom of the seas meant that they had a right to murder our people with submarines. What they claimed was that because of Great Britain's blockade, they, too, had the right to resort to illegal practices by way of reprisal for Great Britain's illegal practices. That was their defense. It was, in my opinion, no defense.

Senator NELSON. You know how they construed it in the case of Capt. Fryatt?

Mr. UNTERMYER. With whom?

Senator NELSON. Capt. Fryatt.

Mr. UNTERMYER. Fry?

Senator NELSON. Fryatt.

Mr. UNTERMYER. I do not remember that.

Senator NELSON. They held he was in command of an armed merchantman. Under the old law of the sea, as it prevailed in olden times, a merchantman had a right to arm and defend itself. And because he was in command of such a merchantman they took him and held him to be a pirate, and executed him.

Senator KING. That was Capt. Fryatt?

Senator NELSON. Yes.

Mr. UNTERMYER. I do not remember that case, but we had a case as to arming for offense and for defense.

Senator NELSON. I mean the case of Capt. Fryatt who was executed by the Germans as a pirate.

Mr. UNTERMYER. Of course, that was murder, pure and simple.

Senator KING. The question I referred to was whether or not England's blockade was recognized under the existing principles of international law, or whether it was a "paper" blockade.

Mr. UNTERMYER. It was contrary to international law, and I think England quite agrees to-day that it was.

Senator KING. Our Government took the view that it was not supported by international law?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Yes; England went on the theory that the end justified the means; but it did not involve the loss of any human life, and it was one of those things that could be adjusted by money damages in the end.

Senator KING. And England recognized that some of her seizures had been illegal, and she has paid for cargoes which were taken by her vessels?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Yes; she was fooled into paying for some that ought not to have been paid for.

Maj. HUMES. I call your attention, to refresh your recollection, to a letter written by George Sylvester Vierick to Dr. Albert, dated April 1, 1915. [Reading:]

MY DEAR DR. ALBERT: I have arranged with Mrs. Untermeyer that her automobile will call at your house Sunday at half past 5. It takes but one hour to get to Greystone. Dr. Hale will not be with us, which is perhaps better.

I think Untermyer will speak more frankly in our presence. It moreover gives us an opportunity to talk things over a bit. I do not like the way things have been going of late.

Now, will you state whether or not Mr. Viereck and Dr. Albert came to your house on the Sunday following that?

Mr. UNTERMYER. What is the date of the letter you have just read?

Maj. HUMES. The other letter is January 12, and this is April 1.

Senator WOLCOTT. What year?

Maj. HUMES. 1915.

Mr. UNTERMYER. I can not say that I remember whether they did or not.

Maj. HUMES. Do you ever remember their both being at your house on the same day, at the same time?

Mr. UNTERMYER. I have no doubt that they have been at my house the same day. I don't remember the occasion, but I have no doubt of the fact. I do not see what its significance is—what it has to do with anything.

Maj. HUMES. There was something said about articles which you have written, Mr. Untermyer. I had a memorandum of three articles—interviews—and I assume as a busy man you are more likely to get into the papers in an interview than a prepared article?

Mr. UNTERMYER. I am more likely to be misrepresented in an interview than in a prepared article.

Maj. HUMES. In the New York Times of April 29—

Mr. UNTERMYER. What year?

Maj. HUMES. 1915—there is an article opposing preparedness.

Mr. UNTERMYER. Yes; I was opposed to preparedness at that time.

Maj. HUMES. In the fall of 1915?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Yes; I was. I was opposed to preparedness at that time, on the ground that I thought the belligerent nations would be prostrate after the war, and I was probably mistaken. I am a pretty good preparedness man to-day, and when the Lusitania was sunk I regretted that we were not prepared.

Maj. HUMES. During the same period of time is it not a fact that you were in favor of an embargo on munitions?

Mr. UNTERMYER. No; I will tell you what I was in favor of. I was not in favor of an embargo on munitions. If you read that article that you have before you, you will understand my position. I remember it very well. Our State Department was having a controversy with Great Britain over this blockade, and I said in that article, in substance, "There is an easy way of determining whether we are right or wrong. We claim there is no blockade. Now, then, if they should insist against our contention upon a blockade we can very easily carry our point of view by an embargo on arms, and then Great Britain will come to the American point of view." Is that what the article is?

Maj. HUMES. I have got to find it.

Mr. UNTERMYER. I think I have a copy of it here.

Maj. HUMES (reading):

I wish we could have an embargo on munitions as a sort of reprisal against the sort of treatment we have been getting. But as that is not likely to happen let us get what we can another way. Under our Constitution we can not impose an export tax, but there is no prohibition against taxing war material at the works for whatever purpose intended, in the nature of an excise tax, excluding, of course, the United States.

Mr. UNTERMYER. I think it was shortly before the resumption of submarine warfare, and it was in support of that policy that I went out and traveled the country in support of all his war policies.

Maj. HUMES. Mr. Untermyer, at that time was not Germany seeking to prevent further exportations of munitions and war materials—foodstuffs—to Europe, and was not this article advocating the very thing that Germany was seeking to accomplish?

Mr. UNTERMYER. No; this article was apropos of the peace negotiations that the President had inaugurated. That is my recollection of it.

Germany had been representing and protesting to this country against these different violations that they called of international law for a long while, but I think they had about stopped. Finally Germany, on January 31, 1917, as I remember it, announced that inasmuch as the United States had been unable in its negotiations to secure the withdrawal of what it regarded as this illegal blockade, and the seizure of goods, and all that sort of things, that it would resume the submarine warfare. It was on the 31st of January, 1917, that Germany announced that it had conditionally abandoned or suspended submarine warfare in order to give an opportunity to bring Great Britain within the rules of international law, of ordinary warfare, and as that seemed impossible they would resume their warfare.

Maj. HUMES. Mr. Untermyer, the President in none of his addresses and none of his interviews ever advocated the withholding or refusal of the shipment of any of the means of war to any country; anything that they could secure that might make possible the continuance of the war.

Mr. UNTERMYER. Yes; but he made violent protests, you know, to Great Britain against their claims of a blockade and against their calling anything contraband that they chose to call contraband, and against their seizure of our ships, cargoes, and mails, and other acts on their part.

Maj. HUMES. But the question is as to whether this country was going to furnish the means. He never said that the time had come when this country should refuse to furnish the means for carrying on the war in the shape of munitions or foodstuffs, or otherwise, did he?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Yes; I certainly think he did say that we were entitled to take our foodstuffs anywhere to neutral countries; that they were being stopped by the blockade, and that we were entitled to feed the civil population; that war was not intended to strike at the civil population of neutrals or belligerents.

Maj. HUMES. Yes; he said we had the right to ship munitions to any belligerent. You, in this article, are advocating the stoppage of the shipment of the means by which these activities could be continued.

Mr. UNTERMYER. Now, you see, you are making assertions, not asking questions. That is beside the question. That is not a fair construction of my article. What I had in mind was this, that here we were at the brink, and with war staring us in the face because of this threat of Germany to renew submarine warfare. I said, "We want to keep out of this war. Both nations are violating international law. They are drunk and mad with blood. Let us find some way of stopping them." That is all it means. I guess a great many people felt the same way, no matter how anti-German they were. That did not mean that we were anxious to plunge into the conflict if there was an honorable way out of it.

Now, there are dozens more of my articles and speeches, and hundreds of that kind, and you will not find a pro-German word anywhere in any of them. You will find, on the contrary, that all through the time when we were neutral——

Maj. HUMES (interposing). As I understand it, Mr. Untermeyer, at this time—on the 12th of January, 1917—you were out of sympathy with the German cause?

Mr. UNTERMYER. I was out of sympathy with the German cause. That is quite true at all times.

Maj. HUMES. Now, Mr. Untermeyer, is it not a fact——

Mr. UNTERMYER. I was especially out of sympathy with it when I made up my mind that they were going to resume submarine warfare, and openly denounced their action from 1914 until the end.

Maj. HUMES. Is it not a fact that upon this same day that you gave the interview that has just been read, you purchased German Government bonds?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Now, Major, that is hardly fair. How many German Government bonds did you find in my name? I think $2,000, isn't it? I did not buy them for myself; I did not buy them with my own money. They are in my name. I do not want to state for whom they were bought. I haven't a penny of interest in them. I got Dr. Albert to buy them. I had not a cent of interest in those bonds. What are they—$2,000?

Maj. HUMES. I do not know what the value is—$1,900 and some odd dollars.

Senator WOLCOTT. Another very material thing would be whether the Government got the money or whether you took them off the hands of some holder.

Mr. UNTERMYER. You know, there were $10,000,000 of German bonds sold in this country, and thousands of people have bought these bonds who are as good Americans as you and I, on a business basis, because they thought at the time they were cheap, just as they and others during that time bought French and British bonds—not out of patriotism for France or Great Britain, but because they considered them a good purchase. I did not buy these bonds, and I haven't a dollar of interest in them.

Maj. HUMES. I will show you the correspondence between yourself and Mr. Albert.

Mr. UNTERMYER. I know all about them.

Maj. HUMES. That was on the 12th of January, 1917.

Mr. UNTERMYER. I would like, if you are willing, to tell the chairman confidentially for whom I bought them, if he is willing to accept the confidence.

Maj. HUMES. I have no objection, of course.

Mr. UNTERMYER. I advised against the purchase, too, if you want to know. I thought it was a rotten investment. It is 11,000 marks or $2,000. I haven't any $2,000 investments among my investments at all, to start with. He says, "The receipt had to be made out in your name. I trust this did not cause you any inconvenience." You will observe that he knew I did not make the purchase for myself. One thousand nine hundred and fifty-two dollars and fifty cents, that is the transaction. They are not my bonds, and I have no interest in them. Do you not think that is a rather petty matter to bring up?

Maj. HUMES. It is a question of the facts, Mr. Untermeyer.

Mr. UNTERMYER. If I had made this trifling purchase before we severed diplomatic relations, it would be a little petty to refer to it; but, as it happens, I did not.

Maj. HUMES. The fact remains, however, that through Dr. Albert you bought these bonds for a client or a friend.

Mr. UNTERMYER. No; for a man in Washington.

Senator NELSON. What is the total amount?

Capt. LESTER. $1,950.

Mr. UNTERMYER. 11,000 marks. Before the war that would have been equal to $3,000. They were bought for $1,900. This gentleman thought it was easy money to buy the bonds at about 60 per cent of par.

Senator STERLING. Was the money paid into your hands for the purpose of purchasing these bonds?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Yes; the actual money, and by his check. I am going to tell the chairman after the hearing for whom I bought them if there is no objection, if I may. It was a mere convenience, as he was living in Washington and I was in New York, where it was easy to get the bonds for him.

(The letter above quoted from by Mr. Untermeyer is as follows:)

[Copy.]

NEW YORK CITY, January 12, 1917.

MY DEAR MR. UNTERMYER: Enclosed I am sending you the receipt of the Transatlantic Trust Company for the subscription of 11,000 marks Imperial German Government 5% Bonds, 5th War Loan, as well as the bill of the above named company, for $1,952.50. I further enclose memorandum giving some details with regard to this subscription.

The receipt had to be made out in your name, and I trust that this will not cause you any inconvenience. The deposit certificates which are to be delivered to the subscriber by the Transatlantic Trust Company after notification from Berlin to the effect that the subscriptions have been received, will be made out "To Bearer".

Sincerely yours,

Mr. SAMUEL UNTERMYER,
120 Broadway,
New York City.

[Copy.]

Memorandum

The purchase price of $177.50 for 1,000 marks includes the payment of interest due April 1, 1917. The next interest payment will be due October 1, 1917.

The subscriber will be informed in due time with regard to the payment of the interest, and he can decide then whether he prefers to have the interest paid in Dollars in the United States, or in Marks in Germany, to whatever bank he may designate.

The receipt given by the Transatlantic Trust Company will be followed by a deposit receipt upon advice by wireless from the Deutsche Bank to the effect that the subscription has been received.

Of course the subscriber has the choice of having the actual bonds delivered to any bank, banker or private individual in Germany, whom he chooses as his trustee.

[Copy.]

(Guggenheimer, Untermeyer & Marshall 120 Broadway, New York Cable Address "M.: pomene" New York)

JANUARY 12, 1917.

Dr. H. F. ALBERT,
45 Broadway, New York City.

MY DEAR DOCTOR ALBERT: I thank you for your prompt attention to that little commission, and am herewith enclosing my check for $1,952.50 in repayment of the amount disbursed by you.

With kind regards and best wishes, believe me

Sincerely yours,

(Signed) SAML. UNTERMYER

Enclosure: Check $1,952.50

Maj. HUMES. Are you acquainted with Dr. Dernberg?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Yes; very well; I had a very high regard for his ability. I think he was one of the ablest men who ever came to America.

Maj. HUMES. He was a frequent visitor at your house?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Yes.

Senator WOLCOTT. Just parenthetically, I do not think his wonderful exposé of the great find among the state papers at Brussels manifested very much ability on his part.

Mr. UNTERMYER. Every wise man is occasionally a fool, you know.

Senator WOLCOTT. He was in that instance.

Mr. UNTERMYER. He is very able.

Senator WOLCOTT. Apparently he did not attribute much common sense to the American reading public.

Mr. UNTERMYER. I think he did. He was for many years in this country. He was first a clerk in a banking house and lived here for many years in his early life, and he understood American conditions pretty well. But he left this country in June, 1915, did he not?

Senator NELSON. He was ordered out of the country, was he not?

Mr. UNTERMYER. No; I do not think so; but I think it was hinted to him that he had better get out.

Senator NELSON. He was notified that his presence was not wanted.

Mr. UNTERMYER. It was because of his asinine speech after the Lusitania.

Maj. HUMES. He was a guest at your house just before he went abroad?

Mr. UNTERMYER. He was a guest at my house. He had been my friend for years, and I do not go back on my friends.

Maj. HUMES. And he stayed here for some time prior to his departure for Germany?

Mr. UNTERMYER. No; he was a guest there for less than a week. When it was I do not remember.

Senator NELSON. He and Dr. Albert were together, were they not, at your country house at Yonkers, the house that used to be Samuel J. Tilden's, and did they not spend a week there together?

Mr. UNTERMYER. No; Dr. Albert never spent a night in my house. Dr. Dernburg and Mrs. Dernburg were friends of ours.

Senator STERLING. You knew Dr. Dernburg's view in regard to the sinking of the Lusitania?

Mr. UNTERMYER. I was wholly opposed to his expressed views. I do not think they were his views. I think they were the views he was called on to maintain and were, in fact, contrary to his own judgment.

Senator STERLING. He represented to the country that they were his views, did he not?

Mr. UNTERMYER. He certainly made a speech by way of excuse or apology for that horror. I suppose he was bound to present as best he could the argument in favor of his country.

Senator STERLING. That did not cause a breach between you and Dr. Dernburg?

Mr. UNTERMYER. No; I felt very sorry. Some of the dearest friends I have do not agree with me on some of the most important questions. In my own family I have all sorts of disagreements on economic questions. But I may differ from a man and we may yet be the best of friends.

Senator STERLING. The sinking of the Lusitania was certainly more than an economic question.

Mr. UNTERMYER. It certainly was, but Dr. Dernburg did not sink the Lusitania or approve of it.

Senator STERLING. That is true, but he apologized for it or defended the act.

Mr. UNTERMYER. He made the best lame defense he could after the event like any advocate would; that was his job, I suppose.

Senator KING. He was carrying out the statement of Frederick the Great that the duties of representatives of a government are to lie for it.

Mr. UNTERMYER. No, I don't think that. The duty of the advocate is to state his side of the controversy.

Senator STERLING. Then I suppose we ought to applaud Dr. Dernburg for what he did.

Mr. UNTERMYER. I do not think so. I was very much opposed to it. But I do not think that because of his views, as expressed, that I ought to turn my back on him any more than you did, Senator, or anybody else, on Count von Bernstorff, or any one of these men who for years after the Lusitania was sunk were in friendly intercourse with the leading men of this country.

Senator STERLING. We may be differently constituted, but I could not feel friendly toward a man who defended the sinking of the Lusitania, however friendly we had been before.

Mr. UNTERMYER. I did not feel cordial toward the man who had done it, but I knew that Dr. Dernburg had not done it, and that the entire policy of submarine warfare was against his advice.

Senator STERLING. One or two old friends of mine defended the sinking of the Lusitania, and it pretty nearly caused a breach between us.

Mr. UNTERMYER. You say "pretty nearly." Evidently it did not, and it ought not to have. Dr. Dernburg was opposed to the whole submarine warfare. If you have read his recent speeches on the other side, as they have been reported over here during this war, you will find that no man has been more broad and liberal in his point of view or has done more for democracy. He is a member of the Socialist cabinet now, the cabinet that is intending to secure democracy for Germany. He lived in this country too long to have those views. He knew this country.

Senator STERLING. Well, the members of the socialist cabinet were indorsing what was being done in the way of submarine warfare for the most part?

Mr. UNTERMYER. No; some of them were, and some of them were not.

Maj. HUMES. The ones that were not in jail, were they not?

Mr. UNTERMYER. I do not know about the jail situation in Germany.

Maj. HUMES. Mr. Untermyer, this morning you told of your acquaintance with Capt. Boy-Ed.

Mr. UNTERMYER. I said I had met him. I had met all the embassy members, as I knew members of other embassies.

Maj. HUMES. And you said you had some familiarity with the Hamburg-American Line case. Was that the case in which the officials of the company were indicted for making false manifests? Was not that the nature of the charge?

Mr. UNTERMYER. I thought it was for violating our neutrality in was for coaling some ships outside the harbor.

Maj. HUMES. Was not the technical charge the making of false manifests in the shipment of coal?

Mr. UNTERMYER. I do not know, Major. I never saw the papers, never saw the indictment, never heard of it, and all I knew was, it was for coaling some ships outside the harbor.

Maj. HUMES. Do you remember the fact, in the trial of that case, of the United States attorney making a criticism of Capt. Boy-Ed and commenting on the fact that they were unable to prosecute him because of his diplomatic status?

Mr. UNTERMYER. No; I did not pay any attention to the case. I was disgusted when they went to trial.

Maj. HUMES. Do you remember conferring with Capt. Boy-Ed about that trial?

Mr. UNTERMYER. No.

Maj. HUMES. And about this charge against him?

Mr. UNTERMYER. I never did.

Maj. HUMES. Did you ever talk to him over the telephone?

Mr. UNTERMYER. I do not know; I may have talked to him over the telephone, but I never conferred with him about the evidence in that case, or anything about it, so far as I know. I never had anything to do with that thing, except on that one night at my house, when I told this man Buenz that he ought to accept the offer to plead guilty and get off with a fine; but their lawyers turned that down.

Maj. HUMES. Mr. Untermyer, did you not, in a conversation with Capt. Boy-Ed, say to him, "I think some representation should be made at Washington against the language used by the United States District Attorney in his opening speech before the jury in the Hamburg-American case yesterday. The State Department should be called upon to ask the Department of Justice to have something read into the record showing that you were guiltless in the matter. A statement that you were guilty of an infraction of our laws has gone all over the country." Did you not state that over the telephone?

Mr. UNTERMYER. I do not think so. I do not recall anything of the kind or of ever having talked with him at all about it.

Maj. HUMES. Did he not make the statement that he would telegraph to the German ambassador at Washington about it?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Never anything of the kind. If you have any proof on that subject, do you not think you ought to trot it out?

Maj. HUMES. When you suggested to——

Mr. UNTERMYER. Do you not think you ought to, Major?

Maj. HUMES. That is a matter of judgment.

Mr. UNTERMYER. I think it is a matter of fairness.

Maj. HUMES. The committee will undoubtedly have all the facts.

Mr. UNTERMYER. If you have any such fact—it is not a matter of much importance, but what I want to get at is, if you have any document or letter or anything of that kind, let me see it.

Maj. HUMES. I stated that there was no document, or evidence, but a telephone conversation.

Mr. UNTERMYER. Of course, if some one was tapping my wires, I did not know it, but I do not believe, and my recollection is, that there never was any such discussion, and that the one occasion at my house was the only occasion that I had ever had any talk with anyone about the case.

Maj. HUMES. You can rest assured that your wire was not tapped.

Mr. UNTERMYER. I do not care whether it was or not. They can keep tapping it all day, if they want to.

Maj. HUMES. Was it not a fact that when Capt. Boy-Ed suggested wiring the ambassador, you suggested he not wire at once to the ambassador, but wait until you had gotten your bearings first?

Mr. UNTERMYER. No, Maj. Humes, I had nothing to do with that case except as I have stated, at my house that night when I advised them to plead guilty.

Maj. HUMES. In the same conversation did you not discuss the question as to whether or not the case was progressing satisfactorily, and did not you and Capt. Boy-Ed agree that it was not progressing as satisfactorily as you had hoped?

Senator KING. That question is not fair because, whichever way he answers it, unless he explains it, he would have to admit the conversation.

Maj. HUMES. I did not mean to have him take it that way.

Mr. UNTERMYER. With all due respect to Maj. Humes, for whom I have great regard, all these questions are most unfair. I have told him that I predicted that these men would be convicted. I have also said that I did not have any talk with Boy-Ed. He has an idea that by getting the question into the record, he can create an atmosphere, no matter how it is answered. The question is what these newspaper men here are hanging onto, and the witness is prejudiced by the questions, no matter how baseless they are or how he answers them.

Maj. HUMES. You have stated that you have many transactions that you can not remember, and that is the only purpose, that is the common procedure, and the only way that an inquiry of this kind can be made.

Mr. UNTERMYER. That is not the usual procedure; it is an unfair procedure that would not be tolerated in a court of justice. I have told you that I did not have any talk about the Buenz case except that night at my home.

Maj. HUMES. Is it not a fact that at about the time of the Hamburg-American case, the first one to come to trial, Capt. Boy-Ed called at your office and arranged or left word for you to call him as soon as you came in.

Mr. UNTERMYER. Was there more than one Hamburg-American case? I do not know of any. Just think of what you are asking. How was I to know whether he called at my office and asked somebody in my office to let me know?

Maj. HUMES. On one occasion did you not find that word had been left there to call Capt. Boy-Ed?

Mr. UNTERMYER. I knew very little about Boy-Ed. I do not think I have seen him over twice in my life, and I had no relations with him.

Maj. HUMES. Was he at your office?

Mr. UNTERMYER. I do not think he was ever at my office once. I do not recall his ever being there. He was up on that occasion with Dr. Buenz at my house.

Maj. HUMES. Was he not at your office on the 26th of November, 1915?

Mr. UNTERMYER. I do not recall his ever having been at my office. You must not take all these fairy tales of detectives as gospel, you know.

Maj. HUMES. I am trying to verify some of them.

Mr. UNTERMYER. But where they remain unverified, do you not believe them? Take my advice, based on 40 years of experience. They want to make a good showing.

Maj. HUMES. Now, Mr. Untermyer, do you remember the fact that after the Hamburg-American case was tried certain gentlemen representing the defendant in that case came to Washington to see Secretary Lansing.

Mr. UNTERMYER. No; I never heard of that.

Maj. HUMES. Do you remember Capt. Boy-Ed calling the matter to your attention and your expressing your regret? Do you remember such an occurrence?

Mr. UNTERMYER. No; I do not recall anything of the kind.

Maj. HUMES. Is it not a fact that on December 2——

Mr. UNTERMYER. Maj. Humes, do you think that by asking these questions you can create an atmosphere, even though I do not know anything about it? Do you think you are doing the fair thing?

Maj. HUMES. I am not expecting to get any atmosphere——

Mr. UNTERMYER. I know you are not intending to.

Maj. HUMES. An atmosphere which is unwarranted.

Mr. UNTERMYER. It is unreliable.

Maj. HUMES. It would be satisfactory to me to find that it was unreliable. I do not want to submit to the committee any unreliable information.

Mr. UNTERMYER. Proceed with your question. You were speaking about the State Department.

Maj. HUMES. This conversation that occurred between you and Capt. Boy-Ed——

Mr. UNTERMYER. As far as I recall, there was no conversation, and I did not know they were going to the State Department. I did not know they were going to the State Department and did not know what they were going there for. This man had been convicted, as I understood it. I got through with that thing when I gave my judgment to those lawyers and they did not follow it.

Maj. HUMES. Is it not a fact that Jerome or others who represented that case came to Washington to confer with Mr. Lansing? Do you not know that that is a fact?

Mr. UNTERMYER. No; I do not. William Travers Jerome, and Rand, and Gans were in that case, were they not?

Maj. HUMES. And is it not a fact that after your conversation about that trip to Washington you made an appointment with Capt. Boy-Ed by which he was to meet you at your hotel at 6 o'clock?

Senator KING. Do you not assume in that question that there was a conversation?

Maj. HUMES. It is all a question. He can answer yes or no, Senator.

Mr. UNTERMYER. But when I tell you there was no such transaction, why do you persist in asking whether this did not happen or whether that did not happen?

Maj. HUMES. I was trying to refresh your recollection with further transactions occurring at the same time.

Mr. UNTERMYER. You can not refresh my recollection about things that were not true and that never happened, so far as I am concerned. I never heard about this Washington visit or that there was such a visit until you implied it just now by your question, and I do not yet know it except as you state it. Now, I do not recall—and I tell it to you again—ever having talked about this Buenz case after that one occasion in my house. That is all I remember about that case. It was not a thing that concerned me. I had known old Dr. Buenz—I think he had been in this country for 25 years. He was a very fine old fellow. He had done what he had done in coaling ships outside of the harbor because, as I understand it, he had been advised by lawyers that under our laws and under international law they had the right to coal the ships. He was wrongly advised. That is all there was of it.

Maj. HUMES. And you have no recollection, then, of the trip that Capt. Boy-Ed had made to Washington at that time and his coming to see you immediately on his return?

Mr. UNTERMYER. I do not know whether he made a trip to Washington or anything about it.

Maj. HUMES. Did you remember the fact that Levy & Stanchfield were retained?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Stanchfield & Levy.

Maj. HUMES. Stanchfield & Levy, in the Paul Koenig case? Do you remember that as a fact?

Mr. UNTERMYER. No; I do not. I remember this, that when the embassy people urged me to take some of these cases I said I would not take them, that I suggested that Stanchfield was a good man, and that Stanchfield took those cases. He had a right to take them as a prosecuting lawyer, as I might have done had I so chosen, and without criticism. And I think I spoke to him about it and asked him if he would care to take them.

Maj. HUMES. In that connection did you not take the matter up with Levy & Stanchfield with a view to getting them to think what you said was or what might be considered a reasonable fee in that case?

Mr. UNTERMYER. No; only in this way: When they said, "Who shall we get?" I said, "Well, Stanchfield is a good man." I remember that. They said, "He will charge us such a terrible lot of money." I said, "No; he will not." I said, "He will charge you reasonably, and you can rest assured of that." And I think I did tell John (that is Stanchfield's christian name) that he should not charge them too much money, or something of that kind.

Maj. HUMES. Did you not arrange an agreement with them on a fee of $5,000 in that Koenig case?

Mr. UNTERMYER. I do not know whether I did or not. All I know is that I had nothing to do with the money.

Maj. HUMES. I call your attention to an excerpt from Dr. Albert's report to the ambassador——

Mr. UNTERMYER. All I knew was that I would not take the case. He is a friend of mine, John Stanchfield, and I would have liked to see him get some money if he could.

Maj. HUMES. I call your attention to the following excerpt:

As a special favor, the relatively light charge of $5,000, made by the Stanchfield & Levy firm, which is an unusually low rate for the retainer, is due to the mediation of Mr. Samuel Untermyer.

Mr. UNTERMYER. I guess that is right.

Maj. HUMES. Then, you were assisting them in securing adequate and reasonable legal status?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Oh, no; I was assisting John Stanchfield in getting a fee.

Maj. HUMES. I call your attention to an alleged conversation between yourself and Dr. Albert on December 23, 1915.

Mr. UNTERMYER. On December 23, 1915? What is this, an alleged telephone conversation?

Maj. HUMES. A telephone conversation.

Mr. UNTERMYER. Will you not just let me see it? I will tell you whether it is true. [After examination of paper handed to him by Maj. Humes.] I do not recall any such conversation.

Maj. HUMES. Gentlemen, under the circumstances I do not know how there can be a record of this. If the committee wants to see this inquiry, it has been offered——

Mr. UNTERMYER. I do not think you should be reading in a lot of stuff that you say you have over a telephone.

Senator KING. Does the witness say that no such thing occurred?

Mr. UNTERMYER. No; I do not say anything of the kind.

Senator NELSON. He does not deny it.

Maj. HUMES. Do I understand you to say that you do not remember it, or that no such conversation ever occurred?

Mr. UNTERMYER. What I say is that I do not recall that conversation and do not think that conversation took place. It may be that some part of it took place and that some did not; but I do not recall any of it.

The way to prove a thing of that kind is to prove it by legal proof. The idea of reading in a lot of stuff that people hear over the telephone! Anybody might say it. It is not of any consequence that I can see.

It was pretty good advice, was it not, Major?

Senator STERLING. Cautious advice?

Maj. HUMES. I think from the standpoint of the German Government that advice was very good.

Mr. UNTERMYER. From any standpoint, not to have anything to do with it.

Senator OVERMAN. Do I understand that you had no such conversation?

Mr. UNTERMYER. I do not recall any such conversation.

Senator STERLING. Do you say positively that you had no such conversation?

Mr. UNTERMYER. I am quite sure as to part of it that I did not. I could not have. At any rate, they have read in a whole lot of stuff here that never took place with me. Just think what that would mean, Senator, if you could do that sort of thing to people. Anybody could impersonate anybody else.

Senator STERLING. Well, I have in mind the case of an ordinary law suit, where a man might be asked as to whether or not he did not have a telephone conversation—such and such a conversation—at a particular time with somebody else, and if he did not remember the conversation then the attorney would have the right to ask him about the particulars of the conversation for the purpose of refreshing his recollection, and that, I thought, the counsel was doing.

Mr. UNTERMYER. Now, Senator Sterling, my understanding of the rule of law would be this, that if the person said that he recalled no such conversation, then the examiner would have to put a witness on the stand and he would have to be a man who knew the voices of these people and could identify them. In other words, the law surrounds a man with some protection against that sort of thing.

Senator STERLING. No; in a case where he simply can not recall the conversation, I understand that his recollection may be refreshed by directing attention to it.

Senator WOLCOTT. Here is the law——

Senator KING. In this case it has been read, so that his recollection is not refreshed.

Senator WOLCOTT. The law is that when a witness is asked whether on a certain occasion a certain conversation did not take place grounds for contradiction must be laid, the time when the conversation was held, who was present, and the place.

Mr. UNTERMYER. Yes.

Senator WOLCOTT. So that the witness's attention can be directed specifically to that particular conversation.

If he says that it did not take place or that he has no recollection, then the contradicting witness may be brought on the stand.

But I think this is true—and I do not mean to cast any reflection on Maj. Humes when I say it—that good professional ethics demands of the examining attorney that before he puts the question whether or not a conversation took place he should have present a witness, to bring him on the stand to contradict the denial or the claim that there was no recollection.

Yet I think that these questions are perfectly proper if we had some witness to come along subsequently and say that such a conversation did take place——

Mr. UNTERMYER. Somebody who knew——

Senator WOLCOTT. I do not know what is coming after this.

Mr. UNTERMYER. Somebody who knew the men's voices and could recognize them and swear to it. I have conducted a good many investigations, and when I have conducted a congressional investigation I have always, if I had a letter to put in evidence, let the person know in advance, and have had him present so that when that went in he could immediately follow and deny or explain it if he pleased; and every time any evidence has been presented I have made up a synopsis of it a few days before, and the other side have known that it was going to be presented. That is the way the Money Trust investigation was conducted. That is the way Gov. Hughes conducted the insurance investigation, in which I was very much concerned. We used to give out a memorandum of points and topics on which questions were to be put, send it to the person concerned, and have him come to be examined so that he would be prepared.

Senator KING. I think, if you will pardon me, Mr. Untermyer, that with reference to the matter just exhibited to you, the part which you say may have occurred, that part of the conversation would be admissible. The part which you say never occurred I do not think ought to go into the record.

Mr. UNTERMYER. But, Senator King, I do not recall any of it as having occurred—not a particle of it.

Senator OVERMAN. Do you say that you do not recall it, or that you deny it?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Part of it might have occurred. The other part of it was impossible. I have no memory as to the other part either, but I know it was impossible; just as if somebody asked you if you had done a certain thing to a man, and you would say, "That is impossible." You know you have not done it.

Is there anything else, Major?

Maj. HUMES. I have tried to make this examination along the lines of the well-established rules of evidence, and I do not think I have asked any improper questions.

The information which I am using is furnished to me as reliable, authentic information, and I had no reason to assume that this information would be denied when I secured it. If it is denied, certainly, without my laying grounds for contradiction, it is a futile undertaking to make inquiry as to the truth or falsity of the information which has come to me as authentic.

Mr. UNTERMYER. But you see, Major, this is a peculiar kind of information. This is information said to have been taken over a telephone. There have been more miscarriages of justice on this telephone business than any way I know of. It is information that you probably got from somebody—I don't know, but from some detective or secret agent or somebody who has been tapping telephones—and he comes and gives you this and calls it a result. He probably has never heard me. He does not know who has been talking. He probably does not know either party. He might just as readily as not get up a game—and some of these gentlemen are not above it—between two people on a telephone and hear it.

Our courts have been full of it and so full of it that we exact the most rigorous proof, if anybody wants to base anything on a telephone. It is not a fair way to conduct an investigation.

Senator OVERMAN. This information having been furnished to Maj. Humes—

Mr. UNTERMYER. I have no criticism to make of Maj. Humes at all on the subject.

Maj. HUMES. Mr. Untermeyer, are you acquainted with Mr. Ballin, formerly of the Hamburg-American Line?

Mr. UNTERMYER. The man who committed suicide in Germany?

Maj. HUMES. The same man.

Mr. UNTERMYER. He was one of the greatest men in Germany. No; unfortunately I never met him. I understand he was a great man.

Maj. HUMES. You have some recollection of the fact that there was a case for conspiracy against a man by the name of Koenig?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Only as I have read it in the newspapers.

Maj. HUMES. Did you ever have any discussion with Dr. Albert about that matter?

Mr. UNTERMYER. No; I do not remember ever discussing Koenig. Did Mr. Stanchfield defend him, or who defended him? Do you remember?

Maj. HUMES. Mr. Stanchfield. That was the case referred to, where through your mediation a reasonable fee was charged.

Mr. UNTERMYER. He did not get what he was entitled to. I did not know who was the defendant, and never heard anything about the case or its facts.

Maj. HUMES. Is it not a fact that Dr. Albert called you on the telephone and advised you with reference to the discharge of Koenig, after he was indicted, by the Hamburg-American Line, and that you advised Dr. Albert on that matter?

Mr. UNTERMYER. No; that is not true. I never had anything to do with Koenig or advised about Koenig. He had as good counsel—Dr. Albert or Mr. Koenig—as there was in the country?

Senator NELSON. Who?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Mr. Stanchfield.

Maj. HUMES. This was not with reference to the defense of the case, remember, Mr. Untermeyer. This was as to whether or not the Hamburg-American Line should discharge Koenig as soon as he was indicted.

Mr. UNTERMYER. Oh, I never heard it. I would not have advised discharging him or any other man, if I had been asked, on a mere charge in advance of trial if the man claimed to be innocent, if I had been asked.

Senator NELSON. This Mr. Stanchfield, is that the $5,000 lawyer that you referred to?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Senator, he is not a $5,000 lawyer. He is a $50,000 lawyer, but he took $5,000 in this case.

Maj. HUMES. I do not know what the position of the committee is with reference to proceeding in the ordinary way to definitely refresh the recollection of the witness with reference to this matter.

Mr. UNTERMYER. Are there more telephone talks, Major?

Maj. HUMES. No. It is with reference to this conversation.

Mr. UNTERMYER. You mean in regard to Koenig?

Maj. HUMES. Yes.

Mr. UNTERMYER. I say I had none.

Senator KING. Maj. Humes, your contention is that he had a conversation with some individual?

Maj. HUMES. I am not making a contention. I am contending that I am so informed.

Senator KING. That is what I mean.

Maj. HUMES. I am not assuming responsibility for the facts.

Senator KING. There will be no impropriety, it seems to me, if you ask the witness if he had any conversation on a certain subject, and then if he says no, then if you claim that you have words that were uttered, exhibit the words to him. That would be my understanding of it.

If he denies that any such conversation occurred, it would seem to me that, unless you intend to impeach him, that would end it.

Maj. HUMES. In regular procedure you would ask him the more definite question, but I thought the committee had possibly decided——

Mr. UNTERMYER. I have seen the courts again and again stop counsel from asking such questions——

Senator OVERMAN. I think the Major can ask the question to refresh his memory as to whether that is it or not, that having been furnished to him as true in this investigation.

Mr. UNTERMYER. Let me see it, will you? What on earth has this all to do with this matter, Mr. Chairman?

Senator OVERMAN. I do not know.

Mr. UNTERMYER. I can not understand. This is the veriest drivel, if I may say so. I can not see what it has to do with it at all. May I see what you have there, Major?

Maj. HUMES. Surely.

Mr. UNTERMYER. I can say that I had no such conversation. I never heard Dr. Albert refer to Mr. Ballin. I did not know Mr. Ballin was in this country.

Senator NELSON. You had better mark the cases you have exhibited to him, Major, so that if you want to contradict it, you will have them identified in a certain way—the ones that he denies.

Mr. UNTERMYER. I said I had no such conversation. Mr. Ballin—I did not know that he was in this country. I had not heard of his ever being in this country. I am surprised to hear, from this, that he was in this country.

Maj. HUMES. Note in the record that this refers to a conversation of January 27, 1916—this paper shown to the witness.

Senator NELSON. You refer to Mr. Ballin, the head of the Hamburg-American Line?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Yes.

Senator NELSON. The man who committed suicide in Germany recently?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Yes. The man who was the adviser of the Emperor, and who advised him not to go to war, I think. And he was heartbroken at his attitude, and out of favor for a long time. I never met that man. I would like to have met him. I never knew he was in this country, and I do not think he ever was.

Senator OVERMAN. You say he committed suicide?

Mr. UNTERMYER. So it is stated in the newspapers, Senator.

Senator OVERMAN. I never heard of it.

Mr. UNTERMYER. I did not know that he was ever here.

Maj. HUMES. There is no allegation here that he was here. It is only a question of knowledge of the man and what his position was.

It does not say where he is. It says what his position is—not his geographical location.

Mr. UNTERMYER. It is suggested that I was asked this question and gave the following answer:

Do you know Mr. Ballin?

Yes. I know Mr. Ballin.

Well, I do not know Mr. Ballin, and I never met him. That must refer to some other fellow.

Maj. HUMES. No; he says: "Do you know who Mr. Ballin is?"

Mr. UNTERMYER. Oh. Is that it?

Maj. HUMES. Yes. "Do you know who Mr. Ballin is?"

Mr. UNTERMYER. "Yes; I know Mr. Ballin"—that is the answer. That is not so.

Maj. HUMES. You know who he was at that time, did you not?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Yes. But this man is supposed to have said: "Yes; I know Mr. Ballin."

Now, if anybody is going to come here and try to make any proof of any such conversation, Mr. Chairman, I would like to be advised; if I may be, and I would like the opportunity of coming here and raking him over.

Senator OVERMAN. You certainly may have that right if you want it.

Mr. UNTERMYER. I should enjoy the opportunity.

Maj. HUMES. I will ask the reporter to mark these two papers.

(The papers were marked by the reporter "U-A" and "U-B.")

Maj. HUMES. I call your attention, Mr. Untermeyer, to a letter of April 17, 1915, and ask you if you received that letter from Dr. Albert?

Senator OVERMAN. I think unless there is substantiation of this conversation it should not go into this record.

Senator KING. If Mr. Untermeyer denies that they occurred.

Senator OVERMAN. Yes; those that he denied occurred ought not to go into the record, unless you have proof to substantiate them.

Maj. HUMES. I am through with them for the present.

Mr. UNTERMYER. If he can bring anybody to substantiate them, I would like permission to examine him.

Senator KING. I understand that Mr. Humes is not putting them in the record, but is marking them for identification, so that if anybody testifies in regard to them later on they can be identified.

Maj. HUMES. Some of them you have read in, or you started to read in.

Senator KING. The Major is taking the right course.

Mr. UNTERMYER. I think I received such a letter as this.

Maj. HUMES. What does that refer to?

Mr. UNTERMYER. I am trying to make it out.

Maj. HUMES. It is dated April 17, 1915. [Reading:]

I have very carefully considered the suggestion concerning the Trade Commission, but I have come to the conclusion that we should better postpone any action.

What do you think of the German note?

You were kind enough to promise me a copy of your report concerning the Money Trust. Would you permit me to remind you on this.

Mr. UNTERMYER. I do not know. I suppose that refers to the bill that was then pending for the Federal Trade Commission, which I had assisted in formulating and was urging. I do not know.

Senator NELSON. Whom was that letter addressed to?

Mr. UNTERMYER. I do not know.

Maj. HUMES. Why was he recommending, if it was the Federal Trade Commission bill, that action be postponed on it?

Mr. UNTERMYER. I do not know what it is—concerning the Trade Commission? It may be some commission to go to Germany.

Maj. HUMES. I call your attention to your reply to that letter.

Mr. UNTERMYER. That might help me.

Maj. HUMES. That may refresh your recollection.

Mr. UNTERMYER. Yes. (After examining paper exhibited by Maj. Humes.) No; it does not; but you might put that in the record. The date is April, 1915.

Maj. HUMES. You have no recollection as to what is referred to in the correspondence?

Mr. UNTERMYER. No; I do not know what it means.

Maj. HUMES. Is it not apparent from that correspondence that it is some matter over which Dr. Albert has control, and therefore possibly not any legislative matter?

Mr. UNTERMYER. I do not think, on reading both letters, that it was a legislative matter. I do not think it referred to the Federal Trade Commission. I do not think it referred to something over which he alone had control. It may very likely have referred to some commission that was to come over from Germany here, or that was to go over from here to Germany, some commission to study trade conditions. You see, it was written very early—in April, 1915.

Maj. HUMES. Did Dr. Albert ever consult with reference to the advisability of sending commissions to Germany?

Mr. UNTERMYER. No; he did not; but there is nothing here that shows that he did. It was probably some general talk. He was, of course, anxious—

Senator NELSON. You had better read those letters.

Mr. UNTERMYER. Yes. They are not of any consequence.

Senator NELSON. That is a letter from Dr. Albert to you.

Mr. UNTERMYER. I think it is from Dr. Albert. It is not signed.

Senator NELSON. And you replied to it?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Yes; in April, 1915.

Maj. HUMES. This letter reads:

U-A

April 17, 1917. I have very carefully considered the suggestion concerning the Trade Commission, but I have come to the conclusion that we should better postpone any action. What do you think of the German note?

You were kind enough to promise me a copy of your report concerning the Money Trust. Would you permit me to remind you on this.

Sincerely yours.

That is a carbon copy of a letter from Dr. Albert.

The reply is as follows:

U-B.

APRIL 19th, 1915.

Dr. H. P. ALBERT,

41 Broadway, New York City.

DEAR DR. ALBERT: I take pleasure in sending you herewith a copy of the Report of the Committee on Banking and Currency of the House of Representatives known as the Pujo Committee, on the Money Trust.

I note the conclusion you reach concerning the Trade Commission and hope to have the opportunity of seeing you soon and discussing matters generally with you, which is always a source of pleasure and instruction.

Very truly yours,

SAML UNTERMYER.

Senator NELSON. Mr. Untermeyer, I do not think that refers to the Federal Trade Commission.

Mr. UNTERMYER. No. I think it did not, Senator Nelson.

Maj. HUMES. He corrected that statement, Senator.

Senator NELSON. It refers to some other trade commission.

Mr. UNTERMYER. I think it was probably some commission between the two countries; but you will note, Major, that I do not answer his question as to what I think of the German note.

Maj. HUMES. Following that, when you have, or did you have, the conference that you said you hoped to have soon, in order to discuss matters generally?

Mr. UNTERMYER. I do not remember. I do not remember the trade commission, or what it meant, or refers to.

Have you cleaned up all your documents, now, Major?

Maj. HUMES. Have you ever had any occasion to take matters up with Mr. Vanderbilt for Dr. Albert?

Mr. UNTERMYER. No. I do not know Mr. Vanderbilt.

Maj. HUMES. I will ask the reporter to mark this paper "U-C."

I call your attention, Mr. Untermeyer, to a carbon copy of a letter that Dr. Albert wrote to you under date of November 18, 1915, and ask you what the matters referred to in that letter are?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Oh, yes. That is not Vanderbilt. It is printed there as Vanderbilt, but it is Vanderlip. It is meant for Vanderlip.

Senator NELSON. Of the National City Bank, I suppose?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Yes. I remember this. He wanted to arrange—have you got the answer to it?

Maj. HUMES. No, sir; I have not.

Mr. UNTERMYER. It was some transaction with the Argentine Republic; some gold exchange transaction between here and Argentina.

Maj. HUMES. Something that Dr. Albert or his bureau were interested in?

Mr. UNTERMYER. I do not know what the transaction was, but there was some exchange or credit transaction; yes. I think it was something that the German Government was interested in, and the Argentine Government was interested in.

Maj. HUMES. And you were interesting yourself in it for Dr. Albert?

Mr. UNTERMYER. No. He asked if I knew Mr. Vanderlip, and I said that I did, and that I would introduce him, which I did. I do not know what ever happened to it. It was a perfectly proper and legitimate thing, and good business for Mr. Vanderlip.

Maj. HUMES. I presume the committee would like to know what is in this letter. It reads as follows:

U-C.

NEW YORK November 18th, 1916.

MY DEAR Mr. UNTERMYER:

With reference to our conversation today, I wish to advise you that I am now in possession of the details relating to the credits to be established here. I would therefore esteem it a favor if you would kindly arrange a meeting between Mr. Vanderlip—

Mr. UNTERMYER. No; I said that the firm represented them—represented the defendants.

Maj. HUMES. You did not represent them personally?

Mr. UNTERMYER. No; I think what happened was this: I think I signed the original bill. I am not sure whether I did or not. No. Robert H. McCarter of New Jersey was the attorney, and Mr. Marshall argued the case in the New Jersey Court of Appeals, I think it was. He argued the case, finally, in the court below, too.

Maj. HUMES. And you associated Mr. McCarter with you, did you not?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Oh, it was our case originally; yes.

Maj. HUMES. You took the matters up of Mr. Lemke in connection with it?

Mr. UNTERMYER. I think it was Lemke; yes. I did not have much to do with it. I turned it over to Mr. Marshall.

Maj. HUMES. I will ask the reporter to mark this paper.

(After the reporter had marked the paper "U-D":)

I call your attention to Exhibits U-C and U-D, and ask you if those are yours [handing papers to witness]?

Mr. UNTERMYER (after examining papers). I think they are all right. The first letter here, of April, 1915, evidently was not written by me, but in my name. It is not signed by me. The other letters are.

Maj. HUMES. It is your name that is signed to it?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Yes; but somebody in the office probably sent it.

Maj. HUMES. But it came from your office?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Yes; and the other letters are signed by me personally. They have reference to this wireless case.

Maj. HUMES. My recollection is that you stated this morning that had all occurred prior to the war.

Mr. UNTERMYER. No; on the contrary, I think you or one of the members of the committee said it had occurred prior to the war, and I corrected him. I said it was in January, 1915.

Maj. HUMES. Then the interests which you were representing in that matter were, as you stated, the German company that was really controlled or subsidized by the German Government itself?

Mr. UNTERMYER. No; I do not think so.

Senator NELSON. What are you going to do with those letters?

Mr. UNTERMEYER. Do you want those in the record? They are not of any consequence.

Maj. HUMES. I do not know whether you would want those in the record or not [handing papers to Senator Nelson].

Senator NELSON. No.

Mr. UNTERMYER. I want to say this, Maj. Humes: This was a private company. There was a French company, and there was a German company, and they were having a controversy over a contract; some private contract, as to whether the French company was entitled to take the wireless from the German company under that contract. The French company was suing the German company for specific performance of their contract; and that was in January, 1915. That was all there was to it; two private litigants in a controversy over a private situation.

Senator OVERMAN. Dr. Albert had nothing to do with this?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Do not have such a suspicious mind, Major. That is perfectly plain and a perfectly harmless business, banking transaction, over gold between here and the Argentine.

Maj. HUMES. Well, Mr. Untermeyer, you know it is rather difficult to go through some of these records without developing some suspicion.

Mr. UNTERMYER. Yes. On the other hand, sometimes you get obsessed on the subject.

Maj. HUMES. We will try not to do that.

Mr. UNTERMYER. You may have gotten there.

Senator NELSON. Do you not think the purpose of this was to establish a German credit for the German Government in South America?

Mr. UNTERMYER. No. I think the idea was to establish a German credit here for dealing with South America.

Senator NELSON. What about gold for South America?

Mr. UNTERMYER. That is it. That was to establish a credit here whereby they could have a gold exchange with South America.

Senator NELSON. Oh, yes.

Mr. UNTERMYER. It is a little too much for me. That is rather high finance, I imagine.

Senator NELSON. That is high finance?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Yes.

Senator NELSON. You did not cover that point in your Money Trust investigation?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Oh, yes; we did.

Senator NELSON. Did you?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Yes. We thought we exposed it—drove it to its lair.

Senator KING. That would simply mean some commercial transaction in which this Government or some of the banks might derive some little benefit or profit?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Certainly. I thought I would throw the business to Mr. Vanderlip if I could.

Senator NELSON. In other words, you wanted to help the City Bank to get some benefit out of it?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Yes; but it did not come to anything.

Maj. HUMES. It involved a shipment of gold to South America and a transfer of credit from Berlin to New York, did it not?

Mr. UNTERMYER. I do not know. I could not tell you what it involved. I let them discuss it.

Maj. HUMES. You were not present at the discussion, then?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Yes; I was there. I was up there, but I did not listen to the discussion. It was not a thing that interested me. I simply was bringing those two men together. That was my reason for being there.

Maj. HUMES. Now, Mr. Untermeyer, do you know Theodore R. Lemke, who represented the German Sayville Wireless?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Yes; he represented this wireless company that had that lawsuit that we have been talking about.

Maj. HUMES. I understand in your statement—let me refresh my recollection. In this statement you say you did represent them?

Mr. UNTERMYER. But the newspapers came out with a statement that this thing was formed at the home of Samuel Untermeyer. That is the way the thing started. Then I sent my telegram to the committee. Now, it is not a fair thing, you know, to take hold of people and distort things in that way. It is costing me $25,000 a year to send milk to French babies now.

Maj. HUMES. Do you know Elizabeth M. Ross?

Mr. UNTERMYER. No; I never heard of her.

Maj. HUMES. Did she not work for you for a while?

Mr. UNTERMYER. I do not know. What was she?

Maj. HUMES. She was a stenographer, and was acting as a clerk for the citizens' committee on food shipments.

Mr. UNTERMYER. No. I do not recall her.

Maj. HUMES. And afterwards she went up to your farm or out to Greystone, and had charge of your pay rolls out there, and worked for you there?

Mr. UNTERMYER. I never heard of her. She never was a secretary of mine.

Maj. HUMES. I did not say "secretary."

Mr. UNTERMYER. Or stenographer. I do not think I ever heard of her or knew her. Yet it may be that she worked for me. I have a good many people working for me, and out at Greystone I have sometimes as many as 200 people.

Senator OVERMAN. You must have quite a large place there.

Mr. UNTERMYER. At some seasons I have 400 people there.

Maj. HUMES. You do not know, as a fact, that only $100 or $200 of the money that was raised by this committee on food shipments was utilized for the purchase of milk and that the rest was spent for the purpose which Edmund von Mach, Dr. Rumely and others were seeking to accomplish?

Mr. UNTERMYER. No; I do not know that, and I doubt whether you know it; yet your question seems to imply that you know it.

Maj. HUMES. That has been established before this committee.

Mr. UNTERMYER. Of course, if it has been, then they robbed everybody. This circular which I put in evidence here, under which Mrs. Untermeyer went in, said that anything they did not spend for milk would go to the Red Cross.

Maj. HUMES. Yes.

Mr. UNTERMYER. Now, you can get credulous ladies with lots of time on their hands and plenty of money to spend, to go into these things, and sometimes they get cheated.

Maj. HUMES. You have made the statement, Mr. Untermeyer, that that was entirely a legitimate enterprise.

Mr. UNTERMYER. I believe it to be.

Maj. HUMES. Aside from the motive that some of the individuals may have had, I simply wanted to call your attention to the fact that possibly you, and possibly some of the others, did not know of the manipulation by those in control.

Mr. UNTERMYER. I do not quite believe it yet. What I do know is this, that some of the leading physicians in the United States are on that board, as advertised in that circular; some of the most eminent clergymen in the country of different denominations are on that board, and some of the best-known women are on that board.

Now, I do not think they were going to let anybody get away with that money.

Maj. HUMES. Carl Schurz was the treasurer?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Yes, Carl Schurz was the treasurer, and "Carl Schurz" is a very great name. His father was one of the greatest men this country has ever had, and a great patriot.

Maj. HUMES. Yes, we will accept that, but what do you know of this man's connection with the German representatives in this country?

Mr. UNTERMYER. I do not know anything about it, but I do not think you ought to drag his name into this controversy. It is a great name.

Maj. HUMES. What do you know about Edmund von Mach?

Mr. UNTERMYER. I understand he was a professor at Harvard University, was he not? That is all I ever heard of him. Since you have mentioned Mr. Schurz's name—Carl Schurz—I have only met him once in my life, but I do not believe that that man, the son of a great father and a great patriot in this country, would be connected with anything that was inimical to the interests of this country. I think the traditions of the name that he carries would be enough with any kind of a decent man to prevent such a possibility. Now, do not let us discuss Mr. Schurz. He is not here to defend himself, and I do not think it is fair that he should be discussed.

Maj. HUMES. We have no desire to discuss Mr. Schurz.

Mr. UNTERMYER. Well, you mentioned his name first.

Maj. HUMES. As an official of this organization.

Mr. UNTERMYER. That, to my mind, ought to have been some guarantee of its legitimacy. He was treasurer of the organization, and I do not believe he would get away with its money.

Senator STERLING. Was Mr. Schurz attorney for the German Embassy?

Mr. UNTERMYER. I never heard of it. The recognized attorneys for the German Embassy were Hayes, Kaufman & Lindheim.

Senator STERLING. Did Mr. Schurz serve in that capacity at least part of the time?

Mr. UNTERMYER. As counsel for the embassy?

Senator STERLING. Yes.

Mr. UNTERMYER. I never heard of it. I did not know anything about the affairs of the German Embassy or its business.

Senator OVERMAN. They had numerous attorneys of whom you do not know?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Oh, yes; they employed a great number of counsel in different cases.

Maj. HUMES. Did you ever hear of the "Pan German Union?"

Mr. UNTERMYER. No; I did not know there was such a thing.

Maj. HUMES. Did you ever know Dr. Hugo Schweitzer?

Mr. UNTERMYER. No.

Maj. HUMES. Or Dr. Isaac Straus?

Mr. UNTERMYER. Was he the man who had the Jewish Chronicle?

Maj. HUMES. Not that I know of; but, if so, only temporarily.

Mr. UNTERMYER. There was one "Straus" who had the Jewish Chronicle.

Maj. HUMES. Did you ever know Dr. Grosse?

Mr. UNTERMYER. No; I never heard of him. They are all strange names to me.

Maj. HUMES. That is all, Mr. Untermeyer.

Mr. UNTERMYER. Thank you.

Senator OVERMAN. Any other questions, gentlemen?

Mr. UNTERMYER. I am obliged to you, gentlemen.

Senator OVERMAN. I have a letter here addressed to the committee by Mr. Merrill. Will you read this, Maj. Humes [handing paper to Maj. Humes]? Maybe there is some reflection on you in that letter.

Senator NELSON. No; it is rather more a reflection on Capt. Lester.

Senator KING. Read it, then.

Capt. LESTER. There are gross misstatements in the letter which can be contradicted by the original evidence that I have in my possession.

Senator OVERMAN. Then, let the letter go in as it is.

(The letter above referred to, dated Dec. 14, 1918, appears in full below, as follows:)

NEW YORK AMERICAN,
December 14, 1918.

Hon. LEE S. OVERMAN,

Chairman of the Senate Committee Investigating German Propaganda, Washington, D. C.

SIR: As the testimony given before your committee yesterday by Captain George B. Lester of the Military Intelligence Bureau, U. S. Army, concerning the Hearst papers, the Hearst news service, and several war correspondents of the New York American at Berlin prior to our entrance into the war, contains many mis-statements of fact, showing either gross ignorance or wilful misrepresentation, will you permit me to call your committee's attention to a few of them.

Capt. Lester produced before your committee more than fifteen hundred telegrams, letters and other documents relating to the matters your committee is investigating. These dispatches and documents have been in the possession of the Intelligence Department for a year or more. Yet in testifying about them Capt. Lester has stated as matters of facts things that never happened and has stated as conclusions, innuendoes or insinuations things that the evidence before him clearly disproves.

As your committee has not the time personally to examine the vast number of documents involved, it is important that the mis-statements in respect to them should not go uncorrected or unexplained.

I will mention as briefly as possible only a few of the actual misstatements of fact or misrepresentation of documents. Capt. Lester testifies:

"I have read every message that the Navy Department supplied us, of which there are about fifteen hundred, containing Dr. (William Bayard) Hale's personal, private messages, his news messages, and his editorial articles, and I have failed to find an expression in favor of the Allies in a single one of them, and I have never failed to find an expression in favor of Germany tucked in somewhere."

The answer is that Dr. Hale was sent to Berlin by the New York American in May, 1916, expressly to write the German side of the war, precisely as the American sent other distinguished correspondents to London to get the English side of the war, and others to Paris and to Rome to get the French and Italian sides of the war. It was Dr. Hale's duty to send the German Government's own interpretation of every important event and the views of the foremost German statesmen. It was obviously impossible for him to cable from Berlin, to use Capt. Lester's phrase, "any expression in favor of the Allies" just as it was impossible for our London correspondent to cable from London any expression favorable to Germany.

Moreover, war correspondents in Berlin as well as in London sometimes put in their dispatches pro-German or pro-British expressions or comments solely for effect on the censor to get important messages passed. Such expressions or comments have sometimes been eliminated by the editor receiving them and never published because the editor perceived or guessed that the expressions or comments were written to obtain passage for real news.

Capt. Lester was cross-examined at length by Senator Sterling and Senator Walcott and Senator Nelson as to whether Mr. Hearst, or the editors of the American, in reading Dr. Hale's messages, knew that they were pro-German. The most superficial examination of the messages themselves would show anyone that they were all pro-German. That was what Dr. Hale was in Berlin for.

The Department of Justice introduced testimony before the Senate Committee stating that Dr. Hale, while he was acting as correspondent of the American, received a stipend from the German Government. Dr. Hale denies this. I have no other means of knowing whether the statement is true or false. But I can not see any reasons why the German Government should have paid Dr. Hale anything as he was sent to Berlin expressly to send the German side of the war to the American, and the American paid him for his services a larger sum than the United States Ambassador to Berlin received from the Government of the United States to send truthful and accurate news solely for the information of the American public as to what the German Government was doing or saying. The American paid him over $35,000 in 59 weeks for salary and expenses.

He was selected to go to Berlin solely because he had been distinguished by the United States Government by receiving a confidential mission to Mexico as the special personal representative of President Wilson, because he had been the biographer of President Wilson, had compiled the book, "The New Freedom," of President Wilson, had been for years prior thereto a literary editor of the New York Times, had traveled much in Germany and spoke the German language, and had written for the Century Magazine in 1908 an account of the German Government and Military System and an interview with the Kaiser which was the subject of world-wide comment. He was also a writer of unusual force, and had considerable diplomatic experience. Our contract with him required him to devote all his time and ability to the New York American.

The New York American did not know that Dr. Hale had been employed, prior to his engagement by the American, in editing the daily budget of German newspaper extracts or interviews given out in the United States during 1914 and 1915 by a bureau entitled "The German Information Service." But there was no impropriety on the part of Dr. Hale collaborating in 1915 in that budget of information while the United States was neutral in the war for the reason that the daily budget furnished by the German Information Service was sent to the press everywhere clearly marked and was exactly what it purported to be, a collection of interviews and extracts from German papers, giving Germany's side of the war.

Capt. Lester testified that Dr. Hale had the exclusive use of the German wireless service. The slightest inquiry or investigation by Capt. Lester would have shown this statement to be untrue. The German wireless service was shared by nearly all the important newspapers in the United States and others. The New York American paid a word rate for the use of the wireless exactly as it paid for the transmission of news over the under-sea cables from England or France. There was no direct cable to Germany; the wireless was the only method of reaching Germany direct.

Capt. Lester testified that Dr. Hale, while in Berlin, "capitalized his former connection with the United States Government as a Minister Plenipotentiary to Mexico and his friendship and association with President Wilson and innumerable Government officials. In fact Dr. Hale was looked upon as one of the strongest representatives that America could have in Germany, and as a man who had the entree into Government circles."

Capt. Lester's carelessness in dealing with facts is indicated by this testimony, since Dr. Hale was never Minister Plenipotentiary to Mexico and could hardly have represented himself as such even if he were an unscrupulous person because the misrepresentation would have been so easily exposed.

The following questions and answers appear in the testimony before the Senate Committee:

"Senator NELSON. Now when other sources of transmitting news over here, or editorials, by Dr. Hale by cable was cut off, the Germans furnished him their services?"

"Captain LESTER. That is a fact, sir."

"Senator NELSON. That is, he knew where to go; after he was cut off from other sources, he applied to the German Government and got the use of their wireless?"

"Captain LESTER. Yes, sir."

The direct cable to Germany was cut in August, 1914, in the first two weeks of the war, by the British Navy. After that, all direct transmissions of news to and from Germany by newspapers generally was by German wireless. New York bankers transferred money in hundreds of cases to their clients in Germany by wireless. Dr. Hale had no exclusive privilege.

Capt. Lester testifies that after the German submarine Deutschland made her unprecedented trip under the seas to Baltimore, as a commercial boat, Capt. Koenig wrote a book on the voyage and Mr. Hearst obtained exclusive rights to publish this book in the United States by donating the profits to the widows and orphans of the crews of the submarines. The following questions and answers appear in the testimony:

"Senator WALCOTT. You mean the widows and orphans of the German sailors who were on these ships?

"Captain LESTER. Yes, the widows and orphans of the sailors who were on the submarines.

"Senator STERLING. This was a proposition from Dr. Hale to Mr. Hearst?

"Captain LESTER. Yes, Dr. Hale put it up to Mr. Hearst and . . . offered to turn over the proceeds of the Society for the Widows and Orphans of the Sailors of the Under-Sea Boats.

"Senator WALCOTT. Not for the benefit of the widows and orphans of the victims?

"Captain LESTER. No, Senator, not for the benefit of the widows and orphans of the victims, but for the widows and orphans of the men that ran the submarines."

The Military Intelligence Office of the Government requested full information about this and all the letters and facts were laid before the Government so there is no excuse for mis-stating the facts.

The record shows that the Deutschland was built by a private commercial company, of which a Mr. Lohman, head of the North German Lloyd, was the President; that the boats were to be trading boats, unarmed; that the Deutschland was thoroughly examined by the United States Government and found to be a peaceful trader and was accordingly given clearance papers to go and come from all ports; that she returned to Germany with a large cargo of copper and rubber; that there was keen competition between the leading newspapers of the United States, including the New York World, the Chicago Tribune, the New York American, and the New York Times to obtain Capt. Koenig's own story of the first unprecedented voyage; that the negotiations to obtain the book, begun by Dr. Hale in Berlin, ended with Paul Hilken, agent of the North German Lloyd in Baltimore, to whom the Deutschland was consigned; that the New York American bought the book, offering to donate all of the profits to the Society for the Widows and Orphans of German Sailors in which Lohman, head of the North German Lloyd, was greatly interested. There was never a suggestion that the profits should go to the widows and orphans of the sailors manning German armed submarines. In the same way Mr. Hearst published "King Albert's Book" in this country, donating all the profits to Belgium.

The final result of the newspaper competition of Capt. Koenig's book was that the New York World obtained a translation of Capt. Koenig's story, had it cabled from Scandinavia, and printed it as a serial in the New York World. The New York American brought out the book later to fulfill its promise, but the publication having been anticipated by the New York World, there were no profits on the book. There was a loss instead, which the New York American paid, and Paul Hilken, agent of the North German Lloyd, was so informed.

Capt. Lester testifies as to another correspondent, Edward Lyell Fox, as follows:

"An arrangement was made by the Hearst newspapers to employ Mr. Fox to write articles while in Germany, attaching himself to the headquarters of the Hearst service while in Berlin. This arrangement is evidenced by a letter given to Mr. Fox by Bradford Merrill, Publisher of the New York American, to E. Norgrove Cox at the Hague, who was in charge of the European end of the Hearst News Service, known as the International News Service. * * * This is the news service which was operated by cable which the English Government abolished in October, 1916. The English Government refused to handle the news service from October 1916 to—well, I do not think the service has ever been resumed. * * * There is evidence which I shall shortly produce that Mr. Fox was a propagandist for the Hearst American papers; that he acted under the direction of Mr. Schweppendick, the Berlin manager of the Hearst newspapers in the preparation of articles, and sent them to America for publication. * * * Articles coming from Mr. Fox were sheer propaganda, they were admitted to be propaganda, and they were published by him and written by him without any foundation in fact as to one article under the direction of the German Publicity Bureau in Berlin."

Capt. Lester then describes and quotes in detail the headlines of two articles written by Mr. Fox that appeared in the New York American of Sunday, April 18, and Sunday, April 25, 1915, describing alleged atrocities committed by the Russian soldiers during the Russian invasion of East Prussia.

The truth is that Edward Lyell Fox was never sent abroad by the International News Service or by the New York American. He was given a letter of introduction to the New York American's correspondent in London and at the Hague as "The correspondent of the Wildman Newspaper and Magazine Syndicate." Edwin Wildman was the head of a syndicate furnishing articles to Newspapers in all parts of the country. He was formerly Consul General to Hong Kong and is now editor of the Forum magazine.

The American received from Mr. Wildman and paid very liberally for four or five of Mr. Fox's letters received by the Wildman Syndicate from Berlin. These were published in the New York American as "written by a neutral correspondent."

Mr. Fox was not the correspondent of the American or the International News Service. He was never attached to the Hearst Bureau in Berlin and never received instructions from Mr. Schweppendick. The International News Service never forwarded or distributed his dispatches. They were sent direct by Mr. Fox to the Wildman Syndicate in New York, which offered them to the New York American and many other newspapers. They were paid for liberally by the American because it was then making every effort to get the strongest presentation of every belligerent's side of the Great war.

Capt. Lester refers to the Lyell Fox letters published April 18 and April 25, 1915, in the New York American as "pure German propaganda." Captain Lester does not state what the most cursory examination of the files of the New York American of those dates will show, namely, that besides the Edward Lyell Fox account of the alleged Russian atrocities—being Germany's side of the war—these two identical issues of the New York American contain a counter article on the Carpathian invasion written by Hilaire Belloc, the foremost military critic in England; an attack on Germany's conduct in Belgium by Guglielmo Ferrero, the eminent Italian historian, then a regular correspondent of the Hearst papers; an article by General Goethals on the defense of the Panama Canal; an appeal to the United States to enter the war by Jean Pinot, the celebrated French editor and writer; an article entitled "How Militarism has degraded German Women" by the General Victoriano Huerto; and an interview with the Queen of the Belgians on German atrocities by Pierre Loti of the French Academy. These articles were pure British propaganda and French propaganda and Italian propaganda, like the series of twelve articles by Mrs. Humphrey Ward, the foremost authoress in England, which the American also obtained at great expense and published at that time but not in these particular issues. The United States was then neutral in the war. The aim of the Hearst papers was to obtain the most authoritative statements by the most eminent officials and personalities in all the belligerent countries. The Hearst papers thus published in two years about 4,000 columns of pro-German articles and 10,000 columns of pro-Ally articles.

The truth and accuracy of Capt. Lester's testimony on other points is well indicated by the last sentence just quoted from his testimony in respect to the International News Service being resumed by the British Government—"Well, I do not think the service has ever been resumed."

The truth is the International News Service was restored to full cable privileges many months ago and without any sacrifice of its full independence. It is still an American news service, printing the facts, not subject to British control. It was restored to full rights not only by Great Britain but by Canada many months ago and no restraint or restriction rests upon it whatsoever.

Notwithstanding the daily evidence in 141 daily newspapers throughout the United States, most of which print the International News Service credit line in connection with its dispatches, Capt. Lester testifies: "I do not think the service has ever been resumed."

The American was afterwards informed that Mr. Fox entered the U. S. Army and obtained a commission.

Captain Lester says that the relations between Dr. Albert the head of the German propaganda in the United States in 1914, and Hearst's American were very close, and adds in his testimony:

"We also have information that a man by the name of Marshall Kelly, who is reported as being in the employ of the Hearst organization, was the confidential go-between who handled matters in conjunction with the Albert news bureau and the Hearst news agency. Marshall Kelly was sent to Baltimore some time in 1915, on behalf of Dr. Albert and Dr. Dernburg, as our information shows, to negotiate the purchase of the Baltimore Sun for the Germans. This mission apparently came to nothing.

"We next find that Marshall Kelly is connected with the Chicago Herald Examiner in 1917, and in the fall of 1918 he was sent to Milwaukee, Wis., to take charge of the 'Wisconsin' the paper purchased by Mr. Brisbane."

"Senator NELSON. Was this Mr. Kelly an employee at that time of Mr. Hearst's paper?"

"Capt. LESTER. Yes, sir; he is so reported.

"Senator NELSON. And he afterwards turns up as an employee of Mr. Brisbane?"

"Capt. LESTER. Well, he was employed in the Hearst publication, the Chicago Examiner."

As to the "close connection between Dr. Albert and the New York American," I can only say that I have been actively in charge of the New York American's news for many years, and I never met either Dr. Fuehr or Dr. Albert. The only record I find in my files is a note from Dr. Fuehr, dated October 28, 1918, in which he says: "I have never had the pleasure of meeting Mr. Merrill personally." I never did meet him, nor Dr. Albert.

As to Marshall Kelly, no one in the Hearst organization, so far as I have been able to ascertain by inquiry, ever heard of Marshall Kelly until Capt. Lester's testimony mentioned him as a Hearst employee who had tried to buy the Baltimore Sun. No representative of the Hearst organization was ever sent to Baltimore to try to buy the Sun. The editor in charge of the Chicago Herald Examiner, Mr. Howry, wires me that he never heard of Marshall Kelly until he read Capt. Lester's testimony. He is still without any knowledge or information of him except that testimony.

The above covers, I believe, all the important points in the testimony brought out yesterday.

May I now refer to the testimony of A. Bruce Bielaski, Chief of the Department of Justice Secret Service, before the Senate Committee earlier this week in regard to Bolo Pasha, the French traitor. Mr. Bielaski testified:

"We do not know whether Mr. Hearst knew the facts or not, but we do know that Mr. Hearst was intimately associated with Bolo Pasha while he was in the United States and that it was Mr. Hearst's man who brought him over here."

Senator King, of Utah, asked Bielaski if he was sure. At this point Capt. Lester interjected:

"Bertelli brought him over here. Our files show that and will be introduced."

All the facts in regard to Bolo Pasha known to Mr. Hearst or his managers are derived from the investigation of his record in New York by the Attorney General of the State of New York at the request of the French Government. From this it appears that Bolo Pasha first came to the United States in March 1916; that he figured as a citizen of France, born at Marseilles, who had made a large fortune in the East, where he obtained the title of "Pasha"; that he was a co-owner with M. Humbert, a Senator of France, of Le Journal, one of the most popular newspapers in Paris.

Charles F. Bertelli, a representative of the International News Service in Paris, having been ordered to come to New York for a conference, traveled to New York on the same steamer with Bolo, whom he knew as the proprietor of one of the most important Paris papers.

At his request, Mr. Bertelli presented Bolo, after his arrival in New York, to Mr. Hearst. Mr. Hearst, with seven or eight others, was invited to meet Bolo Pasha at a dinner in the public dining room of Sherry's given by Mr. Bertelli. The other guests included Jules Bois, the well known French Lecturer who was then speaking in this country in behalf of the French Government; Jules Gerard, the brother of the then American Ambassador to Berlin and Mr. V. V. Anda, the Managing Editor of the New York Times.

Mr. Bertelli had been the chief correspondent in Paris of the New York Times for several years before he joined the International News Service. He is a native of Italy but a graduate of Oxford University in England, and was a very well known, perhaps the best known, correspondent of American newspapers. He is now in the Italian army.

The conversation during the dinner in the public dining room of Sherry's was upon general topics. If anything of importance on any subject was said by Bolo Pasha to anybody or by anybody to him, it escaped Mr. Hearst's notice. A published statement, written later by Mr. Van Anda, managing editor of the New York Times, indicates that his recollection of the dinner and the occasion and his understanding of the character of Bolo Pasha were the same as Mr. Hearst's.

During the dinner Bolo Pasha told Mr. Hearst that he was having difficulty in getting print paper for his Paris Journal and he desired to talk with him about obtaining a supply in America.

Three or four days later he called at Mr. Hearst's house. The object of his visit was to ascertain from Mr. Hearst, if possible, how he could obtain some print paper in this country. Mr. Hearst told him that he would have great difficulty in getting paper for export as the American publishers were having trouble in getting enough paper for home consumption. Mr. Hearst's recollection is that he offered to give him a letter to the principal paper manufacturers, but after a brief chat upon conventional social topics, Bolo took his leave. Nothing of a private, or personal, or political nature was mentioned between them.

Mr. Hearst never saw Bolo Pasha afterwards or heard from him. He never at any time had any personal knowledge of his character, antecedents, or purposes, other than stated here. He does not remember to have heard even his name mentioned again until the exposure was made of his true character, about eighteen months later in Paris.

It appeared that Bolo was the brother of Monsignor Bolo, a distinguished prelate of the Roman Catholic Church in Paris and one of the most eloquent preachers in France; an intimate friend of Judge Monier, holding one of the highest judicial positions in France; the partner of Senator Humbert in the newspaper business; and that his influence was sufficient to secure his invitations to a dinner of President Poincaré of France and of Louis Barthou, an ex-Premier of France.

The wife of Edmond Rostand, the French poet, sought his aid, it appears, in getting reinstated to his command a French general, and when it was done the wife of the poet wrote a letter of thanks to Bolo Pasha beginning "O magnificent Pasha." One of his agents in Paris was George Mandel, who was also the confidential man of Georges Clemenceau, the present premier of France. He received mail at the Paris office of J. P. Morgan & Co. of New York.

The New York Attorney General's investigation of the files of J. P. Morgan & Co., fiscal agents of both the French and British governments, disclosed telegrams from J. P. Morgan's senior partner in Paris, Baron Harjes, commending Bolo Pasha to J. P. Morgan as a client having "connections which are of great importance to us." Baron Harjes' letter to his senior partner in New York, J. P. Morgan contained this statement:

"We think it perhaps well to add, in view of the somewhat Oriental sonnance of this gentleman's name and title, that he is not a Turk, and in fact is the brother of a well known French archbishop."

Another letter found in the Morgan files was from the Royal Bank of Canada, which is an official agent of the British Government, enclosing a check for $170,068.03 from Bolo Pasha to be transmitted by the Morgan firm to Paris to the credit of Senator Charles Humbert.

Bolo Pasha's financial transactions with the Morgan firm and the Royal Bank of Canada were so large, amounting to more than a million dollars, that the record, when examined by the Attorney General of New York, bore the initials "J. P. M.," showing that the head of the Morgan firm personally O.K'd the account.

Other correspondence found in the Morgan files between J. P. Morgan & Co. in New York and Bolo Pasha at the Plaza Hotel in New York related to the transfer of a million francs to Paris for Bolo Pasha; and again an inquiry by Harjes of Morgan what interest he would allow Bolo Pasha on a fund of $1,000,000 in America; also another telegram dated April 14, 1916, from J. P. Morgan's Paris house, notifying him that the Royal Bank of Canada "will deposit with you about nine hundred thousand dollars account of Bolo Pasha;" also another letter from the Royal Bank of Canada, signed by N. G. Hart, Assistant Agent, to J. P. Morgan, advising him that under cabled instructions just received from Paul Bolo Pasha in Paris "we are enclosing our check to your order for the sum of $1,000,000 which please credit to the account of said Paul Bolo Pasha."

Bolo Pasha visited Canada, carrying a letter of introduction to the Royal Bank of Canada, at Montreal, from its New York representative, R. E. Jones, reading as follows:

"Mr. Bolo is the owner of the Paris Journal, a newspaper with a circulation of 2,000,000 daily, and using 3,500 to 4,000 tons of newspaper material. He informs me when other French newspaper owners learned he was coming to America, they held a meeting and commissioned him to make contracts covering the requirements of all.

"Mr. Bolo impressed me as being a very able man, and, I judge, one of influence in France. His title 'Pasha' was received from the Khedive of Egypt when, for six years, he acted as financial adviser to the Khedive, and was the French Government's representative."

Thus American financiers were led to believe Bolo had been a "French Government official," was a man "of influence in France," represented all the leading publishers of Paris, "owned" the Paris Journal, and was coming to America solely to buy newspaper for the newspapers of France, whose supply of news print had become exhausted because of the war.

If at the time of his visit to New York the head of the Morgan firm, having confidential relations with both the French and the British Governments, and their fiscal agents, did not know the true character and connections of Bolo Pasha, how could a private citizen like Mr. Hearst, who had no interest in him, who met him only socially, in the most casual way, and who had no dealings whatsoever with him, be supposed to know?

Yet the witnesses summoned before your committee suppressed, or failed to mention, the facts indicated by these and other records tending to prove that the chief object of Bolo Pasha's visit to America was to handle millions of dollars through J. P. Morgan & Co., the bankers of the Allies, and the Royal Bank of Canada, and that he did so with the knowledge of J. P. Morgan personally, his chief partner in Paris, Harjes, and the New York agent of the Royal Bank of Canada. Bolo also handled several million dollars through the other New York Banks.

But the witnesses before your committee make no reference to these eminent bankers who had transactions of such magnitude with Bolo and who should have known his real business.

The witnesses before your committee did not bring out the truth. They suppressed the truth. They asserted instead the falsehood that "Bolo was intimately associated with Mr. Hearst."

No one who knows the character and training of the officers of our regular army and navy as I do would ever doubt the strict veracity of any statement made by them.

But officers and agents receiving appointments by the Government from civil life in time of war sometimes receive and credit false and malicious reports or express the hatreds and revenges of corrupt and predatory private interests.

I am sure that your committee, which has given so much of its valuable time to this investigation, wishes to bring out the truth. Any further information or testimony that I can give is, of course, entirely at your service.

Faithfully yours,

S. BRADFORD MERRILL,
General Manager Hearst Papers

TESTIMONY OF CAPT. GEORGE B. LESTER—Resumed.

Senator OVERMAN. Are you willing to go on without having Mr. Merrill here?

Capt. LESTER. Certainly. Everything I have here is documentary.

Senator OVERMAN. Capt. Lester, you were brought here by the committee, assigned by the Secretary of War to bring these documents here?

Capt. LESTER. Yes.

Senator OVERMAN. And your testimony on the other days was documentary?

Capt. LESTER. Based upon documentary evidence; yes, sir.

Senator OVERMAN. Now, you may go ahead and make any statement you wish.

Capt. LESTER. In connection with the letter of Mr. Merrill, of the New York American, written December 14, 1918, I wish to call the committee's attention to the fact that in my testimony I stated Edward Lyell Fox was sent to Germany by the Wildman Newspaper Syndicate; that Mr. Wildman believed that he was sending Mr. Fox as a writer, and that Mr. Fox was also employed by the Correspondence Film Co., which was operated by Mathew B. Claussen. In addition to those two arrangements, Mr. Fox was employed to write articles while in Germany for the Hearst newspapers and was attached to the headquarters of the Hearst newspapers, managed by Mr. Schweppendick, in Berlin. In support of that statement, I offered the letter of Mr. Merrill.

Senator OVERMAN. Mr. Merrill himself signed it?

Capt. LESTER. Yes; Mr. Merrill himself signed it—Mr. Bradford Merrill, publisher of the New York American—introducing Mr. Fox to Mr. E. Norgrove Cox, their representative at The Hague, and requesting Mr. Cox to give Mr. Fox the service of their means of communication with the United States.

Senator OVERMAN. This is a letter from Merrill to whom?

Capt. LESTER. From Merrill to the Hearst representative in The Hague.

Senator KING. This is a letter you called attention to when you were on the stand before?

Capt. LESTER. Yes, sir. I want to read it again. When Mr. Fox arrived in Berlin he received a letter from Mr. Schweppendick, dated July 27, in which Mr. Schweppendick states as follows:

Your note of yesterday is at hand. I see you have secured two interviews which you are forwarding to Mr. Merrill. I also see you expect to go to Warsaw. Well, I had made arrangements to have one of my men there, not knowing any of your plans at that time. So we may have two men on the spot.

I call the attention of the committee also to the list of the newspaper correspondents that took the trip from Berlin to Dresden and Munich and from there to the north of Germany, which trip was under the direction of the German Government, in which Mr. Fox is No. 6 on the list, as the representative of the "Hearst Blätter," meaning the Hearst newspapers, New York and Boston. That is an original document which Mr. Fox handed to me.

(The paper above referred to is here printed in full, as follows:)

LISTE

DER TEILNEHMER AN DER REISE NACH MITTELDEUTSCHEN UND SÜDDEUTSCHEN STÄDTEN.

1. Leiter: Direktor Schumacher, z. z. in der Zentralstelle für Auslandsdienst Berlin.
2. Frau Dr. Lehr de Waal (verschied. holländische u. indische Zeitungen)
3. Fräulein Ebba van Sillen (Svenska Dagblad, Svensk Volkviljan Stockholm).
4. van Lissa (Algemeen Handelsblad) Amsterdam.
5. Harry Carr (Los Angeles Times) Kalifornien.
6. Mr. Fox (Hearst Blätter) New York, Boston usw.
7. Major Sa (Corelo de Manhã Brasilien).
8. Rev. L. M. Powers (Boston Journal u. and Zeitungen) Boston.
9. Abrecht (New Yorker Staatszeitung) New York.
10. Philip Powers (Associated Press) New York.
11. Dr. Iar Iliescu (Rumänische Zeitungen) Bukarest.

12. Siösteen (Südschwedische Zeitungen) Göteborg.
13. Djelepy (Semaia) Athen.
14. Saadi Bey (Ikdam) Konstantinopel.
15. Olaf Selmer-Anderssen (Dagblad, Tidens Tegn) Kristiania
16. Moussault Illustrationsphotograph (Vereenigde Foto Bureaux) Amsterdam.
17. John Everets. Kinophotograph der Zentralstelle für Auslandsdienst.
18. A. Grohs, Illustrationsphotograph, Berlin.

Senator STERLING. Has Mr. Merrill, in his letter filed with the committee and which has gone into the record—the letter dated December 14, 1918—denied these letters and the facts stated in them?

Capt. LESTER. Mr. Merrill has denied that the Hearst publications ever employed Mr. Fox as a correspondent.

On September 10, 1915, Mr. Wildman wrote a letter to Mr. Edward Lyell Fox, discussing Mr. Fox's work in Germany, this letter being addressed to Mr. Edward Lyell Fox, Hotel Adlon, Berlin, Germany, in which he says, in part:

Mr. M. Suggests the importance of big interviews. He thinks the value of big descriptive material will be dependent upon your impartial presentations. The feeling in this country toward Germany was getting better until the Dumba-Archibald incident.

In another letter addressed to Mr. Fox, under date of New York, October 11, 1915, at the Hotel Adlon, Berlin, Germany, Mr. Wildman writes, in part:

I have not as yet been able to dispose of the article on the prison camp. Mr. Merrill writes me that they have had an article in type for four weeks on the prison camp at Ruhleben, with very excellent photographs. There has also been another description of it published—quite a lengthy one—in one of the New York papers some time ago. The American will use the Stein interview for thirty dollars, October 17th. I will send you a copy. I received the duplicate article and made the corrections.

The Stein article is the one on Japan, that I referred to in my testimony.

On October 2, 1915, Mr. Wildman wrote to Mr. Edward Lyell Fox, Hotel Adlon, Berlin, Germany, in part, as follows:

The pamphlet regarding the Indo-Turko troops was received and turned over to the "New York American." This pamphlet reached the city from other sources and notices have already been made of it in the Sun and Times. Someone else must have had copies. Mr. Merrill said it related to old happenings, and while useful from the point of an editorial on the horrors of war it was not in any sense such a story as the East Prussian stuff. He, therefore, would only pay $100 for this story, which, in view of the fact that other papers have received it, it seems to me the best that can be done on it, particularly as he will only use part of it Sunday.

I shall give the Ludwig Stein interview immediate attention.

Then the other is totally immaterial.

As I pointed out in my testimony in the New York American of April 18, 1915, there was published an article entitled "Hands and feet of boys cut off by the Cossacks, says Edward Lyell Fox." I have here the original manuscript of Mr. Edward Lyell Fox of that story, which has the stamp of the German Government. "Admitted for publication, Acting General Staff, Division 3-B," the word "Acting" being literally translated, but an idiom, meaning "representing the German general staff," as I am informed by the translator.

Senator KING. What is the German word?

Capt. LESTER. The German word is "stellvertreutender". Now, this article, Mr. Merrill states, was syndicated; that it, it was not published by them; but this is the same article referred to in the previous letter. This article was published in the New York American on the date mentioned, with this under the name of the author: "Copyright, 1915, by the New York American." The manuscript has some pages missing, but every page is stamped.

Now, that article was written by Mr. Fox and a Mr. Cory, in the first instance. An original telegram, signed by Cory and Fox, or a message delivered to Maj. Hervwarth, or sent to Maj. Hervwarth, signed by Cory and Fox, for transmission, was written on the Eastern front, or somewhere in East Prussia, and signed "Cory and Fox." Mr. Fox stated that when it came to the publishing of the article Cory would not stand for it, so his name was eliminated, and he, Fox, took the responsibility of writing the article, and you will note in the manuscript that where the pronoun "we" is used that has been stricken out, and Mr. Fox in his own handwriting has substituted "I". He has made the corrections throughout.

Senator STERLING. Now, whence that information, Capt. Lester, that Cory would not stand for it?

Capt. LESTER. That is from Mr. Fox's statement to me. I do not know whether that is in one of the 10 or 12 confessions he made, but he made three confessions in question-and-answer form, and, I think, nine in his own handwriting, covering a multitude of his work in Germany, various phases of it; the Casement case, which was going to be featured over there, which never came off, and his connection with the British in 1916—that I testified to—which is much more elaborate than I stated there, and covering other topics.

Senator KING. Were his confessions contradictory?

Capt. LESTER. Every one of them. There are no two alike. He swore to three of them, swore to their truthfulness before a notary public, which afterwards, when these documents were obtained, he retracted; and that was one of the grounds upon which it was recommended to the War Department for action; but he pleaded that his memory was defective and that he was under a severe strain; and after these documents had been recovered, his memory was refreshed. In the first statement and two others he stated that everything he had had been destroyed. In fact, that was his claim throughout.

Senator KING. This document to which you have just called attention—the manuscript of the Cossack article—that was written on the eastern front, as I understand you?

Capt. LESTER. That was written near east Prussia.

Senator KING. That is, he claims that?

Capt. LESTER. Yes. That was written somewhere on the German east front, but not in the place where the article itself says it was.

Senator KING. Was this manuscript sent overseas?

Capt. LESTER. No; he brought it with him. It was sent over by messenger. Either that or by wireless.

Senator OVERMAN. Is that an article which was written from imagination and not from the truth?

Capt. LESTER. That was purely imaginary.

Senator KING. And that is already in the record?

Capt. LESTER. Yes; and that is the one that was copyrighted by the New York American.

Now, on the subject of Mr. Marshall Kelly, that seemed to stir up Mr. Merrill to such an extent: The information as to Marshall Kelley's connection with the German agents in the Fuehr bureau, which I stated in my testimony, was information that Marshall Kelly was sent to attempt to purchase the Baltimore Sun. I stated that he was sent by these men in the German bureau to attempt to purchase the Baltimore Sun. I made no statement that he was sent by Mr. Hearst or anybody connected with him, for that is not the evidence. The evidence is in the form of a statement by one of the German aliens who came to assist Dr. Fuehr, which is on file, that Marshall Kelly was sent by that bureau to attempt to purchase the Baltimore Sun, but nothing came of it.

Senator KING. You have no statement from Kelly?

Capt. LESTER. I have no statement from Kelly on that point.

Senator KING. Your information as to his activities in purchasing or attempting to purchase a newspaper comes from some agent?

Capt. LESTER. A confession of one of the coworkers of Dr. Fuehr and Dr. Albert, who was there during the whole time that the Fuehr bureau was in operation. The statement that Mr. Marshall Kelly was attached to the Chicago Examiner comes from another source, but that is confirmed by a statement of the Milwaukee Journal in a letter of December 14, 1918, which was handed in here this afternoon, in which some one connected with the Milwaukee Journal, which was a Brisbane paper, states that Mr. Kelly was with the Hearst people in Chicago on the Herald-Examiner from February until June of this year.

I stated that there was information that Mr. Kelly had been attached to the Milwaukee Journal, the Brisbane paper. That information came from a report made by a man who was giving information to the department; and the Milwaukee Journal representatives say that Marshall Kelly never was attached to their paper and ask that this letter be placed in the record. I do not mean the Brisbane paper; I mean the Milwaukee Journal, which is the Campbell paper.

Senator OVERMAN. Does Merrill deny that he was ever connected with—

Capt. LESTER. He does not deny it, but he does not affirm it. He says that the information was from the representatives—I think the manager.

The fact is, as reported, that Marshall Kelly was attached to the Chicago Herald-Examiner.

Mr. Merrill states:

As to Marshall Kelly, no one in the Hearst organization, so far as I have been able to ascertain by inquiry, ever heard of Marshall Kelly until Capt. Lester's testimony mentioned him as a Hearst employee who had tried to buy the Baltimore Sun. No representative of the Hearst organization was ever sent to Baltimore to try to buy the Sun.

Nobody ever claimed there was.

The editor in charge of the Chicago Herald-Examiner, Mr. Howry, wires me that he never heard of Marshall Kelly until he read Capt. Lester's testimony.

Senator KING. Did you make any contention that Mr. Kelly represented the Germans or Mr. Hearst in attempting to purchase the Baltimore paper?

Capt. LESTER. I have stated that I never had heard of Marshall Kelly or that such a person existed until this came up, and the man who made the report was questioned as to Marshall Kelly's activities, and he stated that the Albert-Fuehr Bureau had sent Kelly to Baltimore to purchase the Baltimore Sun, but nothing had come of it.

Senator WOLCOTT. You never made the statement that Marshall Kelly, connected with the Hearst papers, tried to make this purchase?

Capt. LESTER. That is not in the evidence. I did not know anything that would justify my making any such statement. This was purely a transaction as between the Albert-Fuehr Bureau and Marshall Kelly.

Senator KING. Then you disclaim any purpose to connect Mr. Kelly with any attempt to purchase this paper, or if he did, any attempt to connect him with a Hearst publication?

Capt. LESTER. There is no evidence of that.

Senator OVERMAN. You went on to say that Marshall Kelly had been connected with the Hearst papers.

Senator KING. And the fact upon which you base your statement that Marshall Kelly had attempted to purchase the Baltimore Sun, is this report which is made up by some unknown person?

Capt. LESTER. A man who was a part of the German press bureau, and he gave the information about the money.

Senator KING. Then, your testimony is based upon that report?

Capt. LESTER. On that statement of his solely, as to Marshall Kelly, in that particular.

Senator KING. You have not corroborated it by any conference with the owners or representatives of the Baltimore Sun to see whether anyone attempted—Marshall Kelly or anyone else—to purchase that paper?

Capt. LESTER. No; I have not, personally.

Senator KING. So you have nothing other than that statement of the transaction?

Capt. LESTER. No; I have nothing other than that statement.

Senator KING. If the statement is untrue, there is nothing to support the contention.

Capt. LESTER. There is something to support the contention, for this reason, that Marshall Kelly was connected up with Ritter & Co., of Boston, who were the distributors of German literature during the war period, from 1914 up to the time we entered into the war—the United States entered into the war. I have in my possession six or seven letters of Marshall Kelly to Ritter & Co., in which Marshall Kelly attempts to sell Ritter & Co. a book which he wrote called "Carlyle in the War," and Ritter & Co. and Marshall Kelly have been in correspondence, and Ritter has been interned as a result of his activities since the war. We have been following Marshall Kelly from that time on, and every report that came on Marshall Kelly was checked up. He was checked up in Chicago; he was checked up in Milwaukee; also as being in Milwaukee attached to the Milwaukee Wisconsin.

Senator NELSON. The Evening Wisconsin?

Capt. LESTER. Yes, sir. These arguments are on the record. This letter states that Marshall Kelly was not connected with the Wisconsin and they wanted the statement to go into the record, so I have no objection to putting it in. Marshall Kelly is now living in New York. We have his address. I discussed Marshall Kelly with Mr. Becker when he was here last week, and Mr. Becker said no doubt some information might be obtained from Marshall Kelly. He is a person in being, in other words, and is located and known to the investigators.

Here is a letter addressed to the chairman Senate committee for the investigation of German propaganda in the United States. His address is 497 Manhattan Avenue, New York City. His letter is dated December 15, 1918, and he says:

My attention has been called to a notice in the "N. Y. Times" of Dec. 14th, wherein Captain Lester is reported to have made certain statements concerning me, whilst giving evidence before you.

According to this report, Captain Lester said that I am a Scotchman. This is correct. Otherwise, there is not one word of truth in the statement referred to as reported in the N. Y. Times of Dec. 14th, which is the only report I have seen. A perfectly wild and baseless statement.

Yours respectfully,

(Signed) MARSHALL KELLY,
Author of "Carlyle and the War."

I have Marshall Kelly's letter addressed to Ritter & Co. in his own handwriting, in which Marshall Kelly states "I am a Scotchman." I will not attempt to quote it, because I have it right here. This letter is written by Marshall Kelly to Theodore S. Ritter on February 17, 1917. He discusses certain books, including submarine warfare, etc., and offers his book, "Carlyle in the War," and states: "I am a Scotchman, completely assured that Germany has the right in this war." That was the statement read into the record.

Now, in reference to Mr. Merrill's letter, concerning the Deutschland Publishing Co. Mr. Merrill obviously has misconceived what was said, because he devotes several pages to the discussion of the Deutschland Co. It was the company which was inaugurated by Paul Helman, of Baltimore, that brought over the undersea Deutschland with her cargo that landed at Baltimore. The reference made to the Deutschland Publishing Co. was in regard to the publishing of a book written by Capt. Paul Koenig that had been sent over. That came out in Dr. Hale's telegrams to the Hearst American. Mr. Merrill makes the statement that this book was brought over here by the New York Herald and published by the New York World, and that the Hearst American bought the book and received it. That is a fact as far as the Hearst American buying the book and the New York World getting the first story as explained before, but the fact is that the manuscript of the Paul Koenig book was sent by wireless by Dr. Hale to the Hearst American; in part, I say, because it was stopped. The telegrams which I showed from the Navy Department covered some 10 or 15 chapters of it.

There is a reference to the International News Service. I think I correctly stated in my subsequent testimony, when I had the information from the British, that the International News Service was restored to its cable privileges in April of 1918.

In reference to the coming over of Bolo Pasha, Mr. Merrill makes a point of the fact of an inquiry from Bielaski as to whether Bertelli was the man who brought Bolo Pasha over here. He says:

"Senator King, of Utah, asked Bielaski if he was sure. At this point Capt. Lester interjected: 'Bertelli brought him over here. Our files will show that and will be introduced.'"

If this is in the record, I do not know it. The fact is that our files do show that Bertelli was brought over or came over with Bolo Pasha. Mr. Merrill goes on to say:

Charles F. Bertelli, a representative of the International News Service in Paris, having been ordered to come to New York for a conference, traveled to New York on the same steamer with Bolo, whom he knew as the proprietor of one of the most important Paris papers.

Mr. Becker will, I believe, give some information on that, Mr. Becker having all the information that we have of the Bolo Pasha matter, and much more which he obtained himself.

Senator KING. Have you any personal knowledge that Bertelli, or anybody else for that matter, brought Bolo Pasha here?

Capt. LESTER. Only from our records. I stated, Mr. Chairman, upon my appearance here as a witness, I would testify from the facts which were set forth in the records of the War Department and the Military Intelligence, and such information as I had had of a personal nature.

I have been particularly careful to adhere to that in every case, and the statement of Mr. Merrill contained in an article in the New York American following my testimony, is a complete distortion of the evidence and totally unwarranted.

Senator KING. Have you any competent evidence that Bertelli paid for his passage, or anything of that nature?

Capt. LESTER. No; I think I have no information about the Bolo Pasha case. In fact, I know nothing about the details of it. I never had the case come under my observation, except the summaries of the reports, which had been sent to the Military Intelligence, of the evidence principally obtained by Mr. Becker.

Senator KING. If it should be material—I do not see now that it is; it may or may not be, but if it should be material—to show that Bertelli was connected in any way with Pasha, or Pasha with Bertelli, have you any knowledge as to the relation between them, whether one paid the fare of the other, or one induced the other to come, or anything of that nature?

Capt. LESTER. No, sir; I have not. I have no information, and there is none that I know of in our records.

Senator KING. And those records to which you refer, and about which you made the statement that Bertelli brought Pasha over here, do they indicate the relations between Bertelli and Pasha; whether Bertelli paid for Pasha's fare or Pasha paid for Bertelli's, or anything of that nature?

Capt. LESTER. No, sir; nothing of that kind.

Maj. HUMES. Senator, the one that knows more about that than anybody else in this country is Mr. Becker, and he will be here on Thursday and he can give any information available on that subject.

Senator KING. The only point I want to get at is the character of the captain's testimony, and as to whether or not he means to convey the idea, from his knowledge or from any data that he has, that Pasha paid for Bertelli or Bertelli paid for Pasha, or whether they were connected together in any way in any joint venture which brought them to this country.

Capt. LESTER. No, sir. I have discussed the Bolo Pasha matter with different people from time to time, and when Mr. Bielaski was testifying about Bolo Pasha he seemed to hesitate as to the name of the man he came with.

Senator KING. As I recall Mr. Bielaski's testimony, he stated that Bertelli brought Pasha to this country.

Capt. LESTER. That was my recollection of his testimony; and just at that particular time he was hesitating as to who brought him over, having testified before that he did. I think there was some evidence of it.

Senator KING. Do you know whether Mr. Bielaski had any information which warranted the statement that he made, that Bertelli brought Pasha over?

Capt. LESTER. Oh, I think I could not answer that, I am sure.

Senator KING. You know of none, at any rate, yourself.

Capt. LESTER. The evidence is being gotten in the Bolo Pasha case by Mr. Becker at the request of the French Government, and with the knowledge of the attorney general of the State of New York, and I believe that the Department of Justice undertook the investigation through the banking connections, and developed the Bolo Pasha case, and after a month of investigation finally brought the connection together. He filled the case up, and he has there all of the original documents, or authenticated copies, and all of the information. He told Maj. Humes and myself that if the committee insisted he could give the whole testimony.

Senator KING. The point I had in my mind was this: Pasha came here, and I remember at the time the fact that he dealt with reputable banks, and either then or later I remember reading of some banquet being given at which some very excellent people were present. Now, in view of the subsequent trial of Pasha for treason in France, and his end, it is quite clear that the fact of his association with people here might be the basis of some unjust suspicions being aroused against banks with which he dealt, or persons with whom he associated, and we ought, so far as we can, to prevent leaving an impression by any testimony that is given that might subject any person here to unfair criticism by reason of their having known him or associated with him. That is the reason I was trying to get at the basis of the statement that Bertelli brought him here.

Capt. LESTER. But Bolo Pasha was a prominent newspaper man in Paris. Bertelli was a representative of the Hearst International News Service there, and accompanied Bolo Pasha to this country, and it is a well-known fact, which Mr. Hearst does not deny—in fact, it is stated in Mr. Merrill's letter—that Mr. Hearst met Bolo Pasha socially on one or two occasions, as many other people did.

Senator KING. I did not have any particular person in mind. I had in mind more particularly the banks, and the Canadian banks.

Capt. LESTER. Large credits were established here, presumably for the purpose of buying papers in France. It afterwards turned out that that was not the fact; that is, it was not the purpose.

Senator KING. At any rate, when Pasha came, there was nothing so far as you know that would indicate to the person with whom he came in casual contact that he was here for any sinister purpose.

Capt. LESTER. Nothing at all. On the contrary, as it is already in the record, he had dinner with Judge Gary and his wife and other people of social prominence, and they should not be under the slightest suspicion of any sinister motive.

Senator KING. Then you did not mean to convey the idea that there was anything improper in Bertelli's coming over with him on the trip?

Capt. LESTER. Not the slightest intimation of that kind.

There is one thing in Mr. Merrill's letter which indicates that he has misapprehended the testimony. He states, on page 4:

Captain Lester testifies that Dr. Hale had the exclusive use of the German wireless privilege.

I gave no such testimony, nor any testimony that could be construed in that way. On the contrary, I stated that so far as the German wireless service was concerned, they had the use of that service. The German wireless service was open to anybody. They got a lot of messages of the Continental Times Co., and Fox made use of it, sending messages by way of Sayville to Germany as long as it was in operation. It was used by well-known houses in connection with German houses, and other newspapers were using the Sayville service also.

Senator KING. Other papers were making the same use of it that Mr. Hearst was?

Capt. LESTER. No question about it.

Senator NELSON. But the Sayville service was cut off by the Government, and the German wireless service had another station in this country.

Capt. LESTER. Tuckerton, N. J., and that was used by the International Service and public service, anybody, to send wireless messages.

Senator NELSON. Tuckerton, too, the same as Sayville?

Capt. LESTER. Yes, sir. Then Tuckerton was closed down, very shortly after we got into the war, or shortly before.

Senator KING. This is not quite germane, but is there anything to indicate that wireless communication was made with or through Mexico—I mean between Germany and Mexico?

Capt. LESTER. There is evidence in hand in the Navy Department showing a communication by the wireless station at Chapultepec. I have seen messages that passed between Germany and the embassy complaining of the interruption of service.

Senator KING. You mean at Mexico?

Capt. LESTER. From the German Embassy in Washington, complaining of the interruption of service between Germany and Chapultepec, or the expectation of remedying the sending difficulties, and the resumption.

Senator KING. Do you know whether that station at Chapultepec was controlled by the Germans?

Capt. LESTER. I do not; no, sir. That information, however, covering all the German radio service, is in the possession of Mr. Becker, and we have asked him to bring along such data as he has that might be of interest to the committee and of value to this investigation.

Maj. HUMES. The following is a complete copy of the letter from George Sylvester Viereck to Dr. Albert, dated April 1, 1915, from which I have heretofore read into the record the first two paragraphs:

[The International. Established 1908. A magazine of life and letters. 715 Broadway Commercial Building, New York City. Published by The International Monthly Publishers: "The Fatherland." Edited by George Sylvester Viereck. Telephone 1792 Spring. Cable address: Viereck, New York.]

APRIL 1, 1915.

MY DEAR DR. ALBERT: I have arranged with Mrs. Untermeyer that her automobile will call at your house Sunday at half past five. It takes but one hour to go to Greystone.

Dr. Hale will not be with us, which is perhaps better. I think Untermeyer will speak more frankly in our presence. It moreover gives us an opportunity to talk things over a bit. I do not like the way things have been going on of late.

I take pleasure in enclosing a proof of the cover of The International.

Most of the editorials and the article entitled "The real American attitude in Germany and England" was written by Alexander Harvey—"The lesson of one hundred years ago" is by Dr. Hale. He will sign his name to future articles, but for certain special reasons, he deemed it better not to sign this particular one.

The same number contains also an article which I had translated for The International, by Huston Stewart Chamberlain, and it contains moreover an article on Bismark by Professor Herbert Sanborn, of the Vanderbilt University. The only German name among the contributors is that of Professor Rudolf Spatz. The article was submitted to us by A. A.

I shall print one article of that nature by a prominent German every month. We will thus be able to dispose of a good many important articles sent to us from this source, which cannot get into print otherwise.

I shall publish several articles by Huston Stewart Chamberlain and perhaps publish them in book form.

If you glance at the list of contributors you will see hardly any German names. You will find Arthur Symons' poems, an English poet; you will find an Italian—and you will even find an article by Cecil Chesterton.

I have made an arrangement with Professor Shepherd for a signed article on "neutrality" for next month. I have also made arrangements for articles on the subject of "Canada as a menace to the United States" by Mr. Bonham, well known American journalist and financial writer.

In the future we can always discuss in advance just what special articles will be advisable to print. This and other matters we can discuss on Sunday.

I regret that I see so little of you and both Miss Hein and myself regret that we have not had the pleasure of meeting Mrs. Albert a second time.

Believe me,

Sincerely,

(Signed) GEORGE SYLVESTER VIERECK.

Capt. LESTER. I submit for the record copies of letters found by the British among the personal belongings of Maj. von Papen, former German military attaché in Washington.

Maj. von Papen was acting as a member of Liman von Sanders' staff during the Palestine campaign, and together with the rest of the staff had to leave Nazareth two hours in advance of the British cavalry. The entire personal effects of von Papen came into the possession of the British intelligence, and the attached letters, dealing with American affairs, were obtained from the British war office and are presented to the committee by the Military Intelligence Division United States Army.

(The letters referred to are here printed in full in the record, as follows:)

112 WEST FIFTY-NINTH STREET, NEW YORK.

23rd March, 1916.

MY DEAR CAPTAIN: I have long wished to write to you to thank you for a friendly card, which you sent me, together with Fraulein Mad——— L——— from Rotterdam.

She is a very charming lady with whom I would gladly become better acquainted here, but in these days I have neither inclination nor time to "dedicate" myself, and value indisposition in order to limit this intercourse. Meanwhile I heard through I [evidently Von Igel] that you have gone to the infantry and command a battalion,

May the good God protect you!

Thank God, everything seems to go in accordance with our wishes, thanks to our wonderfully brave people. The sentiment against us here remains unchanged; quite recently we had the pleasure and satisfaction (of seeing) that our big bazaar was a blazing success and in 12 days, produced from $700,000 to $750,000 for us and our allies.

The Mexican situation is getting more involved. It looks today as if Carranza's troops were going to desert to Villa, and that the country is drifting into a war with the United States. All comments are superfluous. It was thoroughly calamitous that all your papers were taken off you in England, and through your cheque book notices we quite innocently got into a most unpleasant situation, which we fortunately could clear up promptly and easily.

But the English and American newspapers, which brought full details, went all over the globe, and many cabals and explanations were necessary in our large and far-stretching English relations in order to calm our business friends.

We have not as yet quite overcome the consequences, yet I hope that no serious consequences will make themselves manifest.

This was a (?) for our competitors, but in the end it did not avail them much, for our English bank friends behaved themselves capitally and helped and protected us in every way.

And now, good-bye, my dear friend; how pleasant it would be if I could shake you by the hand in the year of 1916!

With best wishes from

ADOLF PAVENSTEDT.

Letter dated 30.5.17 from Ewald Hecker, implicated in the American outrages, to von Papen.

BERLIN, 30, 5, 17.

DEAR PAPEN: A few days ago I landed here again safely, travelling under a sauf conduit of the enemy Government, and do myself the honour of sending you personally my greetings and just as hearty ones from Ad. Pavenstedt and Carl Heynon.

At the same time, I wanted to ask you if you could not do with an Intelligence Officer or something similar in your division, for I fear that as a retired Cavalry Captain I shall be mercilessly posted to a column or some such thing.

That would be a pity after 14 years on active list with the 13th Dragoons and two years at the Staff College; perhaps you can give me a bit of good advice. You will be interested to know that shortly before my departure at the beginning of May, Franz Rintelen arrived in New York in strict custody and in chains, and together with his "Labour's Peace" Society, Buchanan, etc., was tried.

I smuggled a letter through Halifax for him to his wife, Carl Heynen visited him personally and saw him. After outbreak of war, people over there, generally speaking, were quite decent to us.

As a matter of fact, only the ship's crews and people connected with the legal proceedings were interned. Bunz was left quite uninterfered with.

To the universal delight only a couple of secret and important (?) were arrested, viz: Bertling, Fontheim, etc. Later on they were interned on Ellis Island because of their dodges.

[Translation.]

Document: Letter to Capt. V. Papen.

Date: 11, 1, 17.

Captured:

BERLIN W 66, 11, 1, 17.

MINISTRY OF WAR.

DEAR PAPEN: With reference to your letter of 22, 10, 16, you will be interested to hear that I have today received the news that in conformity with your proposal, your "friend" Schimmel, alias Weissner, has been admitted into Germany. He has been in the meantime taken into military service at Bielitz-Biels (Galicia). It appears from the newspapers that he came to

1928 BREWING AND LIQUOR INTERESTS AND GERMAN PROPAGANDA.

Amsterdam on a Dutch vessel as a paid seaman, having passed through Lima and Buenos Aires.

With best respects,

(sgd.) EUG. SCHURBEIN (?).

It is possible that I may go to the front for a period of from 6 to 8 weeks on duty. Will you assist me to obtain a position in one of the Brigades of your Division, doing duty for some absent officer. The period in question will probably be in April or May, as I shall have to live in Holland in January in connection with the conclusion of an agreement.

(initialed) _____

[Translation.]

Document: Copy of Captured Letter

Date: Nov. 1916, New York.

Captured:

NEW YORK, Nov. 16th.

Your name has already been mentioned several times because your friend Igel, after a number of official papers had been taken from him by force, has been working in my offices, which also afford asylum to the remainder of the staff of the office of our former Naval Attache, the Consulate General having dismissed these gentlemen to avoid the risk of being compromised. You would be astonished at all that is crowded into my small office. Igel assists me in my commercial affairs; he is a thoroughly sympathetic, quiet and capable assistant. How slight is the attention we pay to the alleged fact of his having been compromised—which to one acquainted with the local conditions does not appear bad and has in the meantime been almost forgotten—is shown by the fact that I have not hesitated to take a step further and grant power of attorney to him and my other two assistants. I have been compelled to do so, as I had occasion to learn several times how unjustly he was being judged in Germany. My official relations with No. 11 Broadway are, as before, quite correct.

My work has not decreased, but has, if anything, increased. It includes a number of financial operations and the preparation of plans for loans; though nothing, on account of the ever recurring unrest due to the submarine warfare has ever come of them. It includes a number of important economic questions such as the combatting of the measures adopted by the English against our trade (Black List), the study of the control of such raw materials as copper, wool, rubber, etc., by the English, and finally, the drafting of proposals with regard to dealing with imports and raising the rate of exchange after the war. I have been quite taken away from propaganda work, but have nevertheless been able to render energetic assistance to Fuehr's Bureau by obtaining for that institution material relating to economic matters. This is all the more important as a statement dealing with the economic and financial conditions of Germany has become ever more important. In this connection, there has been found a brilliant voluntary helper in the person of Professor Bonn. I regret to be obliged to say that the organization of the German representation in the United States is far from being equal to deal with the questions to which I have referred—these questions which are so important, and which are continually arising afresh. We suffer from thoughtlessness, which offers a sharp contrast to our supposed efficiency. They appear in Berlin not to understand—or not to wish to understand—that the regulations of the representation of German interests based on the conditions obtaining in peace time, and the formal separation of ambassadorial from consular business, have proved quite inadequate for the present times. The English recognized the need of the centralized organization to deal with the question of wartime economics very shortly after the outbreak of war. In view of the new conditions and altered circumstances, they assigned to their ambassador a special advisor, Sir Richard Crawford, and placed under him a Staff of experienced officials. Sir Richard Crawford deals with all questions of wartime economics; he attends to the carrying out of all measures adopted by England in order to control neutral trade and suppress German influence and German trade relations. The watching of American ports, which, as is well known is so close that no ship or cargo can leave any of them without thorough inspection and the permission of the English, is attended to by him. He controls the English financial operations; he sees to the effectiveness of the Black List and of the steps taken against Germany. He accomplishes all this from a central office, namely, the English Embassy, and all the Consular services are subordinate to him and under obligations to render him assistance.

Unfortunately, there is no similar organization on the German side. On the contrary, the German organization has retained the separation of ambassadorial from consular business, although the advisability of this arrangement sometimes laid itself open to criticism even before the war. The consequences of this two-fold limitation of competency has been that the Embassy and the Consulate General have worked from different starting points in political and economic matters. This has led to complete checking of the work of the Consulate General, and has rendered impossible energetic and systematic action on a large scale. Success has not even been attained in matters in which expert participation was desirable, in consequence of want of clear co-operation and close touch due to the system of organization.

In my opinion serious disadvantages have been caused through lack of proper organisation. Our policy of hindering the export of materials required by America, such as potash and dye-stuffs, would have been conducted into a proper channel by an intelligent organisation. The measures adopted by the English could in my opinion, have been successfully combatted in part (Neutral tonnage—counter operations on the Products Exchanges—Ensuring of the supply of raw materials through contracts). A fresh organisation of the German loan in the United States, by means of which this could be considerably increased, has so far failed to be realised owing to the Division of German representation and the absence of centralisation. In this matter, as well as in a number of others, more useful work may still be done. But I have given up hoping that the A. A. (Auswärtiges Amt—Foreign Office) will decide to abandon the old method. They cannot, though it is depressing to have to say so, get over their ill-will against me, whom they regard as an intruder from the home service. These facts render impossible a clear statement of Germany's economic and financial position and an influencing of American Government officials by means of personal conversations and expert argumentations with regard to economic questions. It stands to reason, however, that I am exerting myself to the best of my ability, notwithstanding the defects of our organisation. Things would, however, be done in a simpler and more efficient manner, if it were left exclusively to the Embassy to deal with questions of wartime economics and the consular service were subordinated to the Embassy in strict centralisation.

But I shall not worry you with such matters as these. I have only brought to your notice what I have brought because I am aware that you have much knowledge of and interest in questions of organisation.

The point of greatest interest is, of course, the result of the Presidential Elections. Although on the evening of the 7th November it was considered that the victory of the Republican Party was certain, and the assumed success of that party was, in fact, celebrated, a final counting of the votes showed that Wilson was again elected. What effect this will have on future developments cannot be perceived at present. It is certain that Wilson will have a position of much greater independence and will feel himself possessed of greater power, as he will be freed from the consideration of another appeal to the country. It must be doubted, however, in view of past events, that he is the man to cope with the serious situation. It is to be feared that he will not free himself from impulses and half measures, and that on this account his lack of sympathy with Germany and his inclinations towards the Allies will prevent his adoption of a truly neutral attitude. It is also to be feared that matters have developed not only in Anglo-American, but also in German-American circles, too greatly, and during a too long interval of time, in a direction unfavourable for us. It is consequently to be feared that an alteration in the state of affairs is no longer possible. Some even fear that Wilson, who is regarded as revengeful, will pay back Germany by renewed strict measures for the intervention of many German-American circles on behalf of Hughes and for the alleged influencing by Germany of the German-Americans—although, as a matter of fact, this was not done.

A revival of the former measures is, therefore, expected, as well as strict investigation with regard to the conveyance of contraband goods, and a sterner attitude in the submarine question. For my own part, I consider these fears as exaggerated, although it can not be denied that there is a certain justification for them. I do not give up hope that Wilson, whose greatest ambition it is to have brought about peace, will decide to continue his efforts. This would, in my opinion, outweigh everything else. From this point I can not perceive how Europe can obtain peace without the intervention of the most important neutral power. Moreover, Wilson has committed himself to a certain extent to this policy. I sincerely hope that on the German side, submarine warfare will be restrained within the limits conceded to it. Not only would a passing of these limits destroy confidence in our reliability and the value of our assurances for an indefinite period, but I also think it would seriously prejudice German-American interests. A loss of life, not to be justified according to the standards obtaining here, would, in my judgment, lead to a breach of diplomatic relations and a further loss of life would bring the United States into the war on the side of the Allies. I have written to MEYER-Gerhard, giving my views in full with regard to the effects of an open and formal participation by America in the war on the side of the Allies. If you have the time to spare, have this memorandum sent you; but I can well believe that you are too greatly occupied with your own duties to occupy yourself with such matters as these.

(Sgd) ALBERT.

[Translation.]

CENTRAL PURCHASE COMPANY LIMITED MANAGEMENT.

Berlin W. 8. 3 October 1917. Behrenstrasse 21.

Office Number Ae. 382117.

Subject: United States of America.

During his stay in the United States, Herr Geheime Oberregierungsrat Albert Vortragender Rat of the Imperial Ministry of the Interior, conducted a number of money transactions for various German firms, through his current account with our company. It appears from his statement of account of 1st-31st, 1916, that the following payments were effected on behalf of the Ministry of War:

To Captain von Papen	amer	$121,117.94
" " " "	"	159,049.48
For the Ministry of War	"	37,907.96
		<hr/> $318,075.40

These payments we have been informed, were effected on the demand of the demand of the then representative of the Ministry of War in the United States.

Against these payments the following sums received should be set:

Sep. 1916. Payment to us by the Foreign Office	$140,000.00
Mar. 1916. Payment by the Artillery Depot for one cannon	7,834.00
Incidental expenses	12.32
	<hr/> 147,846.32

There appears from this to be a debt due to us from the Ministry of War of some $170,000; for which however an interest account has not yet been provided.

The purposes for which the payments were demanded and the dates on which they were effected are not known to us; Privy Councillor Albert has already undertaken, however, to give explanations to the Ministry of War in so far as such are possible in default of documentary evidence.

We venture most respectfully to request the Royal Prussian Ministry of War to enlighten us on the situation and likewise to furnish acknowledgement of the debt. We are of opinion that the settlement will have to be delayed until the end of the war with the further interest accounts, that payment should be made of the approximate equivalent in marks.

THE CENTRAL PURCHASING COMPANY LIMITED
(2 Signatures.)

To the Royal Prussian Ministry of War Berlin W. 66.

MINISTRY OF WAR, CENTRAL DEPARTMENT, Berlin W. 66, Oct. 24, 1917.
No. 370/10 17 Z 1 Leipzig Strasse 5.

Copy forwarded with request for your remarks.

Any documents or other vouchers for the payments made should be forwarded.

A similar request has been addressed to Geheime Oberregierungsrat Albert of the Imperial Ministry of the Interior.

(sgd) J. A. WITTENSTEIN

TO: MAJOR VON PAPEN,
Royal General Staff, H. Q.

(Army Group F.)

[Copy.]

BERLIN, 20, 1, 17.

DEAR PAPEN: You will already have read in the papers the essay "General Ravenshaw's blue letter" and rejoiced at our revenge on English want of tact.

As your faithful companion in misfortune and fellow-fighter, it was a particular pleasure to me to have brought about this matter myself. My tactics, which I labour unceasingly to impart, not only to the Press but also the Wilhelmstrasse, are an eye for an eye, a tooth for a tooth, when it is not possible, which is better still, to set our raiding. I am convinced that the English will be more cautious as to the publication of stolen letters, after this occurrence. With repeated best wishes,

Always yours,

(sgd) Boy-Ed.

[Translation.]

Document: To: Capt. v. Papen, 4th Garde-Infanterie-Division, Garde-Reserve-Korps.

From: Boy-Ed.

Date: Berlin, 3rd March, 1917.

Captured in the Field.

DEAR PAPEN: The enclosed letter from His Excellency von Igel, Schwerin, is for your private information. When you have read it, it would perhaps be as well to immediately destroy it in the interests of safety. It is characteristic how the tendency of Hossenfelder can at once be read in the clearest way from Frau von Igel's letter.

Perhaps the simplest solution of the whole thing would be, if we six, each in his turn, took in hand in some quiet corner of the Grunewalds, the friends of Mr. H., who are gathered in the Homeland.

Considering the by no means inconsiderable target, which this pothouse broadened figure offers, it should not be difficult for me, with the aid of the shooting-art, which was not gained in the Somme battles, to hit the least noble part of my adversary.

With best wishes,

Yours always,

Boy-Ed.

[Translation.]

1. Besides these three chief advisers of the Ambassador the attaches Naval Captain Boy-Ed and Captain von Papen also had influence on the political attitude of the Ambassador. Boy-Ed may be a capable Naval Officer and is at all events an unobjectionable character. In any case he is a born pessimist, who always lets his head hang down. He was always seeing spectres, and directly an unfavourable report came in he would run round with a face full of care, and had sleepless nights. He considered the odds against us as too great, and suffered much under the dreadful attitude of this country. It came to that, that he got engaged to a lady of a conservative American family. Conservative means pro-Allies, and so the pessimistic horn got blown from this side too. He also did silly things that are incomprehensible. He let himself into it from a worthless fellow Stahl, in that he presented evidence to the German Government, in which the man swore that the Lusitania was armed. The evidence was used in the German-American exchange of notes, and as England energetically contested the arming, and they went for Stahl here, he fell right in it and it turned out that it all hung upon the pure imagination of the seemingly hysterical Stahl. Then Herr Boy-Ed made a fresh mistake when he addressed a communication to the American people before his departure, in which he affirmed that he was being sent home guiltless, that was already in itself improper and must have offended the Government in Washington. Then, however, he enters on a boundless lack of circumspection, attacking in this communication the American Press in general, and the celebrated Providence Journal in particular, and expressing his opinion that the existing press conditions need to be improved, and that a law is necessary to prohibit the Press from calumniating people without foundation and dragging them in the mud.

I have never understood how a German officer could so lower himself as to honour this dirty company with a word.

As could have been seen the paper on the following day fell all over him and sent him a series of vulgarities on board by wireless. Others called him a liar, and such are the parting words which have hung on in the public mind, and not the words of his communication. Herr von Papen's career closes with quite a disaster. He was charged with being concerned in the many explosions in the munition factories, in so far as that he had given the money for the procuring of materials and instructed the people. It appears, too, that some really childish arrangements were made, which everyone capable of forming an opinion could have seen beforehand could not have the slightest use for us, whereas if the affair went askew, a great injury to us must result.

For example, the destruction of the Welland Canal, as well as the attempt to destroy a railway bridge in Canada. Even if both these had succeeded, there were a lot of other ways for transporting the corn to the seaports, and the bridge too could only have upset the traffic for a few hours. Both attempts ended in absolute fiasco, the people who were involved in the affair will meet with a heavy sentence, and one, by the name of Horn, had become a cripple, and will have to spend year locked up in prison. All that could have been forgiven, since failures in such things can not always be avoided, also much has been performed by Herr von Papen advantageous to us, if still the prime stupidity had not followed when Herr von Papen had to leave the country. One could have assumed that he would have previously destroyed the critical documents left here, or at any rate have safely disposed of them somewhere or other, so that they could not fall into the possession of outsiders. But Herr von P. left his bureau, with all these unfortunate documents, to his young and harmless secretary, Herr von Igel. He himself had obtained a pass through the English lines, in which it was expressly noted that only his person would be let through, and that he must not take with him either letters or anything else. Moreover, he had instructions from Count von B. to take nothing with him, and all his friends had warned him urgently "for God's sake, don't take any compromising papers with you." Yet as the English afterwards told him, this man-of-misfortunes had a whole archive with him. Above everything else, the rest of the cheque books, in which he had quite naively noted in plain language all receivers who had received money from him. He had besides a whole series of compromising private letters with him.

The excitement here was immense as these facts became known. About 50 respected firms and private individuals were implicated. The firms came straightway on to the Black List, and arrest and severe punishment threatened a number of men.

It came out that persons, who were already suspected here, had obtained money from Herr von P. and now they were at once arrested. Worse still was it, that these letters in connection with the Dumba and Albert letters between them opened the eyes of the Americans to what was going on, and called forth a storm of indignation. It was fully justified, since Herr von P. had also on his departure left behind an open communication in which he protested his innocence. Had these two publications not occurred, the Government would probably have shut both eyes, and let the whole matter slide, especially since the most of these crimes happened at the beginning of the war, and remained without results. After both men, however, had publicly declared that they were innocent and were unjustly banished, one could not expect anything else than that the Government should now show evidence that it had acted with perfect justness. A giant enquiry was instituted throughout the whole country * * *. The general conviction here was that the men would be brought before a Court Martial over there for gross neglect of duty.

All that we have heard is the bestowal of Orders to Herr Boy-Ed and Herr Papen, as well as the promotion of Herr von Igel to Vice-Sergt-Major. You can judge too how extraordinarily fit it is to publish these distinctions throughout the whole world * * *. Thereby all these things appear not to have detracted from the self-conceit of these men in the very slightest, on the contrary they hold themselves, as before, for geniuses. I learn through a good source which stands in direct connection with Washington how this self-sufficient manner damages. The officials here complain bitterly about the haughty demeanour of our people, who think by means of a stiff bearing to compensate for their lack of knowledge of the conditions of the place. Count von B. and Prince Councillor A. are looked upon in Washington in the light of emetics. The "Ton" of the Allied diplomats is constantly held up to my guarantor, who is good-hearted and affable, makes the gentleman always welcome.

After the publication of the Papen letter, in which Herr von P. spoke of the idiotic Yankees, the general feeling here was so uncomfortable that Herr von P. thought it well to disappear for some weeks. He went with Prince Hatzfeld to the West, and I met the gentleman at Mammoth Springs in the Yellowstone Park. I at once understood the object of their journey and avoided addressing them by name or title, in the supposition that they were travelling under assumed names. That, however, was a mistake, they had registered themselves with full title, their arrival was announced in all the papers, and on their further journey an army of reporters and photographers followed them. They were pestered at every step they took with the request to give an explanation about the "Idiotic Yankees." Their reply "we have nothing to say" was published with the photographs in all the papers. I met the Gentlemen later in Denver, where the business was at its maddest. The reporters from San Francisco instructed to do so, had sworn to compel Papen to an utterance, and followed the two gentlemen everywhere. Both held newspapers in front of their faces in order not to be snap-shotted, and a whole series of laughable photographs resulted, which circulated throughout the States. On the papers held up in front of them appeared printed in German "Wir haben nichts zu sagen" (We have nothing to say). A mad comedy at our expense! It is unpleasant to the writer to have to say all this. With the exception of Bernstorff and Dernburg, I know all the gentlemen personally, have lived in the German Club with most of them, and have always been nicely received by them. Herr Albert particularly helped me, and has been of the greatest service to me. For this the writer is grateful to the gentlemen, and it has cost him a great effort to write this account. However, patriotic duty stands finally above personal feelings, and I am ready to bear the consequences. The times are too grave to neglect duties towards the Fatherland for the sake of friendliness received. It was necessary to give you a picture of the acting personages, in order to put you in a position yourself to judge if these men possessed the ability rightly to discern the situation in the country. There are many people here capable of forming an opinion, who will answer this question with a frank "No." and who extremely regret that Germany was not better represented in the particularly important posts here.

One views the departure here of Herr Boy-Ed and von Papen with a dry and a wet eye. The dry one expressed joy, that they could now do no more mischief, the wet one expressed the grief we felt that now the two pessimists could, by word of mouth through representatives of the yielding policy, do perhaps still worse damage over there. The giving up of the U-boat campaign appears fully to confirm our fears. . . . The account is written in the interest of this group, and not in that of the German people, and must therefore be valued correspondingly.

COPY OF LETTER. ECONOMICS; U. BOAT WAR; RUMANIA.

BERLIN, 18th October, 1916.

MY DEAR PAPEN: It has weighed on my conscience for weeks to write to you. Twice already I have started a letter, but I was disturbed each time, so that the beginnings got too old, and I had to tear them up. I hope I shall be successful today.

First a business matter. As you will see from the attached, Carl Schimmel, alias Dr. Schimmel, has arrived in Rotterdam, and wants a pass to Germany. As far as I recollect he is a "Swine" but perhaps he would do less harm here in Germany than if we were to refuse him the pass. We could place him under police supervision here and not let him out. Please let me have in brief your opinion about it and send me back the attached papers.

As I heard from Lieut-Colonel Giessler, your Count Schweinitz was here yesterday. I also saw him come out of the Lieut-Colonel's house decked with many Orders. As Lieut-Col. Giessler informed me, he is again nominated A. P. K. Director, and it would please me if a capable man reached there.

On my last journey to the 6th Army Chief Command, I found myself in company with the American correspondent—I think his name is Mr. Hale, who wanted to look you up whatever happened, and I gave him your address. He apparently knew you over there.

I cannot conceive that, as you write, the Censorship here has struck out the remark "That you carried out your duties as a soldier bravely and honorably," on the contrary, I know that it was replied to the Naval Attache Moller in Buenos Aires on his report (this matter came to our knowledge) that you had been at the Front since as Battalion Commander in the . . . Regiment and at present as General Staff Officer in the . . . Division. A. O. K. Staff has enquired of Ludendorff.

I have recently busied myself with the economic question. One certainly cannot make any alteration in our internal conditions. Therefore it only comes to this, that we must obtain goods from abroad as much and as long as possible. On this account I again regret that we did not take Rumania at the time, and so ensure the great Depot for ourselves. Now I am afraid a great part of the supplies will be destroyed. The position is unquestionably very serious for us, and the people will now, for the first time, perceive that we are really fighting for our existence. I have complete trust in our nation, taken as a whole, that they will endure hunger itself, even if elements are not lacking which will have a disturbing influence.

Love and patriotism just now work through the stomach. One sees this most plainly if one reads through the reports of the General Command for July. Until the middle of July a bad tone was reported everywhere, on account of the potato scarcity. Scarcely had the potato crop arrived when the weather improved and a good foodstuff harvest could be expected, and the tone generally improved.

I have stated my opinion as the result of an eventual U Boat war in the neutral Scandinavian countries and Holland, in the attached copy, which please return to me. This statement has gone officially to Ludendorff, and from him to the Admiralty Staff. I know that you do not entirely agree with this opinion. I also refrain from every opinion as to whether it is possible on the whole to employ this weapon more sharply—I have not the necessary data for this, only the Admiralty Staff and the Supreme Army Command can decide this. It is certainly the last means, but are we not already thus far?

If we take Rumania—and most cheering information is to hand from there—then I also think that Austria will pull through as such outside successes are of such account there. The chief thing is that you pull through there too, and make a break through impossible. From my last impressions, which I receive there with the 4th and 6th Chief Army Commands, I was quite sure of that.

My brother-in-law, Captain von Neergard, has been ordered to the Embassy at Copenhagen as Military and Naval Attache, where he had already previously worked for 2½ years. Through his connection with the Neergards and Rantzau there, he can be very useful to us.

We will provide sufficient ammunition, the new programme is simply enormous. Next week I am going to Holland, where I shall negotiate for a fixed consignment which will guarantee us a definite minimum quantity of foodstuffs and forage, in return for which we shall promise Holland a definite quantity of coal and iron. At the request of von Kuhlmann these negotiations are to be carried out, not by the commercial attache, but by me. His Excellency von Rosen was with me for a couple of hours today, and I spoke to him about it fully. There are further sessions today.

Now above all, my dear Papen, I wish that you may return home safe and sound.

With heartiest greetings,
Yours ever faithful,

(sgd) (?) DERNBURG.

M. S. note: Please destroy after reading.

P S. (?) Buhsche has let himself be duped by König.

(Thereupon the subcommittee adjourned until Thursday, December 19, 1918, at 10.30 o'clock a. m.)

BREWING AND LIQUOR INTERESTS AND GERMAN PROPAGANDA.

THURSDAY, DECEMBER 19, 1918.

UNITED STATES SENATE,
SUBCOMMITTEE OF THE COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY,
Washington, D. C.

The subcommittee met at 10.30 o'clock a. m., in room 226, Senate Office Building, Senator Lee S. Overman presiding.

Present: Senators Overman (chairman), King, Wolcott, Nelson, and Sterling.

Senator OVERMAN. The committee will come to order.

I have received a letter from Mr. Samuel Untermyer, which he has asked me to have printed in this record with his testimony. I shall be glad to have you read it.

Maj. HUMES (reading):

[Guggenheimer, Untermyer & Marshall, 120 Broadway, New York. Cable address "Melpomene," New York.]

DEC. 18, 1918.

Hon. LEE S. OVERMAN, Chairman,

Sub-Committee of Senate Judiciary Committee,

Senate Office Bldg., Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: I had hoped that it would not be necessary to further intrude upon your Committee, whose patience and courtesy and that of Major Humes I greatly appreciate, notwithstanding such absurd statements in the newspapers as "Mr. Untermyer was 'severely' cross-examined" and "Throughout the day there were frequent clashes between the examiner and the witness," of all of which I was blissfully unaware. I felt that there was nothing beyond an honest attempt to get at facts which did not and still do not seem to me to be of the slightest legitimate importance or public interest.

I am sure your Committee realizes that the purpose of inquiring into the legitimate private business transactions of our citizens with the then accredited representatives of a friendly foreign power in 1914, 1915 and 1916 is very much of an enigma and is becoming more so as the investigation proceeds. The inquiries made of me were so foreign and far afield of any question of "propaganda," proper or improper, and as to transactions so free from any suggestion of impropriety or just criticism at that time that nothing beyond the mere fact that a Committee of the U. S. Senate thought it consistent with the dignity of that august body to spend its time in such an inquiry has thus far secured no public attention beyond the mere "flash-in-the-pan" that any sensation is likely to arouse with the unthinking who are unable to distinguish between hindsight and foresight.

I appreciate also that the Committee cannot be regarded as responsible for the misleading press reports of its proceedings. We must, however, allow for the fact that this inquiry, in its enlargement beyond the original proper and legitimate purpose, is being conducted mainly for the supposed information of the public and that when this information as to what is transpiring before you is summarized in a misleading fashion so as to work up a sensation, irreparable injury is done.

1936 BREWING AND LIQUOR INTERESTS AND GERMAN PROPAGANDA.

I find, for instance, in this morning's New York newspapers and in the résumés made by the correspondents of their understanding of my testimony, many distorted and misleading statements, against which I protest and which I ask to have corrected by the reading at your next meeting and the placing in your records of this letter and securing for it such publicity as your sense of justice and the integrity of your records require.

1. In the first column of the first page of one of our leading journals is this statement:

"He (referring to me) told of having himself been an investor in German Government bonds."

This you, of course, know to be untrue. Whilst thousands of our citizens were buying German bonds as well as British, French and other bonds when this country was neutral, the testimony showed that the trifling amount of $1,900 of bonds, of which I spoke, were not bought for my account and that I at no time had a dollar of interest in them but, on the contrary, had advised against their purchase and that they are held by a gentleman whose name I had volunteered to and will disclose confidentially to you. In the hurry of departure I forgot to do so but will see you on my next visit to Washington on that point.

If I had thought well of the investment or had wanted to support the loan I would hardly have bought $1900 of a $10,000,000 bond issue that had been issued two years previously and was then selling at 40% discount. If our country had unfortunately gotten into war with Great Britain over any one or more of the many difficult problems that were outstanding between them, I am wondering how those bondholders would have felt about now being pilloried on that account.

The same article in the same prominent place says: That I refused to answer the question as to whether I had approached the Alien Property Custodian to buy The Evening Mail "if Mr. Palmer would agree to suppress the whole tale of pro-German propaganda." "Mr. Untermeyer refused to answer the question and read into the record a letter which mentioned an offer of $200,000 with the suggestion that publicity as to future enemy ownership might vitiate the value of the property to Mr. Untermeyer's clients—the innocent 'bystander' bondholders," which is not true. I refused to answer no question however immaterial or improper. This question and others on the same subject I answered fully and categorically by voluntarily producing and reading in evidence my letter of July 9, 1918 to the Alien Property Custodian containing the following and a number of similar statements:

"If it shall hereafter transpire that in the purchase or control of the paper or in its operation any offense has been committed against the criminal law it goes without saying that neither you nor I nor any other decent citizen, concerned above all things for the safety and future of his country, will be willing to be parties to the compounding of a crime against our government."

2. In another newspaper it is stated that I "did remember that he (I) advised legally with Dr. Buenz when the latter was indicted for having helped coal German warships in the New York Harbor with fuel."

In point of fact I volunteered the entire information on this subject and testified, as you may recall, that Dr. Buenz was present with his own counsel at this interview, that I declined to act and that the advice I gave was not given as a lawyer and was not followed.

There are a number of other misquotations of the testimony of like character giving to the transactions an atmosphere that is not in accord with the facts.

I shall hope that in the usual course and following the ordinary method of such investigations I shall receive a copy of the minutes of my testimony and shall be afforded the opportunity of making such corrections as I deem necessary before the testimony is printed into the record.

Meantime, there is one correction that I desire now to have made. It relates to Dr. Albert's published explanation following the stealing of his portfolio in August, 1915 and the subsequent publication of its contents.

When the 3-column article was shown me at the hearing I was unable, as you may recall, to read it and stated that I did not recall any of the circumstances. I have since refreshed my memory with the aid of the mention of Mr. Cobb's name and now recollect something of the facts.

I remember that Dr. Albert told me that his portfolio had been stolen and that it had been accomplished through the agency of the British Secret Service operating here, as he then claimed, and that the delicate diplomatic negotiations that were then under way between the two countries following the sinking of the "Lusitania" and the negotiations between our country and Great Britain, and between his country and Great Britain, over the question of the freedom of the seas and the legality of the British blockade (concerning which the President was then negotiating with Great Britain) might be seriously affected by the operations of that Service against Germany's diplomatic agents here and by inflaming and prejudicing the public mind at that particular time. He thought it was part of the British propaganda to foment trouble and thus to prejudice the negotiations with Germany and asked me whether I would represent the whole situation to the New York World in the interest of peace between the two countries.

BREWING AND LIQUOR INTERESTS AND GERMAN PROPAGANDA. 1937

I saw Mr. Cobb to whom I conveyed Dr. Albert's point of view.

Following the publication of the papers I now remember examining for Dr. Albert a statement of facts that he had prepared or had had prepared and now believe, after reading the statement, that I assisted in putting it into shape, though I still have no distinct recollection of exactly what I did in that connection and do not recall having seen Dr. Fuehr then or at any other time or of ever having met him.

I did in that connection what I regard as a public and patriotic duty in the interest of preventing further friction between the two countries whose relations were then greatly strained as a result of the sinking of the Lusitania. The President was still trying to keep the peace by securing a cessation of this piratical submarine warfare and a pledge not to resume it.

I knew, of course, nothing about the facts contained in the statement but from what was apparent with respect to the diplomatic situation and in the light of what I then knew, I would be glad and proud to repeat the effort to suppress that publication at that particular time if the opportunity came my way.

Very respectfully yours

SAML UNTERMYER.

SU-F

P. S.—Referring to "Propaganda," the accompanying clipping is from this evening's N. Y. Sun. I do not for a moment believe that Major Humes would be responsible for circulating reports of this kind but am not so sure about some of those around him. It is only another evidence of the sort of thing to which men have to submit whose names are brought into your inquiry. Of what use, may I ask, is it for the Committee to try to conduct its proceedings according to orderly rules if the improper matter is permitted to "leak out" in this irresponsible fashion? I trust the Committee will be able to locate the culprit as I am sure it will endeavor to do in the protection of the dignity of its proceedings.

1 Enclosure

Senator OVERMAN. I have also received a telegram from Mr. Untermyer, which will be put in the record [reading]:

30w HX 207

CB

NEW YORK NY Dec 19th

Hon LEE S OVERMAN

Chairman Sub Committee of Senate Judiciary Committee,
Washington DC.

In connection with my yesterdays letter to you permit me to call your attention to a letter introduced into your records yesterday published in this mornings papers from Dr Albert to Vonpapien dated November 16, 1916 in which Albert fully outlined his position on submarine warfare predicting that if continued it would cause war and urging that it be restricted within the limits demanded by this country stop /. as intimated by me at the hearing I know his views on this subject which were also the views of the more influential members of the embassy all of whom were doing their utmost to prevent the resumption of unrestricted submarine warfare stop/. It was because of my knowledge of this attitude that I was most solicitous that Alberts usefulness should not be impaired at that particular time and that he would not get into trouble with his own government over the loss of his portfolio which would have destroyed his influence in the then pending delicate diplomatic negotiations upon which at that time hung the issue of peace or war for this country stop. I was accordingly glad of the opportunity to see Mr Cobb stop. Please consider this a supplement to my letter.

SAMUEL UNTERMYER

Mr. Untermeyer requests that I give the same publicity to his letter that was given to his testimony by the newspapers. It is up to the newspapers, now, to say what they will do. I can not control them. I have no control over them, and no complaint of the newspaper men. I can simply give the same publicity to his letter that we have given to his testimony. The committee is not responsible for headlines or newspaper reports. The newspaper men can take care of themselves.

Maj. HUMES. I have only glanced over the clipping inclosed in Mr. Untermeyer's letter, and I do not see anything in the clipping that could not or might not have been inferred from the discussion of the telephone conversation. I have not read it carefully. Does the committee want it to go into the record, as well as the letter?

Senator OVERMAN. It just refers to this examination?

Maj. HUMES. I have not read it in toto.

Senator OVERMAN. I ruled that this telephone conversation should not go into the record unless there was some proof of its authenticity, and the conversation will not go in unless proof is made, except what Mr. Untermeyer admitted.

You can read the newspaper clipping, and if you have anything to say in regard to corrections that you think should be made, they can be put into the record.

Senator WOLCOTT. Manifestly, Mr. Chairman, the thought that was in Mr. Untermeyer's mind in reference to this matter at the hearing the other day, when he was on the stand, was this: The substance of the alleged telephone conversation was not permitted to go in, because it was not proposed to follow Mr. Untermeyer's repudiation of this conversation, if he did repudiate the conversation, with a witness to contradict it.

Senator NELSON. He did not entirely repudiate all of it.

Senator WOLCOTT. Or he did not remember, or something to that effect.

Senator NELSON. Yes.

Senator WOLCOTT. So that those telephone conversations were left out. There was no evidence at all as to how the evidence of the telephone conversation was received.

Now, then, that is the state of the record. The newspaper article which Mr. Untermeyer inclosed undertakes to say how these telephone conversations were received; and if they were obtained in the way set out in the newspaper article, of course a great many people would think they must be correct telephone conversations; and the article also says they are of a sensational nature; but those conversations are not in evidence. Mr. Untermeyer evidently objects to the manner in which the press reporter has written up that particular fact, because he thinks it misleads the public to believe that there has been something offered in the way of a telephone conversation which is not in evidence, and that the public can not see. That is evidently the burden of his complaint.

Senator OVERMAN. The newspaper man probably should have stated that it was ruled out.

Maj. HUMES. You will remember, Mr. Chairman, that when Mr. Untermeyer made a suggestion with reference to the possibility of his wires being tapped, I made the positive assertion that his wires had not been tapped; and I think that is the only thing that was said on the subject. I know I have not discussed it with anyone else. The speculation of a newspaper, of course, can not be guarded against.

Senator WOLCOTT. This committee can not protect against that, of course.

Senator KING. It is manifest that the newspaper reporter failed to appreciate the evidence and the source from which it is alleged the evidence was obtained, because, as Maj. Humes stated, he expressly declared, at the time, that the telephone line had not been tapped.

Maj. HUMES. That Mr. Untermeyer's telephone line had not been tapped.

Senator KING. So that it is apparent that there was no telephonic evidence that Maj. Humes intended to offer.

This report in the New York Evening Sun, however, is misleading.

Maj. HUMES. I do not want you to be laboring under a misapprehension, Senator, as I think possibly you are, from that remark. I said that Mr. Untermeyer's lines had not been tapped. That was the remark that I made. He inferred that possibly some one had been interfering with his telephone service, and I disclaimed any purpose to interfere with his telephone service.

Senator OVERMAN. I think it was perfectly right to lay a foundation by asking questions about it. It is a question of whether Mr. Untermeyer admitted or denied the conversations. I think he denied some and admitted others. I think the foundation is laid for the evidence.

Senator NELSON. My recollection is that this was shown to him and that he indirectly admitted some of it, and some of it he said was not so. That is the way I understood it.

Senator OVERMAN. Yes; a part of them he said was so, and a part of it was impossible.

Senator NELSON. Yes.

Senator OVERMAN. He said that he could not have made such a statement.

Senator NELSON. Yes; and they were not admitted.

Senator STERLING. It seemed to me that by the questions the foundation was laid for testimony relative to the things that Mr. Untermeyer could not recall or which he denied; and the question is simply as to whether evidence will be forthcoming for which a foundation was laid by those questions.

Senator KING. I suggest that we proceed, Mr. Chairman.

Senator OVERMAN. I do not think that should go into the record. Do you think so?

Senator KING. I do not care. Just whatever you say.

Senator OVERMAN. Does he request that this go into the record, Major?

Maj. HUMES. He does not make any request with reference to that particular clipping. He refers to it in a postscript to his letter, but makes no special mention as to whether it shall go into the record.

Senator OVERMAN. I am informed by a newspaper man that this clipping does say that I ruled out these telephone messages, and that they were not to go in unless they were substantiated. The newspaper man informs me that that is in there. I have not read it. I have not had time to read it. That, I take it, as stated by the newspaper man, is in the clipping.

Senator STERLING. This is the statement from the clipping [reading]:

In the course of yesterday's examination of Mr. Untermeyer, Maj. Humes referred to these telephone conversations on several occasions, but inasmuch as the talks were uncorroborated, Chairman Overman of the Senate Judiciary Committee refused to permit them as a part of the record.

Senator OVERMAN. Let them go in. We want to do all parties justice. We will let the whole record go in.

Senator KING. The point that is misleading there—and yet it is fairly deducible, probably, from the testimony—is that it assumes that there were telephonic talks, whereas he denied that any such telephonic talks occurred.

Maj. HUMES. That is one of the instances of the added mystery of excluded testimony.

(The newspaper clipping above referred to is here printed in the record in full as follows:)

[New York Evening Sun, Dec. 18, 1918.]

"LISTENED IN" ON UNTERMEYER—WIRE TAPPER RECORDED TALKS WITH ALBERT AND BOY-ED—COMMITTEE TO HEAR THEM—SENSATIONAL EVIDENCE PROMISED IN PROPAGANDA INQUIRY.

[Special dispatch to the Evening Sun.]

Washington, Dec. 18—Major E. Lowry Humes, conducting the investigation into German propaganda for the Senate Judiciary Subcommittee, was seeking to-day to find a method by which reports of alleged telephone conversations between Samuel Untermeyer and Dr. Heinrich Albert, Chief of German propagandists here during the war, and Capt. Boy-Ed, former German naval attache, can be read into the record of the hearing.

An agent of the Department of Justice, who in 1916 tapped the wires leading into the offices of the Hamburg-American line, where Albert and Boy-Ed at times had their offices, and who "listened in" on and took stenographic notes of alleged conversations between Mr. Untermeyer and the two Germans, may be called to testify before the committee and give his report of the conversations.

In the course of yesterday's examination of Mr. Untermeyer, Major Humes referred to these telephone conversations on several occasions, but inasmuch as the talks were uncorroborated Chairman Overman of the Senate Judiciary Subcommittee refused to permit them as part of the record. Major Humes then served notice that he would attempt to produce corroboration of the conversations and arrangement was made to notify Mr. Untermeyer in case witnesses to the conversations should testify.

PHONE TALKS SENSATIONAL.

Full reports on the alleged conversations have been in the records of the Department of Justice for some time and copies of these were furnished Major Humes at the outset of the hearing on German propaganda. It was because of knowledge of these data that Major Humes was so severe yesterday in his examination of Mr. Untermeyer and his insistence on the witness answering a number of embarrassing questions.

The reports of the telephone conversations are declared by those who have seen the transcripts to be sensational. It is understood that they may throw new light on the relations between Dr. Albert and Mr. Untermeyer, and that they may refresh Mr. Untermeyer's recollection as to a number of matters that he failed to remember when on the stand yesterday. The conversations with Boy-Ed, it is understood, dealt with the attempt of the Germans to keep Boy-Ed's name out of the trial of the Hamburg-American Line cases in New York. Boy-Ed is alleged to have attempted to persuade Mr. Untermeyer to use his influence with the State Department to prevent Boy-Ed's name from being dragged into the trial as a German conspirator.

The conversations with Albert, it is understood relate to a number of transactions, including Mr. Untermeyer's attempt to interest Albert in the purchase of THE SUN properties before they passed into the ownership of Frank A. Munsey. There is some question yet as to the admissibility of these conversations, but the matter probably will be thrashed out before the sub-committee, and, unless the authenticity of the conversations can be effectively impugned, they probably will go into the record in some fashion or other.

BECKER TO TESTIFY TOMORROW.

Assistant Attorney-General Becker of New York will be a witness before the sub-committee tomorrow and will tell some of the interesting facts that have come into his possession in regard to German propaganda.

TESTIMONY OF MR. ALFRED L. BECKER.

(The witness was sworn by the chairman.)

Maj. HUMES. What is your official position in the State of New York?

Mr. BECKER. I am deputy attorney general.

Maj. HUMES. State if, pursuant to your service as deputy attorney general of New York State, you had cause to make an investigation of certain phases of German activities and propaganda in this country.

Mr. BECKER. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. Have you reviewed to some extent the testimony of Mr. Bielaski?

Mr. BECKER. I have read all that was given at the first three sessions. I do not know whether he has been a witness since that time.

Maj. HUMES. No; that is all. You are familiar, as the result of conference and your observation of the activities of this committee, with the general subject matter of its inquiry?

Mr. BECKER. Yes.

Maj. HUMES. Will you in your own way simply state to the committee what you know of the German activities in the different lines in this country, and some of the results of your discoveries?

Senator OVERMAN. Do not state your opinions, but just those things which you have facts and documents to prove.

Mr. BECKER. I may state with reference to that that there is very little of which I have personal knowledge. Our investigations were made pursuant to a statute known as chapter 595 of the laws of 1917 of the State of New York.

Senator OVERMAN. Let that be incorporated in the record.

(The statute referred to was marked "Becker Exhibit No. 1," and is here printed in the record as follows:)

BECKER EXHIBIT No. 1.

[Laws of New York—By Authority. Chap. 595.]

AN ACT To amend the executive law, in relation to the general duties of the attorney-general.

[Became a law May 21, 1917, with the approval of the Governor. Passed, three-fifths being present.]

The People of the State of New York, represented in Senate and Assembly, do enact as follows:

Section 1. Section sixty-two of chapter twenty-three of the laws of nineteen hundred and nine, entitled "An act in relation to executive officers, constituting chapter eighteen of the consolidated laws," is hereby amended by adding thereto a new subdivision, numbered eight, to read as follows:

§ 62. General duties: The attorney-general shall:

8. Whenever in his judgment the public interest requires it, the attorney-general may, with the approval of the governor, and when directed by the governor, shall, inquire into matters concerning the public peace, public safety and public justice. For such purpose he may, in his discretion, and without civil service examination, appoint and employ, and at pleasure remove, subordinates, deputies, officers and other persons as he deems necessary, determine their duties and, with the approval of the governor, fix their compensation. All appointments made pursuant to this subdivision shall be immediately reported to the governor, and shall not be reported to any other state officer or department. Payments of salaries and compensation of officers and employees and of the expenses of the inquiry shall be made out of funds provided by the legislature for such purposes, which shall be deposited in a bank or trust company in the names of the governor and the attorney-general, payable only on the draft or check of the attorney-general, countersigned by the governor, and such disbursements shall be subject to no audit except by the governor and the attorney-general. The attorney-general, his deputy, or other officer designated by him, is empowered to subpoena witnesses, compel their attendance, examine them under oath before himself or a magistrate and require the production of any books or papers which he deems relevant or material to the inquiry. If a person subpoenaed to attend upon such inquiry fails to obey the command of a subpoena without reasonable cause, or if a person in attendance upon such inquiry shall, without reasonable cause, refuse to be sworn or to be examined or to answer a question or to produce a book or paper, when ordered so to do by the officer conducting such inquiry, he shall be guilty of a misdemeanor. It shall be the duty of all public officers, their deputies, assistants and subordinates, clerks and employees, and all other persons, to render and furnish to the attorney-general, his deputy or other designated officer, when requested, all information and assistance in their possession and within their power. Each deputy or other officer appointed or designated to conduct such inquiry shall make a weekly report in detail to the attorney-general, in form to be approved by the governor and the attorney-general, which report shall be in duplicate, one copy of which shall be forthwith, upon its receipt by the attorney-general, transmitted by him to the governor. Any officer participating in such inquiry and any person examined as a witness upon such inquiry who shall disclose to any person other than the governor or the attorney-general the name of any witness examined or any information obtained upon such inquiry, except as directed by the governor or the attorney-general, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor.

§ 2. This act shall take effect immediately.

STATE OF NEW YORK, }
Office of the Secretary of State. } ss:

I have compared the preceding with the original law on file in this office, and do hereby certify that the same is a correct transcript therefrom and of the whole of said original law.

FRANCIS M. HUGO
Secretary of State

Mr. BECKER. Under this statute the attorney general, with the consent or by the direction of the governor, is authorized to make inquiry with respect to matters concerning the public peace, public safety, and public justice. He has power to subpoena witnesses and to take their sworn testimony. We have carried out that act in many inquiries, and what I shall state is founded partly on documents and partly on sworn testimony.

Senator KING. That act makes the attorney general a grand jury?

Mr. BECKER. It makes him a sort of magistrate to conduct John Doe inquiries, within the limitations of the act.

Senator KING. In secret?

Mr. BECKER. In secret or in public, as may be considered proper. The act forbids the making public, without the permission of the attorney general, of any matters, but, of course, I have the permission of the attorney general, if that were necessary, to make anything public that I shall refer to.

Senator KING. Does that act extend to times of peace also?

Mr. BECKER. It is not limited in its terms to the period of the war, but it is a war measure. Whether it shall be extended or not to times of peace is something that must depend upon the administrative judgment of the officers hereafter in charge of its administration. Heretofore it has been used only as a war measure, and with reference to war investigations, with possibly one or two trifling exceptions. The first investigation that was made under this statute was the Bolo Pacha investigation. That is not strictly a matter of American propaganda, but in taking up the subjects to be discussed by me it seemed to me that a view of the propaganda question that attempted to limit the discussion to what had happened in the United States, would inevitably fail to give a grasp and broad conception of what German propaganda has been; and that this committee ought to have, it seems to me, preparatory to drafting any new legislation, that information. I want to emphasize that German propaganda has been a world-wide affair, by no means limited to the United States, and even more active in other countries than in the United States.

Senator OVERMAN. Especially what countries—Mexico?

Mr. BECKER. The whole of South America, Mexico, and we have some knowledge of propaganda in Central American countries, Cuba, Porto Rico, Spain, Scandinavian countries, Holland, Persia. I mention the countries as to which I have specific information.

Senator WOLCOTT. Why have you not embraced France?

Mr. BECKER. I was naming first the neutral countries. Then in addition to that is to be added the German propaganda in enemy countries, which included all of the countries at war with Germany.

Senator KING. Mr. Chairman, I was not present at the executive session when the scope of this investigation was determined. For my own information, let me ask, did the committee determine that the resolution involved the investigation of propaganda in neutral territory and in all of the belligerent countries, or did the committee determine that it was to be confined to propaganda in the United States?

Senator OVERMAN. Against the United States, whether in foreign countries or anywhere else—anything inimical to the Government of the United States.

Senator WOLCOTT. Did this Bolo Pasha incident, about which you are proceeding to speak, have to do with propaganda in the United States at all?

Mr. BECKER. In this way, if I might anticipate the story. The Bolo Pasha incident is very closely connected with a project—not perfectly understood with any facts now available, but unquestionably involved—of a combined news service between the Hearst papers in the United States and the Paris Journal, so that although—

Senator REED. Mr. Chairman, I thought this witness was asked not to express opinions, but to tell facts.

Senator OVERMAN. He was; but I suppose he is telling the facts.

Mr. BECKER. I am telling the facts.

Senator REED. Is this opinion?

Mr. BECKER. It is a fact that is proved by a document which I have here.

Senator REED. Then I want to suggest to the committee that they get the document and not the opinion of the witness.

Senator OVERMAN. He can state generally what the document is.

Senator REED. Let us see it.

Mr. BECKER. I have made an arrangement which I proposed to follow in the statement of the Bolo Pasha case, but the inquiry by the Senator raised the question in my mind whether the committee desires to listen to the subject at all, and in response to that question I was explaining in a preliminary way the question involved.

Senator REED. I beg pardon of the committee, but——

Senator NELSON. Mr. Chairman, I suggest that we should go on and hear Mr. Becker's statement.

Senator OVERMAN. I think so.

Mr. BECKER. The commencement of the Bolo Pasha inquiry was due to letters rogatory sent to the governor of the State of New York by the French Government asking an investigation of the case. It appeared that there was an indictment pending against Bolo Pasha in France, accusing him of entertaining relations with the enemy, and the information had reached the French Government that three banking institutions in the United States had handled certain money of Bolo Pasha, and also forwarded to Madame Bolo. Those banking institutions were the G. Amsinck Co.; the Royal Bank of Canada, New York agency; and J. P. Morgan & Co.

Senator KING. The Royal Bank of Canada was an English or a Canadian institution.

Mr. BECKER. A Canadian institution with a New York agency.

Senator KING. There is nothing to show that it was a German bank or sympathetically German?

Mr. BECKER. There is nothing to show that there was any knowledge of these affairs, except upon the part of Adolph Pavenstedt, of G. Amsinck & Co.

Senator KING. And, of course, no knowledge on the part of Morgan & Co.?

Mr. BECKER. No. The whole process was one of divorcing knowledge. Each successive transfer was for the purpose obviously of removing the indicia of German origin from the funds.

Senator KING. There is no inference to be deduced, from the fact that this was a banking transaction through these different banks, that they were connected in any way knowingly with any German propaganda?

Mr. BECKER. Except in the case of G. Amsinck & Co., none whatever.

Senator WOLCOTT. How is that spelled?

Mr. BECKER. A-m-s-i-n-c-k.

Senator KING. Where was that?

Mr. BECKER. In New York; on Hanover Street. I would like to state by way of personal explanation that I am going to mention names as I go along, not specifically with the thought that they may or may not be involved. Because I mention a name it does not mean that that person is a German propagandist. I am not going attempt to tell a story that has been expurgated by leaving out every name that is not that of a German propagandist.

Senator KING. Do you not think you ought to make it clear—

Mr. BECKER. I shall endeavor to do so.

Senator KING (continuing). So that no inferences may be drawn against innocent people? Because in this hearing up to date names have been put into the record of men who were themselves loyal—just as loyal as you, Mr. Becker, or as any member of this committee—and improper inferences have been drawn from that fact, and a great injustice perhaps has been done them. We ought to avoid doing injustice to any man.

Mr. BECKER. I shall endeavor to protect the reputation of every one whose name I mention, but nevertheless whose name must be mentioned if the complete story is to be told.

Senator WOLCOTT. You are undertaking a very serious matter there. If, perchance, in the course of your testimony, you should forget for a moment to express your opinion of a particular man whose name you mention, in view of your purpose to exculpate every one who in your judgment should be exculpated, that omission on your part might brand this particular man as one not worthy of being exculpated. I think you are laying out for yourself a very dangerous course. The much better course, I think, would be to mention the names, with the express statement that you do not mean to condemn anybody, but the facts in each case must speak for themselves.

Mr. BECKER. That is what I intended to state. I do not mean that everybody is to be a suspect whom I do not exculpate as I go along. I think the facts will show for themselves.

Senator NELSON. Proceed.

Senator OVERMAN. I think we had better let this witness proceed and make his statement and then cross-examine him. I think that would be the better way, and that it would save time.

Mr. BECKER. In a nutshell, investigation by an accountant, Perley Morse, employed by the Attorney General, disclosed the German origin of funds deposited to Bolo's account with G. Amsinck & Co.

Senator OVERMAN. Perley Morse is an accountant?

Mr. BECKER. Yes. Those funds were deposited to Bolo's credit with G. Amsinck & Co., and were from there passed on to the Royal Bank of Canada and to J. P. Morgan & Co., and ultimately to the credit of Bolo and Madame Bolo, in Paris.

Senator NELSON. See if I understand that; was that money raised in this country?

Mr. BECKER. If you will bear with me, I will now give you the facts more in detail.

Senator NELSON. I shall not interrupt you. Go on.

Mr. BECKER. I would prefer to tell the Bolo case more in chronological order—that is, the general summary of the situation. First, as to Bolo himself: Bolo was a typical adventurer. He was of eastern origin, although born in Marseilles, France. He was a man at the time of these events of about 50 years of age. Bolo, it seems by the proof upon his trial, had led the career of an adventurer, and his first appearance as a man of any prominence in France was after his marriage to a rich widow, which produced for him a very considerable income. However, at the commencement of the war, through prodigal expenditures, Bolo had exhausted this income very largely. In the early part of 1914 Bolo was appointed by the former Khedive of Egypt—Abbas Hilmi, who was the Khedive at this time—a pasha, and he was given that title and made a sort of financial agent of Abbas Hilmi for the purpose of making a sale of certain property that the Khedive had in France. Then came the war, bringing with it Abbas Hilmi's flight to Constantinople, he being practically ejected by the British Government from his position as Khedive of Egypt on account of his pro-German sympathies, which were well known. Abbas Hilmi ultimately took refuge in Switzerland. Bolo Pasha, in 1914 and in 1915, was proved on his trial to have been engaged in several pro-German intrigues in company with Abbas Hilmi. It is not necessary to go into the details. There was a proposition, however, to corrupt French journalists and the French press, and for this purpose a large amount of money was paid to Abbas Hilmi, and after a great deal of it had stuck to his fingers, practically amounting to robbery, there was still some disbursed in Italy and some disbursed through Italy in France. About this time there was a large sum of money that came from a family in Switzerland, supposedly used to purchase an interest in the Paris Journal, which was an important paper in Paris that had been under the direction of Senator Charles Humbert, a senator from the Meuse. That purchase has been freely alleged to have been in the German interest, but I shall refrain from making that statement, owing to the fact that it has not yet been proved in the French court. Subsequently Senator Humbert was threatened, by a combination of circumstances, with the loss of control of the Paris Journal. As a result Bolo got in touch with Senator Humbert and offered to furnish the funds.

Senator WOLCOTT. This was after he had purchased an interest?

Mr. BECKER. A contract was entered into between Bolo and Humbert for the purchase of an interest in the Journal, but Bolo lacked the funds to put it through. It was believed that 10,000,000 francs would be required. About this time Bolo met Charles F. Bertelli. Bertelli had made a deposition prior to the trial of Bolo and he testified upon the trial. His testimony reads, in part, as follows. He was asked:

Why did you introduce Bolo to Hearst?

His answer was—and this is his deposition given before the trial, but his testimony on the trial from the report was substantially the same—he answered:

Because Jean Finot, director of La Revue, whom I have known since 1912, the period when I was correspondent of the New York Times, had sent Bolo a letter of introduction to Mr. Hearst and had requested me to vouch for him with Hearst. He said to me, "Interest yourself in the matter; Bolo has very great political power; he is proprietor of Le Journal"—

That is the Paris Journal—

"and it would be well for Hearst to know him. As I have already told you, I made the voyage with Bolo in 1916."

Senator OVERMAN. Who is Bertelli?

Mr. BECKER. Bertelli was an Italian by nationality, living in Paris, and was the Paris correspondent of the Hearst papers. Bertelli came with Bolo on the ship, arriving in New York on the 24th of February, 1916; and it appears also by Bertelli's testimony that he was paid 11,000 francs by Bolo, according to his testimony, as a loan. He repaid this sum of money. They arrived on the 22d of February, 1916.

Prior to the arrival from the ship Bolo sent a wireless to one Adolph Pavenstedt, a German subject, then the head of the firm of G. Amsinck & Co., bankers, in New York. The wireless message I may have here, but it was simply to the general effect that he was about to arrive in New York.

In 1914 Bolo and Pavenstedt had met in Cuba and had been to some extent associated in certain financial projects at that time, in which Bolo represented the Paris banking house of Perier & Co.

On Bolo's arrival on the 22d of February he at once got in touch with Pavenstedt. We examined Pavenstedt at great length and obtained his story. His first testimony was to the general effect that an offer was made to obtain the money with which to finance the purchase of the controlling interest in the Journal by Bolo and Humbert from various banking institutions.

Senator KING. That is, the Paris Journal?

Mr. BECKER. Yes; and that it was not until after perhaps a week or 10 days of effort of that sort that finally the suggestion was made by Pavenstedt that only the German ambassador would be likely to be interested in the subject. Mr. Pavenstedt testified also that at this time he came to Washington and saw Mr. Bernstorff and presented the matter to him. About that time there were made public by the Department of State a series of dispatches——

Senator OVERMAN. Have you that general affidavit?

Mr. BECKER. It is here, but I think I carry the salient points in my mind. I am willing to have the committee, at any time it desires, read the passages that will establish these facts.

Senator OVERMAN. If anyone desires to have the affidavit you can produce it?

Mr. BECKER. It is produced now; it is before the committee. I am quite willing to have it all marked in evidence if desired. It will merely encumber the record with very long, protracted discussions. The Department of State gave out a series of dispatches, which are public property, passing between Bernstorff and the German foreign office, and it appeared that the first dispatch sent by Bernstorff with relation to this matter was dated February 26.

Senator WOLCOTT. What year?

Mr. BECKER. 1916. An examination of the register of the Shoreham Hotel, where Mr. Pavenstedt stayed, showed that he was at the Shoreham on the 24th of February. Summarizing the various steps in the matter. I will give you a coronology of what happened, which is also based in part on more recent investigations conducted at the request of the French Government, having to do with the prosecution of Charles Humbert.

Senator WOLCOTT. Mr. Becker, I rather assume that the visit of this man Pavenstedt in Washington to see Bernstorff was for the purpose of getting the German Ambassador to supply funds to purchase the Paris Journal?

Mr. BECKER. Mr. Pavenstedt so testified.

Senator WOLCOTT. Did these wires to Berlin throw any light on that question?

Mr. BECKER. Yes.

Senator WOLCOTT. Of whether or not the German Ambassador supplied the funds?

Mr. BECKER. Yes.

Senator WOLCOTT. You are going to show these wires later?

Mr. BECKER. Those wires are all here, and they were made public at that time. I will read them into the record if desired, shortly.

Senator WOLCOTT. You had not mentioned in a general way the contents of those wires?

Mr. BECKER. I am coming to that in a moment. I propose to give the chronological story at this point in order to show the interweaving of various negotiations going on at the same time.

Senator OVERMAN. I think we had better let Mr. Becker go on and make his statement. He says he has all of these statements, and we can examine him afterwards. Let him tell his story.

Mr. BECKER. As far as the documents are concerned, I would be very glad to read them. When it comes to the question of the testimony, it is very difficult to pick out a question or an answer here and there, and I would much prefer, unless the committee directs otherwise, to give you a summary of it, which I under my oath will make as accurate as possible.

On February 22, 1916, as already stated, Mr. Bolo arrived; and one of the first things that he did, by the way, was to send his card and a statement with reference to a letter of introduction to Madame Barrientos, the opera singer, who was practically a ward of a partner in Barcelona, Spain, of the firm of Perier & Co., bankers, in Paris; but I want to state emphatically that the acquaintance he formed here with Madame Barrientos and his connection with the firm of Perier & Co. in Paris does not warrant the slightest imputation of disloyalty or pro-Germanism on the part of either the opera singer, Madame Barrientos, of the Metropolitan Opera Co., or Perier & Co., bankers, in Paris. On February 23, the next morning after the arrival, Bolo had a conference with Adolph Pavenstedt, and on the same day he wrote a letter in French to E. G. Grace, president of the Bethlehem Steel Co., which I think I can translate for you. It is dated February 23, 1916, and is on the paper of the Plaza Hotel, New York, and it reads, translated, as follows:

BECKER EXHIBIT No. 2.

DEAR SIR: I am the bearer for you of a letter from our friend in common, Senator Charles Humbert, of Paris. Would you be so kind as to inform me at what time you will be able to receive me.

Very sincerely, yours,

BOLO PASHA.

Senator STERLING. Is there any reply to that letter?

Mr. BECKER. Yes. I will come to that in due order. On the 24th of February Mr. Pavenstedt was at Washington consulting with Mr. Bernstorff, and you will note that he lost no time in going. On the 26th Bernstorff sent his first dispatch to Berlin. This is the dispatch as given out by Secretary of State Lansing, addressed to Herr von Jagow, German minister of foreign affairs:

No. 679.

FEBRUARY 26, 1916

I have received direct information from an entirely trustworthy source concerning a political action in one of the enemy countries which will bring peace. One of the leading political personalities of the country in question is seeking a loan of $1,700,000 in New York, for which security will be given. I was forbidden to give his name in writing. The affair seemed to me to be of great possible importance. Can the money be provided at once in New York?

That the intermediary will keep the matter a secret is entirely certain. Request answer by telegraph. A favorable report will follow as soon as a trustworthy person can be found to bring it to Germany. BERNSTORFF.

Senator STERLING. To whom was that addressed?

Mr. BECKER. To von Jagow, the German minister of foreign affairs. On the same date, the 26th of February, at New York, Bolo again addressed Mr. Grace, of the Bethlehem Steel Co., on the stationery of the Plaza Hotel, New York, as follows:

BECKER EXHIBIT No. 3.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 26, 1916.

DEAR SIR: I believe that you have returned to New York, and I should be very greatly obliged to you if you would kindly arrange for a rendezvous at which I may present to you the letter from Senator Charles Humbert which I have brought from Paris.

In the hope of a reply, believe me

Yours very truly,

BOLO PASHA.

Senator STERLING. He evidently had not received any reply to his first letter then?

Mr. BECKER. Not yet. On the 28th of February Bolo telegraphed to E. G. Grace, Bethlehem Steel Co., South Bethlehem, as follows:

BECKER EXHIBIT No. 4.

NEW YORK, February 28, 1916.

Wrote you twice regarding interview to present you letter from your friend, Senator Charles Humbert, of Paris, regarding very important matter. Kindly telegraph me when and where I can meet you, as came over to America especially to see you on our friend's behalf. PAUL BOLO PASHA.

Care Hotel Plaza, New York.

On February 29 there was received, according to the cables given out by the State Department, the following cable from Herr von Jagow, the foreign minister, to Bernstorff:

BECKER EXHIBIT No. 5.

No. 150.

FEBRUARY 29.

Answer to telegram No. 679.

Agree to the loan, but only if peace action seems to you a really serious project, as the provision of money in New York is for us at the present extraordinarily difficult. If the enemy country is Russia, have nothing to do with the business, as the sum of money is too small to have any serious effect in that country. So too in the case of Italy, where it would not be worth while to spend so much.

On the same day Bolo received a telegram, dated the previous day, from A. G. Grace, as follows:

BECKER EXHIBIT No. 6.

PAUL BOLO PASHA, SOUTH BETHLEHEM, PA., February 28, 1916.
Care Hotel Plaza, New York City:

Have just received your letters. Delayed on account of being continuously away from office. Can see you in Bethlehem tomorrow or in New York Thursday at your convenience. E. G. GRACE.

On February 29, the same day this foreign-office message was received, Bolo telegraphed to Grace, as follows:

BECKER EXHIBIT No. 7.

E. G. GRACE, NEW YORK, February 29, 1916.
President Bethlehem Steel Company:

Many thanks for your wire. Prefer to wait until Thursday and see you in New York. If you will kindly wire me time and place.

Care Hotel Plaza.

PAUL BOLO PASHA.

On February 29 still another telegram from Grace to Bolo. as follows:

BECKER EXHIBIT No. 8.

SOUTH BETHLEHEM, PA., February 29, 1916

PAUL BOLO PASHA.

Hotel Plaza, New York City:

If convenient to you would like to see you at 11.30, Thursday morning. New York office, 111 Broadway. E. G. GRACE

The next morning would be March 2.

On March 1 there was a telegram from Bolo to Grace as follows:

BECKER EXHIBIT No. 9.

E. G. GRACE,

NEW YORK, March 1, 1916

B. S. Company, South Bethlehem, Pa.

Thanks for wire. Will meet you as arranged tomorrow at 11:30 at your New York office. PAUL BOLO PASHA.

On March 2 the meeting occurred between Bolo and Grace. I have Mr. Grace's testimony with reference to that matter, for the use of the French Government in the Humbert case. It involves some matter which, for reasons affecting the interests of France, I do not feel at liberty to disclose now, but I can state this much, that the general substance of the testimony with reference to this matter was that Bolo proposed to Grace that the Bethlehem Steel Co. finance the purchase of the controlling interest in the Paris Journal; that there was a letter of introduction, which, however, has not been found, from Charles Humbert to Mr. Grace; that Mr. Grace promised to give the matter consideration and to discuss it with Mr. Schwab, of the Bethlehem Steel Co., but expressed doubt as to whether they could possibly be interested in the matter. I may state very generally, however, that it would be proper for me to do so at this time, that there had been certain relations between Senator Humbert and the Bethlehem Steel Co. in the late fall of 1914, when Mr. Humbert was in this country as purchasing agent for the French Government.

Senator KING. That is to say, he had purchased for the French Government some munitions, or steel products, from the Bethlehem Co.

Mr. BECKER. Yes.

Senator KING. An entirely legitimate and proper transaction?

Mr. BECKER. Yes. In fact, as between Bolo and Mr. Grace and the Bethlehem Steel Co., there was nothing that is of importance as charging the Bethlehem Steel Co. with anything in the slightest degree improper. I have been asked not to give my opinions, but perhaps it would not be improper to state by way of negative opinion that the best judgment I have been able to form, with regard to the transactions of Bolo with the Bethlehem Steel Co. is that they were all camouflage, designed to cover up the real purpose, which apparently had been formed before Bolo ever came to America, to come over here and get the money from the German Government. I want to call your attention again in that connection to the fact that Mr. Pavenstedt's first testimony tried to make it appear that there was a week or 10 days of futile negotiations before finally it was suggested that the German ambassador would be the only person interested, whereas it finally appeared that the very same day after Bolo's first conference with Pavenstedt, Pavenstedt took the train for Washington and was here the next morning. On March 3 Mr. Bernstorff arrived in New York and was registered at the Ritz Carlton Hotel.

and met Pavenstedt and informed him that they were ready to conclude the transaction. On March 3 or 4 Bernstorff had a conference with Hugo Schmidt, of the Deutsche Bank, and asked him if the Deutsche Bank would be prepared to do the financing on behalf of the German Government, and on March 5 Bernstorff cabled to Herr von Jagow, the foreign minister, according to the message given out by the State Department, as follows:

BECKER EXHIBIT No. 10.

Please instruct Deutsche Bank to hold 9,000,000 marks at disposal of Hugo Schmidt. The affair is very promising. Further particulars follow.

BERNSTORFF.

On March 6 Hugo Schmidt sent a wireless message to the Deutsche Bank, which he represented in America, reading as follows:

Wireless via Sayville. Deutsche Bank, direction, Berlin. Communicate with William Foxley and telegraph whether he has placed money at my disposal with you for Charles Gledhill (signed) Hugo Schmidt, March 6th, 1916.

The meaning of "William Foxley" was testified by Schmidt to be the German foreign office, and the meaning of "Charles Gledhill" was testified by him to be the German ambassador at Washington, Count Von Bernstorff.

On March 6 Bolo addressed a letter to G. Amsinck & Co. on the letterhead of the Plaza Hotel in French, which I will endeavor to translate, as follows:

BECKER EXHIBIT No. 11.

Messrs. Amsinck & Co., New York.

NEW YORK, 6th March, 1916.

GENTLEMEN: You will receive for my account a sum of money of which your Mr. Pavenstedt knows. Will you please have the kindness to deposit that sum to my credit with the Royal Bank of Canada, of your city, to the credit of my account in that bank.

Very sincerely yours,

BOLO PASHA.

On the 8th of March there was written by Mr. Grace a letter to Bolo, which I will read. Apparently that letter has been carried off by the stenographer with some other papers, but the substance of the letter was simply that he had been thinking hard about the proposition and that the Bethlehem Steel Co. could not consider it.

Now, the question may arise as to the individuals with whom Bolo came in contact in America. I have mentioned Pavenstedt. He did not meet Hugo Schmidt. I have mentioned Madame Barrientos, with whom his contact was purely social; in fact, she states that she became suspicious of him and refused to see him any more after awhile.

In addition there is the question of his contacts with Mr. Hearst. As authority for the extent to which that went we have, first, the testimony and deposition of Bertelli.

Senator KING. Where is Mr. Bertelli, Mr. Becker?

Mr. BECKER. He is still in France, I believe. Mr. Bertelli, in his deposition, states:

I spoke of Bolo to Hearst, and the latter said to me, "If he is the proprietor of great French newspapers, I certainly shall be very glad to receive him," and he invited him to lunch the next day. During the meal there was only discussion of superficial matters. Over the coffee, Bolo insisted that Hearst declare himself on the subject of France. His host replied to him that every American loved France, and that that country needed no advocate. He added that he considered France as his second fatherland.

Senator Wolcott. Who is meant by "he"?

Mr. BECKER. Hearst. [Continuing reading:]

In compliment to Hearst, Bolo gave a grand dinner at Sherry's. He consulted me on the choice of the guests, and thus it was that he had, besides Mr. and Mrs. Hearst and me, Mr. Van Anda, editor in chief of the New York Times; two or three ladies; Mr. and Mrs. Gerard (the husband is the brother of the American Ambassador at Berlin). Bolo had two personal guests—Jules Bois and the German, Pavenstedt. I assure you that this last selection astonished us all. No one knew that personage, not even Mr. Gerard, who is an old diner-out. Bolo had told me, "I have just withdrawn some millions which I deposited in Pavenstedt's bank before the war. It is a patriotic duty to return my funds to France, but I have to be polite to that German." As Bolo had in his mouth only the word "fatherland," and as America was still neutral, we passed Pavenstedt, but the American ladies present appeared very shocked at the presence of that German. I may add that there was something common about that individual's appearance, and he was truly more German than nature. I believe the ladies reproached Jules Bois very earnestly, and he was very mortified by that contact. Not so Bolo; and the next day when I met him on Fifth Avenue he laughed heartily at Jules Bois' displeasure.

I may add, parenthetically, that Bolo testified in his trial in France that during the course of that dinner Pavenstedt drank to the success of the allies, which he said he thought was pretty good for a Boche. Now, continuing the reading of this deposition—

Senator KING (interposing). Jules Bois was a Frenchman. I suppose?

Mr. BECKER. Yes; Jules Bois was a perfectly innocent Frenchman, who was delivering pro-French lectures in America; and out of a sum which Bolo received from Germany he gave Jules Bois $5,000 to help him finance his lecturing in this country for the French. There is nothing to cast any reflection on Bois, whatever.

Now, continuing the reading of the Bertelli deposition:

Hearst gave a farewell supper to Bolo, preceded by a theater party. He had Judge and Mrs. Gary (the husband, president of the Steel Corporation), Mr. and Mrs. Gerard, and Mrs. and Mrs. Sweeny (whose brother is a member of the Foreign Legion). In the chatter of the party no one spoke of anything in particular, but before leaving America Bolo used this language to me: "I should like very much to be able to show my friends Poincare and Briand a paper proving that Hearst is pro-French. I have just sent Mrs. Hearst some flowers. Please suggest to her to write me to that effect. Coming from a lady, the letter will have more weight." I came to France with Bolo. During the voyage he told me that he married a widow, an actress, who brought him nineteen millions, a fortune which he had known how to make bear fruit enormously. He told me, besides, of a transaction in emeralds, carried out in Colombia, adding the astounding detail that he had bought 80 kilos of the precious stone, which were actually deposited in the vaults of a bank in France. He told me, besides, that at the moment of the German push on Paris he had arranged for a special train to transport his emeralds to Biarritz. He told me, finally, that France did not do enough for her propagandists in the United States, where gold flows like water, and that he believed it his duty to give a check for $5,000 to that poor Jules Bois. He also talked to me of the ship of the campaign made by Mr. Hearst against the Anglo-French loan and asked me if Mr. Hearst would not support a loan of a billion dollars exclusively reserved for France. He said he wished to speak about it to M. Briand, and proposed to me to return to America to handle the matter. I answered that I did not ask anything better, but on the condition of being invested with an official mission of the French Government; the matter otherwise would make no progress. He related to me, besides, that in having his money returned from America he had made a considerable profit on the exchange. And in order not to lose that margin he had had it transmitted to France, one million each day, by use of cablegrams. He told me, finally, that Hearst, in spite of his enormous power in America, was misunderstood in France, and that he wanted to have an article concerning him published in

'Le Journal.' The article appeared the 3d of May, 1916, and should be by M. Mouthon. Previously Bolo furnished me with a draft, which I hand you, and the errors in which I thought I ought to correct in the letter, of which I hand you a copy. The article appeared revised according to the greater part of my criticisms. A little later Bolo met me in a chamber of the La Rue restaurant, with Charles Humbert and Mouthon, and we talked about a possible combination for exchange of news between 'Le Journal' and the Hearst newspapers, a combination which has not materialized.

Senator STERLING. Is that your statement, that it is a combination that has not materialized, or is that part of the deposition?

Mr. BECKER. That is part of the deposition.

Senator KING. Le Journal was a patriotic, virile French newspaper at that time, was it not?

Mr. BECKER. Yes; unquestionably. Of course it has been testified by Pavenstedt that it was represented to Bernstorff by him, as speaking for Bolo, that the intent was to start a defeatist propaganda in the Paris Journal, and that it was on that representation that the paper was purchased by the Germans.

I may say that about all that was done, so far as appears from an examination of the files of that paper, was to get in this fulsome account of Hearst, which appeared on the 6th of May, and certain discussions with reference to a possible combination of news service between the Paris Journal and the Hearst papers, or the International News Service, in this country. There were other contacts between Hearst and Bolo, and in order to give a fair statement of that I wish to confine myself merely to a bald representation, in a summary way, of what has been sworn to, giving also due attention to the denials of Mr. Hearst.

Senator KING. Sworn to by whom?

Mr. BECKER. That I will state. In connection with our endeavor to solve the Bolo mystery—which is simply whether there was a general conspiracy to which Senator Humbert and Bolo were parties, and how it was that Bolo came to this country in such apparent confidence that he would instantly obtain funds from the German Government—we made in the Humbert case an examination of a considerable number of witnesses. We obtained the testimony of several chauffeurs, the testimony of a doorman at the Hearst apartments at 137 Riverside Drive, New York, and of certain other employees in the building.

Senator KING. Where are those witnesses now?

Mr. BECKER. Some are in the United States Army; others are in New York. I have in each case the address given by them at the time, and if it is desired to have it——

Senator OVERMAN. I understand you to say that you will produce all these affidavits?

Mr. BECKER. Yes.

Senator OVERMAN. We do not want them in the record now; but if we want them, we can have them?

Mr. BECKER. Yes; the affidavits are right here. Out of place, now, before taking that up, I will read Mr. Grace's letter. It is dated March 8, 1916, and reads as follows:

BECKER EXHIBIT No. 12.

MY DEAR MR. PACHA: I have been thinking hard on the question you put to me last week; but, as I said then, I doubt very much whether Mr. Schwab or any of his associates would at this time be in position to help our good friend, Senator Humbert, in the direction he suggests. On account of the very unusual and large financial obligations we have undertaken in the acquiring of our new properties I must say that, much as we dislike, it would be impossible for us to comply with your request.

Asking you to express to Senator Humbert Mr. Schwab's and my personal regards and at the same time our kindest greetings, I beg to remain,

Sincerely, yours,

E. G. GRACE, President

Mr. PAUL BOLO PACHA,
Hotel Plaza, New York City.

The testimony of a chauffeur named M. Berkowitz is simply that he drove Bernstorff to the Hearst apartments several times.

Senator WOLCOTT. Did he indicate when?

Mr. BECKER. The time that he gave is approximately the early part of 1916. Chauffeur V. Franco gives testimony of a similar character. Doorman B. Schomaker, employed at Mr. Hearst's Apartment, at 137 Riverside Drive, during the daytime, stated that he saw Bernstorff call four or five times to see Mrs. Hearst during the daytime—he was not on at night—and that he also saw Bolo call; or at least, he identified a picture of Bolo as being a man who called there.

Senator STERLING. Upon Mr. Hearst?

Mr. BECKER. Apparently upon Mrs. Hearst, because this man was only employed in the daytime.

A chauffeur named S. Cornfield testified that he drove Bernstorff to the Hearst apartment twice in the early part of 1916 or the latter part of 1915.

A chauffeur named Harry Block testified that he drove Bernstorff to the Hearst Apartment often, and that on one or two occasions he took Bolo and Bernstorff there together, identifying Bolo by his picture. Bernstorff he knew. He stated that once or twice he started from the Ritz-Carlton Hotel with Bernstorff, went to the Plaza, picked Bolo up there, drove to 137 Riverside Drive, waited there about 40 minutes until they came back, and then returned them both to the Plaza Hotel. He states that this was during the cold weather in 1916.

Chauffeur C. J. Fredriksen testified that he drove Bernstorff very often to the Hearst Apartment; that on one occasion he drove Bernstorff and Bolo together; Bernstorff from the Ritz, Bolo from the Plaza; then returning to the Plaza Hotel; and that he waited outside two hours. He placed that as in the spring of 1916.

Senator WOLCOTT. When did Bolo return to France?

Mr. BECKER. On the 17th of March, 1916.

Senator WOLCOTT. Did he come back again?

Mr. BECKER. Never. He was here in 1914 and again in 1916, and never returned and never will.

An elevator boy named A. P. Gazzola, at 137 Riverside Drive, testified that Bernstorff and Bolo were known to him; that the boys employed in the building had nicknamed them; that they called Bernstorff the "Duke de la Brew" and Bolo the "Duke de la Caw"; and that on one occasion he recalled Bolo and Bernstorff were there together, and he estimated that Bolo was there four or five times in the evening.

Another elevator boy named P. Gragnola testified that he was in the United States Army; that he was the one that nicknamed Bernstorff the "Duke de la Brew" and Bolo the "Duke de la Caw"; that Bolo came there with Bernstorff once, to his recollection, and that there had been a dispute between Bernstorff and some of the employees as to whether he should be allowed to enter the Hearst apartments and go up to the Hearst suite in the Hearst apartments—and when I say “Hearst Apartments” I mean the building which belongs to Mr. Hearst—without being announced; that that was what Bernstorff desired.

The switchboard operator, G. A. Butler, also in the United States Army, testified that Bernstorff was in the habit of trying to get in unannounced, or at least, that there was this incident to which I have just referred.

An elevator boy named W. Heupel testified that he remembered taking Bernstorff up in the elevator. He was employed there from April, 1915, to January, 1916.

Then there was some testimony given by a janitor who had been employed there, named C. H. Jerome.

The testimony of these witnesses, with the exception of that of Gragnola, Butler, and Heupel, which has been taken more recently, was published in the papers in response to a challenge by Mr. Hearst to the attorney general to produce anything that could connect him with Bolo; and among the affidavits so published was that of C. H. Jerome. Mr. Hearst afterwards discovered proof that Jerome was a convict, and printed for many days cartoons and pictures of Jerome as a convict.

Senator KING. Was he a convict?

Mr. BECKER. Undoubtedly. I am perfectly willing to omit any reference to Mr. Jerome, for that reason; although that does not mean that I consider his testimony untruthful.

Senator STERLING. Mr. Becker, did you personally examine and take the testimony of these several witnesses?

Mr. BECKER. Yes; I did.

Senator STERLING. And it was reduced to writing and subscribed and sworn to?

Mr. BECKER. In each case.

Senator STERLING. In each case?

Mr. BECKER. Yes. I have the depositions here and I could read them in full, if it were desired. Suppose I read one as an example?

Senator KING. Are they made evidence, under the New York State law?

Mr. BECKER. Yes; they were taken in the Charles Humbert case, because this was all in an endeavor to fathom the depths of the Bolo conspiracy. I am afraid if I were to explain, I would transgress the rule that has been laid down. Perhaps you will forgive me if I do, very briefly?

Humbert was accused of complicity in the Bolo affairs. It seemed to us very strange that Bolo should come to this country, and that there should be an immediate communication with the Germany Embassy. It looked like prearrangement, although Pavenstedt denies that, so far as he is concerned. Therefore, the question arose: Was there some intermediary, other than Pavenstedt, between Bolo and Bernstorff? Was there some other means by which was discussed the manner in which this defeatist propaganda was going to be conducted? It seemed so unlikely that Bernstorff would recommend the giving of 10,000,000 francs, as they were given, to a man that he had never met and whose name, according to Pavenstedt, he did not even know. It seemed as if there must have been a closer connection in some way between Bolo and Bernstorff in this country: and it did not seem likely it was through Pavenstedt. The question was when, where, and how it was, and it was in an endeavor to throw some light upon that problem that this investigation was made and these depositions were taken.

Senator WOLCOTT. Let me ask you if the theory was evolved that Mr. Hearst was the man?

Mr. BECKER. It was considered a probable theory. I will say frankly I do not regard it as proved, by any means.

Senator WOLCOTT. I was about to say, myself, that from what you have produced here before the committee, it does not look as though it were at all possible, because there was no time fixed when Mr. Hearst and Bolo and Bernstorff were seeing each other from time to time. There was a string of visits, apparently, if these depositions and affidavits are true. Yet the fact is that within some four or five days after the arrival of Bolo, Bernstorff had O. K.'d the scheme and was wiring for the money, so it did not require all this long series of visits, and they could not have had anything to do with that very rapid action by Count von Bernstorff.

Senator NELSON. It might have related to the way they were to handle the funds around in this country.

Mr. BECKER. It might have related to the form the defeatist propaganda was to take in France, but that is purely speculation: and I want to be very careful to say that I do not regard the case as proved, but these are facts which I think proper for the committee to understand in relation to the connections in America.

Now, just as a sample, I will read the whole statement of Primus Gragnola.

Senator KING. Have you any evidence that Pacha and Bernstorff had not met in years gone by?

Mr. BECKER. The evidence of Bertelli that he was the one who introduced them.

Senator KING. But aside from that you do not know what their acquaintance or relations were prior to that?

Mr. BECKER. Well, I have Mr. Hearst's word for it that there were no such relations.

Senator KING. I said between Bernstorff and Bolo.

Mr. BECKER. Oh, I beg your pardon. As between Bolo and Bernstorff there is no proof of any prior connection, but, of course, it was fully proved in the trial of Bolo that he had received a large sum of money in 1915 for Defeatist propaganda in France through Switzerland and through Abbas Hilmi, the former Khedive of Egypt.

Senator KING. Do you know what the relations were between Bolo Pacha and Mr. Bernstorff in 1914, or prior to that time?

Mr. BECKER. I do not think there were any.

Senator KING. Do you know as to that?

Mr. BECKER. Every possible inference points to there having been none.

Senator NELSON. Go on and read the deposition.

Mr. BECKER. This is the deposition of Primus Gragnola [reading]

BECKER EXHIBIT No. 13.

Primus Gragnola, being duly sworn, deposes and says:

"I am a private in the United States Guards, stationed at Fort Adams, and have been in the service since April 29, 1918.

"I was employed at the Hearst apartment, known as the 'Clarendon,' at the southeast corner of 86th street and Riverside Drive from October, 1915 to about June, 1916. My regular duties were as elevator boy on the freight elevator, but from time to time I also acted as doorman and switchboard operator when the regular doorman and switchboard operator were absent. I recognize Exhibits 1, 2 and 3 as photographs of the German Ambassador, Count von Bernstorff. I saw him come to the Clarendon Apartments five or six times. After the fourth time I nicknamed him the 'Duke de la Brew.' Each time when von Bernstorff called, he called to see Mr. Hearst, and I remember that he requested to be allowed to go up without being announced, and that I told him it was the rule of the house that no one could go up without being announced. A little later, George Thompson, Mr. Hearst's butler, informed me that it was all right to allow the German ambassador to come to the Hearst apartment without being announced.

"I have examined also photographs 4 and 5. These are the pictures of a man whom I nicknamed the 'Duke de la Caw.' His real name was Bolo Pacha. I remember distinctly that on one occasion this latter gentleman came with Von Bernstorff. They requested not to be announced. I asked the names, and was requested to announce that the German ambassador and Bolo Pacha wished to see Mr. Hearst. After I announced them over the telephone, they went up in the elevator to the Hearst apartment.

"I saw Bolo Pacha come to the house two or three times. It was always during the day when I saw Bernstorff and Bolo Pacha come, as I did not usually do night duty.

"I remember that George Butler was off duty on the occasion when Bolo Pacha and Bernstorff came together.

"Sometime after the call of Bolo Pacha and Count Bernstorff, there was a fancy-dress ball. Gazzola and I had to work all night. I took some of the guests down on the elevator about four o'clock. The next day we brought down a couple of barrels of empty champagne bottles.

"The bridge running from the top of the Clarendon Apartment to the Netherlands Apartment I have often seen, but I don't know by whom it was used. On two occasions I was called to the Hearst apartment by the buzzer on the freight elevator, and took Mr. Hearst down to the basement because there were process servers waiting to serve him, whom he wished to avoid."

Subscribed and sworn to this 19th day of August, 1918.

Senator WOLCOTT. He does not fix in that affidavit the time when Bolo Pasha and Count von Bernstorff called together, does he? As I gather from the affidavit, he saw them call only once, and the time is not fixed?

Mr. BECKER. Well, it is fixed only to the extent that he says he was employed there about six months prior to May, 1916.

Senator WOLCOTT. That does not fix it at all. It would be very material to know whether they called before or after Bernstorff had wired for this money.

Mr. BECKER. Yes; but of course, at this distance you can not expect bell boys, who did not keep any diaries, to remember dates like that. If they did, I would distrust them very much.

Senator WOLCOTT. I am criticizing the value of the evidence.

Senator OVERMAN. Proceed, Mr. Becker.

Mr. BECKER. After all, except the last three, of these depositions were given to the public, Mr. Hearst printed various denials, of which cognizance should be taken. Unfortunately, I have not here the clippings from his papers with the denials; but, in substance, his contention was that he never had seen Bolo and Bernstorff together; that Bolo had been to his house only once or twice; once, I think, to see Mrs. Hearst; that he met Bernstorff there only as he met other representatives of foreign powers, and that the affidavits were plainly perjured evidence.

Senator STERLING. Mr. Becker, do you recall the personal appearance of these various witnesses before you—these chauffeurs and elevator boys?

Mr. BECKER. Yes.

Senator STERLING. What can you say as to their ages, as a rule?

Mr. BECKER. Well, most of them were in their twenties. They were of draft age, and several of them were in the Army—three or four. They were of that class. Am I called upon to give a judgment as to the value of their testimony?

Senator OVERMAN. I should think not. Do you want to ask that question, Senator?

Mr. BECKER. I am perfectly willing to do it.

Senator STERLING. I did not intend to ask such a question.

Senator OVERMAN. I do not think that would be proper.

Senator KING. One of those dates you gave by recollection. Pasha came to this country on what date?

Mr. BECKER. February 22.

Senator KING. And, then, a day or two thereafter, as I recall your testimony, Pavenstedt was here?

Mr. BECKER. Pavenstedt was here on the 24th of February. Bolo arrived in the evening of the 22d; probably at 5 or 6 o'clock in the afternoon.

Senator KING. And Bolo had seen Pavenstedt before Pavenstedt came here?

Mr. BECKER. Pavenstedt, yes.

Senator KING. And was it from here that Bernstorff sent the telegram concerning the money to Von Jagow?

Mr. BECKER. Yes.

Senator WOLCOTT. What was the date of that telegram?

Mr. BECKER. The 26th of February.

Senator WOLCOTT. Four days after Bolo arrived?

Mr. BECKER. On March 3 Von Bernstorff arrived in New York and was there for several days.

Senator WOLCOTT. Do you know whether or not that was the first trip of Bernstorff to New York since February 24?

Mr. BECKER. It was. He was not in New York between the 22d of February and the 3d of March. At least, he was not stopping at the Ritz-Carlton, where he usually stopped; and I have the references showing the dates when he was at that hotel.

Senator WOLCOTT. Then, if Mr. Hearst had anything to do with inducing Count von Bernstorff to embark upon this enterprise, Mr. Hearst had to meet him somewhere other than New York?

Mr. BECKER. Well, I really dislike to enter into an argument about the tendency of the evidence, but might I just suggest that the purpose of this inquiry was to ascertain if there was a prearrangement before Bolo came to this country?

Senator WOLCOTT. Yes; and you have stated to this committee that the supposition was that probably Mr. Hearst might have been a party to that prearrangement; and I understand the purpose of the investigation of these employees at the Hearst apartment was to ascertain whether or not Bernstorff was in touch with Mr. Hearst, and whether this scheme might have been discussed between them. That is the inference from your testimony.

Mr. BECKER. In these matters it is necessary to be so very careful, but I will be very explicit about it. We considered it as a possible or probable theory that Mr. Hearst was the intermediary who prearranged the coming of Bolo to America, and our reason for thinking it a possible or probable theory only, subject to investigation, was that we had known for a long time that as soon as Bolo returned to France he took up the matter of establishing an interchange of cable service between the Paris Journal and the Hearst papers—the International News Service. That was solely the ground for considering it as a probable theory only.

Senator WOLCOTT. Of course, it was all right to investigate and run that theory down.

Mr. BECKER. Then we ran the theory down, on the supposition that possibly it was Hearst who arranged, long before Bolo came to America, with Bernstorff that he should come, and that the proposition should be put through; because, so far as Bernstorff was concerned, you see, it was put through in very short order.

Senator WOLCOTT. Very short order.

Senator REED. Does he make that as an assertion?

Mr. BECKER. I make no such assertion, and I make no such charge, and I do not say that I consider it a theory in any sense established.

Senator WOLCOTT. Is there any evidence, other than these visits of Bernstorff to the Hearst apartment, that has to do with relations between Bernstorff and Hearst about this time? Have you any evidence on that point further than what you have given?

Mr. BECKER. About this time, no.

Senator WOLCOTT. Or shortly thereafter?

Mr. BECKER. No.

Senator WOLCOTT. I want to say that there is nothing in this evidence to sustain the probable theory, in my judgment.

Senator NELSON. Had we not better wait until after we have heard the testimony, to pronounce our opinions?

Senator WOLCOTT. You may wait as long as you wish, but I want to express my opinion right now.

Mr. BECKER. My opinion is that the burden of proof is not sustained by any evidence we have obtained up to this time.

Senator OVERMAN. I understand he says it has not been proven, and he does not make any charge at all. Go ahead with your statement, Mr. Becker.

Senator NELSON. Yes: let him go on and make his statement.

Senator WOLCOTT. If I may say, Mr. Chairman, I do not want to interrupt the testimony of Mr. Becker, and I do not want to be in the position of seeming to argue with him; but the fact of the matter is that what is said in this hearing here is given great publicity, and I consider it a most serious thing to any man, whoever he be, if there is the slightest imputation upon his fidelity to this country; and I feel that, as the testimony is given, I want to express my view of it then and there, as to the strength of the testimony bearing on that very serious thing. If Mr. Hearst can be shown to have been in any way improperly connected with these things, I would be the first in the world to condemn him; and conversely, the first to acquit him.

Senator OVERMAN. Well, you have brought out the fact that he was not connected with the matter.

Senator WOLCOTT. I think I have; yes.

Mr. BECKER. My purpose in presenting this is not solely with respect to the Bolo case, but there has been a great deal of evidence given at the hearings—some of which I read in the minutes and some in apparently fair newspaper reports—which bears upon the activities of Mr. Hearst; and in order that the matter might be judged upon the whole record made from the beginning of the hearings, by the public as well as by the committee, I have thought it proper to present evidence such as we have, without regard to the question of whether adequate or inadequate, as forming part of the complete record.

Senator STERLING. It is in that view of the case, Mr. Chairman, that I have thought all this evidence material, whether it tends to show a conspiracy between Mr. Hearst and Bolo Pacha or not. It is along the same line as the evidence we have been receiving here ever since these hearings began. It has taken that scope.

Mr. BECKER. I will read a letter written by Bolo Pacha to Madame Barrientos in this connection. It appears from the records that on the date of his arrival, February 22, he sent her a card, of which this is a photograph [exhibiting paper]. At least, that is the inference from certain records of messages, and so on, and is generally sustained by her testimony. The card, translated, reads about as follows:

Bolo Pacha places his respectful homage at the feet of the great artist, and will do himself the pleasure of calling upon her and giving her confidentially news of her friends. Hotel Plaza.

Then here is a letter dated the Plaza, New York, Tuesday morning [reading]:

BECKER EXHIBIT No. 14.

DEAR MADAM: The address of the wife of my friend is Mrs. Millicent Hearst, 137 Riverside Drive. Do not fail, after your voyage to Paris, to look me up. I will have made some articles which will precede you at Buenos Aires, although you have no need thereof, your immense talent putting you at the head of all the voices heard in this day. Nevertheless, not being able to do anything else for you to be agreeable, I beg leave to offer what is in my power, and do so with all my heart. Asking you to permit me to place at your feet the homage of great admiration.

BOLO PACHA.

Now, I have here the different checks, cables, etc., by which the actual payment was accomplished.

Senator NELSON. Is there any objection to your briefly stating how it was done, in a nutshell?

Mr. BECKER. I think that is much wiser than to go into it in exhaustive detail, offering each photograph in evidence. It amounts to this: There was the sum of 10,000,000 francs, or about 9,000,000 marks, or, in United States money, as converted, $1,683,500. That sum was transferred by the Reichs Bank, in Berlin, to the credit of the Deutsche Bank.

Senator NELSON. The Deutsche Bank—was that a bank in this country?

Mr. BECKER. The Deutsche Bank is one of the largest banks in Germany. Hugo Schmidt, to whom I will refer in a few moments, was during the war the German representative in America of the Deutsche Bank. The funds were handled through Hugo Schmidt. They were first placed by the Reichs Bank, which carried the account.

of the Imperial Government, in the Deutsche Bank and then a few hundred thousand dollars at a time; there were messages sent to Hugo Schmidt authorizing him to draw upon the credit of the bank with the Guaranty Trust Co., in New York, for the purpose of making deposits with G. Amsinck & Co. of like amounts, the money merely passing through Amsinck & Co., but it did not stay there at all, and went on to the Royal Bank of Canada in the shape of cashier's checks drawn by the cashier of G. Amsinck & Co. The checks and vouchers with G. Amsinck & Co. disclosed that it was money of the Deutsche Bank deposited with G. Amsinck & Co., but the cashier's checks of G. Amsinck & Co. simply disclosed that it was money of Paul Bolo Pacha to be deposited with the Royal Bank of Canada, the German taint being thus completely extracted.

Some of the money was deposited to the credit of Charles Humbert with J. P. Morgan & Co. Some other part of the money was sent to the credit of Madame Bolo by the Royal Bank of Canada, owing to Bolo's directions.

Senator STERLING. Where is the Royal Bank of Canada?

Mr. BECKER. In Montreal, I believe; but it has a New York branch, and all these transactions were by the New York branch. It appeared by the evidence at the Bolo trial, according to the reports, that of all this sum of money $1,100,000 only, leaving 500,000 aside, was invested in the Paris Journal, 170,000 francs invested in Le Rappel, 3,000,000 francs in a Spanish shipping company with headquarters at Barcelona, and 1,475,000 francs in a great munitions-making plant just outside of Paris. Five thousand dollars, I have already stated was given to Jules Bois; and that is the actual disposition of the German money from which, so far as anybody has been able to discover, Germany never received a penny's worth of benefit.

Senator KING. Was the policy of Le Journal changed?

Mr. BECKER. Only to the extent of publishing a laudatory article on William R. Hearst.

Senator KING. Was the policy changed?

Mr. BECKER. That is the only sign of any influence on Le Journal.

Senator KING. Was the policy toward the war changed?

Mr. BECKER. Not at all. The only sign of any influence being exerted on it in any way that could possibly be construed as a German influence was the publication on the 6th of May, 1916.

Senator KING. But it is still a French paper?

Mr. BECKER. It remained in other respects, so far as anybody can discover, just the same as before and just as much given to the protection of Senator Humbert as it ever had been.

Senator WOLCOTT. So far as material results are concerned, the Germans had their legs pulled?

Mr. BECKER. They got swindled; and if it is true that the previous purchase of Le Journal for something like a similar amount—for $1,000,000—with money furnished by the Leboeller family from Switzerland, was a German purchase, then you can say that the Germans bought the Paris Journal twice and never got any benefit of it.

Senator KING. It was always loyal to the cause of France and the war?

Mr. BECKER. Yes. One of the things that you gain from this stuff is the absolute futility of 95 per cent of it.

Senator KING. Does it not look as though Bolo Pacha was robbing the German Reichsbank of its money, and in that respect helping France?

Mr. BECKER. He was never courageous enough on his trial to make that claim, but it looks that way.

Senator KING. Was there any evidence tending to show that Bolo Pacha attempted to influence the policy of Le Journal against France upon either of these occasions?

Mr. BECKER. On the trial of Bolo the only things that proved the French Government's claim of anything of that sort was the fulsome account about Hearst, who was in very bad odor at that time with the French Government and, secondly, the attempt to create this interchange of news service by cable between the Hearst papers and Le Journal.

Senator KING. You do not answer my question. Is there anything to indicate that Bolo Pacha attempted to influence the policy of the paper against France in the prosecution of the war?

Mr. BECKER. Only that; and that has a tendency, according to the French claim, to show that.

Senator KING. It is possible to determine. Were there any articles written against France in the paper after Bolo Pacha took it?

Mr. BECKER. None whatever, as I have already stated.

Senator KING. Any weakening of the efforts of the Journal after the purchase, and of her fearless advocacy of the rights of the allies?

Mr. BECKER. None whatever. It was a pure swindle as far as the Germans were concerned.

Senator REED. I would like the permission of the committee to ask a question, because it would perhaps save going back over it again.

Senator OVERMAN. Senator Reed being a member of the Judiciary Committee, of which this is a subcommittee, will be permitted to ask questions.

Senator REED. You have just said that in the judgment of the French the mere fact of the publication of an article laudatory of Mr. Hearst was evidence that this paper was pro-German. What Frenchman representing the French Government has said that; and if so, have you the document?

Mr. BECKER. I have a synopsis of the trial of Bolo, and it is not quite complete. Some parts are not here. I am not sure this part is in what I have or not. The substance of the claim was this, which was made by Lieut. Mornet, who was, so to speak, the district attorney or prosecuting officer on the trial of Bolo. I think he is now Capt. Mornet.

Senator REED. Have you what he said there?

Mr. BECKER. I have carried it in my memory.

Senator REED. Have you what he said?

Mr. BECKER. I am not sure. I think so.

Senator REED. If you have what he said, that is what I would like to see.

Mr. BECKER. I would prefer to wait until to-morrow, if I may, and I will hunt it up. The trial is that thick [indicating]. It is a very long trial.

Senator REED. Thank you.

Senator OVERMAN. Proceed.

Mr. BECKER. I think that I have practically completed the statement with reference to the Bolo case. It might be added, to sum up the statement, that Bolo was tried in France, convicted and executed, and that the charges on which he was tried were, first, those connected with his dealings through Switzerland, and, secondly, those connected with his dealings in New York. Subsequently Senator Humbert has been accused of complicity in the same offenses, as well as other matters that are charged against him, and he is awaiting trial.

Now, with reference to some of the individuals.

Senator OVERMAN. Bolo was examined on the stand?

Mr. BECKER. Yes.

Senator OVERMAN. What was his defense?

Mr. BECKER. Bolo's defense was that these funds that he received were moneys that he had made out of profitable speculations in the past, which had been deposited by him with a bank, possibly in Antwerp; at any rate, in one of the cities of Belgium, which was under the control of the Germans at that time; that those funds had subsequently been transferred to G. Amsinck & Co.—from Antwerp to Berlin and from Berlin to New York to Amsinck & Co.—and that they had been withdrawn from Amsinck and taken to Paris for his own use; that the reason they had come to Berlin was that they were locked up in Antwerp, and that he could only get them out through Berlin. That was his theory.

Senator KING. While it is not relevant, what did the testimony show as to that munitions factory? My recollection is that the testimony shows that that munitions factory—that part of this money was invested in that munitions factory, and that it was doing fairly good work in making munitions for the French Army.

Mr. BECKER. Yes; no doubt of it.

Senator KING. So that the money—part of it—was utilized for the making of powder and shells, and so on, to aid the French. What did it show with respect to the 3,000,000 francs invested in Spanish shipping? Was that shipping to engage in the cause of aiding the allies?

Mr. BECKER. In part. The story of the Spanish shipping proposition is very interesting, and I know quite a little about it, but it would not be worth while to take it up now.

Senator STERLING. As against the claim of Bolo that this was his own money, which he had made through various investments, there was the evidence furnished from this side and the evidence of Bernstorff's cablegram, etc., directing the money to be furnished?

Mr. BECKER. Yes. It might be desirable to call attention, for the purpose of public record, to a singular error that occurred in this country as to one of those messages that I have not read.

Senator WOLCOTT. Have you left Bolo yet?

Mr. BECKER. Not quite. On March 20, 1916, which, according to the best of my recollection now, was after the first remittance had come through by wireless, the following dispatch was sent by Bernstorff to his home office:

BECKER EXHIBIT No. 15.

No. 692. With reference to telegram No. 685, please advise our Minister in Berne that some one will call on him who will give him the password Saint Regis and who wishes to establish relations with the foreign office. Intermediary further requests that influence may be brought to bear upon our press to pass over the change in the inner political situation in France so far as possible in silence, in order that things may not be spoiled by German approval.

BERNSTORFF.

Pavenstedt stated, about that request of the intermediary, as follows:

Yes, this password was at Bolo's request. It was given by me to Count Bernstorff, in case he should later on wish to get in contact with German officials or Germany at the Berne Embassy, that he would be received—that he had something to show. He said it might be necessary for him at some future date to get in contact with the German foreign office, and that he would go to Switzerland—to Berne—and we had the German Embassy there and he wished to have something to identify him, that he was all right. I mean that he was a person that could be trusted. He had been in contact with me here and it shows this word St. Regis which I told Bernstorff about, and he cabled it over.

Senator STERLING. What do you read from?

Mr. BECKER. From the deposition of Pavenstedt, which was used on the trial of Bolo.

Now, here is the last one of the series, and it was given out by the State Department and used upon the trial of Bolo, in the following form. It was in the form of a cablegram from Herr von Jagow, addressed to Bernstorff, No. 206, May 31, 1916:

The person announced in telegram 692 of March 20 has not yet reported himself at the legation in Berne. Is there any more news on your side of Bolo?

That, you will note, was the only place in the series of messages as given out by the State Department that the name of Bolo actually appeared. On the trial it was used in evidence by the French Government in that form. After the trial the French Government came into information, I think, from the State Department, showing that there had been an error in deciphering the message, which, of course, was sent in the cipher code, and that the name Bolo did not actually appear at the end of that message at all. The group was obscure as to what it did mean, but it was finally determined by the cipher expert of the State Department that it did not mean Bolo. With a high-mindedness that surely does credit to the French Government—Bolo had already been convicted and sentenced to death—Bolo's counsel was informed of that error by the State Department here, and had full advantage of the fact on appeal. But the substance of the decision of the appellate court was that the evidence was so strong against Bolo that even subtracting that identification of him in the series of telegrams, his conviction should be sustained.

Senator WOLCOTT. Now, Mr. Becker, on the trial of Bolo was there evidence put in against him other than his connection with this German purchase of Le Journal in this country?

Mr. BECKER. The whole Swiss episode was gone into in connection with Cavallini, who was the intermediary acting with Bolo and with Abbas Hilmi, who brought Bolo 1,000,000 francs in 1915 from German sources, and who also distributed money, as was claimed, to various Italian deputies.

Senator WOLCOTT. I asked the question as to whether he was convicted, as you have detailed here, in connection with the various journal purchases more out of curiosity than anything else.

Mr. BECKER. I think it would be fair to state that the evidence of Pavenstedt, the evidence of Hugo Schmidt, and the evidence of the messages passing between Washington and Berlin, and the evidence of the documents themselves tracing money direct from the foreign office in Berlin to the pocket of Bolo, were considered in the French court the most conclusive evidence that was presented to them.

Senator KING. I suppose the evidence concerning the Swiss transaction showed that he had received a large sum of German money from Abbas Hilmi to whom you have referred.

Mr. BECKER. But that all rested more in word of mouth than it did in documents. Of course, the damning thing against Bolo was the series of documents sent over from public and private records.

Senator STERLING. You spoke about the use of Swiss money in Italy. Was that for the purpose of influencing Italian deputies? I understood you to say so.

Mr. BECKER. There is a fund that is alleged to have been given to Cavallini to influence Italian deputies and Italian newspapers, but that has not been demonstrated in any court, and I am very careful, unless we have the sworn testimony, not to refer to anything in a positive way.

Senator STERLING. I did not know whether that was introduced in the trial of Bolo or not.

Mr. BECKER. There was considerable evidence there, and Cavallini was tried with Bolo. Under the French procedure that was possible, for him to be tried par contumace—tried by default. He was tried by default and condemned to death. The sentence in his case has never been executed.

Senator OVERMAN. Are you through with the Bolo incident?

Mr. BECKER. Just one other statement with reference to that. Bolo met in America, unquestionably, many people. We have traced a good many contacts of that sort, but I would like to state positively that there is no evidence to connect him in any guilty contact; that is, the persons with whom he was in contact did not know what his real mission was, except in the case of Pavenstadt, unless you judge for yourselves that the evidence of the chauffeurs and bell-hops at the apartment is credible, and that it is sustained by other evidence. That is a matter of opinion and I am not going to express any opinion about it.

(Thereupon at 1 o'clock p. m., the subcommittee took a recess until 2.30 o'clock p. m.)

AFTER RECESS.

The subcommittee met, pursuant to the taking of the recess, at 2.30 o'clock p. m.

TESTIMONY OF MR. ALFRED L. BECKER—Resumed.

Senator OVERMAN. Please proceed, Mr. Becker.

Mr. BECKER. We have the deposition of a gentleman who requests that he remain nameless. I shall very gladly follow Mr. Untermyer's example of handing the chairman his name on a slip of paper. He was sworn before the Attorney General—Mr. B.—and is a sort of a broker in New York. His deposition is in part, as follows:

Q. You have personal acquaintance with Count von Bernstorff?—A. Yes.

Q. When did you become acquainted with him?—A. In the summer and fall of 1914.

Q. Before the war broke out or after?—A. I am under the impression that I met him in the summer before the war broke out.

Q. Do you remember where you were at the time you met him—A. It was at the apartment of A. S. White at the Ritz Carlton, where the count frequently called. The principal place I got acquainted with him was at the White Pine Camp, in the Adirondacks, at Paul Smith's; it was the holiday time of 1914.

Q. After the war broke out?—A. Yes.

Q. Who was present at that holiday party?—A. Well, there was McCombs—

Q. Chairman of the National Committee?—A. Yes, and Count von Bernstorff and three or four other men. I have forgotten who they were, one was a young Englishman.

Q. That was Mr. White's camp?—A. Yes.

Q. And the count was there?—A. Yes.

Q. And seven or eight people in the party?—A. There must have been about 12, I should say.

Q. You got particularly well acquainted with the count, then?—A. Yes; we spent considerable time together each day. It so happened that an extremely cold snap came along, and we naturally kept where it was warm. Besides the large salon there are half a dozen or more cabins at the camp, and there was an inclination for those with things in common to chat in each other's cabins. Mr. McCombs, the count, and myself seemed to spend more time together than anyone else; perhaps we were more or less interested in Governmental affairs.

Q. Then he was in your cabin considerably?—A. Yes; we were together three or four hours at a time—Von Bernstorff is an extremely good mixer. Most everyone was calling him "Hans" within a couple of days. He talked to us in a very reasonable manner; that is to say, he felt that it was a pity that England and Germany should be fighting; and, personally, he seemed to regret it very much, as most of his friends were Englishmen or Americans.

Q. Did you say that he was educated in England?—A. I believe he studied at Oxford, and he said that his best friends in the world were English-speaking people; and, you know, he aped the English in his dress, and the Germans here felt somewhat slighted because he never went with Germans, and his argument was, "I was not sent here to meet Germans, I came here to cater to you people."

Q. Was the talk on some of the days that you were there on the subject of the German view being put before the public in the papers in the country?—A. Yes.

Q. Tell us just what was said on that, as well as you can recollect it—A. We were talking of the New York papers, and I made the remark that most of our papers here were very high-minded; for instance, if you wanted to put out a security of a new corporation, which was not tried out, and you should give the New York Sun an advertisement conditional upon there being a news item in their financial column, which is worth more than any advertisement, they wouldn't do it without a thorough investigation, and they would notify you that if their advertisement depended on that, you couldn't get it in, and I remarked that there were only two papers in New York City that I believed could be bought, and those were the Hearst papers and the Mail.

Senator OVERMAN. That is an opinion of this fellow who said that!

Mr. BECKER. This is the report of a conversation between this man and Bernstorff at this camp in the Adirondacks.

Senator REED. Is it put in here to prove some fact against a man?

Senator OVERMAN. What is the purpose of this?

Mr. BECKER. To inform the committee and the country.

Senator REED. Similar to the kind of information you gave when you were running for office and were using the——

Senator OVERMAN. Let us wait, about that. Let us find out about this first. You can examine later, Senator.

Senator REED. I think it is time, and I am going to make a direct objection, as a member of the Judiciary Committee, against that kind of a statement being made here, because it is an abuse, in my judgment, of the privileges of the committee to relate a conversation between an undisclosed man and Count von Bernstorff, in the pine woods of some State, in regard to another man who was not present, and without stating who the man was.

Senator NELSON. He is ready to give his name to the committee, as I understand it, privately.

Senator REED. Suppose he does give the name, privately, of a man who said that he said to Count von Bernstorff thus and so in regard to a man? Is that evidence in any sense? It is for this committee to say. I am here by sufferance, except that I am a member of the Judiciary Committee and I am here in that capacity. I have become curious enough about these proceedings to want to hear them.

Mr. BECKER. This deposition was taken about a year ago.

Senator OVERMAN. In connection with what?

Mr. BECKER. In connection with the Humbert case, I think, or the Bolo case; one or the other. It appears, on the front page of the deposition, which it was.

Senator WOLCOTT. Senator, I do not know what the substance of the matter is at all. I just dropped in here, but——

Senator OVERMAN. I understand that this was an affidavit taken in connection with Humbert, who was Senator Humbert of the French Journal.

Mr. BECKER. Let me refresh my recollection, if you please. It appears on the deposition. What, Senator, does it state on the front—the Bolo case or the Humbert case?

Senator WOLCOTT. It is in the matter of the inquiry as to Charles Humbert, Pierre Lenoir, and Guillaume Desouches.

Senator KING. As I understand, it relates to a statement said to have been made by Count von Bernstorff in 1914?

Senator REED. Let me correct you, Senator. This is where I objected. You can call it an objection if you want to. This witness was proceeding to read an affidavit which professed to relate to a conversation between this unknown person who makes the affidavit and Count von Bernstorff, somewhere in the pine woods, in which reflection was made upon people who were not there at all; and, of course, it is the veriest hearsay; and, of course, it was a mere statement of one man to another about another.

It seems to me when the processes of the Senate are used to bring out that kind of testimony, it simply becomes a scandal mill; that is all. No man can meet that sort of thing. I might express an opinion about this witness in a conversation a thousand miles from here, or in the next room, and it might be very derogatory to him. It might be very indecent for me to do it. Then, to have that afterwards brought into a court, or before a committee, and have it said that Reed said concerning Mr. Becker so-and-so, at a certain time, would be very unfair to Mr. Becker.

Senator KING. Suppose I should say, Mr. Becker, that I believed that John Jones, some lawyer in New York, could be bribed or induced to take up some malodorous case or do some act that was improper—no contention that he had, or that any effort had ever been made—and suppose that he was not the subject of investigation. Do you think that would be competent or proper? Would it not be doing a great injustice to that man, John Jones, of whom I spoke?

If, however, the investigation were as to whether or not he had been bribed to do this act, this proposed proof would be admissible, of the statement made, if the party who made the statement was the one who acted, and the statement were proved to be correct by the consummated act.

I just suggest that, if there is not a parallel between the case I just suggested and the proposed testimony?

Mr. BECKER. Do you ask me for a suggestion or an opinion about that, Senator?

Senator KING. Is not that a parallel case?

Mr. BECKER. I am not anybody's lawyer here.

Senator KING. I know you are not, but——

Mr. BECKER. Neither for nor against Hearst or von Bernstorff or anybody else. I am only a witness, just the same as you gentlemen are only Senators. But the point about this is not so much what Mr. Hearst was up to as what von Bernstorff was up to, which is the primary subject of the inquiry.

Senator KING. I do not know to whom this refers, so I am not calling anybody's name.

Senator STERLING. I have just come in. What is this about?

Senator OVERMAN. A suggestion by von Bernstorff that certain newspapers could be bought.

Senator NELSON. This relates to von Bernstorff.

Senator OVERMAN. What do you think about it, Senator?

Senator WOLCOTT. I do not think it is proper to be admitted at all. I think it is perfectly proper for the witness to disclose, if he knows—and I think he does—that von Bernstorff was trying to find avenues of approach to the American public through some newspapers; but for comments made to von Bernstorff by this man, that man, and the other man, or comments made by von Bernstorff to people in this country, to be offered, it seems to me is improper. The material thing is his efforts to get at the public press.

Senator NELSON. You have not given the rest of the deposition. Mr. Becker. Is there not something else in the deposition here to indicate that von Bernstorff wanted to secure an opening in the press for his propaganda?

Mr. BECKER. The deposition goes on for two or three pages further, and there is more about it; but, of course, now that the objection is made, I am not permitted to discuss what is in it.

Senator NELSON. I am asking you that because if this leads up to the other matter—that von Bernstorff intended to secure papers in this country for his propaganda—then it is material.

Mr. BECKER. It does.

Senator REED. Nobody in the world would object to that, I think.

Senator WOLCOTT. That is material. I quite agree that it is very material to know that Count von Bernstorff was interesting himself to secure papers.

Senator KING. Yes.

Senator WOLCOTT. But his theory, or the information given to him that he might secure certain papers, or bribe certain papers, is not material unless it can be followed, to show that he did get them.

Senator NELSON. Or tried to get them.

Senator WOLCOTT. And failed. That was, of course, beneficial to the paper in question.

Senator REED. The question I objected to was a statement by this witness that he said that certain men could be approached. That ought not to be admitted against any man on earth, I do not care whether he is good or bad—that sort of statement. But the fact that von Bernstorff was trying to bribe papers in America is a perfectly proper thing, and can be proven without employing the means of an affidavit for the purpose of slandering an individual——

Mr. BECKER. I am not bringing anything here for the purpose of slandering anybody. I can interrupt even a Senator to say that.

Senator REED. Certainly you can. I have not said you are.

Mr. BECKER. I think you have stated that I brought these things out in my campaign and that sort of thing; and I resent it and deny it.

Senator REED. We will accept that challenge and take it up at the proper time, as to whether you brought them out in your campaign, and whether your chief brought them out in his campaign. However, that is neither here nor there. The point I am making is that it is perfectly proper to show anything that Count Bernstorff did. I believe Count Bernstorff tried to use money in this country to control the press, as far as he could use it. I do not think he got very far with our press. I hope he did not get anywhere at all. But he may have gotten some papers.

However, the point is that this is brought in here, and men's names are brought in and a statement is allowed to be read that somebody made up in the pine woods of Michigan or some other place about them. By that means you can destroy the character of any man on earth.

Senator NELSON. I suggest that we go into executive session to pass on this question.

Senator OVERMAN. Yes. Will you point out, Mr. Becker, where you were interrupted in reading this deposition?

Mr. BECKER. It was just at the top of page 6.

I would like to call your attention, in this connection, to the subsequent conversation that is referred to later.

Senator OVERMAN. That is what I was trying to get at—the subsequent conversation.

Mr. BECKER. May I make this statement also? There is a reference here, that I did not intend to read, to a transaction or an alleged transaction of $200,000. It is only a rumor. It was never substantiated, so I had no intention of reading it.

Senator OVERMAN. I would like to see the connection.

Mr. BECKER. I will show the part I refer to. It is on page 7.

Senator OVERMAN. Thank you. I want to read that to the committee.

Mr. BECKER. That is about as far as it should be read.

(At this point, at 2.35 o'clock p. m., the subcommittee went into executive session. At 2.55 o'clock p. m. the subcommittee resumed the public hearing.)

Senator OVERMAN. It is going to be a hard task for you to read this affidavit so as to give what we want and leave out what we do not want; but, if you can, I wish you would do it. We do not want anything read that gives the opinion of the witness as to whether a man could be bought or could not be bought, or whether his newspaper could be bought or could not be bought; but anything concerning von Bernstorff, tending to show his purpose over here to acquire newspapers, or to do anything toward German propaganda, we would like you to read.

Mr. BECKER. I will do the best I can.

Senator WOLCOTT. I do not know how Mr. Becker is going to frame it. I know how I would frame it if I were in his place. I want to make some statement of my position with reference to this affidavit after he is through. It depends upon the way he reads it; it depends upon the way he makes his statement.

Senator OVERMAN. A member of the committee may make any statement he wishes.

Mr. BECKER. Well, on the top of page 6 it reads as follows:

Q. Did he (von Bernstorff) express a desire to get in some paper?—A. Yes, he thought it absolutely necessary.

Next is a matter relative to Herman Ridder. Shall I read that?

Senator OVERMAN. No; you can leave that out.

Senator WOLCOTT. He is in now.

Senator OVERMAN. Read the whole thing.

Senator WOLCOTT. May I make my statement here? My position with respect to this deposition that I want to get on the record is this—I say this, not because it is perhaps worth while, but yet I feel it necessary as far as my record is concerned—that this deposition is competent evidence to this extent: For the purpose of showing the desires and the activities of Count von Bernstorff in the matter of securing avenues of approach to American public influence, and that in attempting to secure those avenues of approach he had the purpose, and so expressed it, if possible to purchase newspapers in this country, and in some cases, if necessary, to bribe them. He was prepared to go the whole limit, according to his statement, in order to get the means of spreading German propaganda. That is material to this investigation. I think it is wholly immaterial if the deposition be used for the purpose of showing the various newspapers and persons that he discussed, whom he thought he could reach with money, and I think those names should be omitted, and if the witness goes beyond that, I want it to be known that it is contrary to what I believe is right and just.

Senator KING. I assent to the views expressed by Senator Wolcott.

Senator OVERMAN. I have asked the witness to confine himself to Von Bernstorff and what he proposed to do.

Senator STERLING. My view can be very briefly stated, and that is this, that we are entitled to the evidence showing Count von Bernstorff's efforts in the matter of purchasing newspapers for use in spreading German propaganda. In the present instance we are attempting to show that by conversations with Count von Bernstorff, and my view is that we are entitled to the whole of the conversations with Count von Bernstorff, having that purpose, whether it means particular names or particular newspapers or not.

Senator WOLCOTT. May I add one thought that I omitted? If there is any evidence available to show that any of these persons or papers mentioned were actually secured by him, then I think it is quite pertinent now to disclose their names out of that deposition. But unless it is going to be followed by some such evidence that he accomplished his purpose with those people, I think they should not be used.

Senator OVERMAN. You understood what I said?

Mr. BECKER. I hope so.

Senator OVERMAN. That is the ruling of the committee.

Senator STERLING. I may add further that to me the bare mention of the name of a newspaper or a newspaper proprietor is not in itself an implication that the newspaper was purchased.

Senator OVERMAN. The mere fact that he said he was going to purchase it is not reason for saying that it could be purchased.

Senator KING. My point, elaborating a little further, is this, that very grave injustice might be done in this or in any other case that might be called up for consideration. To illustrate, recently we were considering the question of prohibition. I think at that time as a matter of public knowledge the prohibitionists and the antiprohibitionists were quite active, some trying to secure and some opposing certain proposed legislation. If some third person said to some other party, in discussing the question, "I believe we can get Senator A or Senator B or Senator D, or Congressmen A, B, or C, to vote in favor of the liquor interests," and years after some other question, collateral, was under investigation, it seems to me that it would be very unjust and very unfair to put into the record the fact that years before somebody had said that he thought that some Senator or some Congressman could be got to vote for the liquor interests. That in a concrete way illustrates the point that I had in mind.

Senator NELSON. Mr. Chairman, I want to say that one of the purposes of this investigation is to investigate what we call in common parlance the German propaganda in this country, and anyone who was conversant with the situation knows that von Bernstorff was the head of this propaganda. Now, we are seeking to show by this evidence that von Bernstorff had his eye on securing access to the public press, and that he was going to make an effort to secure certain papers to carry on this propaganda. If we have not a right to go into that, then this whole investigation to my mind is a farce.

Senator OVERMAN. The Chair has ruled that you can do that.

Senator KING. Any question is admissible if it is to show that the purpose was to use the press for the purpose of carrying on German propaganda, and if it can be shown that any newspapers, pursuant to any such purpose, were engaged in German propaganda, and were purchased or their services procured by Count von Bernstorff, that would be admissible.

Senator OVERMAN. It will doubtless be remembered that in the lobby investigation the names of some of the most influential men in this country were mentioned, and they came before the committee. Their names were mentioned by Mr. Mulhall. I do not want any opinion given as to whether this or that man was purchasable or not, but anything to the effect that Bernstorff wanted to acquire or purchase newspapers is admissible, and the witness, if he understands, will testify to that.

Mr. BECKER. Suppose the chairman reads such parts as he thinks proper.

Senator OVERMAN. I suppose that I might edit it and put it in later, but I thought you could do it better—that if you could do it it would be better.

Mr. BECKER. I have reason to believe that whatever I do, my good faith would be attacked, and it is much more comfortable if your honor would do it instead.

Senator OVERMAN. If you wish, I will put it in in the morning, after editing it.

Mr. BECKER. I might put with it also a paper that is a translation from a clipping from a German newspaper of December 8, 1914, so that you can see whether that ought to be brought in.

Senator KING. It is referred to in the deposition?

Mr. BECKER. No; but it might, in view of the discussion, be doubtful whether it should be read. It is a clipping from the Vossische Zeitung of December 8, 1914.

Just another word before we quit this subject. The proofs that I have show that on the Morning American the editorials having to do with foreign relations of the country, with the attitude toward Germany, and so forth, are shown to have been written during the war period almost entirely by Phillip Francis, who was an editorial writer on the American at that time. The exceptions are those of editorials signed with the name of William Randolph Hearst himself.

Senator OVERMAN. Who is Francis?

Mr. BECKER. He was a Californian that was brought on East to take an editorial position on the Hearst papers. Of course, on the evening paper, the Evening Journal, Brisbane was the editorial writer.

Senator OVERMAN. Just for my own curiosity, the Deutsches Journal went out of business, did it not?

Mr. BECKER. That was after we entered the war. That clipping is from a paper published in Berlin, Germany, known as the Vossische Zeitung.

Senator WOLCOTT. Is it in German?

Mr. BECKER. It is a translation in English.

Senator OVERMAN. You mean the Hearst paper called the Deutsches Journal went out of business just after the war?

Mr. BECKER. Yes.

Senator OVERMAN. What was its position before we went into war?

Mr. BECKER. Identical with that of the other Hearst papers.

Senator NELSON. Did you put in those editorials you referred to?

Mr. BECKER. I have submitted this editorial to the committee, this article from the Vossische Zeitung. I will say that it was written by an individual who has been proved to have been one of the closest associates with William Bayard Hale after he went to Germany in 1916—Prof. Stein.

You might be interested if I were to give you a word about Adolph Pavenstedt. Pavenstedt is now interned. He was the one whom Bolo met in this country and he was the intermediary between Bolo and Bernstorff. Pavenstedt was the senior member of the firm of G. Amsinck & Co., by the evidence of a gentleman named Abraham Stein, whose deposition I have here.

Senator OVERMAN. Is that the same man who wrote this article?

Mr. BECKER. No; that is another man. He is the senior member of the firm of A. H. Stein & Co., of New York. It appears that some time after we entered the war, the date being somewhat uncertain, a man whose name he was not able to give, and Pavenstedt, met at the office of G. Amsinck & Co. This man spoke the German language, and he asked Stein if his firm had any connections in the Dutch East Indies. Stein then continues, as follows:

I told him we have some people which we are connected with in business. We have not got our house there any more.

He then stated:

I would like to make this clear to you. After we liquidated our business out there we appointed an agent in case we might have some business out there. He stated then he would like to send some merchandise either to Sourebeya or Semarang, and I asked him what merchandise it was? He said they were rifles and ammunitions. I says, "I am awfully sorry, but I can not accommodate you because I would not mix myself in any affairs like that, because first of all I am an American citizen and I wish to remain neutral."

Senator WOLCOTT. This was after we entered into the war?

Mr. BECKER. No; this was before. This can be fixed by other dates. This plot is a well-known affair. It was the plot to send munitions to create an uprising in India. It has been the subject of a trial in California. Some of those rifles were kept in New York. I merely wish to call attention to the fact that Pavenstedt came with this German and had a talk with Stein with reference to whether the shipment could be arranged to Sourebeya and Semarang, which are ports in the Dutch East Indies.

And a few days afterwards I met Mr. Pavenstedt and he asked me, "Well, could you do anything for the gentleman?" I said, "No, Pavenstedt; I could not. I would not have anything to do with him." He asked me for what reasons. I explained to him just the same thing as I told the other gentleman. He says, "I think you are right not to take any chances."

That was unquestionably the plot that was fomented by Capt. Hans Tauscher to send arms and ammunition to be used at the uprising in India.

I want to call your attention there also to a couple of matters relating to prewar arrangements for propaganda, one of them having to do with propaganda in this country and the other in Turkey.

Senator WOLCOTT. Pre-European war?

Mr. BECKER. Yes. The first transaction was in 1909 and had to do with George von Skal. Von Skal was a German reserve officer, formerly connected with the Staats Zeitung, and in 1906 he was appointed commissioner of accounts by Mayor McClellan. In 1909 he made a trip to Berlin and conferred with Col. Brose, chief of the intelligence department of the German General Staff, and was selected by Col. Brose to compile statistics on military and economic subjects for military purposes.

Von Skal's testimony is that in 1909 it was all arranged. The question was asked him:

How did you come to meet Capt. von Papen?

His answer was:

Well, it had been arranged long before that I should do this work. It was really arranged in 1909. I happened to be in Berlin in 1909 and met a gentleman—that is, Brose—who had served in the same regiment I had when I was in the army, and he was the Chief of the Intelligence Office of the General Staff, of the news bureau, as they called it, and he said he had often thought of me because when war broke out they wanted to have some one here in the military attaché's office, who could be in touch with the press, see, who might tell them what should be done with the press, and who could also take clippings from newspapers here, such as might be interesting for them, not alone for the war, but also for the subsequent——

Q. Economical statistics?

A. Representing the history of the war, you know, for writing the history, and he said, of course, would I not do it, and I said I would undertake to do it.

of course, under the condition that if America in any way—the United States became in any way involved in the war I would have to drop the matter off. As that it had nothing to do with the United States.

Then he testified further that after the European war broke out, acting under the intelligence department or the news bureau, as it was called, he was with Von Papen here in New York and sometimes assisted in coding dispatches for Von Papen with the official code of the general staff.

I have also the deposition of Salih Gurdji, which relates to matters not entirely related. I call attention to it simply as showing German preparations for war, and German propaganda. Salih Gurdji is a native of Bagdad. Prior to the war he was the owner of the Ottoman News Agency at Constantinople. Before the war, in May, 1914, he was offered 40,000 and later 100,000 marks by the German ambassador at Constantinople, Baron Wangenheim, for the control of his news agency for the purpose of spreading German propaganda in Turkey. When the war broke out, they seized his newspaper, and then having made no compensation to him, gave him a commission to go to Switzerland and Italy and act as a correspondent for his own news service, which he carried out for a while.

First, as to the prewar propaganda, I want to call your attention to a perfectly innocent and proper propaganda that was carried out in this country long before the war. Nevertheless it is explicit German propaganda for the purpose of inculcating kultur in this country, and I might cite, as an example—the fact is, it is something I am familiar with, the foundation of the Germanic museum at Harvard, which is my alma mater, and the matter of the arrangements that were made for the exchange of professors between German universities and American universities.

Then, here is another example. No criticism attaches to it whatever, but it illustrates the early inception of the German propaganda movement.

Senator OVERMAN. It was testified here that Germany had a corps of people consisting of 31 men as far back as 1899, who came over here for that purpose. Has that been called to your attention?

Mr. BECKER. I have heard of it in the papers.

During the year 1911, but for one year only, there was published a German edition of the magazine that was known as Current Literature. I believe it is now known as Current Opinion. It consisted mainly of translations of the articles appearing in the American publication, in Current Literature. But there were also special articles, which are described as follows in the announcement:

This will be, in effect, a German edition of Current Literature, with the addition of a special department devoted to the kultur movement fostered so ardently by the German Emperor and his advisers, on one side, and President Taft and President Roosevelt, on the other, for the interchange of thought between the great universities of the two countries, the closer acquaintance of each nation with the artistic and intellectual achievements of the other, and, in general, a better understanding between these two great nations of the Teutonic race.

The list of editors and officers is interesting. The president was George Sylvester Viereck; the vice president, Edward J. Wheeler; the treasurer, Max R. Hein; secretary, Ely Simpson; assistant treasurer, Adam Dingwall; assistant secretary, Alfred Rau. The German representative was Louis Viereck, the father of George Sylvester Viereck.

I will next attempt, as well as I can, to explain to you, from such researches as I have been able to make, the organization of German propaganda in Germany. That, of course, has not been generally published; consequently our information is not so good on it as it may be later. It is more or less of a secret of the German Government.

I will do the best I can to give you the outline of it, as far as the secret services of the various countries have been able to get it together and it has come to my attention, together with the principal personalities who were concerned in Germany.

First, there was the press and propaganda bureau of the foreign office, or Answaertiges Amt, to give the German name to it.

A person prominent in this was Baron Mumm von Schwarzenstein, the former minister to China. He has been described to me by Mr. Edwards, who went to Germany as William Bayard Hale's secretary, in a sense, as being a typical chink with a large, impassive face. There seems to have been some thought that orientalism was a species of education for propaganda.

The director of the war press bureau in the foreign office was at first Dr. Otto Hammann; after November 1, 1916, Maj. Deutelmoser, who had formerly been director of the press bureau of the war department.

Senator OVERMAN. That is, of the German war department?

Mr. BECKER. Of the German war department.

One function of the foreign office bureau was to prepare press matter to circulate in foreign countries, of a pro-German character.

The American section of the foreign office was under the management of Count Montgelas. He was one who took a great deal of interest in the American correspondents over there and unquestionably tried to influence them.

There was in the foreign office a chief censor who seems to have had the final word, as far as the foreign office was concerned, as to what should be allowed to go out of the country. His name was Dr. Roediger.

The method in general was this: Any correspondent who wished to get an article through had to submit it to the department that was interested. If the article dealt with a matter relating to politics—international politics—he submitted it in the first instance to the foreign office, and it was passed upon by Dr. Roediger.

If it related to matters concerning the German Navy it was passed on by the Navy Department.

If it related to the Army, it was passed on by the War Department.

There was another character that ought to be mentioned as being a great German propagandist, and that is Dr. Mathias Erzberger. According to the authority of the British secret service, he was in charge of the publicity department of the admiralty.

According to an article in the Quarterly Review for July, 1918, by Lewis Melville, to which I am indebted for a great many of these details, and which I think are correctly stated, he was in charge of what was called the press bureau for the influencing of neutrals—Presseabteilung zur Beeinflussung der Neutralen. Perhaps both are correct. That may have been a Navy Department bureau.

Erzberger is a very prominent character in the Centrist Party in Germany. He was a member of the armistice conference, and it was he who, in 1915, went into Switzerland and met the Ex-Khedive Abbas Hilmi and called him to account for his expenditure of moneys which had been given to him for propaganda purposes in France and Italy.

It appears by the evidence in the Bolo case that Abbas Hilmi finally received a receipt in full from Erzberger, although it appears that Abbas Hilmi had absorbed about 50 per cent of the moneys for his own personal use.

The admiralty had also its own correspondence service, mainly intended for foreign countries.

Then there was the War Department Press Bureau, which was largely concerned with domestic matters, but it had also a foreign section, called the Auslandsstelle, one function of which was to read the foreign press.

It issued a daily review of the foreign press for the use of German press writers, and issued press material for circulation in foreign countries.

One person concerned with that department was Lieut. Col. Herwarth, who formerly was German military attaché at Washington, and for whom, apparently, von Bernstorff had a very warm feeling, because he wirelessly over there several times to inquire about his health.

As a part of the foreign office there was what was called the central section for foreign news service, or Zentralstelle für Auslandsdienst. This was under the direction of Dr. Thiel, and was the bureau to which Dr. Fuehr reported. It was charged with the preparation of news matter, films, books, etc., for war propaganda in foreign countries, and was the principal source from which foreign newspaper correspondents in Berlin obtained material for their dispatches.

William Bayard Hale, however, was not placed on the same basis as other correspondents in Berlin; and the evidence of it is that he had access to the higher authorities in these different departments and obtained his information not from the press bureaus but from authorities of higher rank, for use by the International News Service.

It has been said—I am unable to verify it—that Capts. von Papen and Boy-Ed, although attached to the embassy as military and naval attachés, respectively, really belonged to the propaganda bureaus of the War Office and the Admiralty.

In foreign countries the medium for the dissemination of propaganda was mainly through the embassies, legations, and consular service. Work of the same kind was done, however, by the banking representatives of German banks, such as the Banco Aleman Transatlantico, the Deutsche Ueberseeische Bank, a subsidiary of the Deutsche Bank, the Banco Germanico, and other banks having many branches in Asia and Central and South America.

It is perfectly characteristic of the work of the German propagandist representatives that they had some connection with an activity of an entirely different sort. Dr. Bernard Dernburg was nominally an American representative of the German Red Cross.

Dr. H. F. Albert was commercial attaché of the German Embassy, although it is proved, I think, conclusively, that he was engaged in propaganda.

Dr. Isaac Strauss was nominally American representative of the committee for the east, which was a Jewish organization designed to promote the interests of the Jews in the Near and Far East. As a matter of fact, it has been proved that he was largely concerned in straight Jewish propaganda in America.

Owing to the stoppage of German mails by measures taken by the British, the best means of dissemination of propaganda in North and Central and South America proved to be the wireless.

At the commencement of the war there were wireless plants capable of receiving and transmitting from and to the Berlin station at Sayville, Long Island, and Tuckerton, N. J. These were used as the means for receiving propaganda.

This material was then forwarded to various centers for distribution in Central and South America and the West Indies by cable.

The expenses of the New York bureau, conducted by Dr. Fuehr, for such cable services amounted to many thousands of dollars a month.

A letter from a German propagandist agent at Corumba, Brazil, dated May 27, 1916, which was intercepted by the British secret service, reads in part as follows:

It would be very fitting if, immediately after the war, a commission of wireless telegraphy were sent to all the States of South America to obtain concessions from the different governments for the establishment of wireless stations and to start constructing the same immediately. The Sayville-Tuckerton station has been invaluable, and without it South America would have been in the hands of the Anglo-French news service.

The establishment of wireless is certainly cheaper than cable and impresses Creole governments by its simplicity and modernity.

There was published some time ago in the Providence Journal what purported to be, and apparently authentically was, a chart prepared in the German foreign office which embraced a scheme for a world-wide system of electrical companies under the direction of the German Government, through which ultimately there would be a world-wide system of wireless telegraphy with the central control in Berlin.

Throughout all the countries of the world, wherever there has been a German colony, by which I mean a group of German residents there, they have raised sums for the dissemination of propaganda news service.

In the same letter of the agent from Corumba, Brazil, whose letter I refer to above, it is stated:

In consequence of the intensive statement of the newspapers here and regular delivery of good German telegraphic news, the German colony here has succeeded in winning over for the most part the opinion of the people of the country who at the beginning of the war were hostile to Germany. The financial sacrifice of the colony runs to about 500 marks a month for telegraphic charges, but doubtless this will bear fruit after the war.

Then, again, here is an intercepted letter from San Juan, Porto Rico, within the dominion of the United States, which reads, in part, as follows.

Senator KING. To whom was that?

Mr. BECKER. I am not aware. It is something which has been furnished us by the British secret service, as I recall:

Through the intervention of Mr. "C," secretary of the German-American Chamber of Commerce, we receive daily communiqués issued by headquarters.

These official reports are forwarded to the local newspapers and published at the German consulates. For this purpose the colony has put aside $6,400 until the end of 1915.

Senator KING. I am just a little curious to know—how did you come into possession of these, if it is not asking too much, rather than the State Department?

Mr. BECKER. As to that, I think the State Department is undoubtedly in possession of this; but it is characteristic of intelligence services that they help each other with documents, and that has been notably so throughout this country. We have all been banded together. Everything that I have been able to get has been turned over to the departments of the Federal Government, and they have responded when it was proper for them to do so.

As a matter of fact, it is characteristic that the intelligence services do not operate through the usual diplomatic channels. There is not maintained the formality of intercourse with foreign governments in intelligence service that is maintained in diplomatic communication. I have on occasion received direct from the British secret service information which I have handed on to the other departments, owing to personal connections that I have made. It is the method that is followed. This writer continues:

A special committee deals with the publication of our cablegrams and looks after the interest of the German cause, issuing news which serves this purpose. We have also acquired a German war film.

This committee had at its disposal $1,454.92.

The colony paid $500 to publish a pro-German book in Spanish. At the suggestion of the Imperial Embassy in Washington we forwarded 20 copies of this book to our diplomatic representatives in Central and South America.

Another element of official propaganda in German is the Wolf Telegram Bureau, which is semiofficial and spreads what is given out by the Government as far as it can throughout the world.

One curious method in German propaganda was disclosed by the evidence of George Odell, who was a correspondent of the New York Evening Mail in Germany, both before and after the United States entered the war. I am wrong about that. I think he went to Germany with Bernstorff, on the steamer on which Bernstorff returned: so that he was there only a very short time before we entered the war.

He was introduced to certain political figures in Germany by this Dr. Roediger, and on the suggestion made to him by Dr. Roediger, of the foreign office, the chief censor of the foreign office, that he go to see these individuals, and among those whom he saw were extreme radicals. At least they had the reputation in Germany of being radicals. For instance, there were Prof. Von Gaevernitz, Freiburg University; Prof. Kurtz, of Heidelberg; Dr. Heckscher, leader in the Reichstag; and Dr. Saenger, editor of Die Neue Rundschau.

Those individuals then gave him expressions of their radical views, which he made into articles which were published in the Mail, being allowed to go through by cable or wireless.

The one that interests me particularly appears to have been derived from either Von Gaevernitz or Heckscher—it was not quite certain which—and was a dispatch which came over to this country about the middle of 1917, the effect of which was that the Kaiser was about to be overthrown. Then, utilizing the same sources of information, after Odell returned to America in the fall of 1917, long before we entered the war, there was prepared and distributed through what was practically an adjunct of the Evening Mail, known as the McClure Syndicate, a lot of press matter for publication in different newspapers; and it was all published in the Evening Mail.

I have the original press matter here, and without going into detail, it will be sufficient to state that these persons whose views are there stated, such as Von Gaevernitz, to whom Odell was sent by Roediger, the Kaiser's chief censor in the foreign office, expressed views to the effect that there was a great democratic movement in Germany; that it was influenced largely by President Wilson's international policy; that the Kaiser was going to be shortly greatly limited in power; and, possibly, there is even a suggestion that he was going to be dethroned.

Senator REED. I beg your pardon. What was the time of this?

Mr. BECKER. These were published in the latter part of 1917; the very end of the year.

I have all the articles here. I do not want to take the time to call attention to them, but the headlines are fairly significant.

Liberal View Gains Strength From President's Appeals.

Reform Demand.

Gaevernitz Sees Good for German People in Victory of Democracy.

Senator REED. I do not want to interrupt you further than to get a fact that I was not sure I heard, and I am interested in this: This work was done, which you are referring to, as a part of German propaganda originating in Germany? Is that your view of it?

Mr. BECKER. If it is my view that you are asking for——

Senator REED. That is what I want.

Mr. BECKER. It is my view that it was desired, at this time, by the propaganda bureau of the foreign office to spread the idea abroad that the Kaiser's power was going to be limited; that there was going to be a democratic reform in Germany; and that the purpose of it was to paralyze military effort in the United States.

Senator REED. This was in the fall of 1917?

Mr. BECKER. Yes, sir.

Senator REED. And these articles were printed in a great number of papers, were they, throughout the United States?

Mr. BECKER. In a great many. They were published in full in the Mail.

Senator REED. It seemed to me that I saw a great many articles of that kind in different papers, and I was wondering if this was the source of them.

Mr. BECKER. I think that it was, very largely.

Senator REED. Do you know whether, after this time, which you say was the fall of 1917, the same influences were at work in getting out similar matter?

Mr. BECKER. I am unable to trace it beyond just this period.

Senator REED. You do know as a matter of fact, from your recollection, do you not, that similar articles, articles of a similar character, have been appearing ever since, even down to this date?

Mr. BECKER. Of course, it ultimately came true.

Senator REED. Yes.

Mr. BECKER. But the significant point is that we traced it right back, through Odell's somewhat reluctant statement, to inspiration in the German foreign office more than a year before it ever came true.

Senator REED. I was just wondering how far your papers connected it up with this matter.

Senator WOLCOTT. Had the Mail been purchased by Dr. Rumely at the time these articles were published?

Mr. BECKER. A long time before; over two years.

Senator WOLCOTT. Was the Mail then under this control at the time of the publication of these articles?

Mr. BECKER. It still was. One of the individuals whom Odell quotes in this series of articles is the vice president of the Deutsche Bank, and this vice president was quoted by Odell to the general effect that all except the big industries in Germany were, as the headline says, aligned in the struggle against kaiserism.

Senator OVERMAN. And you say the purpose of that propaganda was to paralyze the military arm over here?

Mr. BECKER. That is my opinion. My opinion is that they figured it out in Germany that if the idea got abroad that Germany was being democratized and that the Kaiser was being curbed, that would please the Americans so much that they would quit, or at least minimize their efforts in the war. Otherwise, it is hard to explain one of the Kaiser's own appointees handing out word about how the Kaiser was going to be overthrown, in that indirect way.

The work of the censorship under Dr. Roediger, of course, constituted a sort of negative propaganda. It prevented anything that was unfavorable to Germany from getting out of Germany.

Another individual who has figured in these hearings and who was in Germany as a correspondent in 1916 is Louis E. Miller.

Senator NELSON. Whom did he represent?

Mr. BECKER. He represented himself, really. He was sending correspondence to be sold to American Jewish papers.

Senator WOLCOTT. Is he the fellow who had The Warheit?

Mr. BECKER. Yes. And merely as an incident of the workings of the censorship I will call attention to a small part of his statement. He says:

I was in Austria about two weeks and in Galicia about six or seven days. While I was in Germany I obtained from Edward Bernstein, one of the leaders of the minority in the Reichstag, a report from German missionaries in Armenia, which had been the subject of investigation by a committee of the Reichstag, and this report tended to show that the Turkish atrocities in Armenia had been countenanced by the German officials there. Mr. Bernstein said to me that he wanted me to take this report "over there," saying "We can do nothing in this country about it, and a million of the Armenians have been slaughtered and five hundred thousand still will be; they are going to be slaughtered as certain as death, unless America can prevent it. You take that report and submit it to your government and have it published, to see what you can accomplish there." These were his words and his injunction, and I showed it to Minister Egan (U. S. Minister in Denmark) and he told me not to publish it, but to bring it over to the State Department.

Q. How did you get it out of Germany?—A. They were very strict, and I committed it to memory.

Q. In order to get it out of Germany you committed it to memory?—A. Yes. I committed it to memory, and I did it so well that at least ninety-eight per cent of that report I could vouch for. This report is now on file in the State Department.

I refer to that mainly to show how impossible it was to get anything by the censor, except by some such means as that, when they did not want it to go through. Furthermore, it has been testified before the Attorney General that everything written by a correspondent had to pass the foreign office and also the postal censorship and the military censorship. There were three scannings by three different censorships before it was allowed to go through.

For the use of correspondents the Germans provided many sources of material.

The War Department Press Bureau issued the review of the foreign press, "Nachrichtung des Auslands."

Then there was the so-called "News," the "Nachrichtung Abteilung," which was issued by the Foreign Office Press Bureau.

Also the "Kriegs Nachrichtung" or "War Chronicle," which was a ready-made letter of so-called correspondence, issued under the name of M. Berg. The British Foreign Office suggests that it was probably Mathias Erzberger. I have some samples of it here. It was printed in English and in many other languages, and was furnished free of charge to any correspondent who would take it and use it. I will file these with the committee, if it is desired [exhibiting pamphlets].

Senator OVERMAN. Yes.

Mr. BECKER. Then there was the private news service, known as the "Transocean Korrespondenz." I will refer to that in a moment. There was also "La Correspondence Politique de l'Europe Central"—the political correspondence of Central Europe—published in French, English, Italian, and Spanish, at Zurich; a masqueraded publication, designed to get into the hands of correspondents, which was spread broadcast by mail to the newspapers throughout the world. Certain of the German newspapers also issued their correspondence and sent it abroad, and conducted services of that kind, such as the "Berliner Tageblatt" and the "Vossische Zeitung," for circulation in neutral countries, the latter known as "The Ullstein Group;" and the closest relations of William Bayard Hale were with that group.

Then there was the "Continental Times." This was a paper which was founded many years ago. Two years before the war it became the property of an Austrian Jewess, the divorced wife of an English editor. Since the outbreak of the war it has called itself a "Journal for Americans" in Europe, and has indulged in the most absurd German propaganda. It is perfectly frank and outspoken on the German side—so much so that it can hardly be called "propaganda," which we usually understand as something disguised and insidious. Among its contributors have been Aubrey Stanhope, R. L. Orchelle, Roger Casement, and Edward Lyell Fox; and I have here the checks that were sent to pay Edward Lyell Fox, through Schulz-Ruckgaber, of New York, for services rendered to the "Continental Times." One payment of $90 was made pursuant to a wireless from Berlin, dated January 5, 1917, and another payment of $90 was made March 6, 1917. Each is stated to be made for account of the "Continental Times," Berlin, and here is Edward Lyell Fox's receipt for each [exhibiting papers].

Senator OVERMAN. Let those go into the record.

Mr. BECKER. Yes. The Continental Times is a source of amusement, rather than anything else. I will present these copies. It was not a very serious publication. However, it was circulated as assiduously as possible in prisoners' camps wherever there were Americans or English-speaking persons, and also abroad, and although these particular issues do not show it, as a sort of bait to get it read, it published lists of prisoners.

I might mention also the Gazette des Ardennes, published in the French language, which was circulated all through northern France and Belgium, and was a much more subtle and insidious affair, designed to corrupt the sentiment of the French people themselves.

Senator OVERMAN. Where was that published?

Mr. BECKER. In Berlin, I think. I am not quite sure of that. At any rate, it was published by the Germans.

Then there was a branch of the ministry of education which was known as the America Institut. Its chief director was Dr. Walther Drechsler, who had formerly been master of German in the Middlesex School, near Boston, but after the war he became attached to the press department of the foreign office. The American representative was Assistant Director Dr. Karl Oscar Bertling. The organization consisted mostly of persons who had formerly been in America and were supposed to understand the American people.

Some of these organizations I have spoken of may or may not have been private institutions. There are some that were formerly private institutions. For example, there was the Verband Deutsch-Auslandischer Wirtschaftsverein, the Union of German Associations for Economic Activity in Foreign Countries, and the Deutsch-Amerikanischer Wirtschaftsverband, the German American Economic Union. That was formed shortly before the European war, under the presidency of Hugo Ballin, who, as head of the Hamburg-American Line, was very well known in this country, and it comprised about 400 firms who banded together for commercial propaganda in the United States.

There were other similar associations for trade, and still others for "Kultur."

For commercial propaganda Germany has developed during the war the so-called Kartel system. No one knows more about that than Mr. Palmer, the Alien Property Custodian, and his assistant, Mr. Garvan, and I shall not attempt to tell you about that. He has far better information than anyone else.

The most important news agency was the Transocean, which has been referred to several times in the testimony here. Subsequently, it split up into two organizations, one of which was confined to news service and the other to preparing information for press publication. This was formed by various industrialists in Germany in the spring of 1914, and among them was August Thyssen, the famous coal and iron master. The real object of this Transocean Bureau, as evidenced by its despatches, was to furnish a daily wireless service and to conduct an intelligence service, with agents, ostensibly news gatherers, especially in South and Central America. It published what was called the Continental Korrespondenz, which was founded in 1915 by Ludwig Asch and was later edited by Guenther Thomas, concerning whom there has been some reference in this proceeding.

The British Secret Service remarked that it was obviously used at times by the German Government to spread throughout the world lies that could not very well be sent out through the official agency, the Wolff Telegraf Bureau, because in that case the Government would have to stand back of it; but if its lying rumors could be circulated through the Transocean, they would accomplish the same result without incriminating the Government.

Mr. Bielaski has given you a very excellent idea of the use of moving pictures, and I will not speak of that, except incidentally in a little while, in reference to one particular case that he did not mention.

Then there was an organization known as the "Kriegsausschuss der Deutschen Industrie" or the War Combine of German Industry. This association was ostensibly for the purpose of representing manufacturers in their dealings with the Government; but it published financial information of a frankly propagandist character, with titles such as "The German-American Crisis," "The Economic Conference at Paris," etc. It was circulated through financial channels.

Then there was what was known as the "Deutsch-Südamerikanisches Institut" or German-South American Institute; and while it had no direct participation in propaganda in the United States in any way, there is found in the transactions of that organization, published in November, 1916, at Aachen, Germany, a statement which shows pretty clearly, by inference at least, how extensive were the German Government's plans for propaganda after the war. This is merely a resolution of this one society, but, as you will see, it represented a detail of a much larger scheme, which it foreshadowed. It reads as follows:

Not the least important task which will confront Germany after the war is the provision of a more thorough and effective scheme of enlightening and influencing foreign opinion in the German interests. The war has made us realize as we never did before how much this has hitherto been neglected, being left, as it were, to particular groups and individuals, and not furthered by the nation as a whole, nor even by its leading elements.

After much preliminary investigation and consultation we have come to the conclusion that for the practical accomplishment of this task there must be, in the first place, a division of work into (1) the news service for the foreign press; (2) the safeguarding of German economic interests abroad; (3) the cultivation of scientific and artistic relations with foreign countries on the lines of a general "cultural" policy.

In the second place, it is necessary to make geographical division in order to do justice to the linguistic, political, and cultural peculiarities of each single sphere of activity abroad.

The institute, with the consent of the Imperial and the Prussian authorities concerned, has undertaken the third task within the extremely important and culturally homogeneous sphere constituted by the Spanish and Portuguese speaking countries of South and Central America. The direction of the news service and the safeguarding of economic interests will be set apart for other institutions to deal with.

Another organization of the same kind, about which we have better information than the others, will, I think, interest you on account of the proof there is of relationships with the German Government, and the extent to which the propaganda was carried on. This is the "Nachrichtendienst für die Länder Spanischer und Portugiesischer Zunge," which means a news service for lands of Spanish and Portuguese tongue, with headquarters at Frankfort, Germany, founded after the war. It was subsidized by the Foreign Office in 1915, with a payment of 10,000 marks, and in May, 1915, it received 3,000 marks for the month, and in September, 1915, 4,000 marks a month from the German Government. In August, 1914, the Deutsche Ueberseeische Bank assisted it in preparing mailing lists for Spain, Central and South America. I am going to refer a little later, at the risk of wearying you, to what I regard as a very important element in the German propaganda, and that is the use of the German branch banks and banking officials. In this case, the Deutsche Ueberseeische Bank, which, as I will show you in a moment, has numerous branches in South America, simply furnished a mailing list. The result of that was that in August, 1915, this organization printed 7,500 copies of its pamphlet in Spanish, 4,000 in Portuguese, and 17,000 in German. The organization has a branch at Barcelona; conducts a daily press service in Spain, and has founded in Barcelona two newspapers and a fortnightly magazine. You can see how useful the Deutsche Ueberseeische Bank would be in assisting in getting mailing lists and in spreading the propaganda through South America with the number of branches it has. It is a subsidiary, in a way, of the Deutsche Bank, the great German bank that Hugo Schmidt represented. Hugo Schmidt was the center here in New York for correspondence with the South American branches, both by cable and by wireless. Innumerable messages came to him from Berlin by wireless, and were then put into code and sent by him by cable to the whole of South America from New York. This bank has branches in the various countries of South America—Brazil, Argentina, Chile, Peru, Uruguay, Bolivia, etc. It has a total of 25 branches.

The Disconto Gesellschaft, another great bank in Berlin, has a subsidiary bank—the Brazilian Bank for Germany—which has five branches in Brazil.

Another great banking institution, the Dresdener Bank, has a subsidiary known as the Banco-Germanico, at Buenos Aires.

The Deutsche Bank is a bank in which I have been particularly interested, in the line of commercial propaganda and in general commercial activities during the war, because it was Hugo Schmidt's bank. One of the results of the investigation in the Bolo case was, as Mr. Bielaski has told you, that the Department of Justice became interested in the powers which the Attorney General possesses, which are greater than those that any Federal department possesses—the power of subpoena, of compelling the production of books and documents, and the giving of testimony.

Using those powers, with the consent of—in fact as an aid to—the Department of Justice, we took possession of about 56,000 papers—under subpoena from Hugo Schmidt, of the Deutsche Bank and Deutsche Ueberseeische Bank, papers that had accumulated during the three years that he had been their representative in this country, and I have made as careful a study as possible of those papers. I want to emphasize the influence that the peaceful penetration of America by these German banks has had, and what has been nothing more nor less than German propaganda before and after the war. The Deutsche Bank has a capital and reserve of 420,000,000 marks, or approximately $100,000,000. The Ueberseeische Bank, with its branches in South America and Spain, has a capital of 30,000,000 marks, and the Disconto Gesellschaft has a capital of 420,000,000 marks, with its branches.

Senator Wolcott. How much is a mark in American money?

Mr. Becker. Before the war it was worth about 23½ cents.

Senator Reed. What is it worth now?

Mr. Becker. I do not know what it is worth, because I have not seen quotations since the war. During the war it dropped to between 16 and 17 cents. I will refer a little later further to the activities of Hugo Schmidt and the banks which he represented.

I want to take up next the method of financing the expenditures for German propaganda in this country. Prior to Dr. Dernburg leaving for the United States on the 12th day of August, 1914, the German Imperial Government delivered to the agent of M. M. Warburg & Co., the great banking firm——

Senator Nelson. At Hamburg?

Mr. Becker. At Hamburg, 25,000,000 marks of German war bonds. They were really short-term notes, running nine months, I believe.

Senator Reed. What was the date?

Mr. Becker. August 12, 1914. Now, these are the treasury loan notes of a later issue, but I assume that the ones that were deposited with Warburg in Germany were—I know they were—a mark issue. Later on there was a dollar issue in this country. I will refer to this a little later.

Here is the letter to Kuhn, Loeb & Co., from M. M. Warburg & Co. This is a translation:

BECKER EXHIBIT No. 16.

BERLIN, August 12th, 1914.

Messrs. Kuhn, Loeb & Co., New York.

The Imperial German Government has deposited with M. M. Warburg & Co., Hamburg, M. 25,000,000.—(Twenty-five million Marks) nominal non assessable interest paying treasury bonds to be effective from Aug. 12th, 1914, until Dec. 12th, 1914, maturing on the latter mentioned date. These Treasury bonds are issued as follows:

2 Ten Million Mark Treasury Bonds, and

1 Five Million Mark Treasury Bond.

These Treasury Bonds are to serve as collateral for all sums which may eventually be drawn by the authorized agent for account of the German Empire. The same holds good for Treasury Bonds which may be issued to take the place of the Bonds now deposited, in case an extension is desired.

The Messrs. M. M. Warburg & Co., can only dispose of the Treasury Bonds after securing the consent of Kuhn, Loeb & Co.

M. M. WARBURG & Co.,

Per Attorney

(Signed by) Dr. of Jurisprudence W. Regendanz.

Senator Sterling. You say these issues were for the purpose of advancing German propaganda?

Mr. Becker. They were for that purpose in this case, because Dr. Dernburg was not engaged in much else. That is, this particular deposit was.

I also call your attention to a letter—I have the original here—translated as follows:

BECKER EXHIBIT No. 17.

Ex Secretary of State, Privy Councillor.

Dr. Dernburg is herewith commissioned to open an account with the banking firm of Kuhn, Loeb & Co., New York. The Imperial German Embassy at Washington is to have the disposition of this account.

Berlin, August 11th, 1914.

The Imperial Chancellor Acting as Substitute.

(Signed)

KUHN.

On September 8, 1914, Dr. Dernburg addressed Kuhn, Loeb & Co. as follows:

BECKER EXHIBIT No. 18.

FIFTY-TWO WILLIAM STREET, Sept. 8, 1914.

Messrs. KUHN, LOEB & Co.,
New York.

GENTLEMEN: I beg to enclose Power of Attorney of the Secretary of the Treasury for the German Empire, which please keep at my disposal; also letter of Messrs. M. M. Warburg & Co. of Hamburg by Dr. Regendanz their special attorney, dated Berlin, August 11th, 1914, informing you of the deposit with them of Nom. val. M. 25,000,000 German Treasury Bonds.

On the strength of the above cited Power of Attorney, I beg to pledge to you the above named Treasury Bonds or so much of the same as will be requisite to cover the loan I have received from you today of $200,000 cash.

Please hold this amount to the disposal of Mr. Heinrich Fr. Albert of 45 Broadway (Hamburg Line) and oblige,

Yours very truly,

DR. B. DERNBURG.

A letter from Kuhn, Loeb & Co., as follows:

New York, Sept. 11th, 1914—

Senator REED. I do not want to interrupt, but just for the sake of clarity let me say I remember testimony that was given at one time by the representative of the Hamburg-American Line when it was being investigated before the Committee on Commerce of the Senate, I think, to the effect—that is, as I recall the testimony: it is vague in my mind—that certain moneys had been arranged for to take care of certain indebtedness of the Hamburg-American Line; and in view of the fact that you have just mentioned some officer of the Hamburg-American Line in connection with this loan, I was wondering whether possibly this money might not have been used for that purpose; if you know about it.

Mr. BECKER. No; it was not. I know about that. It will come out later. The person referred to was not an officer of the Hamburg-American Line. It was Dr. Albert, the commercial attaché.

Senator REED. I misunderstood you, then. I was just curious about that.

Mr. BECKER. I will be able to throw some light on that, although it has not a great amount of interest.

This other letter is as follows:

BECKER EXHIBIT No. 19.

NEW YORK, Sept. 11th, 1914.

His Excellency BERNARD H. DERNBURG,
#45 Broadway, Room 100,
New York.

DEAR SIR: We beg to confirm the arrangement which we have made with you as follows:

We have agreed to advance to you the sum of $400,000. at 6% interest per annum, to be repaid by you at our pleasure and for which as much as shall be necessary of the M. 25,000,000 Treasury Bonds of the German Empire, deposited for our account with Messrs. M. M. Warburg & Co. shall be held as security.

It is further understood that you will arrange that until this loan is repaid, the German Reichsbank shall maintain a balance with us of at least $200,000. We have noted that you have placed $200,000. of the above amount at the disposal of Mr. H. F. Albert, and we shall await your instructions as to the disposition of the remaining $200,000.

Please confirm and believe us,

Yours faithfully,

(Signed)

KUHN, LOEB & Co.

The whole of the $400,000 was ultimately placed at the disposal of Dr. H. F. Albert, commercial attaché to the German Embassy in the United States. Time and time again emphasis was laid upon the idea that Dr. Albert was the commercial representative. Dr. Dernburg was here frankly as a propagandist. I call attention to the fact that the money that was sent over with the power of attorney to Dernburg to use, was placed in an account in the name of Albert. The method of using Dr. Albert as commercial attaché to disguise disbursements of funds for propaganda purposes was adopted throughout all the operations of the German Government in the United States. Now, it happened that between October 24, 1914, and April 8, 1915—between those two dates—Dr. Albert was unable to carry bank accounts in his name in the United States for the reason that the German Government had previously entered into a contract with one Aaron Hecht, of 94 Cliff Street, New York City, whereby said Hecht was to act as their commercial agent in the United States. The German Government having concluded that it was to their best interests to send Dr. Albert to do the work that had been assigned to Hecht, which had properly to do with buying goods for export to Germany, the German Government found itself threatened with a suit by Hecht for breach of contract. In order to avoid the attachment of any funds, the German Government, through Dr. F. H. Albert, opened a bank account with G. Amsinck & Co. in the name of William G. Sickel, Sickel being one of the managing directors of the Hamburg-American Line in New York. He was an American citizen, and he volunteered to act as custodian of these German funds between October 24, 1914, and April 8, 1915, giving to Dr. F. H. Albert a series of checks sent by him in blank, so that Dr. Albert could continue his operations without fear of the account being molested by Aaron Hecht.

I have here the transcript of account showing how it was carried in Sickel's name.

However, by April 1, 1915, the possible controversy and litigation between the German Government and Hecht was settled, and thereafter the funds were carried in an account in Albert's name.

Shortly after that an arrangement was entered into with Messrs. Chandler & Co., of New York, bankers, to underwrite a loan of $10,000,000 of German war loan treasury notes, and between April 1, 1915, and January 3, 1916, $9,908,369.48 was realized by the German Government through this issue of $10,000,000, par value, of German war loan notes.

These samples [indicating notes] which I obtained from the American Bank Note Co., and which I have been requested to return, show the form that these notes took. They were printed and issued in this country, and they bore the signature of von Bernstorff, and were regarded as in the nature of interim certificates.

Senator OVERMAN. They were sold in this country?

Mr. BECKER. Yes, sold to bankers; and it was a dollar issue, money payable in dollars.

Senator NELSON. Instead of marks?

Mr. BECKER. Instead of marks.

Senator OVERMAN. Do you know what they sold for—what they brought?

Mr. BECKER. They netted, out of $10,000,000 issued, $9,908,369.48. You can figure it. I have not done so.

The proceeds were deposited by Messrs. Chandler & Co., the underwriters of this loan, with the Central Union Trust Co. of New York, to the order of the Imperial German Government, and thereafter between April 1, 1915, and January 3, 1916, were checked out by Dr. H. F. Albert and von Bernstorff, the German ambassador. The proceeds were checked out and placed in other banks, and there seem to have been two purposes; in fact, there is evidence of the existence of these purposes.

The first was to create large deposits with banking institutions as a basis for procuring large commercial loans to finance the export of merchandise to Germany, required by the German Government through its central purchasing agency.

The second was to induce banking institutions receiving such deposits to become interested in the purchase of German war loan bonds for the bank's account, and also for sale to its depositors. The war loan bonds were issued in marks, similar to our liberty loans.

Adopting this method, on April 3, 1915, a bank account was started by Dr. Albert and von Bernstorff jointly, with the Equitable Trust Co. of New York, by an initial deposit of $3,350,000. On the same day a bank account was started with the Columbia Trust Co. of New York, by an initial deposit of $750,000. On October 16, 1915, a bank account was started with the Chase National Bank of New York by an initial deposit of $125,000. Between April 3, 1915, and January 3, 1916, the proceeds of the German war loan treasury notes, as they accumulated in the Central Union Trust Co. of New York, were checked out and the accounts of H. F. Albert and von Bernstorff with the Equitable Trust Co., the Columbia Trust Co., G. Amsinck & Co., and the Chase National Bank, were replenished to finance the operations of Dr. Albert and the other representatives of the embassy.

In due course funds were rechecked out of these banks and bank accounts were opened in other institutions, with the result that Dr. Albert had succeeded in opening banking connections between April 1, 1915, and the time he sailed, in February, 1917, with the following institutions. I have a list here, and I think perhaps I might as well spread it on the record.

Senator OVERMAN. Let it go on the record.

(The list referred to is here printed in the record as follows:)

Chase National Bank, Mechanics' & Metals National Bank, Equitable Trust Co., Guaranty Trust Co., Columbia Trust Co., Kuhn, Loeb & Co., German-American Bank, Lawyers' Title & Trust Co., United States Mortgage & Trust Co., Fulton Trust Co., Speyer & Co., G. Amsinck & Co., and Chandler & Co.

Mr. BECKER. There were quite a number of out-of-town banks. I will mention some of them [reading]:

Merchants' Loan & Trust Co., of Chicago; Continental & Commercial National Bank, of Chicago; First National, of Cleveland; Wisconsin National Bank, of Milwaukee; St. Louis Union Bank, St. Louis; Mississippi Trust Co. St. Louis; and First National Bank, Boston.

In addition to this loan of $10,000,000 on Treasury notes, two subsequent loans were made by the German Government, one in January, 1916, of $3,500,000, and one in June, 1916, of another $3,500,000. The latter, however, was made for the purpose of redeeming the former one, or extending it, so that the actual amount realized from the floating of loans with Chandler & Co. by the German Government was actually between $13,000,000 and $13,500,000.

This was not, however, all the money that was realized by the German Imperial Government from the sale of war loans in the United States, and I think that it is fairly to be understood that the war-loan bonds, similar to our Liberty-loan issues in March, were considered by the German Government as a propaganda affair to a great extent. If there could be a large number of different subscribers for the German war loans, it meant so many persons who had a financial interest in this country in the success of Germany in the war.

Here is an advertisement by one of the persons engaged in selling German war-loan bonds:

BECKER EXHIBIT No. 20.

If You Have Any Money in Banks Why Not Invest It in the New German War Loan "Instead of Letting the Banks use it for the Proposed Allies' Loan?"

Subscriptions Closed in Berlin Yesterday, and it is estimated that Approximately MARKS: 11,000,000,000. or $2,750,000,000. have been subscribed, showing the complete confidence of the GERMAN PUBLIC in its own GOVERNMENT

SUBSCRIPTIONS for the UNITED STATES however have been extended, and I am in a position to offer MARK: 1000. BONDS, at $210.

all further particulars gladly furnished by A. WUNNENBERG 42 Cotton Exchange Building New York City Telephone 3012 Broad

That, I think, might justly be characterized as a propaganda circular.

These other loans were floated through German banks, the Deutsche Bank of Berlin, the Disconto Gesellschaft, and Hugo Schmidt, as well as Dr. Albert, had a great deal to do with the floating in this country.

I think Schmidt was, perhaps, the most successful and active in floating these loans. There were five of the German war loans, and at least three of the issues out of five were very largely sold in the United States. Our office collected a list of the subscriptions. There were approximately shown in that list, which is not complete, 32,000 subscriptions, and I should say, at a rough estimate, that means about 25,000 individuals.

Senator OVERMAN. Principally Germans?

Mr. BECKER. Almost entirely; a little sprinkling of Irish, and a few banking concerns that bought. It had the effect of rock-riveting the loyalty of Germans in this country to Germany, or was intended to have it.

Also the Austro-Hungarian Government, acting through the Anglo-Austrian Bank of Vienna and the Hungarische Kredit Bank, placed Austrian and Hungarian war loans. It is only possible to approximate the total amount that was sold in this country of the German war loans. There were sold approximately $12,000,000 worth, or four or five times that much in marks, and of the Austro-Hungarian loans there were placed approximately $10,500,000 in kronen.

Now, the principal American banks and bankers who engaged in selling German and Austrian and Hungarian war loans through this method were Zimmerman & Forshay, who disposed of a total of 21,000,000 marks, over a million of Austrian kronen, and over 700,000 Hungarian kronen.

The Trans-Atlantic Trust Co., which, by the way, as Mr. Garvan or Mr. Palmer will explain to you, if you ask them, was shown to be financed by the Austrian Government, under the head of Julius Pirnitzer, of New York, who has been interned. Pirnitzer disposed of 12,000,000 marks, over 1,000,000 Austrian kronen, and 14,000,000

Hungarian kronen. Muller, Schall & Co. disposed of 12,000,000 marks, and Knauth, Nachod & Kuhne 7,000,000 marks of the German loan.

I have a list, which can be put in the record, of banks which participated in a small degree.

(The list referred to is here printed in the record as follows:)

BECKER EXHIBIT No. 21.

Steneck Trust Co., Hoboken; Kuhn, Loeb & Co.; Heidelberg, Ickelheimer & Co.; Guaranty Trust Co.; German-American Bank of Cincinnati; First National Bank of Chicago; Continental & Commercial National Bank of Chicago; First National Bank of Cleveland; Wisconsin National Bank of Milwaukee; Merchants' Loan & Trust Co. of Chicago; St. Louis National Bank, St. Louis; Mississippi Valley Trust Co., St. Louis; Hallgarten & Co., of New York; Chase National Bank of New York; Schulz & Ruckgaber; Broadway Trust Co.; G. Amsinck & Co.

Mr. BECKER. The funds realized from the disposition of these mark bonds—which, by the way, were never delivered to any of the purchasers, they receiving receipts from the banker—were disposed of in this way: The funds were either transmitted to Germany by cable or were disbursed by the German banks here to cover their sales of exchange on New York.

Then, as to this, I acknowledge indebtedness to the Military Intelligence. There was a sort of organization in this country of which George von Skal, to whom I have referred, was an officer. It was called the Bund Eisernes Kreuzes, the Society of the Iron Cross. They issued certificates of this sort [showing certificates to the committee], and the very arrangement of flags around the edge showed that it was propaganda.

Senator OVERMAN. Was that printed in this country? It looks more like German.

Mr. BECKER. It was printed in the German language, but was lithographed in New York by the American Bank Note Co. Here are the American shield and the German shield right side by side in friendly contact. It is written in the German language, signed by its officers, George von Skal across the right hand, and Dr. Gustav Scholer. These were peddled around at barber shops, and cost 50 cents or $1.

Senator OVERMAN. What was the par value?

Mr. BECKER. Nothing at all; but they merely entitled the person who wanted to take one, and pay his money, to membership.

Senator WOLCOTT. It assured the owners of membership in the bund for 50 cents per head.

Mr. BECKER. Something like that. The Military Intelligence informs me that they raised about $60,000 by that means.

Senator REED. Have they any market value that you know of?

Mr. BECKER. Only as curiosities.

(Thereupon the committee, at 5.15 o'clock p. m., adjourned until to-morrow, December 20, 1918, at 10.30 a. m.)

BREWING AND LIQUOR INTERESTS AND GERMAN PROPAGANDA.

FRIDAY, DECEMBER 20, 1918.

UNITED STATES SENATE,
SUBCOMMITTEE OF THE COMMITTEE ON THE JUDICIARY,
Washington, D. C.

The subcommittee met at 10.30 o'clock a. m., Senator Lee S. Overman presiding.

Present: Senators Overman (chairman), King, Wolcott, Nelson, and Sterling.

Senator Reed was also present.

Senator OVERMAN. The committee will come to order.

In regard to the affidavit which was before the committee yesterday, I have excluded all testimony of the affiant which expresses his own opinion about anything or anybody, but I have concluded to put into the record what he said Mr. Bernstorff said.

On yesterday we closed on page 5 of this affidavit. I read from it as follows:

Tell us just what was said on that, as well as you can recollect it.

A. We were talking of the New York papers and I made the remark that most of our papers here were very highminded; for instance, if you wanted to put out a security of a new corporation which was not tried out, and you should give the New York Sun an advertisement conditional upon there being a news item in their financial column, which is worth more than any advertisement, they wouldn't do it without a thorough investigation, and they would notify you that if their advertisement depended on that, you couldn't get it in.

The balance of that answer is excluded because it is an opinion of the affiant, which is not competent.

(Continuing reading from deposition:)

Q. Did he express a desire to get into some paper?

That is, did Bernstorff express a desire.

A. Yes; he thought it was absolutely necessary. He was very severe in his criticism of Herman Ridder, whom he thought was doing their cause a great deal of harm, more than any one thing.

Q. Ridder was? A. Yes, the Count said the very fact of Ridder being a prominent German publishing his paper in that language, would make Americans skeptical anyway, and then Ridder imagined that he was very much stronger in American affairs than was really the case. He said that Ridder came to him once and said that within twenty-four hours he would be a Senator from New York, and the fact was Ridder did not "also ran," so he said he was injuring the cause all over the country. He also mentioned Dernburg and others who came over to influence the American mind, but did not understand the Americans, and were not reaching them, and that they were doing more harm than good.

Q. What did he say about Hearst? A. I am leading up to that.

Then he goes on to say:

I remarked,

and so forth, and that is all excluded. Then he said that Bernstorff said:

I have to have somebody to put our news the way we want it.

That goes in.

(Continuing reading:)

"Q. Had you mentioned the 'American' or the 'Journal'? A. I mentioned the Hearst papers particularly, and he said that he had had his eye on Hearst as an available man, and I came away with the distinct impression that he expected to see Hearst, and when I saw that Hearst was publishing a German paper, I mentioned it later to the Count, and said 'I guess you got to these fellows,' and he said 'Well, it's working all right, isn't it?'"

Senator REED. You might as well let it all go in, if you are going to put that in.

Senator OVERMAN. This is Bernstorff's statement?

Senator REED. I do not care if it is.

Senator OVERMAN. Bernstorff's statement goes in. (Reading:)

When was this subsequent conversation? A. Oh, that was about a year later.

I have excluded everything this witness said in the nature of an opinion by him, but I have admitted everything that he said Bernstorff said. The balance of it has been cut out—suggested rumors and so forth. About four or five pages of the deposition are out.

(Continuing reading):

Q. Do you think of anything else, any other particulars? A. The question of stopping the sending of munitions to England was brought up, and I don't know just which one it was, but I think it was White, who said "That is easy to do; buy these arms companies at Bridgeport and Bethlehem; they are the two big outfits; buy them and shut them down; that is the cheapest thing for you." I understand von Bernstorff took it up with his government, and they wired back that they wanted the German bankers here to do it.

Q. You mean the German-American banks? A. Yes; such firms as Muller, Schall & Co. and Hallgarten; they thought that they ought to do it, but they wouldn't do it.

Q. Von Bernstorff said that his government wanted it done over here; you heard him say that, did you? A. Yes.

Q. Assuming that we are able to connect this up and get other evidence to corroborate you, you would have no objection to our using this then? A. No; I would go on the stand and verify it.

Senator REED. May I see what you have left out?

Senator OVERMAN. Certainly. (Handing to Senator Reed transcript of deposition.)

TESTIMONY OF MR. ALFRED L. BECKER—Resumed.

Senator OVERMAN. Mr. Becker, I hold in my hand here a yellow paper. I would like to know what that is, where it came from, and how it came into the possession of the committee, and all about it, before I rule on it.

Mr. BECKER. That is the paper I handed you, with the suggestion that, in view of the course of the discussion yesterday, there might be some question in your mind as to whether it should be read.

Senator OVERMAN. I want to know where it is from, and what it is.

Mr. BECKER. It is a translation of an article appearing in the Vossische Zeitung on the 8th day of December, 1914.

Senator WOLCOTT. That is a newspaper published in Berlin?

Mr. BECKER. In Berlin.

Senator STERLING. I think that ought to go in. It is simply in connection with the other.

Senator OVERMAN. We will take that up later, Mr. Becker, and pass on it. You may proceed.

Mr. BECKER. I was testifying yesterday with relation to the accounts of the German Embassy carried in various forms and used for various purposes.

At one time I made as careful a study as was possible from examination of bank records, to ascertain the expenditures made by the Embassy and the purposes for which they were made. Subsequently, the Department of Justice obtained information which was used in Mr. Bielaski's statement. With that information, they now have knowledge that is far superior to anything that I could possibly possess on that subject, and I am not going to go into the question of expenditures, except to a limited extent, where we followed it up with testimony and adduced facts which might be of interest.

The question has been suggested by some of the newspaper accounts that possibly some of the American bankers who received the bank accounts of the embassy, and who made loans to the embassy, were conscious participators in German propaganda, and that is a matter to which I have given very thoughtful attention in the past, and perhaps I could make a statement that would be of use to the committee, of some of the facts from which conclusions may be drawn. I want to avoid scrupulously drawing any conclusions myself.

First, the Trans-Atlantic Trust Co., which was largely concerned in the sale of German, Austrian, and Hungarian war loans. As I stated yesterday, the person probably best qualified to discuss the Trans-Atlantic Trust Co. is Mr. Garvan, or his superior, Mr. Palmer, the Alien Property Custodian.

However, the Trans-Atlantic Trust Co. was a corporation, a trust company, largely financed with money of the Austrian Government. That has been established. It was entirely a foreign institution. There was only a minor American interest in it, and the correspondence of the company shows that one of its purposes was to maintain the close relations, particularly of Austro-Hungarians, with the motherland. It has been taken over by the Alien Property Custodian, and may unquestionably be regarded as an absolutely Austrian institution—at least, German and Austrian.

G. Amsinck & Co., under the leadership of Pavenstedt, had a divided allegiance. Pavenstedt's partner, Julius Ruperti, has testified that he was always proally. Pavenstedt was very strongly pro-German, and was a German subject. Pavenstedt took Boy-Ed and Von Papen into his office when they first came to America, and allowed them to remain there for quite a time, until his partner would not stand for it any longer, when various exposures began to be threatened. In the early part of the activities of Dr. Albert, Boy-Ed, and Von Papen, the greater part of the questionable schemes were paid for through checks drawn on the account with G. Amsinck & Co. The firm of Zimmerman & Forshay unquestionably maintained a neutral attitude, although it was a firm composed of German partners. It was, however, active in the marketing of German war loans. The stenographer has the list of banks I put in yesterday. If I had it here I could go through some of the others and give you certain facts with reference to them.

One I ought to refer to is the firm of Kuhn, Loeb & Co. I have already read in evidence documents showing the initiation of the embassy account, and the making of a loan of $400,000, which was the first financing done in this country with Kuhn, Loeb & Co.; and you will recall that the financing was done by means of depositing 25,000,000 marks of German Government securities with M. M. Warburg & Co., in Germany.

Now, the partners in Kuhn, Loeb & Co., as is well known, are Paul M. Warburg, Felix Warburg, Otto H. Kahn, Mortimer L. Schiff, Jerome J. Hanauer, and Jacob Schiff, the head of the firm. The firm of M. M. Warburg & Co. is a family affair largely in Hamburg, and the latest issue that we have of the German Banking Year Book shows that Felix Warburg and Paul Warburg were members of the firm of M. M. Warburg & Co., of Hamburg. That issue of the yearbook was, of course, before the war. I think it is the issue of 1914. It is known that in 1913 Paul Warburg was in Germany and performing duties as a member of the firm of M. M. Warburg & Co. In other words, there was a community of partnership between M. M. Warburg & Co., in Hamburg, and Kuhn, Loeb & Co., in New York. In the same family there was a Dr. Fritz Warburg. It has been variously stated that he was a son of M. M. Warburg and that he was a brother. However that may be, Dr. Fritz Warburg occupied the same position for the German Government in Stockholm that Dr. H. F. Albert held in New York—that is, commercial attaché of the embassy—and you will find the name of Dr. Fritz Warburg mentioned in the so-called “Sisson Documents,” relating to Russian Bolshevism, as a person concerned with the disbursing of moneys for encouraging the Bolshevist movement in Russia.

Now, it would appear from the documents, I think, that the original intent was to finance the German propagandists in this country through Kuhn, Loeb & Co., and the documents, taking them altogether, will show with some clearness, I think, what the result was. I will read them in chronological order.

First I produce some letters delivered to me by James Minotto.

Senator OVERMAN. Who is he?

Mr. BECKER. You may have heard of Minotto. He is now interned. He is an Italian subject, but of German birth. He was married to a daughter of Louis Swift, of Chicago, and came into prominence in connection with an examination into his pro-Germanism. The question of his internment was bitterly contested, but finally a presidential order caused him to be interned. I subsequently gave him a thorough examination in connection chiefly with the Caillaux case, the former Premier of France, on request of the French Government, but I also examined into some of his other activities, and it appears from his testimony, to summarize it, that in the summer of 1915 he made a trip to France and Italy for the Guaranty Trust Co., with which he was then connected as manager of their foreign department, and while in France he met Georges Pallain, director of the Bank of France, and had some discussion with him with regard to the Anglo-French loan and the attitude of American firms in respect to it. And he promised to have prepared when he returned to America a report on conditions, to be sent to Mr. Pallain, who had a great deal to do in France with the sale of government securities, and in particular with the Anglo-French loan which was floated in this country.

Upon Minotto's return to the United States he met Otto H. Kahn, of Kuhn, Loeb & Co., and I will give you Mr. Minotto's statement of what occurred and then read the letter that was written. This is the sworn testimony of Mr. Minotto [reading]:

One of the main topics of discussion at that time was the fact that amongst the biggest concerns in New York the only one that had not subscribed to this loan (that is, the Anglo-French loan) was the firm of Kuhn, Loeb & Company. I had a talk with Mr. Otto H. Kahn on that subject when we were out for luncheon one day.

Q. May I interrupt—to be perfectly explicit—just where did this luncheon take place?—A. Either at the Mid-Day or Bankers' Club, one of the two.

Q. Continue.—A. He explained to me that he thought that one of the main reasons why his firm did not intend to subscribe to this loan was on account of Mr. Jacob H. Schiff's aversion to the Russian Government, which had been so unfair to the Jews, and that he could not look at the allies without seeing Russia in the picture.

I subsequently drafted a letter to M. Pallain, and before sending it, went to the office of Messrs. Kuhn, Loeb & Co., on William and Pine Streets, and showed it to Mr. Otto H. Kahn so as to get his opinion. Mr. Kahn went with me to the first floor of the building, where the board room of Messrs. Kuhn, Loeb and Co. is, and read the letter. He told me that while I had given an accurate report of the situation, I might amplify my statement concerning the attitude of the firm of Kuhn, Loeb & Co. toward this loan, and that while the firm itself had not subscribed to it, he, Mr. Kahn, and his partner, Mr. Mortimer L. Schiff, whose sentiments were very proally ever since the beginning of the war, had never denied the newspaper report that they had personally subscribed to this loan to the amount of $5,000,000 for Mr. Otto H. Kahn and $1,000,000 for Mr. Mortimer L. Schiff—

Senator KING. I do not see the materiality of this. I do not see that it is necessary, in this investigation, to bring into the record the name of Mr. Schiff, or any other bankers, disclosing their private business and the purchases they made of Anglo-French bonds or American bonds. If there is anything that would tend to show German propaganda, especially activities with the newspapers or with the press, under the construction placed by the committee upon the resolution that would be proper. This might show—in fact, it does tend to show—that one of the men just mentioned was proally. Now, I do not think it is material for us to go into that, or their private transactions.

Senator OVERMAN. It will not do any harm. I think we should know all about the German transactions here, and who was assisting in carrying out this German propaganda and handling this money. It has been shown that they spent $50,000,000 here for German propaganda.

Senator NELSON. As I understand it, Mr. Becker, this is an explanation on their part why the firm of Kuhn, Loeb & Co. had not subscribed for liberty bonds?

Mr. BECKER. For Anglo-French bonds.

Senator KING. For Anglo-French bonds.

Senator NELSON. For Anglo-French bonds; but that Otto Kahn and Mortimer Schiff had, on their own account, subscribed for our bonds. Is not that it?

Mr. BECKER. Yes; and let me state a little further: The firm of Kuhn, Loeb & Co. have been subject to a vicious fire of gossip as to their attitude in the war, and I think I am in a position to clear it up.

Senator NELSON. I think it is to their interest to have it cleared up.

Senator KING. Speaking for myself, I have never heard any criticism of Kuhn, Loeb & Co. I have always regarded them as one of the best and strongest and most patriotic banking houses in the United States.

Mr. BECKER. I have no intention of attacking them, but I think I can show the facts, which will not demonstrate that the firm, as a whole, was pro-German at all, but will show that it was rather painfully neutral. That is what I wanted to establish.

Senator WOLCOTT. Let me ask a question, Mr. Chairman. Are we engaged here in an investigation for the purpose of clearing up and acquitting people about whom rumor has said something? We certainly are here, I think to an extent, engaged in an investigation for the purpose of fastening rumor on somebody; but if we are going to pursue—

Senator OVERMAN. If that is the purpose of it—to acquit somebody—of course it is not competent.

Mr. BECKER. The purpose is to present evidence from which the committee can determine, as I look at it, whether Kuhn, Loeb & Co., who, on the surface, appear to have been so intimately connected with the banking arrangements of the German Embassy, should be deemed from that to have been other than neutral.

Senator OVERMAN. If that is the purpose of the testimony, to show that there is no charge against them—it may be that there have been charges in the newspapers against a great many people—we are not here for the purpose of acquitting anybody, unless they want to be heard.

Senator WOLCOTT. As far as my statement is concerned, the witness might with propriety state that they make it clear that Kuhn, Loeb & Co. were not pro-German; but there is no use in going into the details of that matter.

Mr. BECKER. What will appear is this. It will appear that as far as Otto Kahn was concerned, he tried to be—to use an expression which I hope will not be offensive—good friends with both sides; and I can show his statements that he made in this manner to the French Government and the statements that he made to the representatives of the German Government.

Senator KING. That is, before our Government was at war?

Mr. BECKER. So he, in a way, played both ends against the middle.

Senator KING. Was that before our Government was at war?

Mr. BECKER. Yes. The sum total of the thing is that, taking it by and large, you will find that the firm of Kuhn, Loeb & Co. imposed on the German Government such difficult conditions for financing that the German Government was compelled to turn elsewhere to do its financing.

Senator OVERMAN. We will let that statement go into the record; but as to the details of the business, we do not care anything about them.

Mr. BECKER. What the correspondence shows is that as far as Otto Kahn was concerned, while he was telling the French Government indirectly that they had subscribed, he was telling the German Government that they had not. If the committee does not desire to hear it, I do not desire to press it at all, of course.

Senator OVERMAN. I think a simple statement on your part will be sufficient.

Mr. BECKER. All right.

Senator NELSON. One of the Warburgs was appointed on the Federal Reserve Board. You know, Senator Reed, about that.

Senator OVERMAN. That was Paul M. Warburg, was it not?

Senator NELSON. On the Federal Reserve Board. You remember that, Senator Reed?

Senator REED. Oh, certainly.

Senator NELSON. And he has lately resigned or retired?

Senator REED. Yes.

Senator NELSON. I think he is a brother of these Warburgs.

Senator REED. Yes.

Senator NELSON. Connected with them.

Senator REED. Yes. He was connected with Kuhn, Loeb & Co. immediately before his appointment.

Senator NELSON. Yes.

Senator REED. And resigned in order to take the appointment, severing his connection with Kuhn, Loeb & Co. All that we investigated in our committee. There was no secret about his connection at that time.

Senator NELSON. No.

Senator REED. Is there anybody here that challenges his loyalty now?

Mr. BECKER. Nobody. Certainly I do not.

Senator KING. There is not a man that has been more loyal and devoted to our country during the war than Paul M. Warburg and there is no man that has contributed more to make the Federal reserve law a success in its administration than Mr. Warburg, and I think the country suffered materially in his retirement from that important board.

Senator OVERMAN. We all agree about that, and I think this statement here shows that he was influential in keeping Kuhn, Loeb & Co. straight. They did not finance the Germans.

Mr. BECKER. There is no doubt the Germans came over here expecting that that connection between M. M. Warburg & Co. and Kuhn, Loeb & Co. was going to be all powerful to produce financing here, and they were grievously disappointed in that.

Senator OVERMAN. That is by reason of the influence of Mr. Warburg? You think that is the reason?

Mr. BECKER. No; but by reason of Mr. Kahn's influence.

Senator NELSON. Mr. Kahn was the most active man.

Senator REED. May I interject a question, just for the sake of clarity?

Senator OVERMAN. Yes.

Senator NELSON. I say Otto Kahn, to my knowledge—I spoke with him at several loyalty meetings two years ago at St. Paul and Minneapolis—was as pronounced a man in favor of our country as I ever met, and very active.

Senator REED. This is what I wanted to ask the witness. Mr. Becker, the dates you have been speaking of were in early 1914?

Mr. BECKER. In late 1915.

Senator REED. Late 1915?

Mr. BECKER. About a year after the war started.

Senator REED. Just about a year?

Mr. BECKER. Yes.

Senator REED. At that time the President had asked everybody to be neutral in thought and in deed—absolutely neutral; that is right, is it not?

Mr. BECKER. A good many of us disobeyed——

Senator REED. I know; but that was the President's request?

Mr. BECKER. Yes.

Senator REED. You do not accuse the President of being disloyal, do you?

Mr. BECKER. Oh, no.

Senator REED. He may not have been as far-sighted as you, but that was his request?

Mr. BECKER. I will tell you a great secret. I voted for him one time.

Senator REED. That was his request to the American people?

Mr. BECKER. Yes.

Senator REED. Do you think, under those circumstances, that it was disloyal for a firm to stand as you say Kuhn, Loeb & Co. did, as "painfully neutral"?

Mr. BECKER. Unless I can read the documents, just what I meant by that will not be clear.

Senator REED. Well, "painful neutrality" would mean absolute neutrality, but painful to you?

Mr. BECKER. No. You see, you think that I am criticizing the attitude of absolute neutrality. Not at all.

Since you ask me, what I thought was of interest, and might possibly deserve criticism, was something in the nature of playing both ends against the middle, to use a slang expression.

Senator REED. If a man played both ends against the middle and did it impartially, he being a banker, that would be bankers' neutrality, would it not?

Mr. BECKER. I think that characterizes it perfectly.

Senator OVERMAN. Proceed, Mr. Becker.

Mr. BECKER. There is one letter here that I think you will want to hear.

Senator KING. I, for one, as a member of this committee, certainly object to bringing into this record matters that are extraneous and immaterial and irrelevant——

Senator OVERMAN. As Senator Nelson has said, the whole thing would be a farce, absolutely, if we are going to hold it down to the strict rules of law. If we do that, we never will get any testimony at all. All this that we have put in is extraneous, as far as that is concerned. If we held down to the strict rules of law, we would get nothing, and would better cut out all the evidence.

Senator KING. Let me complete my sentence. Of course the statement just made by the chairman is gratuitous and wholly unwarranted, and is not a correct exposition of legal principles or rules of evidence. To say that by permitting proper evidence only, you keep out everything, is not correct. In an investigation of German propaganda we ought to investigate that and show what it did, and what influence it exerted, if any, over the press, and what the brewers did toward controlling the press; we ought to investigate that and get at the truth and get all the facts we can get; but there is no necessity for bringing in the names of bankers or other people as the name of Kuhn, Loeb & Co. has been brought into this record.

What Mr. Becker has just said is, in my opinion, a reflection upon Kuhn, Loeb & Co.

Senator NELSON. No; I think, rather, it is in their favor.

Senator OVERMAN. I think the whole thing is in their favor.

Senator KING. When he says they played both ends against the middle, that is a very obnoxious phrase to me, and it conveys the meaning to the ordinary American that their conduct was not fair and not above suspicion; that it was not open, but that it was equivocal; that they were trying to court favor with each side, and to get benefits from both sides, without being frank and open.

If this is necessary in order to show the activities of Germany, to show what was done in connection with this firm, that is one thing; but if it is thrown in in a sort of extraneous way, as it seems to me it is now, I do not see that it is proper.

Maj. HUMES. May I say just a word, Mr. Chairman, about this matter? It is my understanding that the testimony shows that the German Government first undertook to utilize this particular banking firm in its banking facilities—as a part of its banking facilities.

The witness was about to account for the fact that there was a change in the program and that the Trans-Atlantic Trust Co., and possibly some other institutions, were utilized at a later date; and to account for the change in the policy of the German Government in handling their financial transactions; and that the connection of Kuhn, Loeb & Co. was simply a link in the chain of their financial activities.

If the witness was asked the question, how did the German Government happen to enter into a banking arrangement with the Trans-Atlantic Trust Co., it could only be answered by explaining why they had severed the banking connections that they had had up to that time, which had been with Kuhn, Loeb & Co., and it is my understanding that it was the purpose of the witness, from the financial accounts of the German propaganda agents in this country, simply to trace the transfer of funds and their handling from one city to another, in order that the committee might know the facts with reference to those financial transactions. The facts then, of course, would stand on their own bottom, as to whether or not credit or discredit was due to any individual in regard to these financial transactions; just as in the Bolo Pacha case the fund was transferred from one banking institution to another before it finally got to Bolo Pacha. It may have been with the knowledge of some of those banks, and it may have been without the knowledge of any of those banks, but if you trace the fund you have got to show the various institutions in which it was carried. Then it naturally follows that there may have been a special reason for the transfer of the fund.

Senator OVERMAN. I think you have a right to go ahead and show the reason for the transfer of the funds; but to try to acquit anybody is something that we need not go into.

Senator KING. You can show the transfer of funds by the bank books.

Maj. HUMES. That is true. But here is the situation: If this was a court, and we were trying a case as we would try it before a jury, there has been very little testimony introduced before this committee that would be competent; but the purpose of the committee, with a view to securing greater concentration and more expedition in these hearings has been to go on the theory that a man who had made these examinations was an expert, just as an expert accountant might be examined on a set of books that he had examined, and that men who were in the nature of experts should be called to outline all these various steps and to produce the evidence that has been produced before them, and the result of the investigation, for the benefit of the committee, in order to save the necessity of calling one witness to ask him, perhaps, two or three questions, and another witness to ask him half a dozen questions, and in the end, to call 200 witnesses to prove that we could prove by one witness if he was called in the nature of an expert. It was on that theory that we have conducted this proceeding.

Of course, none of this testimony would be legally competent—I will not say none of it, but most of it would be legally incompetent—if this were a court and if we were following the legal rules of evidence. That is true. But this is the method that has been decided upon by the committee, and for the purpose of securing greater expedition in the hearing.

I do not want to defend the legality of the testimony under a technical legal rule, but I do not see how——

Senator OVERMAN. That is a rule that has been adopted by all committees in investigations. We are not restricted to the rules of evidence. We do not want to call a thousand witnesses and prolong this investigation until next January, but we can bring witnesses here who are experts, and who know the facts, and who have examined witnesses and understand the matter thoroughly. We put this testimony in for what it is worth. I have cautioned the witness not to state anything that he does not have documents to prove; and I assume that Mr. Becker is governing himself accordingly. Now, proceed, Mr. Becker, to show the transfer of these funds. Do not whitewash anybody or prove anybody guilty. We want the facts, and let the public decide as to the guilt.

Mr. BECKER. Let me state, Mr. Chairman, for the purposes of the record, that I proposed to read a letter of October 5, 1915, from James Minotto to Monsieur Georges Pallain, reading the letter to which he made reference in the portion of his testimony that I read. I then proposed to read a letter of the 3d of November, 1915, from Hugo Schmidt to the Deutsche Bank relating to a conversation that he had with Otto H. Kahn. But I understand that those are excluded.

Senator OVERMAN. What is that?

Mr. BECKER. I understand that those are excluded.

Senator OVERMAN. No; I did not exclude that.

Mr. BECKER. Shall I read them?

Senator OVERMAN. Yes.

Mr. BECKER. The letter to Georges Pallain I will take up first. In the letter of James Minotto to Georges Pallain, the 5th of October.

1915, Pallain being the governor of the Bank of France, there is the following passage; and this is the passage referred to in Minotto's testimony:

You probably recall, Mr. Governor, that on the occasion of my recent visit to you in Paris I explained to you that the house of Kuhn, Loeb & Co., who are among the most important and powerful financiers in the United States, were being accused quite unjustly in France of pro-German tendencies, and that, on the contrary, the house rendered a true service to the cause of the allies in categorically refusing to negotiate every proposition which was offered to it on the part of the German Government, and from which it certainly would have received most advantageous conditions.

Now, also, in the negotiations of the Anglo-French commission, with the representatives of American high finance, Kuhn, Loeb & Co. have given proof of an attitude entirely benevolent to the cause of France and England, although Mr. Schiff, sr., has not lost sight of the resentment of the Jews against Russia.

It is said that Mr. Otto H. Kahn, who has on many occasions, especially from the point of view of benevolence and the development of French art in New York, demonstrated his pro-French sympathies, has personally subscribed $5,000,000; and that one of his colleagues, Mr. Mortimer Schiff, has subscribed $1,000,000 of the Anglo-French loan. Whether that is true or not, it is difficult to say. However, the fact that neither Mr. Otto H. Kahn nor Mr. Mortimer Schiff has denied the rumor has a very great importance; and it is not to be doubted that the attitude of Kuhn, Loeb & Co. has very considerably influenced the decision of other financial houses, and they have efficaciously, although not officially, aided in the success of the loan.

Senator REED. What is the date of the letter please?

Mr. BECKER. October 5, 1915. I read now a letter of Hugo Schmidt to the Deutsche Bank, Berlin:

BECKER EXHIBIT No. 22.

3 NOVEMBER, 1915.

No. 1428.

To the Deutsche Bank, Berlin:

Mr. Otto H. Kahn invited me to-day to take lunch with him and on this occasion he told me that an injury had been done to him, not only in the American press but also in the Frankfurter Zeitung, in that it had been reported concerning him that he, as well as his partner, Mortimer Schiff, had invested in the Anglo-French loan, which is in no way correct. Neither the firm of Kuhn, Loeb & Co. nor any of its partners had taken any part thereof, directly or indirectly, and if they have not contradicted these false newspaper articles that is because they make it a matter of principle to ignore such newspaper articles. The fact, however, that the news in question appeared with a statement of the amount for which both of the gentlemen had subscribed and that never a denial appeared made everyone believe that the statements in question were correct, and for that reason I repeated them to you at the time.

As I briefly reported to you already H. F. Albert had in mind to give up certain accounts which he had with Kuhn, Loeb & Co. for Von Bernstorff—eventually also the account of the Reichsbank—and he has since done so in part, so that at present actually only the account of the Reichsbank remains. He has written to Berlin concerning the withdrawal of this amount also.

I can not now wholly free myself of the idea that Kahn has given me the abovementioned information with the purpose that I should pass it on to Albert so as to prevent the business relations between the firm of Kuhn, Loeb & Company and the German authorities from undergoing a further diminution. So I have informed Albert of this, who will now abstain from any further diminution of his business relation with Kuhn, Loeb & Company, and I did not wish to fail to inform you of the matter.

As I met Mr. Kahn in his office, the elder Jacob H. Schiff also spoke to me and asked me whether I believed it would be possible to buy from the Reichsbank, which had a long line of English sterling exchange, such an exchange at approximately present rates on the basis of a suitable interest payment until the release of the exchange from London at the end of the war. He based this on the proposition that his firm had a great need of exchange on London, and since as he knew, the German banks had turned over to the Reichsbank their combined holdings, in sterling exchange, therefore he wished to approach the Reichsbank in the matter. I answered him that I knew nothing about German banks having sold their holdings to the Reichsbank, and he remarked that if this were the case, he would naturally be glad to buy whatever sterling exchange the Deutsche Bank possessed. Of course I wished not to fail to inform you of this, so that in case you had any interest in selling the sterling exchange which you may own at about the present rate in this place.

With greetings, very cordially,

H. SCHMIDT.

Hugo Schmidt has been interrogated under oath and confirms that the interview occurred as there stated. I will now read a letter of February 16, 1916, from Hugo Schmidt, to the Deutsche Bank. That letter is as follows:

BECKER EXHIBIT No. 23.

No. 1762.

FEBRUARY 16, 1916.

To the DEUTSCHE BANK,
Berlin.

VERY RESPECTED GENTLEMEN: At the outbreak of the war, when cable communication with Germany was for some time completely interrupted, Mr. Harry Woodcock—

I may say that in this correspondence there is a code name for every person mentioned, but those are all easily translated, with Mr. Schmidt's assistance. I will read the letter with the names translated.

At the outbreak of the war, when cable communication with Germany was for some time completely interrupted, the Hamburg-American Line, who then needed money to charter and equip ships for the Ministry of War, has approached Kuhn, Loeb & Company, for many years his local banker, in order to obtain a large advance, about $1,000,000.

Kuhn, Loeb & Company is said to have acted very arbitrarily on that occasion. At first it was not willing to entertain the proposition at all, then it said it could do nothing in the matter alone, but it would try to organize a syndicate for that purpose. After a few days they informed the Hamburg-American Line, which was very anxious to procure the money during all that time, that they together with some other friends were ready to grant a loan of 1,000,000 marks, but that amount was on the very next day reduced to 900,000 marks, because one of the associates had withdrawn in the meantime.

Kuhn, Loeb & Company further demanded, on the other hand, the mortgaging of all the, as is well known, extraordinarily valuable objects (ships) and, indeed, with a clause, according to which they would have had the right to sell the mortgaged objects at public sale or out of hand in case a judgment was obtained by anyone against the Hamburg-American Line.

However much the Hamburg-American Line was in need of money it could not bring itself to accept these ruinous terms, and in the meantime cable communication was restored to some extent so that it succeeded in obtaining financial assistance from its German firm. This is by no means gossip, but facts which Mr. Buenz recently related to me.

Buenz was the American representative of the Hamburg-American Line. To continue:

Capt. Boy-Ed had similar experiences with Kuhn, Loeb & Company. The Ministry of War had caused large amounts to be transferred to its local account through Speyer & Company; nevertheless payment here was deferred for about ten days although the Reichsbank had in its favor a balance which was by far greater than the sum asked for.

I mention all of the above only as introductory, and enter now upon the actual purpose of my letter.

I heard a few days ago that the Hamburg-American Line has secured from the Guaranty Trust Company a check account of \$1,000,000, which eventually can be increased to \$2,000,000. The Disconto Gesellschaft has guaranteed the credit. The credit may be used for drafts, due after three months, for which a commission of $\frac{1}{4}$ per cent is to be paid, and there is a tacit agreement that if no unforeseen events happen (as such are always considered a severance of diplomatic relations between the United States and Germany, or something like that), the drafts, when due, will be constantly renewed, although the Guaranty Trust Company did not accept a binding obligation to that effect.

Of course that credit is very welcome to the Hamburg-American Line, and enables it to make good the losses it suffered up to now in connection with bills of exchange from the other side by selling dollars at the exchange rates on the other side.

I happened to think that the North-German Lloyd will find itself in a similar position, and that assumption has been confirmed in the course of a conversation I had to-day with Gustav Schwab. Mr. Schwab said to me that he would be pleased also to obtain a credit of $1,000,000 and that he would to-day write to his home office in that matter. I have already sounded the Guaranty Trust Company, and they will not have any objection to place such a credit guaranteed by us at the disposal of the North-German Lloyd under the same conditions as those in the transaction with the Hamburg-American Line. The credit would be used by the local house, but it would have to be done on account of the home office there, which, therefore, would declare itself responsible to the Guaranty Trust Company for the credit.

* * * * *

I am hardly mistaken in assuming that the North-German Lloyd on account of the present circumstances are very much in your debt, and that it is, therefore, welcome to you to obtain in that manner some money, and moreover in the form of dollars drawn on New York.

I expect your obliging news with interest, and remain, very respected gentlemen, with best regards, Your very devoted.

Senator KING. At that time our country was at peace with Germany?

Mr. BECKER. Yes.

Senator KING. And under the neutral attitude of the President, or his proclamation, there was nothing in international law that made it improper for Americans to sell any goods they might have to Germany any more than to sell those goods to France or England, and there was no more impropriety in Germany transferring funds to the United States to be used by her—I am speaking of use in a legitimate way, to purchase, for instance, foodstuffs or munitions—than in England or France transferring funds to the United States for like purposes?

Mr. BECKER. If your heart was neutral, very likely you would act in a neutral way.

Senator KING. My heart was not neutral; my heart was proally.

Mr. BECKER. Oh, I do not mean you, personally. I was speaking generally.

Senator KING. Generally, as a legal proposition, that is true.

Mr. BECKER. Yes. Of course in this case there is a grave difference from that, that I ought to point out, perhaps.

Senator KING. There was no impropriety in banks here receiving money from Germany which Germany transmitted here for the purpose of using it in a proper way?

Mr. BECKER. Oh, none whatever; in a proper way.

Senator KING. There was no impropriety in Kuhn, Loeb & Co. or any other bank receiving deposits from Germany?

Mr. BECKER. None whatever; but I wanted to call your attention to the fact that this million-dollar loan was proposed to be a loan to the ministry of war for ships that were in the service of war and to assist in financing commerce raiders, and that would be a violation of American law. However, there is no sufficient proof to warrant the conclusion that Kuhn, Loeb & Co. had more than a suspicion that that was the actual purpose. Of course to finance anything in the nature of an armed expedition against the enemy upon our soil would be a clear violation of law.

Senator KING. I did not have that in mind.

Senator WOLCOTT. A violation of what law?

Mr. BECKER. I could not give you the reference to the United States statute, but there have been large numbers of prosecutions under it.

Maj. HUMES. I think it is section 6. It is one of the early sections of the criminal code.

Senator WOLCOTT. That it is a crime under the United States law for an American citizen to loan money to a foreign nation's representative for the purpose of enabling that foreign nation to equip itself with the means of war against a belligerent?

Maj. HUMES. Oh, no.

Senator WOLCOTT. Is not that what Mr. Becker said?

Maj. HUMES. For the purpose of a military expedition upon this soil.

Senator WOLCOTT. Oh, yes; but that is not this proposition, is it?

Mr. BECKER. Yes. I do not understand the distinction.

Senator WOLCOTT. For what purpose was this money to be used?

Mr. BECKER. For a loan to the war ministry to enable the war ministry to furnish coalers, and so on, to go out and provide belligerent ships with coal.

Senator WOLCOTT. Go out from this country?

Senator OVERMAN. Why, Germany had a fleet in these waters, as everybody knew.

Senator WOLCOTT. I evidently have not caught the testimony aright. To equip these coalers to go out from our ports?

Mr. BECKER. Yes.

Senator WOLCOTT. Oh, I misunderstood.

Senator NELSON. The situation was this, as I understand it, Mr. Becker. The Germans had at that time some of their men-of-war at large upon the ocean?

Mr. BECKER. Yes.

Senator NELSON. And they were anxious to have them supplied from our ports with coal and other supplies?

Mr. BECKER. Yes.

Senator NELSON. And that is what the Hamburg-American Line was engaged at—trying to help out in that matter?

Mr. BECKER. Yes.

Senator NELSON. And there were afterwards some convictions growing out of that matter?

Mr. BECKER. Yes. This was a proposed loan to the Ministry of War. As I recall it, perhaps not chiefly, it was in relation to commerce raiders, but I want to emphasize the fact that there is no proof that Kuhn, Loeb & Co. knew what the loan was to be for. I think the fact is of sufficient interest, however, to warrant introducing the letter. To round out our information about Mr. Kahn I shall read a letter which acquits him, an intercepted letter, intercepted by the British authorities, from one Willie Cohn to L. Zimmerman, of Zimmerman & Forshay, of New York. It is dated Malmo, Sweden, September 11, 1916, and reads in part as follows:

At present I am working out another scheme, which, if successful, will give you great pleasure. I am told in strictest confidence that perhaps I shall be able to turn over to you the payments for the German Red Cross which have been heretofore made through Kuhn, Loeb & Co. This firm is not well spoken of here.

Apparently, although the letter is dated Malmo, Sweden, it is written from Berlin. That was a method of communication which they had. To continue the letter:

This firm is not well spoken of here, of course, although Warburg and Schiff have the warmest sympathy. After the recent incident with Otto H. K. about which you sent me a newspaper clipping, it will be necessary to revise one's opinions a little more thoroughly than heretofore. The news that Otto H. Kahn's daughter has gone to Paris as a nurse aroused great interest here. The man grows more and more unsympathetic and it reminds one vividly of the birds that foul their own nests.

Senator REED. That is dated when?

Mr. BECKER. September 11, 1916.

Senator REED. Two years after the war began.

Mr. BECKER. That is a letter furnished to me by the British authorities.

The bank accounts of Dr. H. F. Albert were divided into special accounts. For instance, in one bank account he would carry the account in the name of H. F. Albert; in another in the name of H. F. Albert and J. von Bernstorff; in another in the name of Dr. H. F. Albert K. M., meaning ministry of war department; in another in the name of Dr. H. F. Albert R. S. A. account, meaning treasury department; in another under the name of Dr. H. F. Albert R. B., meaning Reichsbank account. The purpose of these subdivisions was, as far as possible to keep the several funds separated. In the Dr. H. F. Albert accounts were kept the funds transmitted by the central purchasing agency, used for the purpose of purchasing general supplies for shipment to Germany. In the Dr. H. F. Albert and J. von Bernstorff account it was contemplated to keep the proceeds of the German war loans and remittances made from time to time by the German foreign office to New York. In the Dr. H. F. Albert K. M. account were intended to be kept funds for special use for war purposes. In the H. F. Albert R. S. A. account were intended to be kept the funds for the stabilizing of the mark exchange in this market in order that they should be not depreciated in value. In the Dr. H. F. Albert R. B. account was intended to be kept money belonging to the Reichsbank, as Dr. Albert to some extent acted as an agent of the Reichsbank in New York. It was not at times practicable to observe strictly this division into different accounts, hence you will find through Albert's accounts that propaganda payments were made out of the war ministry account, and then again they would be loaned from one of the commercial accounts temporarily, and subsequently, when the balance was restored where it was deficient, there would be a transfer of funds to make it up. That accounted for the fact that the purchase of the Evening Mail was from several different accounts. There was not enough in the one account, so Dr. Albert made the payment from several different accounts and afterwards transferred the funds back.

Senator KING. I have not been here during all of the hearing, Mr. Becker, having been called out on official business. Have you given any testimony in respect to the purchase of the Mail?

Mr. BECKER. No. I think that has been well covered by Mr. Bieaski.

Senator KING. I knew it was given by him, but I was wondering whether you had done so.

Mr. BECKER. No; I could not add much, and I think it would be improper to do so, in view of the pending trials. There was a system adopted by Dr. Albert for avoiding detection in payments, and curiously enough, while that led to temporary secrecy, it led to the ultimate disclosure of many of these plots. That was by the use of cashier's checks. Dr. Albert would write a letter to the bank requesting the bank to issue a cashier's check in favor of some one and that check would be sent to that person. There would be nothing on its face to indicate that it was German Government money. When personal checks were used, they were, as is customary, taken up by the embassy representatives at the end of each month, and in the original investigation those checks were not available, but the cashier's checks, being the bank's own vouchers, were preserved together with the letters directing them to be issued, so that although there was secrecy for the time being, that led to the ultimate disclosure of the evidence.

Senator WOLCOTT. If I understand, in a matter where they wanted to cover up their financial transactions they used cashier's checks, but in matters they were indifferent about they used the checks of the possessor of the account?

Mr. BECKER. Yes. That merely resulted in bringing out the evidence.

Senator WOLCOTT. That was a case of brilliancy, was it not, on the part of these clever fellows?

Mr. BECKER. Take the Mail case. There was an intermediary used in that case named Walter Lyon. Mr. Lyon states—and I have not the slightest reason to doubt it—that he never knew what he was handling was German Embassy funds. Nevertheless, he handled all of the money that was used by the Mail, and to finance it afterwards. Somebody, a lawyer, brought him a check drawn by the cashier of a given bank. There were whispers of some mysterious financial backer who did not want his hand disclosed, and so on, and Mr. Lyon very discreetly did not ask any questions, and he disbursed nearly $2,000,000 in that way without ever having had an inkling of what the source of it was. I think it is perfectly proper to state that there is no evidence that Walter Lyon, acting as intermediary in the Mail case, was a conscious agent of the German Government. That was possible, of course, by the use of cashier's checks; but, on the other hand, the secrecy was not permanent. The German Government did not consider itself at all successful in floating the German war-loan bonds, and there is plenty of evidence of violent quarrels between Dr. Albert and Hugo Schmidt and between the different banking institutions in Germany, each blaming the other for the unsuccess of the flotation of the German war-loan bonds. They began apparently to suffer from a lack of funds for their ambitious purposes. I mean by that the embassy agents. As time went on, therefore, the juggling of funds from one account to another increased.

The question has been asked—and I think it is very proper to answer—whether the German Red Cross funds were used for propaganda purposes. Under the leadership of Dr. Dernberg there was held a German bazaar; and I am informed, although I must say that I doubt it, that that realized a couple of hundred thousand dollars. But, at all events, there were large funds that were gathered for the German Red Cross purposes, and then they were turned over to Count von Bernstorff, who put the funds into one of these German accounts.

Senator STERLING. Have you any evidence relating to the German-American National Alliance and their collection of funds, ostensibly for Red Cross purposes?

Mr. BECKER. Only at the end of the receipt of the funds. There is no evidence that I know of that the funds were not formally turned over to the Red Cross representatives. We have checked up the deposits for account of the Red Cross with the remittances to Germany, and we find that credit were established with the Red Cross in Germany that were equal to the amounts deposited. However, those funds were put into Count von Bernstorff's personal account and into the joint banking accounts he had with Dr. Albert, and for the time being, temporarily, they were used for propaganda purposes; that is, they furnished the sort of credit for that purpose that could be used; although there is no doubt that the German Red Cross in Berlin received the full benefit of the subscriptions here.

Senator NELSON. After they had been used here?

Mr. BECKER. After the dollars had been somewhat soiled.

Senator WOLCOTT. That is to say, they mingled Red Cross funds with other funds, in the account?

Mr. BECKER. Yes; and it swelled their account and increased their borrowing power with the banks, which, of course, largely depended upon the amount of cash deposited.

Senator WOLCOTT. Do you know how long these Red Cross funds lingered in this country? Was it a long time, or was the transmission to Berlin fairly expeditious?

Mr. BECKER. It was fairly expeditious; but, don't you see, the deposits were constantly coming in and constantly creating a daily bank balance, which formed the basis of additional credits.

Maj. HUMES. Do I understand that the actual funds themselves were transferred to Germany, or was there only the transfer of credits.

Mr. BECKER. Only the transfer of credits. I do not think any hard cash was ever sent to Germany.

Maj. HUMES. These Red Cross funds that were left in this country were utilized by the agents in this country, and they would transfer an equal amount of credit to the Red Cross from funds in the hands of the German Government in Germany?

Mr. BECKER. That is it.

Maj. HUMES. In other words, these funds were all utilized in this country by Dr. Albert and Dr. Dernburg and their other German agents in their active transactions, and the German Government gave the Red Cross credit for an equal amount in Germany in order that the Red Cross might not suffer and that the funds here might be used for the benefit of the German Government as cash.

Mr. BECKER. That is a fair statement of it.

Senator KING. Is that true with respect to funds received from German bonds in this country?

Mr. BECKER. No; the German short-term notes were the basis of financing the embassy. The German war-loan bonds did not pass through the embassy channels. They passed through banking channels, so there were constant wireless remittances.

Senator WOLCOTT. Pursuing the thought that Maj. Humes seems to have in mind, let me suppose that these bank accounts had, we will say, $200,000 of Red Cross money in them, and there were other funds in there to an amount of, say, $1,000,000. Two hundred thousand dollars of that amount was Red Cross funds. There was a transfer of credit, we will say, to Berlin to the extent of $200,000 for the purpose of making that credit available to the Red Cross over there. When that transfer of credit took place, is it not true that the account in this country would have been reduced to the extent of $200,000?

Mr. BECKER. No; because it was not done in that way. The money was left in the bank and the bank made no transfer, as I understand.

Senator WOLCOTT. That is what I am getting at.

Mr. BECKER. The ambassador informed the German Government that the German Red Cross was entitled to a credit of a certain amount, equal to the amount of the subscriptions. The credit was sent first governmentally and not through banking channels. It may have been in some cases. I will not say that that was the invariable rule, but that was often practiced.

Senator WOLCOTT. Of course, if it had been transferred through the bank, the account would have suffered that much.

Mr. BECKER. Yes.

Senator WOLCOTT. I thought it rather strange it had not been; but if the transfer was by the Government, it is an entirely different proposition.

Mr. BECKER. I would much prefer, if the matter is of importance, in order to be fair to the German Government as well as all of the other persons it is important to be fair to, to give you an exact statement with respect to that. I have the data, but I did not bring them with me.

Senator WOLCOTT. I should think it would be well for us to have that, because if the transaction was as you describe it, the first impression upon my mind would be that the Red Cross funds really did not reach their destination.

Senator STERLING. Senator Wolcott will recall, as will Senator King, the testimony in regard to the disbursing of the Red Cross funds in the evidence in respect to the German-American Alliance; that over $880,000 was turned over to the account of Bernstorff.

Senator WOLCOTT. And some of it to Dumba. I recall that very well. I would like to have in the record the exact facts in regard to those Red Cross funds. If Mr. Becker can prepare a statement of that for us, I think it would be pertinent.

Mr. BECKER. I will go to the Red Cross account maintained at first with Kuhn, Loeb & Co. and afterward actually transferred, and find out just what the disposition was of the transfer to Germany, and how it was done.

Senator OVERMAN. If you will prepare such data, we will be obliged to you.

Mr. BECKER. I think I have the necessary data. As I explained yesterday, I made a particular study of Hugo Schmidt, by reason of

